3. An anti-Petrarchan sonnet. All of the details commonly attributed by other Elizabethan sonneteers to their ladies are here denied to the poet's mistress.

4. Variegated. The damask rose (supposedly from Damascus, originally) is pink.

5. Walk.

6. Admirable, extraordinary.

7. Misrepresented.

1. (1) wishes (2) carnal desire (3) the male and female sexual organs (4) one or more persons named Will. This is one of three, possibly four, sonnets punning on the word.

2. Plenty.

3. I.e., do not kill with unkindness any of your wooers.

Although she knows my days are past the best,¹
 Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue;
 On both sides thus is simple truth suppressed.
 But wherefore says she not she is unjust?²
 And wherefore say not I that I am old?
 Oh, love's best habit³ is in seeming trust,
 And age in love loves not to have years told.
 Therefore I lie with her and she with me,
 And in our faults by lies we flattered be.

10

1599

144

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
 Which like two spirits do suggest me still:¹
 The better angel is a man right fair,
 The worser spirit a woman, colored ill.²
 To win me soon to hell, my female evil
 Tempteth my better angel from my side,
 And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
 Wooing his purity with her foul pride.
 And whether that my angel be turned fiend
 Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
 But being both from³ me, both to each friend,
 I guess one angel in another's hell.
 Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
 Till my bad angel fire⁴ my good one out.

5

10

1599

146

Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth,
 Lord of⁵ these rebel powers that thee array,⁶
 Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
 Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
 Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
 Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
 Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
 Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
 Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
 And let that pine to aggravate thy store;⁷
 Buy terms⁸ divine in selling hours of dross;

5

10

. Shakespeare was 35 or younger when he wrote this sonnet (it first appeared in The Passionate Pilgrim, 1599). "Simply": like a simpleton.

2. Unfaithful.

3. Appearance, deportment.

1. Tempt me constantly.

2. Dark.

3. Away from; "each": each other.

4. Drive out by fire.

5. An emendation. The Quarto repeats the last three words of line 1. Other suggestions are "Thrall to," "Starv'd by," "Press'd by," and leaving the repetition but dropping "that thee" in line 2.

6. Dress out, often used in a military sense.

7. Let "that" (i.e., the body) deteriorate to increase ("aggravate") the soul's riches ("thy store").

8. Long periods; "dross": refuse, rubbish.

Within be fed, without be rich no more.
So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
And death once dead, there's no more dying then.

1609

147

My love is as a fever, longing still¹
For that which longer nurseth² the disease,
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,³
Th' uncertain sickly appetite⁴ to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve
Desire is death, which physic did except.⁵
Past cure I am, now reason is past care,⁶
And frantic mad with evermore unrest;
My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
At random from the truth, vainly expressed;⁷
For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

5

10

1609

The Phoenix and the Turtle¹

~~metre~~ visual imagery

Let the bird of loudest lay,²
On the sole Arabian tree,
Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou shrieking harbinger,
Foul precurrer of the fiend,³

5

1. Continually.
2. (1) Nourishes (2) takes care of.
3. Maintain the illness.
4. (1) Desire for food (2) lust.
5. I.e., learn by experience, that desire, which medicine forbade, is death.
6. I.e., medical care (of me). The line is a version of the proverb "past cure, past care."
7. Wide of the mark and senselessly uttered.
1. First published in Robert Chester's Love's Martyr, or Rosalin's Complaint (1601). It is part of an appendix containing "divers poetical essays" by other poets, all supposedly dealing with the same subject. This subject has something to do with a Welsh knight, Sir John Salusbury, and his lady. But Shakespeare's poem is not consistent with the other poems in the volume, for some of them celebrate the birth of offspring to the phoenix and the

- turtle, whereas Shakespeare says the birds died leaving no posterity. The phoenix is a legendary bird of Arabia: it perishes in flames and a new one arises from the ashes; only one is alive at a time. Queen Elizabeth, the Virgin Queen, was sometimes symbolized by the unique and virginal phoenix. The "turtle" (turtledove) is common in Elizabethan imagery as the most loving of birds. Bird poems were traditionally allegorical, from Chaucer's time on down, but the key to this allegory (if it is one) has been lost.
2. Cry or song. This stanza might be paraphrased, "Let the bird with the loudest voice proclaim from the perch of the phoenix ('Arabian tree'); all gentle birds ('chaste wings') will respond to the summons."
3. Forerunner of the devil. "Harbinger": precursor. The screech owl is probably meant.

Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near!

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feathered king:
Keep the obsequy so strict.

10

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,⁴
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

15

And thou treble-dated⁵ crow,
That thy sable gender mak'st
With the breath thou giv'st and tak'st,⁶
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

20

Here the anthem doth commence:
Love and constancy is dead,
Phoenix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they loved as love in twain:
Had the essence but in one;⁷
Two distincts, division none:
Number there in love was slain.

25

Hearts remote, yet not asunder;
Distance, and no space was seen
'Twixt this turtle and his queen;
But in them⁸ it were a wonder.

30

So between them love did shine
That the turtle saw his right⁹
Flaming in the phoenix' sight:
Either was the other's mine.¹

35

Property² was thus appalled,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was called.

40

4. I.e., skilled in funeral ("defunctive") music. The swan was supposed to sing only once, just before its death.

5. Living three lifetimes.

6. "Sable gender": black offspring. The crow was supposed to conceive and lay its eggs through the bill.

7. They were originally two, but by love were united into one. Since one is singular, and not a number, "Number there in love was slain."

8. In any other case than theirs.

9. What was due him, love returned.

1. Rich source of wealth or treasure.

2. Peculiar or essential quality. "Property" is "appalled" to find that personality ("self") is obliterated in the union of the two. Accordingly it is impossible to say whether they were two or one.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together,³
To themselves yet either neither,
Simple were so well compounded;

That it cried, "How true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one!
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain."⁴

Whereupon it made this threne⁵
To the phoenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love,
As chorus to their tragic scene.

Threnos

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here enclosed in cinders lie.

Death is now the phoenix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest,

Leaving no posterity:
'Twas not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be;
Beauty brag, but 'tis not she:⁶
Truth and Beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.

1601

3. Reason, which discriminates parts of a thing, is here confounded because the two parts are merged. Each element lost its identity in being fused with the other.

4. Love is more reasonable than reason, because it has proved that the separateness of entities (one of reason's laws) does not always hold true.

5. Threnody, funeral song.

6. Whatever may appear hereafter as truth or beauty will be only illusion. Real truth and beauty lie buried here.

1 Henry IV The title page of the first quarto edition of Shakespeare's 1 Henry IV, published in 1598, reads: "THE HISTORY OF HENRIE THE FOURTH; With the the battell at Shrewsburie, betweene the King and Lord Henry Percy, surnamed Henrie Hotspur of the North. With the humorous conceits of Sir John Falstalffe." It had been performed on the stage and at court before publication, and from that time to this it has remained one of Shakespeare's most popular plays.

Shakespeare had already inaugurated a new dramatic type by writing four plays dealing with fairly recent English history, and had then gone back to a period two centuries earlier to portray, in Richard II, the downfall of the weak, effeminate and poetic young King Richard ("that sweet lovely rose," as he is called in this play) at the hands of the hard, efficient Bolingbroke, who came to the throne as Henry IV. Before this seizure of the crown there had been a prophecy, put by Shakespeare into the mouth of the Bishop of Carlisle in Richard II (IV.i.136-44), of the dire consequences to follow:

And if you crown him, let me prophesy,
The blood of English shall manure the ground
And future ages groan for this foul act;
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny
Shall here inhabit, and this land be called
The field of Golgotha and dead men's skulls.

Shakespeare drew his historical material from the prose chronicle histories, specifically Raphael Holinshed's Chronicles of England, Scotland, and Ireland, Samuel Daniel's historical poem Civil Wars, and an earlier play, either the popular farcical piece called The Famous Victories of Henry V or a lost play which was its source. His sources gave him the portrait of a madcap and reckless Prince of Wales and his roistering companions. Chief of these was a fat knight, Sir John Oldcastle; Shakespeare at first used this name, but later, because of protests from the descendants of that Protestant martyr, changed the name to Sir John Falstaff. This character, whose "humorous conceits" are advertised on the title page, is one of the greatest comic creations in all literature. Shakespeare continued to exploit his inexhaustible exuberance through a sequel, The Second Part of Henry IV, and a comedy of middle-class life, supposed to have been written at Queen Elizabeth's command, The Merry Wives of Windsor.

The ominous wars of Carlisle's prophecy could thus be mixed with hilarious fooling, but 1 Henry IV succeeds, not only as a comedy, but as a serious play about character and history. The real hero is not King Henry IV, nor the fat Falstaff, but Prince Hal, the handsome playboy who in time of crisis reforms and saves his father's throne. He is the prince who later became Henry V, the English national hero who reconquered France.

Shakespeare's theme in all his history plays is the importance of order and degree, of the disruptive effects of civil strife and rebellion. But as he matured as a dramatist (and 1 Henry IV stands at the beginning of his great period of maturity), he found character to be more interesting than the philosophy or events of history. How to demonstrate the kind of character that would make the English national hero was his problem, and he solved it by a method of comparison and contrast, utilizing four men of different types. At one extreme is Falstaff, who loves to eat, drink, joke, and dramatize himself, and to whom anything as intangible as honor is a mere word, a breath of air. Opposite in every way is Hotspur, fiery and impatient, completely ambitious for honor and fame, scornful of the soft, civilized arts of poetry and music, a hardheaded fanatic. A third type is the wild Welshman Glendower, a believer in magic and a practitioner of it, an accomplished poet yet a valiant, if superstitious, warrior, and an egotist like his ally Hotspur. Finally there is Prince Hal, whose sense of humor rivals Falstaff's, but who turns out to be the match for Hotspur in valor and his superior in knightly courtesy. It is worth noting that Shakespeare changed history in order to make this dramatic contrast: in Holinshed's Chronicle Hotspur is older than Prince Hal's father, but Shakespeare makes them contemporaries. It is in the excesses of the other three that we see the merits of the Prince's character illuminated. The four characters represent not only men but ways of life. And these ways of life are all relevant to fundamental questions about social and political responsibility, honor, and loyalty to a cause.

Some background in 15th-century English history, as Shakespeare understood it, is needed if we are to respond readily to the play. Henry Hereford, called Bolingbroke, was in exile in France when his father, John of Gaunt, died. He returned to England to claim his inheritance, and profited from the aid of the Percy family, powerful nobles in the north. The two brothers, Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, and Thomas Percy, Earl of Worcester, together with Northumberland's son Henry (called Hotspur) received Bolingbroke's oath at Doncaster (see V.i.32-58) to seize only his inheritance. But King Richard II was in Ireland fighting, having named Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March, his successor if he did not return. In the confused situation in England, Bolingbroke was able to collect enough power so that on Richard's return he could force him to abdicate and then have him killed in prison. Various troubles on the borders made the throne of the new king (Henry IV) insecure. Hotspur managed to defeat the Scots under Douglas at Holmedon (see I.i.62-75) and took many important prisoners. But Mortimer, in fighting against Glendower in Wales, was taken captive and married Glendower's daughter. Henry IV refused to ransom Mortimer, and the indignation of Mortimer's brother-in-law, Hotspur, led him to refuse to turn over his prisoners to the king. So came the conspiracy into being—and such a formidable opposition as that of the Percies, Douglas, Glendower, and certain disaffected churchmen like the Archbishop of York meant a critical danger to Henry's throne. The Battle of Shrewsbury, the climax of this play, decides the conflict.

Much critical comment has been devoted to the character of Falstaff. He has certain resemblances to the traditional miles gloriosus (braggart soldier) of Latin comedy, but he far transcends the type; he sometimes resembles the Vice, a comic character in the old morality plays, who is usually an allegorical personification of extreme self-indulgence or of a particular sin; and he often uses, or parodies, the language of the Puritans. Critics differ on whether Falstaff is really a coward or not, and on the question of how much he expects his lies to be believed. But everyone agrees about his inexhaustible vitality and resiliency. It is not surprising that he, like other immortal characters in literature, remains something of a mystery.

The First Part of King Henry the Fourth

Dramatis Personae

KING HENRY THE FOURTH

HENRY, Prince of Wales

PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER

EARL OF WESTMORELAND

SIR WALTER BLUNT

THOMAS PERCY, *Earl of Worcester*HENRY PERCY, *Earl of Northumberland*HENRY PERCY, *surnamed HOTSPUR, his son*EDMUND MORTIMER, *Earl of March*RICHARD SCROOP, *Archbishop of York*ARCHIBALD, Earl of Douglas

OWEN GLENDOWER

SIR RICHARD VERNON

SIR MICHAEL, a friend to the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK

SIR JOHN FALSTAFF

POINS

GADSHILL

PETO

BARDOLPH

LADY PERCY, *wife to HOTSPUR, and sister to MORTIMER*LADY MORTIMER, *daughter to GLENDOWER, and wife to MORTIMER*MISTRESS QUICKLY, hostess of a tavern in Eastcheap

LORDS, OFFICERS, SHERIFF, VINTNER, CHAMBERLAIN, DRAWERS, two

CARRIERS, TRAVELERS, and ATTENDANTS

Act I

SCENE 1

[Enter the KING, PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, THE EARL OF WESTMORELAND, SIR WALTER BLUNT, with others.]

KING. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,

Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,¹And breathe short-winded accents of new broils²

To be commenced in stronds afar remote.

No more the thirsty entrance³ of this soil

Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,

Nor bruise her flowerets with the arméd hoofs

Of hostile paces:⁴ those opposéd eyes,

Which, like the meteors of a troubled heaven,

All of one nature, of one substance bred,

Did lately meet in the intestine shock⁵

And furious close of civil butchery,

Shall now, in mutual well-beseeming ranks,

1. I.e., let us allow peace to catch her breath.

2. I.e., news of new wars; "stronds": strands, regions.

3. Surface.

4. The tread of war horses.

5. Internal violence; "close": encounter.

March all one way and be no more opposed 15
 Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies.
 The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
 No more shall cut his master: therefore, friends,
 As far as to the sepulcher of Christ,
 Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross 20
 We are impresséd and engaged to fight,
 Forthwith a power⁶ of English shall we levy,
 Whose arms were molded in their mother's womb
 To chase these pagans in those holy fields
 Over whose acres walked those blessed feet 25
 Which fourteen hundred years ago were nailed
 For our advantage on the bitter cross.
 But this our purpose now is twelve month old,
 And bootless⁷ 'tis to tell you we will go.
 Therefore we meet not now:⁸ then let me hear 30
 Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
 What yesternight our council did decree
 In forwarding this dear expedience.⁹

WEST. My liege, this haste was hot in question,¹
 And many limits of the charge set down 35
 But yesternight, when all athwart² there came
 A post from Wales loaden with heavy news,
 Whose worst was that the noble Mortimer,
 Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
 Against the irregular³ and wild Glendower, 40
 Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
 A thousand of his people butcheréd,
 Upon whose dead corpse⁴ there was such misuse,
 Such beastly shameless transformation,
 By those Welshwomen done as may not be 45
 Without much shame retold or spoken of.

KING. It seems then that the tidings of this broil
 Brake off our business for the Holy Land.

WEST. This matched with other did, my gracious lord,
 For more uneven and unwelcome news 50
 Came from the north, and thus it did import:
 On Holyrood Day⁵ the gallant Hotspur there,
 Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald;
 That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
 At Holmedon met, 55
 Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour;
 As by discharge of their artillery,
 And shape of likelihood,⁶ the news was told;
 For he that brought them⁷ in the very heat

6. Army. He is planning a crusade, in expiation of his guilt for the death of Richard II.

7. Useless.

8. I.e., that is not the reason for our present meeting. "Cousin": kinsman.

9. Important, urgent matter.

1. Actively discussed. "Limits of the charge": assignment of commands.

2. Interrupting, crossing our purpose. "Post": messenger.

3. Guerilla.

4. Bodies.

5. Holy Cross Day (Sept. 14).

6. Probable inference. "As": since.

7. I.e., the news (usually a plural in Shakespeare). "Pride": height; literally, the top of a falcon's flight.

And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.

60

KING. Here is a dear, a true industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stained with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The Earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty knights
Balked⁸ in their own blood did Sir Walter see On Holmedon's plains. Of prisoners Hotspur took Mordake Earl of Fife, and eldest son
To beaten Douglas, and the Earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith;
And is not this an honorable spoil,
A gallant prize? ha, cousin, is it not?

65

70

75

WEST. In faith,

It is a conquest for a prince to boast of.

KING. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad and mak'st me sin

In envy that my Lord Northumberland

Should be the father to so blest a son,

80

A son who is the theme of honor's tongue,

Amongst a grove the very straightest plant,

Who is sweet Fortune's minion⁹ and her pride;

Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,

See riot and dishonor stain the brow

85

Of my young Harry. O that it could be proved

That some night-tripping fairy had exchanged

In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,

And called mine Percy, his Plantagenet!

Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.

90

But let him from my thoughts. What think you, coz,

Of this young Percy's pride? The prisoners

Which he in this adventure hath surprised

To his own use he keeps, and sends me word

I shall have none but Mordake Earl of Fife.

95

WEST. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,

Malevolent to you in all aspects,¹

Which makes him prune himself,² and bristle up

The crest of youth against your dignity.

KING. But I have sent for him to answer this;

100

And for this cause awhile we must neglect

Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.

Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we

Will hold at Windsor, so inform the lords;

But come yourself with speed to us again,

105

For more is to be said and to be done

Than out of anger can be uttered.

WEST. I will, my liege.

[Exeunt.]

8. Heaped.

9. Favorite.

1. Hostile in every way. The figure is from astrology.

2. Plume himself. "Bristle up" and "crest" continue the image, which is that of a fighting cock.

SCENE 2

[Enter HENRY, PRINCE OF WALES, and SIR JOHN FALSTAFF.]

FAL. Now Hal, what time of day is it, lad?

PRINCE. Thou art so fat-witted with drinking of old sack,³ and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou wouldst truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? Unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping-houses,⁴ and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-colored taffeta, I see no reason why thou shouldst be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

FAL. Indeed you come near me now, Hal, for we that take purses go by the moon and the seven stars, and not by Phoebus,⁵ he, "that wandering knight so fair." And I prithee, sweet wag, when thou art king, as, God save thy grace—majesty I should say, for grace⁶ thou wilt have none—

PRINCE. What, none?

FAL. No, by my troth, not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

PRINCE. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.⁷

FAL. Marry then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us that are squires of the night's body⁸ be called thieves of the day's beauty; let us be Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; and let men say we be men of good government, being governed as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we steal.

PRINCE. Thou sayest well, and it holds well too, for the fortune of us that are the moon's men doth ebb and flow like the sea, being governed as the sea is by the moon. As for proof now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning, got with swearing "Lay by" and spent with crying "Bring in," now in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder and by and by in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.⁹

FAL. By the Lord thou sayest true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

PRINCE. As the honey of Hybla,¹ my old lad of the castle. And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance?²

3. Sherry.

4. Whorehouses.

5. The sun. Falstaff then quotes from a popular ballad.

6. A triple pun: (1) "your Grace," the correct manner of addressing a prince or duke; (2) the divine influence which produces sanctity; and (3) a short prayer before a meal—hence Falstaff's allusion to "egg and butter," a common hasty breakfast.

7. Plainly.

8. Two puns are involved: a "squire of the body" was an attendant on a knight, and "body" would be pronounced bawdy. "Beauty" also puns with "booty" (which thieves take);

Diana is, of course, the moon goddess. 9. "Lay by": i.e., hand over (a robber's command to his victim); "bring in": a customer's command for more drink at a tavern. The "foot of the ladder" is at the bottom of the gallows (robbery was a hanging offense); the "ridge" is the crosspiece at the top.

1. A town in Sicily, famous for honey; "old lad of the castle" is a reference to Falstaff's original name, Oldcastle.

2. A "buff jerkin" was the leather jacket worn by a sheriff's sergeant; "durance" is a pun: (1) lasting quality and (2) imprisonment.

FAL. How now, how now, mad wag! what, in thy quips and thy quiddities?³ what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

PRINCE. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern? 40

FAL. Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning many a time and oft.

PRINCE. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

FAL. No, I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there. 45

PRINCE. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch, and where it would not I have used my credit.

FAL. Yea, and so used it that were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent⁴—but I prithee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus fobbed as it is with the rusty curb of old father antic the law?⁵ Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief. 50

PRINCE. No, thou shalt.

FAL. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.

PRINCE. Thou judgest false already; I mean thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves and so become a rare hangman. 55

FAL. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humor⁶ as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

PRINCE. For obtaining of suits?⁷

FAL. Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood,⁸ I am as melancholy as a gib cat or a lugged bear. 60

PRINCE. Or an old lion, or a lover's lute.

FAL. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

PRINCE. What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?⁹ 65

FAL. Thou hast the most unsavory similes and art indeed the most comparative,¹ rascalli²est, sweet young prince. But Hal, I prithee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought. An old lord of the council rated³ me the other day in the street about you, sir, but I marked him not; and yet he talked very wisely, but I regarded him not; and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too. 70

PRINCE. Thou didst well, for wisdom cries out in the streets and no man regards it.³ 75

FAL. O, thou hast damnable iteration⁴ and art indeed able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal, God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew noth-

3. Quibbles.

4. "Here" and "heir" would pun in Elizabethan pronunciation.

5. "Resolution"; bravery; "fobbed"; cheated; "antic": a clown.

6. I.e., agrees with my disposition.

7. Special favors, but "clothing" in the next line. The hangman was given the clothes of his victims.

8. God's blood, a common oath. "Gib cat": tomcat; "lugged": baited (in the bear-baiting pits a bear was attacked by dogs as a public amusement).

9. The "hare" was traditionally associated with melancholy; Moor-ditch was a foul-smelling ditch on the outskirts of London.

1. Affecting wit, dealing in comparisons.

2. Scolded, berated.

3. Prince Hal is quoting Proverbs i. 20 and 24.

4. Repetition, especially of sacred texts.

ing, and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better ⁸⁰ than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an^s I do not, I am a villain; I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

PRINCE. Where shall we take a purse tomorrow, Jack?

FAL. Zounds, where thou wilt, lad; I'll make one; an I do not, ⁸⁵
call me villain and baffle⁶ me.

PRINCE. I see a good amendment of life in thee—from praying to purse-taking.

FAL. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation,⁷ Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labor in his vocation. 90

[Enter POINS.]

Poins! Now shall we know if Gadshill⁸ have set a match. O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain that ever cried "stand" to a true man.

PRINCE. Good morrow, Ned.

POINS. Good morrow, sweet Hal. What says Monsieur Remorse?
what says Sir John Sack and Sugar? Jack! how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good Friday last for a cup of Madeira and a cold capon's leg? 95

PRINCE. Sir John stands to his word; the devil shall have his bar- ¹⁰⁰ gain, for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs; he will give the devil his due.

POINS. Then art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

PRINCE. Else he had been damned for cozening⁹ the devil. 105

POINS. But my lads, my lads, tomorrow morning by four o'clock, early at Gadshill, there are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses.
I have vizards¹ for you all, you have horses for yourselves; Gadshill lies tonight in Rochester; I have bespoke supper tomorrow ¹¹⁰ night in Eastcheap; we may do it as secure as sleep. If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home and be hanged.

FAL. Hear ye, Yedward, if I tarry at home and go not, I'll hang you for going. 115

POINS. You will, chops?²

FAL. Hal, wilt thou make one?

PRINCE. Who, I rob? I a thief? not I, by my faith.

FAL. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou camest not of the blood royal,³ if thou darest 120

5. If.

6. A knight in the days of chivalry was "baffled" or disgraced by having his shield hung upside down. Falstaff may mean "hang me up by the heels."
"Zounds": a common oath, a contraction of "by God's wounds" (i.e., Jesus' wounds on the Cross).

7. Falstaff is here making fun of the Puritan doctrine of "calling" or vocation, based on the parable of the talents
(see Matthew xxv.25 ff.).

8. Gadshill is both a man and a place: the place is a hill 27 miles from London on the road to Rochester; it was notorious for robberies. The man, so called from the place, is the thieves'

"setter," who arranges when and where the robbery will occur.

9. Cheating.

1. Masks.

2. Fat face.

3. A pun: the coin called a "royal" was worth ten shillings. "Stand for" also puns: it means both "represent" and "fight for."

not stand for ten shillings.

PRINCE. Well then, once in my days I'll be a madcap.

FAL. Why, that's well said.

PRINCE. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

FAL. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.

125

PRINCE. I care not.

POINS. Sir John, I prithee leave the prince and me alone; I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure that he shall go.

FAL. Well, God give thee the spirit of persuasion and him the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance.⁴ Farewell; you shall find me in Eastcheap.

130

PRINCE. Farewell, thou latter spring, farewell, Allhallowm summer!⁵

[(Exit FALSTAFF.)]⁶

POINS. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us tomorrow; I have a jest to execute that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill shall rob those men that we have already waylaid;⁷ yourself and I will not be there, and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head off from my shoulders.

140

PRINCE. How shall we part with them in setting forth?

POINS. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail, and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves, which they shall have no sooner achieved but we'll set upon them.

145

PRINCE. Yea, but 'tis like that they will know us by our horses, by our habits,⁸ and by every other appointment to be ourselves.

POINS. Tut, our horses they shall not see—I'll tie them in the wood; our vizards we will change after we leave them: and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce,⁹ to immask our noted outward garments.

150

PRINCE. Yea, but I doubt they will be too hard for us.

POINS. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us when we meet at supper: how thirty at least he fought with; what wards,¹⁰ what blows, what extremities he endured; and in the reproof¹¹ of this lies the jest.

160

4. A satirical reference to the common complaint that the nobility did not properly give "countenance" to (i.e., encourage) good causes, and to the Puritan habit of attacking the "abuses of the time." This entire speech parodies the language of the Puritans.

5. I.e., Indian summer. The two epithets are intended to suggest how unreasonable it is for Falstaff, an old man, to be engaged in youthful, hoodlum exploits.

6. This stage direction, like some others in the play, does not appear in the earliest editions; it was added by a later editor. All such interpolated directions are indicated in our text by the special brackets used here.

7. Set an ambush for.

8. Clothes.

9. I.e., outer clothes (of a coarse, stiff cloth) for the occasion.

10. Guards in fencing.

11. Disproof.

use of "yet"). "But": except. "straight": immediately.

PRINCE. Well, I'll go with thee. Provide us all things necessary and meet me tomorrow night¹ in Eastcheap; there I'll sup.
Farewell.

POINS. Farewell, my lord.

[Exit POINS.]

PRINCE. I know you all, and will awhile uphold

165

The unyoked humor² of your idleness;

Yet herein will I imitate the sun,

Who doth permit the base contagious clouds

To smother up his beauty from the world,

That, when he please again to be himself,

170

Being wanted, he may be more wondered at

By breaking through the foul and ugly mists

Of vapors that did seem to strangle him.

If all the year were playing holidays,

To sport would be as tedious as to work;

175

But when they seldom come, they wished for come,

And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.

So, when this loose behavior I throw off

And pay the debt I never promiséd,

By how much better than my word I am,

180

By so much shall I falsify men's hopes,

And like bright metal on a sullen ground,³

My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,

Shall show more goodly and attract more eyes

Than that which hath no foil⁴ to set it off.

185

I'll so offend to make offense a skill,⁵

Redeeming time when men think least I will.

[Exit.]

SCENE 3

[Enter the KING, NORTHUMBERLAND, WORCESTER, HOT-
SPUR, SIR WALTER BLUNT, with others.]

KING. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,

Unapt to stir at these indignities,

And you have found me,⁶ for accordingly

You tread upon my patience; but be sure

I will from henceforth rather be myself,

5

Mighty and to be feared, than my condition,⁷

Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,

And therefore lost that title of respect

Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.

WOR. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves

10

The scourge of greatness to be used on it,

1. Either the text should read "to-night" (before the robbery) or else Shakespeare intends to show Prince Hal's mind intent, not on the robbery, but on its aftermath. The soliloquy of the Prince that follows has provoked much critical discussion. Read psychologically, it makes Hal seem like a prig and a self-conscious schemer, but this surely was not Shakespeare's intention. Rather, the speech belongs to the old dramatic convention in which the speaker steps out of character for a moment to deliver a message from the playwright to the audience.

2. Undisciplined whim.

3. Dull background.

4. I.e., contrast.

5. Piece of good policy. "Redeeming time": making good use of time, following the advice given to Christians in a non-Christian world. See Ephesians v.16.

6. Discovered this to be true.

7. Disposition.

And that same greatness too which our own hands
Have help⁸ to make so portly.

NORTH. My lord—

KING. Worcester, get thee gone, for I do see

Danger and disobedience in thine eye;

O, sir, your presence is too bold and peremptory,

And majesty might never yet endure

The moody frontier of a servant brow.⁹

You have good leave to leave us; when we need

Your use and counsel we shall send for you.

You were about to speak.

[Exit WOR.]

[(to NORTH.)]

NORTH. Yea, my good lord.

Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,

Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,

Were, as he says, not with such strength denied

As is delivered to your majesty.

Either envy therefore or misprision¹

Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.

HOR. My liege, I did deny no prisoners.

But I remember, when the fight was done,

When I was dry with rage and extreme toil,

Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,

Came there a certain lord, neat and trimly dressed,

Fresh as a bridegroom, and his chin new reaped

Showed like a stubble-land at harvest-home;

He was perfuméd like a milliner,²

And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held

A pouncet box,³ which ever and anon

He gave his nose and took 't away again;

Who therewith angry, when it next came there,

Took it in snuff;⁴ and still he smiled and talked,

And as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,

He called them untaught knaves, unmannerly,

To bring a slovenly⁵ unhandsome corse

Betwixt the wind and his nobility.

With many holiday and lady terms⁶

He questioned me; amongst the rest, demanded

My prisoners in your majesty's behalf.

I then, all smarting with my wounds being cold,

To be so pestered with a popinjay,⁷

Out of my grief and my impatience

Answered neglectingly I know not what,

He should, or he should not; for he made me mad

To see him shine so brisk and smell so sweet

And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman

8. Helped; "portly": stately.

9. I.e., a servant's brow showing defiance, like a fortification ("frontier").

1. "Envy": malice; "misprision": mistake.

2. Not a maker of hats, but a dealer in perfumes, women's gloves, etc.

3. Perfume box.

4. I.e., was annoyed at it, with a pun on "snuffing it up."

5. Nasty, disgusting; "corse": corpse, body.

6. Affected and effeminate language (not "everyday" English).

7. Parrot.

Of guns and drums and wounds—God save the mark!—
 And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth
 Was parmaceti⁸ for an inward bruise,
 And that it was great pity, so it was,
 This villanous saltpeter⁹ should be digged
 Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
 Which many a good tall¹ fellow had destroyed
 So cowardly, and but for these vile guns
 He would himself have been a soldier.
 This bald² unjointed chat of his, my lord,
 I answered indirectly as I said,
 And I beseech you, let not his report
 Come current³ for an accusation
 Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

60

65

BLUNT. The circumstance considered, good my lord,
 Whate'er Lord Harry Percy then had said
 To such a person and in such a place,
 At such a time, with all the rest retold,
 May reasonably die and never rise
 To do him wrong or any way impeach
 What then he said, so he unsay it now.

75

KING. Why, yet⁴ he doth deny his prisoners,
 But with proviso and exception,
 That we at our own charge shall ransom straight
 His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer,
 Who, on my soul, hath willfully betrayed
 The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against that great magician, damned Glendower,
 Whose daughter, as we hear, the Earl of March
 Hath lately married. Shall our coffers then
 Be emptied to redeem a traitor home?
 Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears,⁵
 When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
 No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
 For I shall never hold that man my friend
 Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
 To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

80

85

90

HOT. Revolted Mortimer!

He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
 But by the chance of war. To prove that true
 Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
 Those mouthéd wounds⁶ which valiantly he took
 When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank
 In single opposition, hand to hand,

95

8. Spermaceti, whale oil used as an ointment.

9. Used in gunpowder.

1. Brave.

2. Trivial. "Indirectly": negligently.

3. Be considered valid.

4. I.e., even after all this (the strong use of "yet"). "But": except.

"Straight": immediately.

5. Enter into a contract with cowards.

6. Wounds are often likened to mouths in Shakespeare. The image may derive from their appearance and from the idea that they could speak as witnesses to what caused them. Cf. Julius Caesar III.ii.229-31 and Richard III I.ii.55-56.

- He did confound the best part of an hour
 In changing hardiment⁷ with great Glendower; 100
 Three times they breathed⁸ and three times did they drink
 Upon agreement of swift Severn's flood,
 Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks,
 Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds, 105
 And hid his crisp⁹ head in the hollow bank
 Bloodstained with these valiant combatants.
 Never did bare and rotten policy¹
 Color her working with such deadly wounds,
 Nor never could the noble Mortimer 110
 Receive so many, and all willingly;
 Then let not him be slandered with revolt.
- KING. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost belie him;
 He never did encounter with Glendower.
 I tell thee, 115
 He durst as well have met the devil alone
 As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
 Art thou not ashamed? But, sirrah,² henceforth
 Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer;
 Send me your prisoners with the speediest means, 120
 Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
 As will displease you. My Lord Northumberland,
 We license your departure with your son.
 Send us your prisoners, or you will hear of it.
 [Exeunt KING, (BLUNT, and train.)]
- HOT. An if the devil come and roar for them 125
 I will not send them; I will after straight
 And tell him so, for I will ease my heart
 Albeit I make a hazard of my head.
- NORTH. What, drunk with choler?³ stay and pause awhile.
 Here comes your uncle.
 [Enter WORCESTER.]
- HOT. Speak of Mortimer! 130
 Zounds, I will speak of him, and let my soul
 Want mercy if I do not join with him;
 Yea, on his part⁴ I'll empty all these veins,
 And shed my dear blood drop by drop in the dust,
 But I will lift the downtrod Mortimer 135
 As high in the air as this unthankful king,
 As this ingrate and cankered⁵ Bolingbroke.
- NORTH. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad.
- WOR. Who struck this heat up after I was gone?
- HOT. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners; 140
 And when I urged the ransom once again
 Of my wife's brother, then his cheek looked pale,
 And on my face he turned an eye of death,
7. Testing prowess and exchanging blows. "Confound": spend.
 8. Paused for breath.
 9. I.e., curly (because of the waves).
 1. Craftiness or conspiracy; "color": disguise.
 2. A form of "Sir," but used familiarly, and sometimes, as here, with a tone of contempt. "Speak of": i.e., even mention (an emphatic sense of "speak").
 3. Anger.
 4. Behalf.
 5. Ungrateful and malignant.

Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

WOR. I cannot blame him; was not he proclaimed
By Richard, that dead is, the next of blood? 145

NORTH. He was—I heard the proclamation;
And then it was when the unhappy king
(Whose wrongs in us God pardon!⁶) did set forth
Upon his Irish expedition; 150
From whence he intercepted did return
To be deposed and shortly murderéd.

WOR. And for whose death we in the world's wide mouth
Live scandalized and foully spoken of.

HOT. But soft, I pray you; did King Richard then Proclaim my brother⁷ Edmund Mortimer 155
Heir to the crown?

NORTH. He did; myself did hear it.

HOT. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king
That wished him on the barren mountains starve.
But shall it be that you, that set the crown 160
Upon the head of this forgetful man
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murderous subornation⁸—shall it be
That you a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means,⁹ 165
The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?
O pardon me that I descend so low
To show the line and the predicament
Wherein you range¹ under this subtle king!
Shall it for shame be spoken in these days, 170
Or fill up chronicles in time to come,
That men of your nobility and power
Did gage² them both in an unjust behalf,
As both of you—God pardon it!—have done,
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose, 175
And plant this thorn, this canker,³ Bolingbroke?
And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fooled, discarded, and shook off
By him for whom these shames ye underwent?
No; yet time serves wherein you may redeem 180
Your banished honors and restore yourselves
Into the good thoughts of the world again,
Revenge the jeering and disdained⁴ contempt
Of this proud king, who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes to you 185
Even with the bloody payment of your deaths:
Therefore, I say—

WOR. Peace, cousin, say no more;

And now I will unclasp a secret book,

6. I.e., God pardon in us the wrongs category (or class) in which you are we did to him. placed.

7. Brother-in-law.

8. I.e., the stain of aiding and abetting murder.

9. Tools, helpers.

1. I.e., to show the position and the

2. Pledge; "behalf": cause.

3. "Canker" meant not only a wild rose but also a diseased spot (a cancer).

4. Disdainful.

And to your quick-conceiving discontents
 I'll read you matter deep and dangerous,
 As full of peril and adventurous spirit
 As to o'er-walk a current roaring loud
 On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.⁵

190

HOT. If he fall in, good night, or sink or swim;
 Send danger from the east unto the west,
 So⁶ honor cross it from the north to south,
 And let them grapple; O, the blood more stirs
 To rouse a lion than to start⁷ a hare!

195

NORTH. Imagination of some great exploit
 Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

200

HOT. By heaven, methinks it were an easy leap
 To pluck bright honor from the pale-faced moon,
 Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
 Where fathom line could never touch the ground,
 And pluck up drownéd honor by the locks,
 So he that doth redeem her thence might wear
 Without corrival⁸ all her dignities;
 But out upon this half-facéd fellowship!⁹

205

WOR. He apprehends a world of figures¹⁰ here,
 But not the form of what he should attend.
 Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

210

HOT. I cry you mercy.¹¹

WOR. Those same noble Scots
 That are your prisoners—

HOT. I'll keep them all;
 By God, he shall not have a Scot of them;
 No, if a Scot would save his soul he shall not.
 I'll keep them, by this hand.

215

WOR. You start away
 And lend no ear unto my purposes.
 Those prisoners you shall keep.

HOT. Nay, I will; that's flat.
 He said he would not ransom Mortimer,
 Forbade my tongue to speak of Mortimer,
 But I will find him when he lies asleep,
 And in his ear I'll holla "Mortimer!"

220

Nay,
 I'll have a starling shall be taught to speak¹
 Nothing but "Mortimer," and give it him
 To keep his anger still in motion.

225

WOR. Hear you, cousin, a word.

HOT. All studies here I solemnly defy,
 Save how to gall² and pinch this Bolingbroke;
 And that same sword-and-buckler³ Prince of Wales,
 But that I think his father loves him not

230

5. A spear laid down as a foot-bridge.

6. Provided that.

7. Arouse, in hunting.

8. Rival.

9. Miserable sharing (of honor) with someone else.

10. Rhetorical figures of speech.

11. Beg your pardon.

1. Starlings used to be taught to speak, as parrots are now.

2. Irritate.

3. Weapons used not by gentlemen but by servants or rustic clowns.

- And would he glad he met with some mischance,
I would have him poisoned with a pot of ale.⁴
- WOR. Farewell, kinsman; I'll talk to you
When you are better tempered to attend. 235
- NORTH. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool
Art thou to break into this woman's mood,
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own!
- HOT. Why, look you, I am whipped and scourged with rods,
Nettled and stung with pismires,⁵ when I hear 240
Of this vile politician Bolingbroke.
In Richard's time—what do you call the place?—
A plague upon it, it is in Gloucestershire—
'Twas where the madcap duke his uncle kept,⁶
His uncle York, where I first bowed my knee 245
Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke—
'Sblood!—
When you and he came back from Ravenspurgh.
- NORTH. At Berkeley castle.
- HOT. You say true. 250
Why, what a candy deal of courtesy
This fawning greyhound⁷ then did proffer me!
"Look when his infant fortune came to age,"
And "gentle Harry Percy," and "kind cousin";
O, the devil take such cozeners!⁸ God forgive me! 255
Good uncle, tell your tale; I have done.
- WOR. Nay, if you have not, to it again;
We will stay your leisure.
- HOT. I have done, i' faith.
- WOR. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners.
Deliver them up without their ransom straight, 260
And make the Douglas' son your only mean
For powers in Scotland, which, for divers reasons
Which I shall send you written, be assured
Will easily be granted. You, my lord, [(to NORTHUMBERLAND)]
Your son in Scotland being thus employed, 265
Shall secretly into the bosom creep
Of that same noble prelate well beloved,
The archbishop.
- HOT. Of York, is it not?
- WOR. True; who bears hard 270
His brother's death at Bristol, the Lord Scroop.
I speak not this in estimation,⁹
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down,
And only stays but to behold the face 275
Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

4. The drink of the lower classes.

5. Ants.

6. Lived.

7. A complex image which occurs in Shakespeare several times (cf. Hamlet III.ii.65-67 and Antony and Cleopatra IV.xii.20-23). The idea of fawning or flattery called up to Shakespeare's mind the image of a dog begging for sweetmeats ("candy").

8. Cheaters, with of course a pun on the word "cousin."

9. I.e., guessing.

HOT. I smell it; upon my life, it will do well.

NORTH. Before the game is afoot, thou still let'st slip.¹

HOT. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot;

And then the power of Scotland and of York

To join with Mortimer, ha?

280

WOR.

And so they shall.

HOT. In faith, it is exceedingly well aimed.

WOR. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,

To save our heads by raising of a head;²

For, bear ourselves as even as we can,

285

The king will always think him in our debt,

And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,

Till he hath found a time to pay us home;

And see already how he doth begin

To make us strangers to his looks of love.

290

HOT. He does, he does; we'll be revenged on him.

WOR. Cousin, farewell. No further go in this

Than I by letters shall direct your course.

When time is ripe, which will be suddenly,

I'll steal to Glendower and Lord Mortimer,

295

Where you and Douglas and our powers at once,

As I will fashion it, shall happily meet,

To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,

Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

NORTH. Farewell, good brother; we shall thrive, I trust.

300

HOT. Uncle, adieu; O, let the hours be short

Till fields and blows and groans applaud our sport! [Exeunt.]

Act II

SCENE 1

[Enter a CARRIER with a lantern in his hand.]

FIRST CAR. Heigh-ho! an it be not four by the day, I'll be hanged; Charles' wain³ is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler!

OST. [within] Anon, anon.

FIRST CAR. I prithee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle,⁴ put a few flocks in the point; poor jade, is wrung in the withers out of all cess.⁵

5

[Enter another CARRIER.]

SEC. CAR. Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots;⁶ this house is turned upside down since Robin Ostler died.

FIRST CAR. Poor fellow, never joyed since the price of oats rose; 10 it was the death of him.

SEC. CAR. I think this be the most villainous house in all London

1. An image from hunting. The meaning is: "You always ('still') release the dogs before we are ready to pursue the game."

2. Raising an army.

3. The constellation of the Great Bear or Big Dipper.

4. The saddle was beaten to make it soft; "Cut" is a name for a horse with a docked tail. "Flocks in the point": pieces of wool under the point of the saddle.

5. I.e., is sore in the shoulders excessively.

6. I.e., that is the easiest way to give poor nags worms in the stomach.

road for fleas; I am stung like a tench.⁷

FIRST CAR. Like a tench! by the mass, there is ne'er a king christen⁸ could be better bit than I have been since the first cock. 15

SEC. CAR. Why, they will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney, and your chamber-lye breeds fleas like a loach.⁹

FIRST CAR. What, ostler! come away and be hanged, come away! 20

SEC. CAR. I have a gammon¹ of bacon and two razes of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing Cross.

FIRST CAR. God's body! the turkeys in my pannier² are quite starved. What, ostler! A plague on thee, hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? An 'twere not as good deed as 25 drink to brack the pate on thee, I am a very villain. Come and be hanged! hast no faith in thee?

[Enter GADSHILL.]

GADS. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

FIRST CAR. I think it be two o'clock.

GADS. I prithee lend me thy lantern to see my gelding in the stable. 30

FIRST CAR. Nay, by God, soft; I know a trick worth two of that, i' faith.

GADS. I pray thee lend me thine.

SEC. CAR. Aye, when? canst tell?³ Lend me thy lantern, quoth he? marry, I'll see thee hanged first. 35

GADS. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

SEC. CAR. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee. Come, neighbor Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with company, for they have great charge.⁴ 40

[Exeunt (CARRIERS.)]

GADS. What ho! chamberlain!

CHAM. [within] At hand, quoth pickpurse.

GADS. That's even as fair as At hand, quoth the chamberlain, for thou variest no more from picking of purses than giving direction⁵ doth from laboring; thou layest the plot how. 45

[Enter CHAMBERLAIN.]

CHAM. Good morrow, Master Gadshill. It holds current⁶ that I told you yesternight; there's a franklin⁷ in the weald of Kent hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold—I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at supper—a kind of auditor,⁸ one that hath abundance of charge too, God 50 knows what. They are up already and call for eggs and butter;

7. A fish covered with red spots, like fleabites.

8. Christian king.

9. "Jordan": chamber pot; "chamber-lye": urine. The "loach" is a fish which breeds prolifically.

1. Haunch; "razes": roots.

2. Basket.

3. A colloquial expression of contemptuous refusal.

4. Valuable cargo.

5. A pun: "giving direction" means supervising, as contrasted with "laboring," but it was also the name for informing thieves about the journeys of prospective victims (laying "the plot how").

6. Remains true.

7. A freeholder, just below a gentleman in rank. "Weald of Kent": a section of that county, formerly wooded.

8. Revenue officer; "abundance of charge": considerable property.

they will away presently.⁹

GADS. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks,¹ I'll give thee this neck.

CHAM. No, I'll none of it; I pray thee, keep that for the hangman, for I know thou worshippest Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may. 55

GADS. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for if I hang, old Sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he is no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans² that thou dreamest not of, the which for sport sake are content to do the profession some grace, that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake make all whole. I am joined with no foot land-rakers,³ no long-staff sixpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio purple-hued maltworms,⁴ but with nobility and tranquility, burgo- 60 masters and great oneyers, such as can hold in, such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray; and yet, zounds, I lie, for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth, or rather, not pray to her but prey on her, for they ride up and down on her and make her their boots.⁵ 65 70

CHAM. What, the commonwealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

GADS. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her. We steal as in a castle, cocksure; we have the receipt of fern seed,⁶ we walk invisible. 75

CHAM. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholding to the night than to fern seed for your walking invisible.

GADS. Give me thy hand; thou shalt have a share in our purchase,⁷ as I am a true man. 80

CHAM. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

GADS. Go to; homo is a common name to all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy⁸ knave. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter PRINCE and POINS.]

POINS. Come shelter, shelter; I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gummed velvet.⁹

PRINCE. Stand close.

[Enter FALSTAFF.]

FAL. Poins! Poins, and be hanged! Poins!

PRINCE. Peace, ye fat-kidneyed rascal! what a brawling dost thou keep! 5

FAL. Where's Poins, Hal?

PRINCE. He is walked up to the top of the hill; I'll go seek him.

9. At once.

1. Highwaymen.

2. Roisterers, good fellows.

3. Footpads; "sixpenny strikers": small-time thieves.

4. Flushed, swaggering barflies. "Oneyers": dignitaries; "hold in": keep secret.

5. Booty.

6. I.e., we have the recipe for fern seed (supposed to make one invisible). "Liquored": greased.

7. Takings.

8. Muddle-headed.

9. Cheap velvet was treated with gum to make the pile stiff; as a result it soon fretted or wore away. "Stand close": hide.

[He pretends to go, but hides onstage with POINS.]

FAL. I am accursed to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squier¹ further afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I 'scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two and twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else; I have drunk medicines. Poins! Hal! a plague upon you both! Bardolph! Peto! I'll starve ere I'll rob a foot further. An 'twere not as good a deed as drink to turn true man and to leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles afoot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough; a plague upon it when thieves cannot be true one to another! [They whistle.] Whew! A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hanged!

PRINCE. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground and list if thou canst hear the tread of travelers.

FAL. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear my own flesh so far afoot again for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt² me thus?

PRINCE. Thou liest; thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

FAL. I prithee, good Prince, Hal, help me to my horse, good king's son.

PRINCE. Out, ye rogue! shall I be your ostler?

FAL. Go hang thyself in thine own heir-apparent garters!³ If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison; when a jest is so forward, and afoot too! I hate it.

[Enter GADSHILL, (BARDOLPH and PETO with him.)]

GADS. Stand.

FAL. So I do, against my will.

POINS. O, 'tis our setter; I know his voice. Bardolph, what news?

BARD. Case⁴ ye, case ye, on with your vizards; there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

FAL. You lie, you rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

GADS. There's enough to make us all.

FAL. To be hanged.

PRINCE. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower; if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

PETO. How many be there of them?

GADS. Some eight or ten.

FAL. Zounds, will they not rob us?

1. Ruler, yardstick.

2. Trick.

3. As heir apparent to the throne. Hal would of course be a knight of the Order of the Garter.

4. Mask.

PRINCE. What, a coward, Sir John Paunch?

FAL. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt your grandfather, but yet no coward, Hal.

PRINCE. Well, we leave that to the proof.

POINS. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge; when thou needest him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast. 60

FAL. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

PRINCE. [aside to POINS] Ned, where are our disguises?

POINS. [aside] Here, hard by; stand close. 65

[Exeunt PRINCE and POINS.]

FAL. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole,⁵ say I; every man to his business.

[Enter the TRAVELERS.]

FIRST TRAV. Come, neighbor, the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

THIEVES. Stand! 70

TRAVELERS. Jesus bless us!

FAL. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats. Ah, whore-son caterpillars,⁶ bacon-fed knaves, they hate us youth! Down with them, fleece them.

TRAVELERS. O, we are undone, both we and ours forever! 75

FAL. Hang ye, gorbellied⁷ knaves, are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here! On, bacons, on! What, ye knaves, young men must live! You are grand jurors, are ye? we'll jure ye, faith.

[Here they rob them and bind them. Exeunt.]

[Enter the PRINCE and POINS.]

PRINCE. The thieves have bound the true men. Now could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London; it would be argument⁸ for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest forever. 80

POINS. Stand close; I hear them coming.

[Enter the THIEVES again.]

FAL. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the Prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring;⁹ there's no more valor in that Poins than in a wild duck. 85

PRINCE. Your money!

POINS. Villains! 90

[As they are sharing, the PRINCE and POINS set upon them; they all run away; and FALSTAFF, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booty behind them.]

PRINCE. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse;
The thieves are all scattered and possessed with fear
So strongly that they dare not meet each other;
Each takes his fellow for an officer.
Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, 95

5. I.e., good luck!

6. "Caterpillars of the commonwealth" was a common phrase, referring to rogues. Falstaff here applies ridiculously inappropriate terms to the travelers and to himself (e.g., "youth").

7. Fat; "chuffs": misers.

8. Subject of stories.

9. There's no justice.

And lards the lean earth as he walks along;
Were't not for laughing, I should pity him.

POINS. How the fat rogue roared!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 3

[Enter HOTSPUR, alone, reading a letter.]

HOT. "But for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house." "He could be contented"; why is he not, then? "In respect of the love he bears our house," he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. 5
"The purpose you undertake is dangerous." Why, that's certain. 'Tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety.¹ "The purpose you undertake is dangerous, the friends you have named uncertain, the time itself unsorted,² 10 and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition." Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow cowardly hind,³ and you lie. What a lack-brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid, our friends true and constant; a good plot, good friends, 15 and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my lord of York⁴ commends the plot and the general course of the action. Zounds, an I were now by this rascal I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? 20
Lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen Glendower? is there not besides the Douglas? have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month, and are they not some of them set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this, an infidel! Ha! you shall see now in very sincerity 25 of fear and cold heart, will he to the king and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself and go to buffets,⁵ for moving such a dish of skim milk with so honorable an action! Hang him! let him tell the king. We are prepared; I will set forward tonight. 30

[Enter his LADY.]

How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours.

LADY. O, my good lord, why are you thus alone?

For what offense have I this fortnight been

A banished woman from my Harry's bed?

Tell me, sweet lord, what is 't that takes from thee 35

Thy stomach,⁶ pleasure, and thy golden sleep?

Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth,

And start so often when thou sit'st alone?

Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks,

And given my treasures and my rights of thee 40

To thick-eyed musing and cursed melancholy?

In thy faint slumbers I by thee have watched

And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,

1. The nettle if touched tenderly will sting; if grasped firmly, will not.

2. Unsuitable.

3. Peasant.

4. The Archbishop of York.

5. Split myself in two and let the parts fight each other; "moving": urging.

6. Appetite.

Speak terms of manage⁷ to thy bounding steed,
 Cry "Courage! to the field!" And thou hast talked 45
 Of sallies and retires, of trenches, tents,
 Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets,
 Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin,⁸
 Of prisoners' ransom and of soldiers slain,
 And all the currents of a heady fight. 50
 Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war
 And thus hath so bestirred thee in thy sleep
 That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow
 Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream,
 And in thy face strange motions have appeared 55
 Such as we see when men restrain their breath
 On some great sudden hest.⁹ O, what portents are these?
 Some heavy business hath my lord in hand
 And I must know it, else he loves me not.

HOT. What, ho!

[(Enter SERVANT.)]

Is Gilliams with the packet gone? 60

SERV. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

HOT. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriff?

SERV. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

HOT. What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?

SERV. It is, my lord.

HOT. That roan shall be my throne. 65

Well, I will back¹ him straight; O Esperance!²

Bid Butler lead him forth into the park. [(Exit SERVANT.)]

LADY. But hear you, my lord.

HOT. What say'st thou, my lady?

LADY. What is it carries you away? 70

HOT. Why, my horse, my love, my horse.

LADY. Out, you mad-headed ape!

A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen³

As you are tossed with. In faith

I'll know your business, Harry, that I will. 75

I fear my brother Mortimer doth stir

About his title, and hath sent for you

To line his enterprise; but if you go⁴—

HOT. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

LADY. Come, come, you paraquito, answer me 80

Directly unto this question that I ask;

In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry,

An if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

HOT. Away,

Away, you trifier! Love! I love thee not, 85

7. Horsemanship.

8. Three kinds of artillery (named here in decreasing order of weight).

9. Command.

1. Mount.

2. The battle cry of the Percies: "Ho!"

3. The spleen was supposed to be the source of sudden and violent emotions; the weasel was considered a very impetuous animal.

4. Besides its ordinary sense, which Lady Percy uses, "go" also meant "walk," the sense in which Hotspur takes it. "Line": support.

- I care not for thee, Kate; this is no world
 To play with mammets and to tilt with lips;
 We must have bloody noses and cracked crowns,⁵
 And pass them current too. God's me, my horse!
 What say'st thou, Kate? what wouldst thou have with me? 90
- LADY. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed?
 Well, do not then, for since you love me not
 I will not love myself. Do you not love me?
 Nay, tell me if you speak in jest or no.
- HOT. Come, wilt thou see me ride? 95
 And when I am o' horseback, I will swear
 I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate,
 I must not have you henceforth question me
 Whither I go, nor reason whereabout;
 Whither I must, I must; and, to conclude, 100
 This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate.
 I know you wise, but yet no farther wise
 Than Harry Percy's wife; constant you are,
 But yet a woman, and for secrecy
 No lady closer; for I well believe 105
 Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know,
 And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate.
- LADY. How! so far?
- HOT. Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate,
 Whither I go, thither shall you go too; 110
 Today will I set forth, tomorrow you.
 Will this content you, Kate?
- LADY. It must of force.⁶ [Exeunt.]

SCENE 4

[Enter the PRINCE and POINS.]

- PRINCE. Ned, prithee come out of that fat⁷ room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.
- POINS. Where hast been, Hal?
- PRINCE. With three or four loggerheads⁸ amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. I have sounded the very bass string of humil- 5
 ity. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers,⁹ and can call them all by their christen names, as Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy, and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff, but a Corinthian;¹⁰ a lad 10 of mettle, a good boy—by the Lord, so they call me—and when I am king of England I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call drinking deep, dycing scarlet, and when you breathe in your watering¹ they cry “hem!” and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quar- 15 ter of an hour that I can drink with any tinker in his own lan-

5. Broken heads, with a pun on

“crowns” as coins. “Mammets”: dolls.

6. Of necessity.

7. Vat. This establishes that the scene is a tavern.

8. Blockheads.

9. Group of tapsters, waiters.

10. Good fellow.

1. Drinking.

guage during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honor, that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapped even now into my hand by an under-skinker,² one that never spake other English in his life than “Eight shillings and sixpence,” and “You are welcome,” with this shrill addition, “Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-Moon,”³ or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I prithee do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar, and do thou never leave calling “Francis,” that his tale to me may be nothing but “Anon.” Step aside, and I’ll show thee a precedent.

POINS. Francis!

PRINCE. Thou art perfect.

POINS. Francis!

[(Exit POINS.)]

[Enter DRAWER.]

FRAN. Anon, anon, sir. Look down into the Pomgarnet,⁴ Ralph.

PRINCE. Come hither, Francis.

FRAN. My lord?

PRINCE. How long hast thou to serve,⁵ Francis?

FRAN. Forsooth, five years, and as much as to—

POINS. [within] Francis!

FRAN. Anon, anon, sir.

PRINCE. Five year! by’r Lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant as to play the coward with thy indenture and show it a fair pair of heels and run from it?

FRAN. O Lord, sir, I’ll be sworn upon all the books⁶ in England, I could find in my heart—

POINS. [within] Francis!

FRAN. Anon, sir.

PRINCE. How old art thou, Francis?

FRAN. Let me see—about Michaelmas⁷ next I shall be—

POINS. [within] Francis!

FRAN. Anon, sir. Pray stay a little, my lord.

PRINCE. Nay, but hark you, Francis: for the sugar thou gavest me, ’twas a pennyworth, was’t not?

FRAN. O Lord, I would it had been two!

PRINCE. I will give thee for it a thousand pound; ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

POINS. [within] Francis!

FRAN. Anon, anon.

PRINCE. Anon, Francis? No, Francis, but tomorrow, Francis; or Francis, o’ Thursday, or indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, 60

2. Assistant waiter.

3. I.e., charge a pint of “bastard” (a sweet Spanish wine) to a customer in the room called “Half-Moon.” “Anon”: immediately (the reply of a servant when called, equivalent to “Coming!”).

4. Pomegranate (another room in the tavern).

5. I.e., to finish out his apprenticeship, usually a seven-year period under an “indenture” or agreement.

6. I.e., Bibles.

7. September 29.

Francis!

FRAN. My lord?

PRINCE. Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin,⁸ crystal-button, not-pated, agate-ring, puke-stocking, caddis-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch— 65

FRAN. O Lord, sir, who do you mean?

PRINCE. Why, then, your brown bastard is your only drink, for look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully. In Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.⁹

FRAN. What, sir? 70

POINS. [within] Francis!

PRINCE. Away, you rogue, dost thou not hear them call?

[Here they both call him; the drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.]

[Enter VINTNER.]

VINT. What, stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit FRANCIS.] My lord, old Sir John with half-a-dozen more are at the door; shall I let them in? 75

PRINCE. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit VINTNER.] Poins!

[Enter POINS.]

POINS. Anon, anon, sir.

PRINCE. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door; shall we be merry? 80

POINS. As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye, what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue?

PRINCE. I am now of all humors¹ that have showed themselves humors since the old days of goodman Adam to the pupil² age 85 of this present twelve o'clock at midnight.

[Enter FRANCIS.]

What's o'clock, Francis?

FRAN. Anon, anon, sir. [Exit.]

PRINCE. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is upstairs 90 and downstairs, his eloquence the parcel³ of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north, he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife "Fie upon this quiet life! I want work." "O my sweet Harry," says she, "how many hast thou 95 killed today?" "Give my roan horse a drench," says he, and answers "Some fourteen," an hour after, "a trifle, a trifle." I prithee, call in Falstaff; I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play Dame Mortimer his wife. "Rivo!"⁴ says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow. 100

[Enter FALSTAFF, GADSHILL, BARDOLPH, and PETO, FRAN-

8. Leather-jacketed; "not-pated": with short hair; "puke": dark gray; "caddis": worsted tape.

9. Deliberate nonsense to confuse Francis, and one of the first instances of doubletalk in English literature.

1. Temperaments, dispositions.

2. Youthful.

3. Item.

4. Drink up!

cis following with wine.}]

POINS. Welcome, Jack; where hast thou been?

FAL. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too, marry and amen! Give me a cup of sack, boy. Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew nether stocks⁵ and mend them and foot them too. A plague of all cowards! Give me a cup of sack, rogue. Is there no virtue extant? [He drinks.] 105

PRINCE. Didst thou ever see Titan⁶ kiss a dish of butter, pitiful-hearted butter that melted at the sweet tale of the sun's? If thou didst, then behold that compound.

FAL. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too;⁷ there is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man, yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it. A villainous coward! Go thy ways, old Jack, die when thou wilt; if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring.⁸ There lives not three good men unchanged in England, and one of them is fat and grows old. God help the while; a bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms⁹ or anything. A plague of all cowards, I say still. 110 115

PRINCE. How now, woolsack, what mutter you?

FAL. A king's son!¹ If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales! 120

PRINCE. Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

FAL. Are not you a coward? answer me to that; and Poins there? 125

POINS. Zounds, ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, by the Lord I'll stab thee.

FAL. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward; but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back; call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me. Give me a cup of sack; I am a rogue if I drunk today. 130

PRINCE. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunkenest last.

FAL. All's one for that. [He drinks.] A plague of all cowards, still say I. 135

PRINCE. What's the matter?

FAL. What's the matter! there be four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this day morning. 140

PRINCE. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

FAL. Where is it? taken from us it is—a hundred upon poor four of us.

PRINCE. What, a hundred, man?

FAL. I am a rogue if I were not at half-sword² with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scaped by miracle. I am 145

5. Stockings.

6. The sun.

7. Lime was used to make wine sparkle.

8. A herring that has cast its spawn and is lean.

9. Protestant weavers from Flanders were notorious for singing psalms.

1. A stick used by the Vice in the old morality plays.

2. At half a sword's length.

cight times thrust through the doublet, four through the hose,³ my buckler cut through and through, my sword hacked like a handsaw—*ecce signum!*⁴ I never dealt better since I was a man; all would not do. A plague of all cowards! Let them ¹⁵⁰ speak; if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains and the sons of darkness.

PRINCE. Speak, sirs; how was it?

GADS. We four set upon some dozen—

FAL. Sixteen at least, my lord.

155

GADS. And bound them.

PETO. No, no, they were not bound.

FAL. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them, or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

GADS. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon ¹⁶⁰ us—

FAL. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

PRINCE. What, fought you with them all?

FAL. All! I know not what you call all, but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish; if there were not two ¹⁶⁵ or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legged creature.

PRINCE. Pray God you have not murdered some of them.

FAL. Nay, that's past praying for; I have peppered two of them.

Two I am sure I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. I ¹⁷⁰ tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward;⁵ here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me—

PRINCE. What, four? thou saidst but two even now.

FAL. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

175

POINS. Aye, aye, he said four.

FAL. These four came all a-front, and mainly⁶ thrust at me. I made me no more ado but took all their seven points in my target,⁷ thus.

PRINCE. Seven? why, there were but four even now.

180

FAL. In buckram?

POINS. Aye, four, in buckram suits.

FAL. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else.

PRINCE. Prithce, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

FAL. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

185

PRINCE. Aye, and mark thee too, Jack.

FAL. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. These nine in buckram that I told thee of—

PRINCE. So, two more already.

FAL. Their points being broken—

190

POINS. Down fell their hose.⁸

FAL. Began to give me ground; but I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and with a thought⁹ seven of the eleven I paid.

3. Breeches.

4. Here's the proof!

5. Defense; "here I lay": this was my stance.

6. Strongly.

7. Shield.

8. Poins puns on the other meaning of "points": the laces used to tie up trousers ("hose").

9. As quick as thought.

PRINCE. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two!
 FAL. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves¹⁹⁵ in Kendal green came at my back and let drive at me, for it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldst not see thy hand.

PRINCE. These lies are like their father that begets them—gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts, thou knotty-pated fool, thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-²⁰⁰
 catch¹—

FAL. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth the truth?

PRINCE. Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand? come, tell²⁰⁵ us your reason. What sayest thou to this?

POINS. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

FAL. What, upon compulsion? Zounds, an I were at the strap-pado,² or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! if reasons³²¹⁰ were as plentiful as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

PRINCE. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horseback-breaker, this huge hill of flesh—²¹⁵

FAL. 'Sblood, you starveling, you eelskin, you dried neat's tongue, you bull's pizzle, you stockfish!⁴ O for breath to utter what is like thee! you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow case, you vile standing-tuck⁵—

PRINCE. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when²²⁰ thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

POINS. Mark, Jack.

PRINCE. We two saw you four set on four and bound them, and were masters of their wealth. Mark now, how a plain tale shall²²⁵ put you down. Then did we two set on you four; and, with a word, outfaced you from your prize, and have it, yea, and can show it you here in the house; and, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy and still run and roared, as ever I heard bullcalf. What²³⁰ a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole,⁶ canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

POINS. Come, let's hear, Jack; what trick hast thou now?²³⁵

FAL. By the Lord, I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why, hear you, my masters: was it for me to kill the heir apparent?
 should I turn upon the true prince? why, thou knowest I am

1. Piece of tallow from which chandlers made candles.

2. A method of torture; "racks":
 another method.

3. A pun on the word "raisin," which was spelled and pronounced like "reason" in Elizabethan England.

4. I.e., you ox tongue, you bull's penis, you dried cod!

5. Stiff rapier.

6. Evasion.

as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince.⁷ Instinct is a great matter; I was now a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money. Hostess, clap to the doors; watch⁸ tonight, pray tomorrow. Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

PRINCE. Content; and the argument⁹ shall be thy running away.

FAL. Ah, no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me!

[Enter HOSTESS.]

HOST. O Jesu, my lord the prince!

PRINCE. How now, my lady the hostess! what sayest thou to me?

HOST. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door would speak with you; he says he comes from your father.

PRINCE. Give him as much as will make him a royal¹ man, and send him back again to my mother.

FAL. What manner of man is he?

HOST. An old man.

FAL. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight? Shall I give him his answer?

PRINCE. Prithee, do, Jack.

FAL. Faith, and I'll send him packing.

[Exit.]

PRINCE. Now, sirs. By 'r Lady, you fought fair; so did you, Peto; so did you, Bardolph; you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince; no, fie!

BARD. Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

PRINCE. Faith, tell me now in earnest, how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

PETO. Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and said he would swear truth out of England but he would make you believe it was done in fight, and persuaded us to do the like.

BARD. Yea, and to tickle our noses with speargrass to make them bleed, and then to beslobber our garments with it and swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven year before, I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

PRINCE. O villain, thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner,² and ever since thou hast blushed extempore. Thou hadst fire³ and sword on thy side, and yet thou rankest away; what instinct hadst thou for it?

BARD. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

PRINCE. I do.

BARD. What think you they portend?

PRINCE. Hot livers and cold purses.⁴

7. In many medieval romances the lion, as king of beasts, shows respect for royalty.

8. Stay up.

9. Plot or story.

1. A "royal" was half of a pound sterling, a "noble" was a third.

2. In the act.

3. "Fire" and the allusions to "meteors" and "exhalations" (shooting stars) refer to Bardolph's red nose.

4. I.e., drunkenness and poverty.

BARD. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

PRINCE. No, if rightly taken, halter.

285

[Enter FALSTAFF.]

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast,⁵ how long is 't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

FAL. My own knee! when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb ring. A plague of sighing and grief—it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad; here was Sir John Bracy from your father; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy, and he of Wales, that gave Amamon⁶ the bastinado and made Lucifer cuckold and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook⁷—what a plague call you him?

POINS. O, Glendower.

FAL. Owen, Owen, the same; and his son-in-law Mortimer, and old Northumberland, and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular—

PRINCE. He that rides at high speed and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

FAL. You have hit it.

PRINCE. So did he never the sparrow.

305

FAL. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run.

PRINCE. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running!

FAL. O' horseback, ye cuckoo; but afoot he will not budge a foot.

PRINCE. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

310

FAL. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps⁸ more. Worcester is stolen away tonight; thy father's beard is turned white with the news; you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

PRINCE. Why then, it is like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hobnails, by the hundreds.

FAL. By the mass, lad, thou sayest truc; it is like we shall have good trading that way. But tell me, Hal, art not thou horrible afraid? thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

PRINCE. Not a whit, i' faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

FAL. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid tomorrow when thou comest to thy father; if thou love me, practice an answer.

325

PRINCE. Do thou stand for⁹ my father and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

FAL. Shall I? Content. This chair shall be my state,¹ this dagger

5. Padding, stuffing.

6. A devil. "Bastinado": a beating, cudgelling.

7. A long spear with a hook on it.

8. Scots.

9. Represent.

1. Throne.

my scepter, and this cushion my crown.

330

PRINCE. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool,² thy golden scepter for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful bald crown!

FAL. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved. Give me a cup of sack to make my eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept, for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cambyeses'³ vein.

335

PRINCE. Well, here is my leg.⁴

FAL. And here is my speech. Stand aside, nobility.

HOST. O Jesu, this is excellent sport, i' faith!

340

FAL. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain.

HOST. O, the father, how he holds his countenance!

FAL. For God's sake, lords, convey my tristful queen,

For tears do stop the floodgates of her eyes.⁵

HOST. O Jesu, he doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see!

345

FAL. Peace, good pint pot, peace, good ticklebrain. Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied, for though the camomile,⁶ the more it is trodden on the faster it grows, so youth, the more it is wasted the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion, but chiefly a villainous trick of thine eye and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip that doth warrant⁷ me. If then thou be son to me, here lies the point; why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher⁸ and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch. This pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest: for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink but in tears, not in pleasure but in passion, not in words only, but in woes also: and yet there is a virtuous man whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

350

355

360

365

PRINCE. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

FAL. A goodly portly man, i' faith, and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye and a most noble carriage, and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by 'r Lady, inclining to threescore; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff. If that man should be lewdly given, he deceiveth me, for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff; him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me

370

2. An ordinary stool, made by a joiner (carpenter).

3. Like the bombastic hero of the old play Cambyeses.

4. I.e., he bows, makes an obeisance.

5. Falstaff's blank verse lines parody the old-fashioned tragedies of the 1570's and 80's.

6. An aromatic herb. The style in this speech is a parody of Euphuism, the ornate, elaborate, balanced style made popular by Lyly's Euphues.

7. Assure.

8. Truant.

now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month? 375

PRINCE. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

FAL. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a 380 rabbit-sucker⁹ or a poulter's hare.

PRINCE. Well, here I am set.¹⁰

FAL. And here I stand; judge, my masters.

PRINCE. Now, Harry, whence come you?

FAL. My noble lord, from Eastcheap. 385

PRINCE. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

FAL. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false: nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i' faith.

PRINCE. Swearst thou, ungracious boy? thenceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace; there is a devil haunts thee in the likeness of an old fat man; a tun¹ of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humors, that bolting-hutch² of beastliness, that swollen parcel of dropsies, that huge bombard of sack, that stuffed cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree³ ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that gray iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years? Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein villainous, but in all things? 390 wherein worthy, but in nothing? 400

FAL. I would your grace would take me with you; whom means your grace?

PRINCE. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan. 405

FAL. My lord, the man I know.

PRINCE. I know thou dost.

FAL. But to say I know more harm in him than in myself were to say more than I know. That he is old the more the pity, his white hairs do witness it; but that he is, saving your reverence, a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! if to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know is damned; if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine⁴ are to be loved. No, my good lord, banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins, 410 but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being as he is old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company; banish plump Jack, and ban-

9. Suckling rabbit.

10. Seated.

1. Large barrel.

2. Trough; "bombard": leather wine vessel.

3. Town in Essex, noted for barbecues;

"pudding": sausage. The "vice" was a comic character in the old morality plays. Falstaff is in some respects a descendant of this type-character.

4. In the dream Joseph interpreted. See Genesis xli.19-21.

ish all the world.

PRINCE. I do, I will.

[(A knocking heard.)]

[(Exeunt HOSTESS and BARDOLPH.)]

[Enter BARDOLPH, running.]

BARD. O, my lord, my lord, the sheriff with a most monstrous watch is at the door.

FAL. Out, ye rogue! Play out the play; I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

[Enter the HOSTESS.]

HOST. O Jesu, my lord, my lord!

FAL. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddlestick;⁵ what's the matter?

HOST. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door; they are come to search the house. Shall I let them in?

FAL. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit; thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.⁶

PRINCE. And thou a natural coward, without instinct.

FAL. I deny your major;⁷ if you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter. If I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope I shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.⁸

PRINCE. Go hide thee behind the arras;⁹ the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face and good conscience.

FAL. Both which I have had; but their date is out,¹ and therefore I'll hide me.

PRINCE. Call in the sheriff.

[(Exeunt (all except the PRINCE and POINS.))]

[Enter SHERIFF and the CARRIER.]

Now, master sheriff, what is your will with me?

SHER. First pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry Hath followed certain men unto this house.

PRINCE. What men?

SHER. One of them is well known, my gracious lord, A gross fat man.

CAR. As fat as butter.

PRINCE. The man, I do assure you, is not here, For I myself at this time have employed him, And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee That I will by tomorrow dinnertime Send him to answer thee or any man For anything he shall be charged withal; And so let me entreat you leave the house.

SHER. I will, my lord. There are two gentlemen

5. I.e., there's a commotion.

6. I.e., don't give a true man (me, Falstaff) away as a thief. He goes on to accuse the prince, in his reversal of values in the play scene, of being out of his mind, though he appears rational.

7. Your major premise (that I, Falstaff, am a coward).

8. I.e., I hope my fat neck will not make the process of strangling on the gallows longer for me than for the rest of you. The "cart" is the wagon on which criminals were taken to be hanged.

9. The hangings or draperies which covered the walls. "Up above": on the balcony.

1. Lease has expired.

Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

PRINCE. It may be so; if he have robbed these men

He shall be answerable; and so farewell.

SHER. Good night, my noble lord.

460

PRINCE. I think it is good morrow, is it not?

SHER. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock.

[Exeunt (SHERIFF and CARRIER.)]

PRINCE. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's.² Go call him forth.

POINS. Falstaff!—Fast asleep behind the arras, and snorting like a horse.

PRINCE. Hark, how hard he fetches breath. Search his pockets.

[He searcheth his pockets, and findeth certain papers.] What hast thou found?

POINS. Nothing but papers, my lord.

470

PRINCE. Let's see what they be: read them.

POINS. [reads] "Item, a capon. . . . 2s. 2d.

Item, sauce. . . . 4d.

Item, sack, two gallons. . . 5s. 8d.

Item, anchovies and sack after supper. . . . 2s. 6d.

475

Item, bread. . . . ob."³

PRINCE. O monstrous! but one halfpennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack! What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage; there let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning. We must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honorable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot,⁴ and I know his death will be a march of twelvescore.

The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes⁵ in the morning, and so good morrow, Poins.

485

POINS. Good morrow, good my lord. [Exeunt.]

Act III

SCENE 1

[Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, LORD MORTIMER, and OWEN GLENDOWER.]

MORT. These promises are fair, the parties sure,

And our induction⁶ full of prosperous hope.

HOT. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower,

Will you sit down?

And uncle Worcester; a plague upon it,

I have forgot the map.

5

GLEND. No, here it is.

Sit, cousin Percy, sit, good cousin Hotspur,

For by that name as oft as Lancaster⁷

Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale and with

2. St. Paul's Cathedral.

3. Oble, a halfpenny.

4. Company of infantry. "Twelvescore": i.e., 240 yards.

5. Early.

6. Initial step.

7. I.e., King Henry IV. To call him by his lesser title is insulting.

A rising sigh he wisheth you in heaven. 10
HOT. And you in hell as often as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

GLEND. I cannot blame him; at my nativity
The front⁸ of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
Of burning cressets, and at my birth 15
The frame and huge foundation of the earth
Shaked like a coward.

HOT. Why, so it would have done at the same season if your mother's cat had but kittened, though yourself had never been born. 20

GLEND. I say the earth did shake when I was born.

HOT. And I say the earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

GLEND. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

HOT. O then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,
And not in fear of your nativity. 25

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions; oft the teeming earth
Is with a kind of colic pinched and vexed
By the imprisoning of unruly wind 30
Within her womb, which for enlargement striving Shakes the old beldam⁹ earth and topples down
Steeple and moss-grown towers. At your birth
Our grandam earth, having this distemperature,¹⁰
In passion shook. 35

GLEND. Cousin, of many men 35

I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave
To tell you once again that at my birth
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds
Were strangely clamorous to the frightened fields. 40
These signs have marked me extraordinary,
And all the courses of my life do show
I am not in the roll of common men.
Where is he living, clipped in with¹ the sea
That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales, 45
Which calls me pupil or hath read to me?
And bring him out that is but woman's son
Can trace me in the tedious ways of art²
And hold me pace in deep experiments.

HOT. I think there's no man speaks better Welsh. I'll to dinner. 50

MORT. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him mad.

GLEND. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

HOT. Why, so can I, or so can any man;
But will they come when you do call for them?

GLEND. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command
The devil. 55

8. The forehead. "Cressets": lamps.

9. Old woman.

10. Ailment.

1. Within the limits of.

2. Follow me in practicing difficult magic.

- HOT. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil
 By telling truth; tell truth and shame the devil.³
 If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,
 And I'll be sworn I have power to shame him hence. 60
 O, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil!
- MORT. Come, come, no more of this unprofitable chat.
- GLEND. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head
 Against my power, thrice from the banks of Wye
 And sandy-bottomed Severn have I sent him 65
 Bootless⁴ home and weather-beaten back.
- HOT. Home without boots, and in foul weather too!
 How'scapes he agues,⁵ in the devil's name?
- GLEND. Come, here is the map; shall we divide our right
 According to our threefold order ta'en?⁶ 70
- MORT. The archdeacon hath divided it
 Into three limits very equally:
 England, from Trent and Severn hitherto,
 By south and east is to my part assigned;
 All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore, 75
 And all the fertile land within that bound,
 To Owen Glendower; and, dear coz, to you
 The remnant northward lying off from Trent;
 And our indentures tripartite are drawn,
 Which being sealéd interchangeably, 80
 A business that this night may execute,
 Tomorrow, cousin Percy, you and I
 And my good Lord of Worcester will set forth
 To meet your father and the Scottish power,
 As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury. 85
 My father⁷ Glendower is not ready yet,
 Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days.
 Within that space you may have drawn together
 Your tenants, friends, and neighboring gentlemen.
- GLEND. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords,
 And in my conduct shall your ladies come, 90
 From whom you now must steal and take no leave,
 For there will be a world of water shed
 Upon the parting of your wives and you.
- HOT. Methinks my moiety,⁸ north from Burton here,
 In quantity equals not one of yours;
 See how this river comes me cranking⁹ in,
 And cuts me from the best of all my land
 A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle¹ out.
 I'll have the current in this place dammed up; 100
 And here the smug^{1a} and silver Trent shall run

3. A proverb.

4. Unsuccessful; but Hotspur takes it in the other sense.

5. Fevers and chills.

6. Divide our property according to the arrangement for division into three parts.

7. Father-in-law.

8. Part, share.

9. Curving.

1. Corner.

1a. Smooth.

In a new channel, fair and evenly;
It shall not wind with such a deep indent
To rob me of so rich a bottom² here.

GLEND. Not wind? it shall, it must; you see it doth.

105

MORT. Yea, but

Mark how he bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side;
Gelding the opposéd continent³ as much
As on the other side it takes from you.

110

WOR. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here

And on this north side win this cape of land,

And then he runs straight and even.

HOT. I'll have it so; a little charge will do it.

GLEND. I'll not have it altered.

HOT. Will not you?

115

GLEND. No, nor you shall not.

HOT. Who shall say me nay?

GLEND. Why, that will I.

HOT. Let me not understand you then; speak it in Welsh.

GLEND. I can speak English, lord, as well as you,

For I was trained up in the English court,
Where, being but young, I framéd to the harp
Many an English ditty lovely well
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament,
A virtue that was never seen in you.

120

HOT. Marry,

And I am glad of it with all my heart;
I had rather be a kitten and cry mew
Than one of these same meter ballad-mongers;
I had rather hear a brazen canstick turned,⁴
Or a dry wheel grate on the axletree,
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing⁵ poetry;
'Tis like the forced gait of a shuffling nag.

125

GLEND. Come, you shall have Trent turned.

HOT. I do not care; I'll give thrice so much land

To any well-deserving friend;

But in the way of bargain, mark ye me,

I'll cavil⁶ on the ninth part of a hair.

Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?

135

GLEND. The moon shines fair; you may be away by night.

I'll haste the writer, and withal

Break with⁷ your wives of your departure hence.

I am afraid my daughter will run mad,

So much she doteth on her Mortimer.

[Exit.]

140

MORT. Fie, cousin Percy, how you cross my father!

145

HOT. I cannot choose; sometime he angers me

2. Valley.

3. I.e., cutting off from the opposite side.

4. A brass candlestick turned on a lathe.

5. Affected. "Shuffling": hobbled.

6. Quibble.

7. Inform.

With telling me of the moldwarp⁸ and the ant,
 Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies,
 And of a dragon and a finless fish,
 A clip-winged griffin and a molten raven,
 A couching lion and a ramping⁹ cat,
 And such a deal of skimble-skamble stuff
 As puts me from my faith. I tell you what;
 He held me last night at least nine hours
 In reckoning up the several devils' names
 That were his lackeys. I cried "hum" and "well, go to,"
 But marked him not a word. O, he is as tedious
 As a tired horse, a railing¹ wife,
 Worse than a smoky house. I had rather live
 With cheese and garlic in a windmill,² far,
 Than feed on cates and have him talk to me
 In any summer house in Christendom.

MORT. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman,
 Exceedingly well read, and profited
 In strange concealments,³ valiant as a lion
 And wondrous affable and as bountiful
 As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
 He holds your temper⁴ in a high respect
 And curbs himself even of his natural scope
 When you come 'cross his humor; faith, he does.
 I warrant you that man is not alive
 Might so have tempted him as you have done
 Without the taste of danger and reproof;
 But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.

WOR. In faith, my lord, you are too willful-blame,
 And since your coming hither have done enough
 To put him quite beside his patience.
 You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault.
 Though sometimes it show greatness, courage, blood⁵—
 And that's the dearest grace it renders you—
 Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
 Defect of manners, want of government,⁶
 Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain;
 The least of which haunting a nobleman
 Loseth men's hearts and leaves behind a stain
 Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
 Beguiling them of commendation.

HOT. Well, I am schooled; good manners be your speed!

Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

8. Mole. According to the chronicler Holinshed there were prophecies in which Henry IV was referred to as "a moldwarp, cursed of God." Merlin was the famous prophet of King Arthur's court; many later prophecies were attributed to him.

9. "Couching" and "ramping" are Hotspur's versions of the heraldic terms "couchant" (lying down) and "rampant" (erect, on hind feet).

1. Nagging.

2. Cheese and garlic would be smelly, and the living quarters in a mill would be noisy. "Cates": delicacies.

3. Experienced in secret mysteries.

4. Character.

5. Breeding, blood-lines.

6. Self-control. "Opinion": arrogance.

[Enter GLENDOWER with the ladies.]

MORT. This is the deadly spite that angers me;
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh. 190

GLEND. My daughter weeps; she will not part with you,
She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars.

MORT. Good father, tell her that she and my aunt Percy
Shall follow in your conduct speedily. 195

[GLENDOWER SPEAKS to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.]

GLEND. She is desperate here; a peevish self-willed harlotry,⁷ one that no persuasion can do good upon.

[The lady speaks in Welsh.]

MORT. I understand thy looks; that pretty Welsh
Which thou pour'st down from these swelling heavens⁸
I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,
In such a parley should I answer thee. 200

[The lady speaks again in Welsh.]

I understand thy kisses and thou mine,
And that's a feeling disputation,
But I will never be a truant, love,
Till I have learned thy language, for thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penned,
Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division,⁹ to her lute. 205

GLEND. Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.
[The lady speaks again in Welsh.]

MORT. O, I am ignorance itself in this! 210

GLEND. She bids you on the wanton rushes¹⁰ lay you down

And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you
And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness,¹
Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep
As is the difference betwixt day and night
The hour before the heavenly-harnessed team²
Begins his golden progress in the east. 215

MORT. With all my heart I'll sit and hear her sing;
By that time will our book,³ I think, be drawn. 220

GLEND. Do so;
And those musicians that shall play to you
Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence,
And straight they shall be here; sit, and attend. 225

HOT. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down; come, quick, quick, that I may lay my head in thy lap.

LADY P. Go, ye giddy goose.

7. Wench; used affectionately, not seriously (Juliet's father applies the same phrase to her in Romeo and Juliet).

8. I.e., tears from her eyes. "Answer thee": cry likewise.

9. Musical variation.

10. The dry reeds used as a floor covering in Elizabethan England.

1. Drowsiness.

2. The horses of the sun.

3. The indenture.

[The music plays.]

HOT. Now I perceive the devil understands Welsh,

And 'tis no marvel, he is so humorous.⁴

230

By 'r Lady, he is a good musician.

LADY P. Then should you be nothing but musical, for you are altogether governed by humors. Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

HOT. I had rather hear Lady, my brach,⁵ howl in Irish.

235

LADY P. Wouldst thou have thy head broken?

HOT. No.

LADY P. Then be still.

HOT. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.⁶

LADY P. Now God help thee.

240

HOT. To the Welsh lady's bed.

LADY P. What's that?

HOT. Peace! she sings.

[Here the lady sings a Welsh song.]

HOT. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

LADY P. Not mine, in good sooth.⁷

245

HOT. Not yours, in good sooth! Heart! you swear like a confectioner's wife. "Not you, in good sooth," and "as true as I live," and "as God shall mend me," and "as sure as day,"

And givest such sarcenet⁸ surty for thy oaths

As if thou never walk'st further than Finsbury.

250

Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,

A good mouth-filling oath, and leave "in sooth,"

And such protest of pepper-gingerbread,¹

To velvet-guards and Sunday citizens.

Come, sing.

255

LADY P. I will not sing.

HOT. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be redbreast teacher.²

An the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so, come in when ye will.

[Exit.]

GLEND. Come, come, Lord Mortimer, you are as slow

260

As hot Lord Percy is on fire to go.

By this our book is drawn; we will but seal,

And then to horse immediately.

MORT.

With all my heart. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter the KING, PRINCE OF WALES, and others.]

KING. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I

4. Capricious, governed by humors.

5. My bitch hound, Lady.

6. Hotspur sarcastically reverses the usual saying about women and talkativeness.

7. Truth.

8. Confectioner's.

9. Thin silk. Finsbury: a recreation ground outside London, frequented by citizens and their wives on Sundays, but not by ladies of Lady Percy's class.

1. I.e., such tame oaths, as crumbly and unsubstantial as gingerbread. "Velvet-guards": respectable people of the middle class, who wore velvet stripes on their clothes; "Sunday citizens": city folk out for a stroll on Sunday. 2. I.e., it is the easiest way to become a tailor (supposedly tailors sang at their work) or a person who teaches birds to sing. Hotspur is equally scornful of music and of people who work for a living.

Must have some private conference; but be near at hand,
For we shall presently have need of you. [Exeunt LORDS.]

I know not whether God will have it so
For some displacing service I have done, 5
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood³
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;
But thou dost in thy passages⁴ of life
Make me believe that thou art only marked
For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven 10
To punish my mistreadings.⁵ Tell me else,
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poor, such bare, such lewd,⁶ such mean attempts,
Such barren pleasures, rude society
As thou art matched withal and grafted to 15
Accompany the greatness of thy blood
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

PRINCE. So please your majesty, I would I could Quit⁷ all offenses with as clear excuse
As well as I am doubtless I can purge 20
Myself of many I am charged withal;
Yet such extenuation let me beg,
As, in reproof of many tales devised
(Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear)
By smiling pickthanks⁸ and base newsmongers, 25
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faulty wandered and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

KING. God pardon thee; yet let me wonder, Harry,
At thy affections, which doth hold a wing 30
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied,
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood. 35
The hope and expectation of thy time⁹
Is ruined, and the soul of every man
Prophetically do forethink thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackneyed¹⁰ in the eyes of men, 40
So stale and cheap to vulgar company,
Opinion,¹¹ that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. 45
By being seldom seen, I could not stir

3. Unknown judgment, through my son.

4. Actions.

5. False steps, misdeeds.

6. Low.

7. Acquit myself of. "Doubtless": sure.

8. Flatterers; "newsmongers": tattle-tales.

9. Lifetime.

10. Cheapened, vulgarized.

11. Popularity, public opinion. "Posdition, in the mood.

But like a comet I was wondered at,
 That men would tell their children "This is he";
 Others would say "Where, which is Bolingbroke?"
 And then I stole all courtesy from heaven, 50
 And dressed myself in such humility
 That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
 Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
 Even in the presence of the crowned king.
 Thus did I keep my person fresh and new, 55
 My presence like a robe pontifical,
 Ne'er seen but wondered at; and so my state,¹
 Seldom but sumptuous, showed like a feast
 And wan² by rareness such solemnity.
 The skipping king, he ambled up and down 60
 With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,³
 Soon kindled and soon burnt, carded his state,
 Mingled his royalty with capering fools,
 Had his great name profaned with their scorns
 And gave his countenance⁴ against his name 65
 To laugh at gibing boys and stand the push
 Of every beardless vain comparative,⁵
 Grew a companion to the common streets,
 Enfeoffed himself to popularity,⁶
 That, being daily swallowed by men's eyes, 70
 They surfeited with honey and began
 To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
 So when he had occasion to be seen
 He was but as the cuckoo is in June,⁷ 75
 Heard, not regarded, seen, but with such eyes
 As, sick and blunted with community,⁸
 Afford no extraordinary gaze
 Such as is bent on sunlike majesty
 When it shines seldom in admiring eyes, 80
 But rather drowsed and hung their eyelids down,
 Slept in his face⁹ and rendered such aspect
 As cloudy men use to their adversaries,
 Being with his presence glutted, gorged, and full.
 And in that very line, Harry, standest thou, 85
 For thou hast lost thy princely privilege
 With vile participation.¹ Not an eye
 But is a-weary of thy common sight,

1. Public ceremonial appearances.

2. Won. "Such solemnity": i.e., the greatest possible majestic effect (an intensive use of "such"). King Henry's theory of public relations is of course not based upon the assumption of a democratic society.

3. "Rash": quick; "bavin": brushwood; the image is explained in the next line. "Carded his state": degraded his royal dignity; "card" also means "to adulterate wine."

4. Authority; "name": reputation.

5. Shallow satirical pretender to wit.

6. Made himself the common property of the public.

7. The cuckoo is noticed in April, when its song is first heard; by June it is commonplace.

8. Commonness.

9. I.e., yawned in his face. "Aspect": looks; "cloudy": sullen.

1. Association with vile companions.

Save mine, which hath desired to see thee more,
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

90

PRINCE. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious lord,
Be more myself.

KING. For all the world

As thou art to this hour was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspurgh,
And even as I was then is Percy now.

95

Now, by my scepter and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state
Than thou the shadow of succession;²

For of no right, nor color like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm,
Turns head against the lion's armed jaws,³

100

And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on
To bloody battles and to bruising arms.

105

What never-dying honor hath he got Against renowned Douglas! whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursions and great name in arms
Holds from all soldiers chief majority

And military title capital⁴

110

Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ.
Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swaddling clothes,
This infant warrior, in his enterprises

Discomfited great Douglas, ta'en him once,
Enlarged⁵ him and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defiance up⁶

115

And shake the peace and safety of our throne.

And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
The Archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer, Capitulate⁷ against us and are up.

120

But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?

Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,

Which art my nearest and dearest enemy?

Thou that art like enough through vassal fear,
Base inclination and the start of spleen,⁸

125

To fight against me under Percy's pay,
To dog his heels and curtsy at his frowns,
To show how much thou art degenerate.

PRINCE. Do not think so; you shall not find it so;

And God forgive them that so much have swayed
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me.

130

2. I.e., Hotspur's claim to the throne is more solid, because of his achievements, than is Hal's, which rests only on shadowy rights of succession by birth. "Color": false pretense.

3. I.e., takes military action against the king's army. "Harness": armor.

4. Has the greatest reputation among soldiers. "Incursions": raids; "majority": superiority.

5. Freed.

6. I.e., to make the voice of defiance full in volume.

7. Raise a head, revolt.

8. Unreasoning impulse.

I will redeem all this on Percy's head
 And in the closing of some glorious day
 Be bold to tell you that I am your son,
 When I will wear a garment all of blood
 And stain my favors⁹ in a bloody mask,
 Which, washed away, shall scour my shame with it;
 And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights,
 That this same child of honor and renown,
 This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
 And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet.
 For every honor sitting on his helm—
 Would they were multitudes, and on my head
 My shames redoubled!—for the time will come
 That I shall make this northern youth exchange
 His glorious deeds for my indignities.
 Percy is but my factor,¹ good my lord,
 To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf,
 And I will call him to so strict account,
 That he shall render every glory up,
 Yea, even the slightest worship² of his time,
 Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
 This in the name of God I promise here,
 The which if He be pleased I shall perform,
 I do beseech your majesty, may salve
 The long-grown wounds of my intemperance;
 If not, the end of life cancels all bands,³
 And I will die a hundred thousand deaths
 Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.
 KING. A hundred thousand rebels die in this;
 Thou shalt have charge and sovereign trust herein.
 [Enter BLUNT.]
 How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.
 BLUNT. So hath the business that I come to speak of.
 Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word
 That Douglas and the English rebels met
 The eleventh of this month at Shrewsbury;
 A mighty and a fearful head⁴ they are,
 If promises be kept on every hand,
 As ever offered foul play in a state.
 KING. The Earl of Westmoreland set forth today,
 With him my son, Lord John of Lancaster,
 For this advertisement⁵ is five days old.
 On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set forward;
 On Thursday we ourselves will march. Our meeting
 Is Bridgenorth and, Harry, you shall march
 Through Gloucestershire, by which account,⁶

9. Features.

1. Agent; "engross up": collect, acquire.

2. Honor.

3. Bonds, debts.

4. Power.

5. News.

6. Method. "Our business valued": according to estimates.

Our business valued, some twelve days hence
 Our general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet.
 Our hands are full of business: let's away;
 Advantage feeds him fat while men delay.⁷

[Exeunt.] 180

SCENE 3

[Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.]

FAL. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action?⁸
 do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am withered like an old applejohn.⁹ Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a peppercorn, a brewer's horse. The inside of a church! Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.

BARD. Sir John, you are so fretful you cannot live long. 10

FAL. Why, there is it; come sing me a bawdy song, make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be:
 virtuous enough; swore little; diced not above seven times a week; went to a bawdyhouse not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed three or four times; lived well and in good compass; and now I live out of all order, out of all compass. 15

BARD. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass, out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

FAL. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life; thou art our admiral,¹ thou bearest the lantern in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the Knight of the Burning Lamp. 20

BARD. Why, Sir John, my face does you no harm.

FAL. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's-head or a memento mori.² I never see thy face but I think upon hell-fire and Dives³ that lived in purple, for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be "By this fire, that's God's angel"; but thou art altogether given over, and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou rannest up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an *ignis fatuus*⁴ or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money.
 O, thou art a perpetual triumph,⁵ an everlasting bonfire light!
 Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links⁶ and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern, but 35

7. I.e., the rebels' "advantage" (opportunity) grows as the king's men delay.

8. I.e., the Gadshill robbery; "bate": lose weight.

9. A keeping apple with a wrinkled skin. "In some liking": in good condition, in the mood.

1. Flagship.

2. I.e., a skull or some other reminder of death.

3. The rich man who would not give food to Lazarus and was punished in hell for it. See Luke xvi.19-31.

4. Will-o'-the-wisp; "wildfire": a fire-work used for military purposes.

5. Illumination at a public festival.

6. Small torches carried at night.

the sack that thou hast drunk me would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandler's⁷ in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two and thirty years, God reward me for it.

BARD. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your belly!

FAL. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heartburned.

[Enter HOSTESS.]

How now, Dame Partlet⁸ the hen! have you inquired yet who picked my pocket?

HOST. Why, Sir John, what do you think, Sir John? do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant; the tithe⁹ of a hair was never lost in my house before.

FAL. Ye lie, hostess; Bardolph was shaved and lost many a hair, and I'll be sworn my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman, go.

HOST. Who, I? no, I defy thee; God's light, I was never called so in mine own house before.

FAL. Go to, I know you well enough.

HOST. No, Sir John; you do not know me, Sir John. I know you, Sir John; you owe me money, Sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it; I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

FAL. Dowlas,¹ filthy dowlas; I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

HOST. Now, as I am a true woman, holland² of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drinkings,³ and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

FAL. He had his part of it; let him pay.

HOST. He? alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

FAL. How! poor? look upon his face; what call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks; I'll not pay a denier.⁴ What, will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine-inn but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.⁵

HOST. O Jesu, I have heard the prince tell him I know not how oft that that ring was copper.

FAL. How! the prince is a Jack,⁶ a sneak-up; 'sblood, an he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog if he would say so.

[Enter the PRINCE (and POINS), marching, and FALSTAFF meets them playing upon his truncheon like a fife.]

How now, lad, is the wind in that door, i' faith? must we all march?

7. Candlemaker's. "Salamanders" were lizards that supposedly lived in fire and ate it.

8. A nickname from the hen in Chaucer's Nun's Priest's Tale; in Shakespeare's time a conventional name for a scolding woman.

9. Tenth part.

1. A coarse cloth. "Bolters": sieves for flour.

2. Fine linen; "ell": 45 inches.

3. Drinks between meals.

4. French penny, worth a tenth of an English penny. "Younker": youngster, novice.

5. A mark was worth two-thirds of a pound.

6. Rascal; "sneak-up": a sneak.

BARD. Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.⁷

HOST. My lord, I pray you hear me.

PRINGE. What sayest thou, Mistress Quickly? How doth thy husband? I love him well; he is an honest man. 80

HOST. Good my lord, hear me.

FAL. Prithee let her alone, and list to me.

PRINCE. What sayest thou, Jack?

FAL. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras and had my pocket picked; this house is turned bawdyhouse, they pick 85 pockets.

PRINCE. What didst thou lose, Jack?

FAL. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound apiece, and a seal ring of my grandfather's.

PRINCE. A trifle, some eightpenny matter. 90

HOST. So I told him, my lord, and I said I heard your grace say so; and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is, and said he would cudgel you.

PRINCE. What, he did not?

HOST. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else. 95

FAL. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune,⁸ nor no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox, and for womanhood Maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee.⁹ Go, you thing, go.

HOST. Say, what thing, what thing? 100

FAL. What thing! why, a thing to thank God on.

HOST. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou shouldst know it; I am an honest man's wife, and, setting thy knight-hood aside,¹ thou art a knave to call me so.

FAL. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise. 105

HOST. Say, what beast, thou knave, thou?

FAL. What beast? why, an otter.

PRINCE. An otter, Sir John, why an otter?

FAL. Why, she's neither fish nor flesh, a man knows not where to have her.² 110

HOST. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave, thou!

PRINCE. Thou sayest true, hostess, and he slanders thee most grossly. 115

HOST. So he doth you, my lord, and said this other day you ought³ him a thousand pound.

PRINCE. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

FAL. A thousand pound, Hal! A million. Thy love is worth a mil-

7. Chained together, like prisoners at Newgate.

8. Stewed prunes were commonly served in bawdyhouses, as a supposed protection against venereal disease. "Drawn": hunted.

9. "Maid Marian" was a female character of low morals in the popular Robin Hood plays; a "deputy's wife of the ward" would be a respectable woman.

1. I.e., ignoring, or intending no disrespect to, the rank of knighthood. Falstaff intentionally misunderstands the phrase.

2. I.e., how to understand her. But the Hostess' retort is, unconsciously, equivalent to saying that she is completely promiscuous.

3. Owed.

lion; thou owest me thy love.

HOST. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said he would cudgel you. 120

FAL. Did I, Bardolph?

BARD. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.

FAL. Yea, if he said my ring was copper. 125

PRINCE. I say 'tis copper; darest thou be as good as thy word now?

FAL. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare; but as thou art prince, I fear thee as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

PRINCE. And why not as the lion? 130

FAL. The king himself is to be feared as the lion; dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? Nay, an I do, I pray God my girdle⁴ break.

PRINCE. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty in this bosom of thine; it is all filled up with guts and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whore-son, impudent, embossed rascal,⁵ if there were anything in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memorandums of bawdyhouses, and one poor pennyworth of sugar candy to make thee long-winded, if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it, you will not pocket up wrong; art thou not ashamed? 135 140

FAL. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest in the state of innocence Adam fell, and what should poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of villainy? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty. You confess then, you picked my pocket? 145

PRINCE. It appears so by the story.

FAL. Hostess, I forgive thee; go make ready breakfast, I love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests; thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason; thou seest I am pacified still. Nay, prithee begone. [Exit HOSTESS.] Now, Hal, to the news at court; for the robbery, lad, how is that answered? 150

PRINCE. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee; the money is paid back again. 155

FAL. O, I do not like that paying back; 'tis a double labor.

PRINCE. I am good friends with my father and may do anything.

FAL. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou doest, and do it with unwashed hands too. 160

BARD. Do, my lord.

PRINCE. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.⁶

FAL. I would it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two and twenty or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous; I 165

4. Belt.

5. Swollen rascal; "embossed" was also a technical term in hunting, applied to a deer which was exhausted and foaming at the mouth.

6. Command of a company of foot-soldiers. "Horse"; cavalry.

laud them, I praise them.

PRINCE. Bardolph!

BARD. My lord?

PRINCE. Go bear this letter to Lord John of Lancaster, to my brother John; this to my Lord of Westmoreland. [Exit BARDOLPH.] Go, Poins, to horse, to horse; for thou and I have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinnertime. [Exit POINS.] Jack, meet me tomorrow in the Temple Hall at two o'clock in the afternoon.

175

There shalt thou know thy charge, and there receive Money and order for their furniture.⁷

The land is burning, Percy stands on high,

And either we or they must lower lie.

[(Exit.)]

FAL. Rare words, brave world! Hostess, my breakfast, come.

180

O, I could wish this tavern were my drum!^{7a}

[Exit.]

Act IV

SCENE 1

[Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, and DOUGLAS.]

HOT. Well said, my noble Scot. If speaking truth
In this fine age were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should the Douglas have
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current⁸ through the world.

5

By God, I cannot flatter; I do defy

The tongues of soothers,⁹ but a braver place
In my heart's love hath no man than yourself;
Nay, task me to my word,¹ approve me, lord.

DOUG. Thou art the king of honor;

10

No man so potent breathes upon the ground
But I will beard him.²

HOT. Do so, and 'tis well.

[Enter a MESSENGER with letters.]

What letters hast thou there?—I can but thank you.

MESS. These letters come from your father.

HOT. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

15

MESS. He cannot come, my lord; he is grievous sick.

HOT. Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick

In such a justling³ time? Who leads his power?

Under whose government come they along?

MESS. His letters bears his mind, not I, my lord.

20

WOR. I prithee tell me, doth he keep his bed?

MESS. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth,

And at the time of my departure thence

7. Furnishings, equipment.

7a. Headquarters.

8. I.e., that not a soldier of this year's coinage should achieve such currency.

"Attribution": praise.

9. Flatterers; "braver": more distinguished.

1. Compare my actions with my speech.

"Approve": prove, test.

2. I.e., I will take on anybody, however powerful.

3. Turbulent.

- He was much feared by⁴ his physicians.
 wor. I would the state of time had first been whole 25
 Ere he by sickness had been visited;
 His health was never better worth than now.
 hor. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect
 The very lifeblood of our enterprise;
 'Tis catching hither, even to our camp. 30
 He writes me here that inward sickness—
 And that his friends by deputation could not
 So soon be drawn,⁵ nor did he think it meet
 To lay so dangerous and dear a trust
 On any soul removed but on his own. 35
 Yet doth he give us bold advertisement
 That with our small conjunction⁶ we should on
 To see how fortune is disposed to us;
 For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,
 Because the king is certainly possessed⁷ 40
 Of all our purposes. What say you to it?
 wor. Your father's sickness is a main to us.
 hor. A perilous gash, a very limb lopped off;
 And yet in faith it is not; his present want⁸
 Seems more than we shall find it. Were it good 45
 To set the exact wealth of all our states
 All at one cast, to set so rich a main⁹
 On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?
 It were not good, for therein should we read
 The very bottom and the soul of hope,¹ 50
 The very list, the very utmost bound
 Of all our fortunes.
 doug. Faith, and so we should,
 Where now remains a sweet reversion.²
 We may boldly spend upon the hope of what
 Is to come in; 55
 A comfort of retirement³ lives in this.
 hor. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,
 If that the devil and mischance look big
 Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.⁴
 wor. But yet I would your father had been here. 60
 The quality and hair⁵ of our attempt
 Brooks no division; it will be thought
 By some that know not why he is away
 That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike
 Of our proceedings kept the earl from hence. 65

4. Feared for by. "State of time": public affairs.

5. Could not quickly be organized under a deputy. "Soul removed": other person.

6. Unified forces.

7. Informed.

8. Our present awareness of his absence.

9. Stake, in betting; "nice hazard": risky chance.

1. Foundation and essence of our expectations. "List": limit.

2. A fund to be inherited in the future.

3. Sustaining place to fall back on.

4. I.e., threaten the beginning of our affairs.

5. Character; "brooks": allows.

And think how such an apprehension
May turn the tide of fearful faction⁶
And breed a kind of question in our cause,
For well you know we of the offering⁷ side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement,
And stop all sight-holes, every loop⁸ from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us.
This absence of your father's draws a curtain,
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dreamt of.

70

HOT. You strain too far.

75

I rather of his absence make this use:
It lends a luster and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
Than if the earl were here. for men must think,
If we without his help can make a head
To push against a kingdom, with his help
We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.
Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

80

DOUG. As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke of in Scotland as this term of fear.

85

[Enter SIR RICHARD VERNON.]

HOT. My cousin Vernon, welcome, by my soul!

VER. Pray God my news be worth a welcome, lord.

The Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards: with him Prince John.

HOT. No harm; what more?

VER. And further I have learned

90

The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.

HOT. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed madcap Prince of Wales,
And his comrades that daft⁹ the world aside
And bid it pass?

95

VER. All furnished, all in arms.

All plumed like estridges that with the wind
Bated, like eagles having lately bathed,¹
Glittering in golden coats like images,
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer,
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry, with his beaver² on,
His cushions on his thighs, gallantly armed,
Rise from the ground like feathered Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat,

100

105

6. Conspiracy.

7. Challenging. "Arbitrement": investigation.

8. Loophole.

9. Push.

1. Eagles were supposed to renew their youth by bathing in the ocean. "Estridges": ostriches; "bated": fluttering their wings.

2. Helmet. "Cushes": cuisses, armor for the thighs.

As if an angel dropped down from the clouds,
 To turn and wind³ a fiery Pegasus
 And witch the world with noble horsemanship. 110
 HOT. No more, no more. Worse than the sun in March
 This praise doth nourish agues.⁴ Let them come;
 They come like sacrifices in their trim,
 And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war⁵
 All hot and bleeding will we offer them; 115
 The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit
 Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire
 To hear this rich reprisal⁶ is so nigh
 And yet not ours. Come, let me taste my horse,
 Who is to bear me like a thunderbolt 120
 Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales;
 Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
 Meet and ne'er part till one drop down a corse.
 O that Glendower were come!

VER. There is more news;
 I learned in Worcester, as I rode along, 125
 He cannot draw his power⁷ this fourteen days.
 DOUG. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.
 WOR. Aye, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.
 HOT. What may the king's whole battle⁸ reach unto?
 VER. To thirty thousand.

HOT. Forty let it be; 130
 My father and Glendower being both away,
 The powers of us may serve so great a day.
 Come, let us take a muster speedily;
 Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.
 DOUG. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
 Of death or death's hand for this one-half year. [Exeunt.] 135

SCENE 2

[Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.]

FAL. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack, our soldiers shall march through. We'll to Sutton Co'fil⁹ tonight.

BARD. Will you give me money, captain?

FAL. Lay out, lay out. 5

BARD. This bottle makes an angel.¹

FAL. An if it do, take it for thy labor; and if it make twenty, take them all; I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at town's end.

BARD. I will, captain; farewell. [Exit.] 10

FAL. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet.²

I have misused the king's press damnably. I have got in ex-

3. Direct. "Pegasus": winged horse.

4. Fevers. Malaria was thought to be caused by vapors from the marshes, drawn up by the sun in spring.

5. Bellona, goddess of war.

6. Prize.

7. Assemble his forces.

8. Army.

9. Sutton Coldfield, about 25 miles from Coventry.

1. Ten shillings' worth.

2. Pickled anchovy. "Press": the draft or impressment of soldiers into service.

change of a hundred and fifty soldiers three hundred and odd pounds. I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons, inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the banns,³ such a commodity⁴ of warm slaves as had as lieve hear the devil as a drum, such as fear the report of a caliver worse than a struck fowl or a hurt wild duck. I pressed me none but such toasts-and-butter⁵ with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services, and now my whole charge consists of ancients,⁶ corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth where the glutton's dogs licked his sores, and such as indeed were never soldiers, but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters and ostlers trade-fallen,⁷ the cankers of a calm world and a long peace, ten times more dishonorable ragged than an old-fac'd ancient,⁸ and such have I to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draff⁹ and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way and told me I had unloaded all the gibbets and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat; nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves¹ on, for indeed I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company, and the half shirt is two napkins tacked together and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves, and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Alban's, or the red-nose innkeeper of Daventry. But that's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.²

[Enter the PRINCE and the Lord of WESTMORELAND.]

PRINCE. How now, blown Jack! how now, quilt!

FAL. What, Hal, how now, mad wag! what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy; I thought your honor had already been at Shrewsbury.

WEST. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already. The king, I can tell you, looks for us all; we must away all night.

FAL. Tut, never fear me; I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

PRINCE. I think, to steal cream indeed, for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack, whose fellows are these that come after?

FAL. Mine, Hal, mine.

PRINCE. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

3. Notice of approaching marriage, announced three times publicly in church before the marriage could take place.

4. "Commodity": collection; "warm": well-to-do; "caliver": musket.

5. Sissies.

6. Ensigns.

7. Hostlers out of work; "cankers":

canker worms.

8. Frayed flag.

9. Garbage. The prodigal son, in the Bible, fed on husks before returning to the paternal board.

1. Leg-irons.

2. Laundry was customarily hung on hedges to dry.

FAL. Tut, tut, good enough to toss,³ food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit as well as better; tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

WEST. Aye, but, Sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare, too beggarly. 60

FAL. Faith, for their poverty I know not where they had that, and for their bareness I am sure they never learned that of me.

PRINCE. No, I'll be sworn, unless you call three fingers⁴ on the ribs bare. But, sirrah, make haste; Percy is already in the field.

FAL. What, is the king encamped? 65

WEST. He is, Sir John; I fear we shall stay too long.

FAL. Well,

To the latter end of a fray and the beginning of a feast

Fits a dull fighter and a keen guest. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 3

[Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, DOUGLAS, and VERNON.]

HOT. We'll fight with him tonight.

WOR. It may not be.

DOUG. You give him then advantage.

VER. Not a whit.

HOT. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

VER. So do we.

HOT. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

WOR. Good cousin, be advised; stir not tonight. 5

VER. Do not, my lord.

DOUG. You do not counsel well;

You speak it out of fear and cold heart.

VER. Do me no slander, Douglas; by my life,

And I dare well maintain it with my life,

If well-respected honor⁵ bid me on, 10

I hold as little counsel with weak fear

As you, my lord, or any Scot that this day lives.

Let it be seen tomorrow in the battle

Which of us fears.

DOUG. Yea, or tonight.

VER. Content.

HOT. Tonight, say I. 15

VER. Come, come, it may not be. I wonder much,

Being men of such great leading as you are,

That you foresee not what impediments

Drag back our expedition;⁶ certain horse

Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up, 20

Your uncle Worcester's horse came but today,

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,

Their courage with hard labor tame and dull,

That not a horse is half the half of himself.

HOT. So are the horses of the enemy 25

3. I.e., on a pike, or long spear.

4. Layers of fat. A finger was $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch.

5. Well-considered (not rash, like Hotspur's).

6. Retard our speed.

In general, journey-bated⁷ and brought low;
The better part of ours are full of rest.

WOR. The number of the king exceedeth ours;
For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The trumpet sounds a parley. Enter SIR WALTER BLUNT.]

BLUNT. I come with gracious offers from the king,
If you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.

HOT. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; and would to God

You were of our determination!

Some of us love you well, and even those some

Envy your great deservings and good name

Because you are not of our quality,⁸

But stand against us like an enemy.

BLUNT. And God defend⁹ but still I should stand so,

So long as out of limit and true rule

You stand against anointed majesty.

But to my charge. The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs, and whereupon

You conjure from the breast of civil peace

Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land

Audacious cruelty. If that the king

Have any way your good deserts forgot,

Which he confesseth to be manifold,

He bids you name your griefs, and with all speed

You shall have your desires with interest

And pardon absolute for yourself and these

Herein misled by your suggestion.¹

HOT. The king is kind, and well we know the king

Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.

My father and my uncle and myself

Did give him that same royalty he wears;

And when he was not six and twenty strong,

Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,

A poor unminded outlaw sneaking home,

My father gave him welcome to the shore;

And when he heard him swear and vow to God

He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,

To sue his livery² and beg his peace,

With tears of innocency and terms of zeal,

My father, in kind heart and pity moved,

Swore him assistance and performed it too.

Now when the lords and barons of the realm

Perceived Northumberland did lean to him,

The more and less came in with cap and knee,³

Met him in boroughs, cities, villages,

Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,

Laid gifts before him, proffered him their oaths,

7. Tired from travel.

8. Fellowship, party.

9. Forbid; "still": always.

1. Temptation.

2. I.e., claim title to his late father's lands (held by King Richard II.).

3. Cap in hand and on bended knee; i.e., offering homage.

Gave him their heirs as pages, followed him
 Even at the heels in golden multitudes.
 He presently, as greatness knows itself,
 Steps me a little higher than his vow,
 Made to my father while his blood was poor
 Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh,
 And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
 Some certain edicts and some strait⁴ decrees
 That lie too heavy on the commonwealth,
 Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
 Over his country's wrongs, and by this face,⁵
 This seeming brow of justice, did he win
 The hearts of all that he did angle for;
 Proceeded further, cut me off the heads
 Of all the favorites that the absent king
 In deputation left behind him here,
 When he was personal⁶ in the Irish war.

75

80

85

BLUNT. Tut, I came not to hear this.

HOT.

Then to the point.

In short time after he deposed the king,
 Soon after that deprived him of his life,
 And in the neck of that tasked⁷ the whole state;
 To make that worse, suffered his kinsman March
 (Who is, if every owner were well placed,
 Indeed his king) to be engaged⁸ in Wales,
 There without ransom to lie forfeited;
 Disgraced¹ me in my happy victories,
 Sought to entrap me by intelligence,²
 Rated mine uncle from the council board,
 In rage dismissed my father from the court,
 Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong,
 And in conclusion drove us to seek out
 This head of safety,³ and withal to pry
 Into his title, the which we find
 Too indirect for long continuance.

90

95

100

105

BLUNT. Shall I return this answer to the king?

HOT. Not so, Sir Walter; we'll withdraw awhile.

Go to the king, and let there be impawned⁴
 Some surty for a safe return again,
 And in the morning early shall mine uncle
 Bring him our purposes; and so farewell.

110

BLUNT. I would you would accept of grace and love.

HOT. And may be so we shall.

BLUNT.

Pray God you do.

[Exeunt.]

4. Strict.

5. Pretense.

6. Actively participating in person.

7. I.e., immediately after that, (he) taxed.

8. Pawned as a hostage.

1. I.e., did not favor.

2. Spying; "rated": angrily dismissed.

3. Army for our safety.

4. Pledged; "surety": guarantee.

SCENE 4

[Enter the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK and SIR MICHAEL.]

ARCH. Hie, good Sir Michael; bear this sealed brief⁵
 With wingéd haste to the lord marshal,
 This to my cousin Scroop, and all the rest
 To whom they are directed. If you knew
 How much they do import you would make haste.

SIR M. My good lord,
 I guess their tenor.

ARCH. Like enough you do.
 Tomorrow, good Sir Michael, is a day
 Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
 Must bide the touch;⁶ for, sir, at Shrewsbury,
 As I am truly given to understand,
 The king with mighty and quick-raised power
 Meets with Lord Harry; and I fear, Sir Michael,
 What with the sickness of Northumberland,
 Whose power was in the first proportion,⁷
 And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,
 Who with them was a rated⁸ sinew too
 And comes not in, o'er-ruled by prophecies—
 I fear the power of Percy is too weak
 To wage an instant trial with the king.

SIR M. Why, my good lord, you need not fear;
 There is Douglas and Lord Mortimer.

ARCH. No, Mortimer is not there.

SIR M. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,
 And there is my Lord of Worcester and a head
 Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

ARCH. And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn
 The special head⁹ of all the land together:
 The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
 The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt,
 And many more corrivals¹⁰ and dear men
 Of estimation and command in arms.

SIR M. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well opposed.

ARCH. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear,
 And to prevent¹ the worst, Sir Michael, speed;
 For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
 Dismiss his power, he means to visit² us,
 For he hath heard of our confederacy,
 And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him;
 Therefore make haste. I must go write again
 To other friends; and so farewell, Sir Michael.

[Exeunt.]

5. Letter.

6. Stand the test.

7. The largest part.

8. Highly regarded.

9. Principal army.

10. Associates; "dear": noble.

1. Forestall.

2. Attack.

Act V

SCENE 1

[Enter the KING, PRINCE OF WALES, PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and FALSTAFF.]

KING. How bloodily the sun begins to peer Above yon busky³ hill! The day looks pale
At his distemperature.⁴

PRINCE. The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes,⁵
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest and a blustering day.

KING. Then with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.

[The trumpet sounds. Enter WORCESTER (and VERNON).]

How now, my lord of Worcester! 'Tis not well
That you and I should meet upon such terms
As now we meet. You have deceived our trust
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush⁶ our old limbs in ungentle steel;

This is not well, my lord, this is not well.

What say you to it? will you again unknot

This churlish knot of all-abhorred war

And move in that obedient orb⁷ again

Where you did give a fair and natural light,

And be no more an exhaled meteor,⁸

A prodigy of fear and a portent

Of broachéd mischief to the unborn times?⁹

WOR. Hear me, my liege:

For mine own part I could be well content

To entertain the lag end of my life

With quiet hours, for I do protest

I have not sought the day of this dislike.

KING. You have not sought it! how comes it then?

FAL. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

PRINCE. Peace, chewet,¹ peace!

WOR. It pleased your majesty to turn your looks

Of favor from myself and all our house,

And yet I must remember² you, my lord,

We were the first and dearest of your friends.

For you my staff of office did I break

In Richard's time, and posted day and night

To meet you on the way and kiss your hand

3. Wooded.

4. I.e., the sun's illness or malevolence.

5. I.e., the sun's intentions; the southern wind supports them.

6. Enfold, cramp.

7. Regular orbit, as of a planet.

8. Meteors were thought to be made of gas exhaled by a planet and were commonly associated with civil commotion.

9. I.e., of harm or disaster opened up ("broached") to plague the future. Note that "mischief" conveyed a stronger meaning to Shakespeare than it does to us.

1. Chattering bird.

2. Remind.

When yet you were in place and in account
 Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
 It was myself, my brother, and his son
 That brought you home and boldly did outdare 40
 The dangers of the time. You swore to us,
 And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,
 That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state
 Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n³ right,
 The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster. 45
 To this we swore our aid. But in short space
 It rained down fortune showering on your head
 And such a flood of greatness fell on you,
 What with our help, what with the absent king,
 What with the injuries of a wanton time, 50
 The seeming sufferances⁴ that you had borne,
 And the contrarious winds that held the king
 So long in his unlucky Irish wars
 That all in England did repute him dead;
 And from this swarm of fair advantages 55
 You took occasion to be quickly wooed
 To gripe the general sway⁵ into your hand,
 Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster,
 And being fed by us you used us so
 As that ungentle gull⁶ the cuckoo's bird 60
 Useth the sparrow, did oppress our nest,
 Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk
 That even our love durst not come near your sight
 For fear of swallowing;⁷ but with nimble wing
 We were enforced for safety sake to fly 65
 Out of your sight and raise this present head,
 Whereby we stand opposéd by such means
 As you yourself have forged against yourself
 By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,⁸
 And violation of all faith and troth 70
 Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.
 KING. These things indeed you have articulate,⁹
 Proclaimed at market crosses, read in churches,
 To face¹ the garment of rebellion
 With some fine color that may please the eye 75
 Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
 Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
 Of hurlyburly innovation;
 And never yet did insurrection want
 Such water colors to impaint his cause, 80
 Nor moody beggars starving for a time
 Of pellmell havoc and confusion.

PRINCE. In both our armies there is many a soul

3. Recently inherited.

4. Sufferings.

5. Seize power over the whole state.

6. Rude nestling; the cuckoo hatches its young in other birds' nests.

7. Being swallowed.

8. Threatening looks.

9. Drawn up in detail.

1. Decorate.

- Shall pay full dearly for this encounter;
 If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew
 The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world 85
 In praise of Henry Percy; by my hopes,
 This present enterprise set off his head,²
 I do not think a braver gentleman,
 More active-valiant or more valiant-young, 90
 More daring or more bold, is now alive
 To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
 For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
 I have a truant been to chivalry—
 And so I hear he doth account me too— 95
 Yet this before my father's majesty:
 I am content that he shall take the odds
 Of his great name and estimation,
 And will, to save the blood on either side,
 Try fortune with him in a single fight. 100
- KING. And, Prince of Wales, so dare we venture thee,
 Albeit considerations infinite
 Do make³ against it. No, good Worcester, no,
 We love our people well; even those we love
 That are misled upon your cousin's part; 105
 And, will they take the offer of our grace,
 Both he and they and you, yea, every man
 Shall be my friend again and I'll be his.
 So tell your cousin, and bring me word
 What he will do; but if he will not yield, 110
 Rebuke and dread correction wait on⁴ us
 And they shall do their office. So, be gone;
 We will not now be troubled with reply.
 We offer fair; take it advisedly.
- [Exit WORCESTER (and VERNON.)]
- PRINCE. It will not be accepted, on my life;
 The Douglas and the Hotspur both together 115
 Are confident against the world in arms.
- KING. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge,
 For on their answer will we set on them,
 And God befriend us, as our cause is just! 120
- [Exeunt all but the PRINCE and FALSTAFF.]
- FAL. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle and bestride me, so;
 'tis a point of friendship.
- PRINCE. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.
- FAL. I would 'twere bedtime, Hal, and all well.
- PRINCE. Why, thou owest God a death. [(Exit.)] 125
- FAL. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loath to pay him before his day.
 What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me?
 Well, 'tis no matter; honor pricks me on. Yea, but how if honor

2. Deducted from his account.

4. Accompany.

3. Weigh.

prick me off when I come on? How then? can honor set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief⁵ of a wound?
 No. Honor hath no skill in surgery, then? No. What is honor?
 A word. What is in that word honor? what is that honor? Air.
 A trim reckoning!⁶ Who hath it? He that died o' Wednesday.
 Doth he feel it? No. Doth he hear it? No. 'Tis insensible,⁷ then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No.
 Why? Detraction will not suffer it. Therefore I'll none of it;
 Honor is a mere scutcheon.⁸ And so ends my catechism. [Exit.]

SCENE 2

[Enter WORCESTER and SIR RICHARD VERNON.]

WOR. O no, my nephew must not know, Sir Richard,

The liberal and kind offer of the king.

VER. 'Twere best he did.

WOR. Then are we all undone.

It is not possible, it cannot be,

The king should keep his word in loving us;

He will suspect us still and find a time

To punish this offense in other faults.

Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes,

For treason is but trusted like the fox

Who, ne'er so tame, so cherished and locked up,

Will have a wild trick of his ancestors;

Look how we can, or sad or merrily,

Interpretation will misquote⁹ our looks,

And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,

The better cherished, still the nearer death.

My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;

It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood

And an adopted name of privilege,¹

A harebrained Hotspur, governed by a spleen.

All his offenses live upon my head

And on his father's; we did train him on,

And, his corruption being ta'en from us,²

We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.

Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know

In any case the offer of the king.

VER. Deliver what you will; I'll say 'tis so.

Here comes your cousin.

[Enter HOTSPUR (and DOUGLAS.)]

HOT. My uncle is returned;

Deliver up my Lord of Westmoreland.

Uncle, what news?

WOR. The king will bid you battle presently.³

DOUG. Defy him by the Lord of Westmoreland.

5. Pain.

6. A fine totaling of the bill.

7. Not capable of being felt.

8. A coat of arms, as often put on a tombstone.

9. Misinterpret.

1. A nickname which gives him privileges. "Spleen": impetuous temperament.

2. Being attributed to. "Train": entice.

3. Immediately.

HOT. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.

DOUG. Marry, and shall, and very willingly.

[Exit.]

WOR. There is no seeming mercy in the king.

35

HOT. Did you beg any? God forbid!

WOR. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of his oath-breaking, which he mended thus,
By now forswearing⁴ that he is forsworn;
He calls us rebels, traitors, and will scourge
With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

40

[Enter DOUGLAS.]

DOUG. Arm, gentlemen, to arms! for I have thrown
A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engaged,⁵ did hear it,
Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

45

WOR. The Prince of Wales stepped forth before the king,
And, nephew, challenged you to single fight.

HOT. O, would the quarrel lay upon our heads,
And that no man might draw short breath today
But I and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me,
How showed his tasking?⁶ seemed it in contempt?

50

VER. No, by my soul; I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urged more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms.
He gave you all the duties⁷ of a man,
Trimmed up your praises with a princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle,
Making you ever better than his praise
By still dispraising praise valued with⁸ you;
And, which became him like a prince indeed,
He made a blushing cit⁹ of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace
As if he mastered there a double spirit
Of teaching and of learning instantly.
There did he pause; but let me tell the world,
If he outlive the envy¹ of this day,
England did never owe² so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness.³

55

60

65

HOT. Cousin, I think thou art enamoured
On his follies; never did I hear
Of any prince so wild a liberty.⁴
But be he as he will, yet once ere night
I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy.
Arm, arm with speed; and, fellows, soldiers, friends,
Better consider what you have to do
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,

70

75

4. Swearing falsely.
5. Held as a hostage.
6. Challenge.
7. Good qualities.
8. Compared to.

9. Mention, recital.
1. Malice.
2. Own.
3. Frivolity.
4. Reckless dissipation.

Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

[Enter a MESSENGER.]

MESS. My lord, here are letters for you. 80

HOT. I cannot read them now.

O gentlemen, the time of life is short!

To spend that shortness basely were too long,

If life did ride upon a dial's point,⁵

Still ending at the arrival of an hour; 85

And if we live, we live to tread on kings,

If die, brave death when princes die with us!

Now, for our consciences, the arms are fair;

When the intent of bearing them is just.

[Enter another MESSENGER.]

MESS. My lord, prepare; the king comes on apace. 90

HOT. I thank him that he cuts me from my tale;

For I profess not talking; only this—

Let each man do his best; and here draw I

A sword whose temper I intend to stain

With the best blood that I can meet withal 95

In the adventure of this perilous day.

Now, Esperance! Percy!⁶ and set on.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,

And by that music let us all embrace;

For, heaven to earth,⁷ some of us never shall 100

A second time do such a courtesy.

[The trumpets sound. They embrace and exeunt.]

SCENE 3

[The KING enters with his power. Alarum⁸ to the battle.

Then enter DOUGLAS and SIR WALTER BLUNT.]

BLUNT. What is thy name, that in the battle thus

Thou crossest me? what honor dost thou seek

Upon my head?

DOUG. Know then, my name is Douglas,

And I do haunt thee in the battle thus

Because some tell me that thou art a king.⁹ 5

BLUNT. They tell thee true.

DOUG. The Lord of Stafford dear¹ today hath bought

Thy likeness, for instead of thee, King Harry,

This sword hath ended him; so shall it thee,

Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner. 10

BLUNT. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot,

And thou shalt find a king that will revenge

Lord Stafford's death. [They fight. DOUGLAS kills BLUNT.]

[Enter HOTSPUR.]

5. Hand of a clock; "still": always.

Hotspur's meaning (in lines 83-85) is that a base life would be too long even if it lasted only an hour.

6. Hope, Percy! (the family motto).

7. I.e., the odds are heaven to earth

that.

8. Trumpet signal.

9. Blunt and others are dressed to look like the king.

1. Expensively.

HOT. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,

I never had triumphed upon a Scot.

DOUG. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies the king.

HOT. Where?

DOUG. Here.

HOT. This, Douglas? No, I know this face full well;

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;

Semblably furnished like the king himself.

DOUG. Ah fool, go with thy soul whither it goes!

A borrowed title hast thou bought too dear;

Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

HOT. The king hath many marching in his coats.

DOUG. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;

I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece,

Until I meet the king.

HOT. Up and away!

Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day.

[Exeunt.]

[Alarum. Enter FALSTAFF alone.]

FAL. Though I could 'scape shot-free² at London, I fear the shot here; here's no scoring but upon the pate. Soft, who are you?

Sir Walter Blunt; there's honor for you, here's no vanity! I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too; God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels. I have led my ragamuffins where they are peppered; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive, and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here?

[Enter the PRINCE.]

PRINCE. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy sword;

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff

Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies,

Whose deaths are yet unrevenged; I prithee, lend me thy sword.

FAL. O Hal, I prithee give me leave to breathe awhile. Turk Greg-ory³ never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

PRINCE. He is indeed, and living to kill thee. I prithee, lend me thy sword.

FAL. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou get'st not my sword; but take my pistol if thou wilt.

PRINCE. Give it me; what, is it in the case?

FAL. Aye, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will sack a city.

[The PRINCE draws it out, and finds it to be a bottle of sack.]

PRINCE. What, is it a time to jest and dally now?

[He throws the bottle at him. Exit.]

FAL. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a

2. Scot-free, without paying the bill at a tavern; "scoring" continues the pun; it means (1) marking up a charge; (2) cutting with a sword.

3. Falstaff combines Pope Gregory VII, of whom fantastic stories were told, with "Turk" (the Turks were noted for ferocity).

carbonado⁴ of me. I like not such grinning honor as Sir Walter hath; give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honor comes 55 unlooked for, and there's an end. [Exit.]

SCENE 4

[*Alarum. Excursions.*⁵ Enter the KING, the PRINCE, PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, and EARL OF WESTMORELAND.]

KING. I prithee,

Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much.

Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

LAN. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

PRINCE. I beseech your majesty, make up,⁶

Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.

KING. I will do so.

My Lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

WEST. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.

PRINCE. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help,

And God forbid a shallow scratch should drive

The Prince of Wales from such a field as this,

Where stained nobility lies trodden on,

And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

LAN. We breathe too long; come, cousin Westmoreland,

Our duty this way lies; for God's sake, come.

[(Exeunt PRINCE JOHN and WESTMORELAND.)]

PRINCE. By God, thou hast deceived me, Lancaster;

I did not think thee lord of such a spirit.

Before, I loved thee as a brother, John,

But now I do respect thee as my soul.

KING. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point

With lustier maintenance than I did look for

Of such an ungrown warrior.

PRINCE. O, this boy

Lends mettle to us all!

[Exit.]

[Enter DOUGLAS.]

DOUG. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads.⁷

I am the Douglas, fatal to all those

That wear those colors on them; what art thou,

That counterfeit'st the person of a king?

KING. The king himself, who, Douglas, grieves at heart

So many of his shadows⁸ thou hast met

And not the very king. I have two boys

Seek Percy and thyself about the field,

But seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily

I will assay thee; so defend thyself.

DOUG. I fear thou art another counterfeit,

And yet, in faith, thou bearest thee like a king;

But mine I am sure thou art, whoe'er thou be,

4. A cubed steak.

5. Brief appearances and exits of soldiers fighting.

6. Advance; "amaze": dismay.

7. The heads of this fabulous monster grew back faster than they could be cut off.

8. Likenesses.

And thus I win thee.

[They fight; the KING being in danger, enter PRINCE OF WALES.]

PRINCE. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like

Never to hold it up again! the spirits

Of valiant Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms;

It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee,

Who never promiseth but he means to pay.

[They fight; DOUGLAS flieth.]

Cheerly, my lord; how fares your grace?

Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succor sent,

And so hath Clifton; I'll to Clifton straight.

KING. Stay, and breathe awhile.

Thou hast redeemed thy lost opinion,

And showed thou makest some tender of⁹ my life

In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

PRINCE. O God, they did me too much injury

That ever said I hearkened for your death.

If it were so, I might have let alone

The insulting hand of Douglas over you,

Which would have been as speedy in your end

As all the poisonous potions in the world

And saved the treacherous labor of your son.

KING. Make up to Clifton; I'll to Sir Nicholas Gawsey. [Exit.]

[Enter HOTSPUR.]

HOT. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

PRINCE. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

HOT. My name is Harry Percy.

PRINCE. Why then I see

A very valiant rebel of the name.

I am the Prince of Wales, and think not, Percy,

To share with me in glory any more:

Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere,¹⁰

Nor can one England brook a double reign

Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales.

HOT. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come

To end the one of us; and would to God

Thy name in arms were now as great as mine!

PRINCE. I'll make it greater ere I part from thee,

And all the budding honors on thy crest

I'll crop to make a garland for my head.

HOT. I can no longer brook thy vanities.

[They fight.]

[Enter FALSTAFF.]

FAL. Well said, Hal, to it, Hal! Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

[Enter DOUGLAS; he fighteth with FALSTAFF, who falls down as if he were dead. (Exit DOUGLAS.) The PRINCE killeth PERCY.]

9. I.e., you have some concern for. 10. Orbit. "Brook": endure.
"Opinion": reputation.

HOT. O Harry, thou hast robbed me of my youth!

I better brook the loss of brittle life
Than those proud titles thou hast won of me;
They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh; 80
But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool,
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy,
But that the earthy and cold hand of death
Lies on my tongue; no, Percy, thou art dust, 85
And food for— [(Dies.)]

PRINCE. For worms, brave Percy; fare thee well, great heart!

Ill-weaved ambition, how much art thou shrunk!
When that this body did contain a spirit
A kingdom for it was too small a bound, 90
But now two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough; this earth that bears thee dead
Bears not alive so stout¹ a gentleman.
If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so dear² a show of zeal; 95
But let my favors hide thy mangled face³
And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself
For doing these fair rites of tenderness.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven;
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave, 100
But not remembered in thy epitaph!

[He spieth FALSTAFF on the ground.]

What, old acquaintance, could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell;
I could have better spared a better man.
O, I should have a heavy miss of thee, 105
If I were much in love with vanity!⁴
Death hath not struck so fat a deer today,
Though many dearer,⁵ in this bloody fray.
Emboweled will I see thee by and by;
Till then in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit.] 110

FAL. [rising up] Emboweled! if thou embowel me today, I'll give you leave to powder⁶ me and eat me tomorrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant⁷ Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie, I am no counterfeit; to die is to be a counterfeit, for he is but the counterfeit of a man 115 who hath not the life of a man; but to counterfeit dying when a man thereby liveth is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part⁸ of valor is discretion, in the which better part I have saved my life. Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead; how if 120 he should counterfeit too and rise? By my faith, I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him

1. Valiant.

2. Open.

3. Prince Hal here covers Hotspur's face with a scarf.

4. Frivolity.

5. Nobler. "Emboweled": embalmed.

6. Pickle.

7. Violent; "scot and lot": completely.

8. Quality, not "portion."

sure; yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah [stabbing him], with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me. 125

[He takes up HOTSPUR on his back.]

[Enter the PRINCE and JOHN OF LANCASTER.]

PRINCE. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thou fleshed⁹ Thy maiden sword.

LAN. But soft, whom have we here?

Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

PRINCE. I did; I saw him dead,

Breathless and bleeding on the ground. Art thou alive? 130

Or is it fantasy¹⁰ that plays upon our eyesight?

I prithee speak; we will not trust our eyes

Without our ears; thou art not what thou seem'st.

FAL. No, that's certain, I am not a double man; but if I be not 135 Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack.¹ There is Percy [throwing the body down]; if your father will do me any honor, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

PRINCE. Why, Percy I killed myself and saw thee dead. 140

FAL. Didst thou? Lord, Lord, how this world is given to lying! I grant you I was down and out of breath, and so was he; but we rose both at an instant and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them that should reward valor bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon 145 my death. I gave him this wound in the thigh; if the man were alive and would deny it, zounds, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

LAN. This is the strangest tale that ever I heard.

PRINCE. This is the strangest fellow, brother John. 150

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back;

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,

I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

[A retreat is sounded.]

The trumpet sounds retreat;² the day is ours.

Come, brother, let us to the highest³ of the field, 155

To see what friends are living, who are dead.

[Exeunt (PRINCE OF WALES and LANCASTER.)]

FAL. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great,⁴ I'll grow less, for I'll purge and leave sack, and live cleanly as a nobleman should do. [Exit.]

SCENE 5

[The trumpets sound. Enter the KING, PRINCE OF WALES, PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, EARL OF WESTMORELAND, with WORCESTER and VERNON prisoners.]

9. Initiated.

10. Illusion.

1. I.e., a worthless fellow.

2. The signal to stop pursuit of the defeated enemy.

3. Highest part.

4. I.e., become "either earl or duke."

"Purge": take cleansing medicines.

KING. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.

Ill-spirited Worcester, did not we send grace,
Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?

And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary,
Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust? 5

Three knights upon our party slain today,
A noble earl and many a creature else

Had been alive this hour,
If like a Christian thou hadst truly borne
Betwixt our armies true intelligence. 10

WOR. What I have done my safety urged me to,
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

KING. Bear Worcester to the death and Vernon too;
Other offenders we will pause upon. 15

[Exeunt WORCESTER and VERNON (guarded.)]

How goes the field?

PRINCE. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turned from him,
The noble Percy slain, and all his men
Upon the foot of fear,⁵ fled with the rest, 20
And falling from a hill he was so bruised
That the pursuers took him. At my tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your grace
I may dispose of him.

KING. With all my heart.

PRINCE. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you 25

This honorable bounty shall belong;

Go to the Douglas and deliver him

Up to his pleasure, ransomless and free;

His valor shown upon our crests today

Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds 30

Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

LAN. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,
Which I shall give away immediately.

KING. Then this remains, that we divide our power.

You, son John and my cousin Westmoreland, 35

Towards York shall bend you with your dearest⁶ speed

To meet Northumberland and the prelate Scroop,

Who, as we hear, are busily in arms;

Myself and you, son Harry, will towards Wales

To fight with Glendower and the Earl of March. 40

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,

Meeting the check of such another day;

And since this business so fair is done,

Let us not leave till all our own be won.

[Exeunt.]

1598

5. Fleeing in panic.

6. Greatest.

7. (1) Hindrance (2) rebuke.

King Lear King Lear is one of Shakespeare's major tragedies, in the company of Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello, and Antony and Cleopatra. It is even on a grander scale than any of them, for it involves not only the world in which human events take place, but the elements themselves—the realm of Nature. Whether the cosmos is friendly to man, or indifferent to him, or hostile to his aims and aspirations is a subject which the writer of tragedy explores. From the Book of Job through the great Greek tragedies and on to Shakespeare the tragic dramatist shows man suffering and trying to find the meaning of his suffering. As Richard Sewall has put it (Tragedy: Modern Essays in Criticism, ed. Laurence Michel and Richard B. Sewall, p. 124), "the essence of his nature is brought out by suffering: 'I suffer, I will to suffer, I learn by suffering; therefore I am.'"

The anguish of the tragic hero arises from his uncertain knowledge of himself and of people around him; from his awareness that good and evil are distributed in no obvious or logical way, and that what seems at first to be good is in fact evil; and from his desperate question whether there are "justicers" above, and if so, how they can possibly allow the world to go on as it does.

King Lear was written sometime between 1603 and 1606, probably in 1604 or 1605. It, together with the other great tragedies, comes in a period after the sunny comedies Much Ado About Nothing, As You Like It, and Twelfth Night, and before the dramatic romances of Shakespeare's final period, Cymbeline, The Winter's Tale, and The Tempest. Although there is a certain concentration on a particular type of play in each of these three periods of Shakespeare's life, it would be rash to draw any conclusions about the dramatist's biography from this. Mozart wrote some of his happiest music when his personal life was miserable.

Structurally, King Lear has two plots, and more than in any other play of Shakespeare, the two plots reinforce each other. They both have to do with the relationship between parents and children. One plot involves three daughters and a father; the other displays a father and two sons, one legitimate and the other illegitimate. The plots are woven together intimately; they do not touch each other merely by coincidence. Shakespeare drew them from widely different sources: the main plot of King Lear and his three daughters came from an old chronicle play (not a tragedy) called The True Chronicle History of King Leir and his Three Daughters, supplemented by treatments of the story in Holinshed's Chronicle, Spenser's Faerie Queene, and perhaps others. The plot of Gloucester and his two sons comes from Sir Philip Sidney's popular romance, The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia.

The play has many themes, persistently touched upon and handled in various ways. A major one is Nature, and the word has many meanings in the play. Nature was thought of in the Middle Ages as a goddess; she was also called (in Chaucer, for example) "Kind." The word "kind" and its derivatives have both senses in Shakespeare, and the words "nature" and "natural" have many connotations. "Natural" sometimes means "virtuous," as showing "natural" feelings for a parent or child. But "natural" may also mean the opposite of law and custom. "Nature" is not only the physical world, but also that part of nature that we call "human nature." What is truly "natural" in that sphere is a mystery. "Is there any cause in nature that makes these hard hearts?" asks Lear in his misery.

As he had done in some earlier plays, for example Romeo and Juliet and Julius Caesar, Shakespeare makes belief in astrology, the influence of the stars on human affairs, an important theme in King Lear. The characters take different points of view on this question, and we must not suppose that any one of them is necessarily giving the author's opinion. Belief in the stars is only one form of a great tragic dilemma: is what happens to us the result of fate or destiny, or do we bring our disasters upon ourselves?

Another great theme is the learning of wisdom. How is it done? By observation, using the eyes? By abandoning what we had supposed was wisdom and assuming that we are fools? By turning off the rational brain and trusting to the emotions? It has been suggested above that in tragedy man learns by suffering. In King Lear this suffering takes every form, physical and mental, and sometimes both. "How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child!" says the old king. One of the ways the proud and arrogant must learn wisdom is by being stripped—stripped of their luxuries, their status, their power, and reduced to the level of beasts. It is noteworthy that this stripping process is one which can be done by one's enemies or by the elements, or by both.

The theme of "service" is a common one in Shakespeare. Service meant something different in the class society of the seventeenth century from what it means in our more democratic time. We are used to service stations and service industries, but in Shakespeare's time service was associated closely with rank, and it implied, or could imply, a degree of personal dedication which we would find strange. An earl, banished, disguises himself and applies to be a servant—a sensational situation in the eyes of Shakespeare's audience. Or servants resisting the evil actions of their masters—almost incredible. The roles of the Fool, Oswald, and Kent will not be clear unless we recall the earlier conception of service.

Though irony is very common in tragedy (that Gloucester doesn't "see" until he has lost his eyes is an example of irony) the comic element is not—except in Shakespeare. The porter in Macbeth is a famous instance. In Lear the Fool is partly comic, not in the free-hearted way of the fool Feste in Twelfth Night, but in the critical, satirical mode of Touchstone in As You Like It, only more so. The court jester, called "Fool" not because he was foolish, had a certain freedom which courtiers did not have. He could be threatened with whipping, as a child could, but he was treated affectionately by his master as long as he amused him. The Fool in Lear may be "a pestilent gall" to his master when he reminds him of his folly, but the King clearly loves him.

Love is a great force in the play, when it is finally discovered. It cannot be measured by numbers, as Lear first tries to do. Justice and pity may be relative, and they are vitally important in society, but in the great catastrophe at the end it is the love of Lear and Cordelia that surmounts even their destruction.

Disguise: Kent, Edgar; Edmund, Regan, "Goneril"

The Tragedy of King Lear

Dramatis Personae

KING LEAR

KING OF FRANCE

DUKE OF BURGUNDY

DUKE OF CORNWALL, husband to REGANDUKE OF ALBANY, husband to GONERIL

EARL OF KENT

EARL OF GLOUCESTER

EDGAR, son to GLOUCESTEREDMUND, bastard son to GLOUCESTERCURAN, *a courtier*OLD MAN, tenant to GLOUCESTER

DOCTOR

FOOL

OSWALD, steward to GONERILA CAPTAIN employed by EDMUNDGENTLEMAN attendant on CORDELIA

A HERALD

SERVANTS to CORNWALL

GONERIL

REGAN } daughters to LEAR

CORDELIA }

KNIGHTS attending on LEAR, OFFICERS, MESSENGERS, SOLDIERS, ATTENDANTS

Act I

SCENE 1

[Enter KENT, GLOUCESTER, and EDMUND.]

KENT. I thought the king had more affected¹ the Duke of Albany than Cornwall.GLOU. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.²

KENT. Is not this your son, my lord?

GLOU. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed³ to it.KENT. I cannot conceive⁴ you.

GLOU. Sir, this young fellow's mother could: whereupon she grew round-wombed, and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

1. Regard for; "Albany" is Scotland.

2. I.e., shares are so evenly balanced that careful consideration cannot decide whose part is greater.

3. Hardened.

4. Understand, with a pun on "become pregnant."

KENT. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue⁵ of it being so proper.

GLOU. But I have, sir, a son by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account: though this knave⁶ came something saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged. Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

EDM. No, my lord.

GLOU. My lord of Kent. Remember him hereafter as my honorable friend.

EDM. My services to your lordship.

KENT. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

EDM. Sir, I shall study deserving.

GLOU. He hath been out⁷ nine years, and away he shall again. [Sound a sennet.⁸] The king is coming.

[Enter one bearing a coronet, then KING LEAR, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and ATTENDANTS.]

LEAR. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloucester.

GLOU. I shall, my liege. [Exeunt GLOUCESTER and EDMUND.]

LEAR. Meantime we shall express our darker⁹ purpose.

Give me the map there. Know that we have divided

In three our kingdom; and 'tis our fast¹ intent

To shake all cares and business from our age;

Conferring them on younger strengths, while we

Unburthened crawl toward death. Our son of Cornwall,

And you, our no less loving son of Albany,

We have this hour a constant will to publish²

Our daughters' several dowers, that future strife

May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love,

Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,

And here are to be answered. Tell me, my daughters,—

Since now we will divest us, both of rule,

Interest³ of territory, cares of state,—

Which of you shall we say doth love us most?

That we our largest bounty may extend

Where nature doth with merit challenge.⁴ Goneril,

Our eldest-born, speak first.

GON. Sir, I love you more than words can wield the matter;⁵

Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty;

Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare;

No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honor;

As much as child e'er loved, or father found;

5. (1) Outcome (2) offspring; "proper": handsome.

6. Young fellow (not derogatory).

7. Abroad.

8. A distinctive set of notes on a trumpet, announcing the arrival of that particular person to whom the notes belong.

9. More secret.

1. Firm, unalterable.

2. Announce, make public.

3. Possession.

4. I.e., where nature plus merit can make the greatest claim for reward.

5. Handle the theme.

A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

COR. [aside] What shall Cordelia speak? Love, and be silent.

LEAR. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,

With shadowy forests and with champains⁶ riched,

With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads,⁷

We make thee lady: to thine and Albany's issue

Be this perpetual. What says our second daughter,

Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall? Speak.

REG. Sir, I am made

Of the self-same metal⁸ that my sister is,

And prize me at her worth. In my true heart

I find she names my very deed of love;

Only she comes too short, that I profess

Myself an enemy to all other joys,

Which the most precious square of sense⁹ possesses,

And find I am alone felicitate¹⁰

In your dear highness' love.

COR. [aside] Then poor Cordelia!

And yet not so; since, I am sure, my love's

More richer than my tongue.

LEAR. To thee and thine hereditary ever

Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;

No less in space, validity,¹¹ and pleasure,

Than that conferred on Goneril. Now, our joy,

Although the last, not least; to whose young love

The vines of France and milk of Burgundy

Strive to be interested,¹² what can you say to draw

A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.

COR. Nothing, my lord.

LEAR. Nothing?

COR. Nothing.

LEAR. Nothing can come of nothing. Speak again.

COR. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave

My heart into my mouth. I love your majesty

According to my bond;¹ nor more nor less.

LEAR. How, how, Cordelia! mend your speech a little,

Lest it may mar your fortunes.

COR. Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, loved me; I

Return those duties back as are right fit,

Obeys you, love you, and most honor you.

Why have my sisters husbands, if they say

They love you all? I haply, when I shall wed,

That lord whose hand must take my plight² shall carry

6. Unwooded plains.

7. Meadows.

8. The stuff (mettle) of which a person.

9. Sensitive feeling.

10. I.e., can only be happy.

11. Value.

12. Closely united.

1. The word is ambiguous. It can mean filial obligation, one's "bounden duty," or it can mean the strict terms of a contract, as in The Merchant of Venice.

2. The pledge in the marriage service: "And thereto I plight thee my troth."

Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,

100

To love my father all.

LEAR. But goes thy heart with this?

COR. Ay, good my lord.

LEAR. So young, and so untender?

COR. So young, my lord, and true.

105

LEAR. Let it be so! Thy truth, then, be thy dower!

For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,

The mysteries of Hecate,³ and the night;

By all the operation of the orbs⁴

From whom we do exist and cease to be;

110

Here I disclaim all my paternal care,

Propinquity and property of blood,⁵

And as a stranger to my heart and me

Hold thee, from this, for ever, The barbarous Scythian,⁶

Or he that makes his generation messes

115

To gorge his appetite,⁷ shall to my bosom

Be as well neighbored, pitied, and relieved,

As thou my sometime daughter.

KENT. Good my liege,—

LEAR. Peace, Kent!

Come not between the dragon and his wrath.⁸

120

I loved her most, and thought to set my rest⁹

On her kind nursery. Hence, and avoid my sight!

So be my grave my peace, as here I give

Her father's heart from her! Call France; who stirs?

Call Burgundy. Cornwall and Albany,

125

With my two daughters' dowers digest¹ this third:

Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.

I do invest you jointly with my power,

Pre-eminence, and all the large effects

That troop with majesty. Ourself, by monthly course,

130

With reservation of an hundred knights,

By you to be sustained, shall our abode

Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain

The name, and all the additions to a king:²

The sway, revenue, execution of the rest,

135

Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,

This coronet part betwixt you.

KENT. Royal Lear,

Whom I have ever honored as my king,

Loved as my father, as my master followed,

3. The secret rites of the goddess of the lower world.

4. Planets.

5. Near relationship and identity of blood.

6. The nomadic Scythians were supposed to be the most barbarous people of antiquity.

7. A cannibal who eats his own children.

8. A dragon was on the crest of ancient

British kings, and in Shakespeare the dragon is often a symbol of wrath.

9. Not only "to seek my repose" but also "to bet everything I have," an expression from the card game primero.

1. Absorb.

2. Royal titles, honors, ceremony. He intends to give up only his wealth and power.

- As my great patron thought on in my prayers—
 LEAR. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.³ 140
 KENT. Let it fall rather, though the fork⁴ invade
 The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
 When Lear is mad. What wilt thou do, old man?
 Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak, 145
 When power to flattery bows? To plainness honor's bound,
 When majesty stoops to folly.⁵ Reverse thy doom,⁶
 And, in thy best consideration, check
 This hideous rashness. Answer my life my judgment,
 Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least; 150
 Nor are those empty-hearted whose low sound
 Reverbs no hollowness.⁷
 LEAR. Kent, on thy life, no more.
 KENT. My life I never held but as a pawn
 To wage against thy enemies; nor fear to lose it,
 Thy safety being the motive.
 LEAR. Out of my sight! 155
 KENT. See better, Lear; and let me still remain
 The true blank of thine eye.⁸
 LEAR. Now, by Apollo,—
 KENT. Now, by Apollo, king,
 Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.⁹
 LEAR. O, vassal! miscreant!
 [Laying his hand on his sword.]
 ALB. { Dear sir, forbear. 160
 CORN. {
 KENT. DO;
 Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
 Upon thy foul disease. Revoke thy doom;
 Or, whilst I can vent clamor from my throat,
 I'll tell thee thou dost evil.
 LEAR. Hear me, recreant!¹ 165
 On thine allegiance, hear me!
 Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow,
 Which we durst never yet, and with strained² pride
 To come between our sentence and our power,
 Which nor our nature nor our place can bear, 170
 Our potency made good, take thy reward.
 Five days we do allot thee, for provision
 To shield thee from diseases³ of the world;
 And on the sixth to turn thy hated back
 Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following, 175
3. I have drawn the bow; you had better avoid the arrow I am about to shoot at you.
 4. An arrowhead with two prongs.
 5. A common rhetorical device in Shakespeare, the substitution of the abstract for the concrete.
 6. Judgment, sentence.
 7. That Cordelia says little and speaks softly does not mean that she is hollow (insincere).
 8. The bull's-eye of a target.
 9. Classical gods are invoked throughout to heighten the pagan atmosphere. But there is frequent questioning as to whether those, or any, gods exist and if they do, whether they can be invoked. The word miscreant, which Lear calls Kent, used to mean "misbeliever."
 1. Traitor.
 2. Forced, unnatural.
 3. Difficulties.

Thy banished trunk be found in our dominions,
 The moment is thy death. Away! by Jupiter,
 This shall not be revoked.

KENT. Fare thee well, king. Sith thus thou wilt appear,
 Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.⁴ 180

[To CORDELIA.] The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,

That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said!

[To REGAN and CONERIL.] And your large speeches may your deeds approve,

That good effects may spring from words of love.⁵

Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;

He'll shape his old course in a country new. [Exit.] 185

[Flourish. Re-enter GLOUCESTER, with FRANCE, BURGUNDY, and ATTENDANTS.]

GLOU. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

LEAR. My lord of Burgundy,

We first address towards you, who with this king

Hath rivaled for our daughter. What, in the least, 190

Will you require in present dower with her,

Or cease your quest of love?

BUR. Most royal majesty,

I crave no more than what your highness offered,

Nor will you tender less.

LEAR. Right noble Burgundy,

When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;⁶ 195

But now her price is fallen. Sir, there she stands;

If aught within that little seeming substance,⁷

Or all of it, with our displeasure pieced,⁸

And nothing more, may fitly like your grace,

She's there, and she is yours.

BUR. I know no answer. 200

LEAR. Will you, with those infirmities she owes,⁹

Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,

Dowered with our curse, and strangered with our oath,

Take her, or leave her?

BUR. Pardon me, royal sir;

Election makes not up¹ on such conditions. 205

LEAR. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me,

I tell you all her wealth. [to FRANCE] For you, great king,

I would not from your love make such a stray²

To match you where I hate; therefore beseech you

To avert your liking a more worthier way 210

4. I.e., to stay here would be a punishment like being banished, and going away is not a punishment, but an escape to freedom. "Sith": since.

5. May your actions correspond to your speeches, so words promising love may have good results. Kent's rhyming lines are ironical, moralistic, and constitute a kind of formal farewell.

6. Punning on the word "dear"—"beloved" and "expensive."

7. That small appearance of reality.

8. Attached to it.

9. Owns.

1. Choice is not made.

2. Stray so far.

Than on a wretch whom nature is ashamed
Almost to acknowledge hers.

FRANCE.

This is most strange,
That she, whom even but now was your best object,
The argument³ of your praise, balm of your age,
Most best, most dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favor. Sure, her offense
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it, or your fore-vouched affection
Fall'n into taint;⁴ which to believe of her,
Must be a faith that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.

215

220

COR.

I yet beseech your majesty —
If for I want that glib and oily art,
To speak and purpose not,—since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak—that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonored step,
That hath deprived me of your grace and favor;
But even for want of that for which I am richer,
A still-soliciting⁵ eye, and such a tongue
As I am glad I have not, though not to have it
Hath lost me in your liking.

225

230

LEAR.

Better thou
Hadst not been born than not to have pleased me better.

FRANCE. Is it but this,—a tardiness in nature⁶

Which often leaves the history unspoke
That it intends to do? My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love's not love
When it is mingled with regards that stands
Aloof from th' entire point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.

235

BUR.

Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself proposed,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

240

LEAR. Nothing! I have sworn; I am firm.

BUR. I am sorry, then, you have so lost a father
That you must lose a husband.

245

COR.

Peace be with Burgundy!
Since that respects of fortune⁷ are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

FRANCE. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being poor;
Most choice, forsaken; and most loved, despised!

250

3. Main object of love and favor; "argument": subject.

4. Her offense must be unnatural and monstrous, or else your previously expressed affection for her must have been error.

5. Always pleading.

6. Natural shyness.

7. Considerations of money.

Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
 Be it lawful I take up what's cast away.
 Gods, gods! 't is strange that from their cold'st neglect
 My love should kindle to inflamed respect.⁸

Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my chance, 255
 Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France.

Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy
 Can buy this unprized precious maid of me.
 Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;⁹
 Thou lovest here, a better where to find. 260

LEAR. Thou hast her, France; let her be thine; for we Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
 That face of hers again. Therefore be gone
 Without our grace, our love, our benison.¹⁰
 Come, noble Burgundy. 265

[Flourish. Exeunt all but FRANCE, CONERIL, REGAN, and CORDELIA.]

FRANCE. Bid farewell to your sisters.

COR. The jewels of our father, with washed eyes¹
 Cordelia leaves you. I know you what you are,
 And like a sister am most loath to call
 Your faults as they are named. Love well our father. 270
 To your professed bosoms² I commit him;
 But yet, alas, stood I within his grace,
 I would prefer him to a better place.
 So, farewell to you both.

REG. Prescribe not us our duties.

CON. Let your study 275
 Be to content your lord, who hath received you
 At fortune's alms.³ You have obedience scanted,
 And well are worth the want that you have wanted.⁴

COR. Time shall unfold what pleated cunning hides:
 Who cover faults, at last shame them derides. 280
 Well may you prosper!

FRANCE. Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exeunt FRANCE and CORDELIA.]

CON. Sister, it is not a little I have to say of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think our father will hence to-night.

REG. That's most certain, and with you; next month with us.

CON. You see how full of changes his age is; the observation we 285 have made of it hath not been little: he always loved our sister most; and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off appears too grossly.⁵

8. Passionate regard.

9. Unnatural and cruel. The rhyming lines here, as in Kent's farewell, are ceremonial and sententious.

10. Blessing.

1. Tears.

2. Referring to the love they claimed they felt.

3. As a petty charity, not a bounteous gift.

4. You have come short of obedience, and this lack is just about what you are worth.

5. Such chorus-like comments, a convention in Shakespeare, guide the audience's response; they are not intended to characterize the speakers.

- REG. 'Tis the infirmity of his age; yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself. 290
- CON. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted⁶ condition, but therewithal the unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them.
- REG. Such unconstant starts⁷ are we like to have from him as 295 this of Kent's banishment.
- CON. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let's hit⁸ together: if our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last⁹ surrender of his will but offend us. 300
- REG. We shall further think on 't.
- CON. We must do something, and i' the heat.¹⁰ [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter EDMUND, with a letter.]

- EDM. Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custom,¹ and permit
The curiosity² of nations to deprive me,
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines 5
Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact,³
My mind as generous⁴ and my shape as true,
As honest⁵ madam's issue? Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? base, base? 10
Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
More composition and fierce quality⁶
Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed,
Go to creating a whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake? Well, then, 15
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land.
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund
As to the legitimate. Fine word,—'legitimate'!
Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed,⁷
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base 20
Shall top the legitimate. I grow; I prosper.
Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

[Enter GLOUCESTER.]

- GLOU. Kent banished thus? and France in choler parted?
And the king gone tonight? subscribed⁸ his power?

6. Deeply rooted.

7. Sudden jerks (as from a skittish horse).

8. Agree.

9. Recent.

10. While the iron's hot (proverbial).

1. Be dependent on diseased custom.

2. Scrupulousness.

3. My proportions are as well made.

4. Noble, aristocratic.

5. Chaste.

6. A fuller mixture and more energy

7. Prosper; "invention": plot.

8. Surrendered.

Confined to exhibition?⁹ All this done 25

Upon the gad?¹ Edmund, how now! what news?

EDM. So please your lordship, none. [Putting up the letter.]

GLOU. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

EDM. I know no news, my lord.

GLOU. What paper were you reading? 30

EDM. Nothing, my lord.

GLOU. No? What needed, then, that terrible dispatch of it into your pocket? the quality² of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see. Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles. 35

EDM. I beseech you, sir, pardon me. It is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er-read; and for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your o'er-looking.

GLOU. Give me the letter, sir.

EDM. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as 40 in part I understand them, are to blame.

GLOU. Let's see, let's see.

EDM. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay or taste³ of my virtue.

GLOU. [reads] "This policy and reverence⁴ of age makes the 45 world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness cannot relish them. I begin to find an idle and fond⁵ bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, not as it hath power, but as it suffered.⁶ Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep 50 till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, EDGAR."

Hum—conspiracy!—"Sleep till I waked him,—you should enjoy half his revenue,"—My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to 55
you? who brought it?

EDM. It was not brought me, my lord; there's the cunning of it;
I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.⁷

GLOU. You know the character⁸ to be your brother's?

EDM. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; 60 but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

GLOU. It is his.

EDM. It is his hand, my lord; but I hope his heart is not in the contents.

GLOU. Hath he never heretofore sounded⁹ you in this business? 65

EDM. Never, my lord. But I have heard him oft maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

GLOU. O villain, villain! His very opinion in the letter! Abhorred

9. A small allowance.

1. Suddenly.

2. Nature.

3. Test or trial.

4. Custom of reverencing.

5. Foolish.

6. Who rules not through power, but by our permission.

7. Private room.

8. Handwriting.

9. Tested the depth of (a nautical metaphor).

villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than bru- 70 tish! Go, sirrah, seek him. I'll apprehend him. Abominable villain! Where is he?

EDM. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a cer- 75 tain course; where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honor and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him that he hath wrote this to feel my affection to your honor, and to no further pretense of danger.¹ 80

GLOU. Think you so?

EDM. If your honor judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance² have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening. 85

GLOU. He cannot be such a monster—

EDM. Nor is not, sure.

GLOU. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.
Heaven and earth! Edmund, seek him out; wind me into³ him, I pray you; frame the business after your own wisdom. I 90 would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution.⁴

EDM. I will seek him, sir, presently⁵; convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

GLOU. These late⁶ eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us. Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and 95 thus,⁷ yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects.
Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide; in cities, mutinies;⁸ in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked 'twixt son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father. The king falls 100 from bias of nature;⁹ there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time. Machinations, hollowness, treach-ery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves. Find out this villain, Edmund; it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully. And the noble and true-hearted Kent ban- 105
ished! his offence, honesty! 'Tis strange. [Exit.]

EDM. This is the excellent foppery¹ of the world, that, when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeit of our own behavior, we make guilty of² our disasters the sun, the moon, and the stars;
as if we were villains by necessity; fools by heavenly compul- 110
sion; knaves, thieves, and treachers, by spherical predominance;³ drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an

1. Dangerous purpose.

2. Hearing directly.

3. Worm your way into his confidence.

4. Lose my rank (Lear has just "unstated" himself) to find out the real
truth.

5. Immediately; "convey": manage.

6. Recent.

7. Though science can explain it in this or that way.

8. Riots.

9. Natural curve (a figure from bowling).

1. Stupidity.

2. Responsible for.

3. The dominating influence of a planet
(in astrology).

enforced obedience of planetary influence; and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on.⁴ An admirable evasion of whore-master man, to lay his goatish⁵ disposition to the charge of a star! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail, and my nativity was under Ursa Major, so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous. Fut!⁶ I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Edgar—

[Enter EDMUND.] Edmund still blames the fact that he's a bastard ¹²⁰

and pat he comes like the catastrophe of the old comedy.⁷ My cue is villanous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o' Bedlam.⁸ O, these eclipses do portend these divisions!⁹ Fa, sol, la, mi.

EDG. How now, brother Edmund? What serious contemplation are you in?

EDM. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses. 125

EDG. Do you busy yourself about that?

EDM. I promise you, the effects he writes of succeed¹ unhappily; as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death,¹³⁰ dearth,² dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless diffidences,³ banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts,⁴ nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

EDG. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?⁵ 135

EDM. Come, come! When saw you my father last?

EDG. Why, the night gone by.

EDM. Spake you with him?

EDG. Ay, two hours together.

EDM. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in ¹⁴⁰ him by word or countenance?

EDG. None at all.

EDM. Bethink yourself wherein you may have offended him; and at my entreaty forbear his presence till some little time hath qualified⁶ the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so ¹⁴⁵ rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay.

EDG. Some villain hath done me wrong.

EDM. That's my fear. I pray you, have a continent⁷ forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with ¹⁵⁰ me to my lodging, from whence I will fitly⁸ bring you to hear my lord speak. Pray ye, go! There's my key. If you do stir

4. Supernatural instigation.

5. Lecherous.

6. Christ's foot: an oath.

7. Like the conclusion in an old comedy, often hurriedly patched up to bring the play to an end.

8. A mad beggar. "Bedlam" comes from Bethlehem Hospital, an asylum for the insane in London.

9. Disunions. But "divisions" was also a musical term, meaning "runs."

1. Turn out.

2. Famine.

3. Distrusts.

4. Breaking up of army units, desertions.

5. Believer in astrology.

6. Lessened.

7. Restrained.

8. Suitably.

abroad, go armed.

EDG. Armed, brother?

EDM. Brother, I advise you to the best. Go armed. I am no¹⁵⁵ honest man if there be any good meaning⁹ towards you. I have told you what I have seen and heard; but faintly, nothing like the image and horror¹⁰ of it. Pray you, away!

EDG. Shall I hear from you anon?

EDM. I do serve you in this business.

[Exit EDGAR.] 160

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy! I see the business.
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit:
All with me's meet that I can fashion fit.¹

[Exit.] 165

SCENE 3

[Enter GONERIL, and OSWALD, her steward.]

CON. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

OSW. Yes, madam.

CON. By day and night² he wrongs me; every hour

He flashes into one gross crime³ or other,

That sets us all at odds. I'll not endure it.

5

His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us

On every trifle. When he returns from hunting,

I will not speak with him. Say I am sick.

If you come slack of⁴ former services,

You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer.⁵

10

OSW. He's coming, madam; I hear him.

[Horns within.]

CON. Put on what weary negligence you please,

You and your fellows. I'd have it come to question.⁶

If he dislike it, let him to our sister,

Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,

15

Not to be overruled. Idle old man,

That still would manage those authorities

That he hath given away! Now, by my life,

Old fools are babes again, and must be used

With checks as flatteries,—when they are seen abused.⁷

20

Remember what I tell you.

OSW.

Well, madam.

CON. And let his knights have colder looks among you.

What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so.

I would breed from hence occasions,⁸ and I shall,

That I may speak. I'll write straight⁹ to my sister,

25

To hold my very course. Prepare for dinner.

[Exeunt.]

9. Intention.

10. Horrible reality.

1. Manipulate to serve my purpose.

2. An oath; see I.i.106–22.

3. Offense, not necessarily a violation of law.

4. Fall short of.

5. Be answerable for.

6. Made an issue of.

7. Must be corrected by rebukes rather than flatteries when they are seen to be deluded.

8. Opportunities.

9. Immediately.

SCENE 4

[Enter KENT, disguised.]

KENT. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech defuse,¹ my good intent
May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I razed my likeness.² Now, banished Kent,
If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemned, 5
So may it come, thy master, whom thou lovest,
Shall find thee full of labors.

[Horns within. Enter LEAR, KNIGHTS, and ATTENDANTS.]

LEAR. Let me not stay a jot³ for dinner; go get it ready. [Exit an ATTENDANT.] How now! What art thou?

KENT. A man, sir. 10

LEAR. What dost thou profess?⁴ What wouldst thou with us?

KENT. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise and says little; to fear judgment; to fight when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish.⁵ 15

LEAR. What art thou?

KENT. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

LEAR. If thou be as poor for a subject as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou?

KENT. Service. 20

LEAR. Who wouldst thou serve?

KENT. You.

LEAR. Dost thou know me, fellow?

KENT. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance⁶ which I would fain call master. 25

LEAR. What's that?

KENT. Authority.

LEAR. What services canst thou do?

KENT. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious⁷ tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly. That which 30 ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

LEAR. How old art thou?

KENT. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for anything. I have years on my back forty- 35 eight.

LEAR. Follow me; thou shalt serve me. If I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner, ho dinner!
Where's my knave?⁸ my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither.

[Exit an ATTENDANT.]

[Enter OSWALD.]

1. If I can speak like someone else, so that my voice is disguised.

2. Changed my appearance (put on this disguise).

3. Wait a moment.

4. What is your trade or calling? But Kent takes the word "profess" in another sense—to assert, believe.

5. To know that I must face judgment and act accordingly; to fight when I cannot avoid it; and to be a loyal Protestant.

6. Bearing.

7. Intricate, complicated.

8. Boy.

- You, you, sirrah,⁹ where's my daughter?
- OSW. So please you,— [Exit.] 40
- LEAR. What says the fellow there? Call the clotpoll¹ back. [Exit a KNIGHT.] Where's my fool, ho? I think the world's asleep.
- [Re-enter KNIGHT.]
- How now! where's that mongrel?
- KNIGHT. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well. 45
- LEAR. Why came not the slave back to me when I called him?
- KNIGHT. Sir, he answered me in the roundest² manner, he would not.
- LEAR. He would not!
- KNIGHT. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertained³ with that ceremonious affection as you were wont,⁴ there's a great abatement of kindness appears as well in the general dependants as in the duke himself also and your daughter.
- LEAR. Ha! sayest thou so? 55
- KNIGHT. I beseech you pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent when I think your highness wronged.
- LEAR. Thou but rememberest me of mine own conception. I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity⁵ than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. I will look further into 't. But where's my fool? I have not seen him this two days. 60
- KNIGHT. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.
- LEAR. No more of that; I have noted it well. Go you and tell my daughter I would speak with her. [Exit KNIGHT.] Go you, call hither my fool. [Exit an ATTENDANT.] 65
- [Re-enter OSWALD.]
- O, you sir, you! Come you hither, sir. Who am I, sir?
- OSW. My lady's father.
- LEAR. "My lady's father"! My lord's knave! You whoreson dog! 70 you slave! you cur!
- OSW. I am none of these, my lord; I beseech your pardon.
- LEAR. Do you bandy⁶ looks with me, you rascal? [Striking him.]
- OSW. I'll not be struck, my lord.
- KENT. Nor tripped neither, you base foot-ball player.⁷ 75 [Tripping up his heels.]
- LEAR. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.
- KENT. Come, sir, arise, away! I'll teach you differences.⁸ Away, away! If you will measure your lubber's length⁹ again, tarry; but away! Go to! Have you wisdom? so.

9. An address to a social inferior or stranger.

1. Clod-pate, blockhead.

2. Plainest, rudest.

3. Treated.

4. Accustomed.

5. Suspicious watchfulness.

6. Hit back and forth, as in tennis.

7. Elizabethan football, not the modern sport, was played only by lower-class ruffians, and, according to a contemporary, was marked by "fighting, brawling, contention, quarrel-picking, murder, homicide, and great effusion of blood."

8. Social rank and position.

9. Be knocked down.

LEAR. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there's earnest¹ 80 of thy service.
[Pushes OSWALD out.]
[Giving KENT money.]

[Enter FOOL.]
FOOL. Let me hire him too. Here's my coxcomb.
[Offering KENT his cap.]

LEAR. How now, my pretty knave! How dost thou?

FOOL. Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.

KENT. Why, fool? 85

FOOL. Why, for taking one's part that's out of favor. Nay, an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly.² There, take my coxcomb! Why, this fellow has banished two on's daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will. If thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. How now, nuncle!³ Would I had two coxcombs and two daughters! 90

LEAR. Why, my boy?

FOOL. If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my coxcombs myself.

There's mine; beg another of thy daughters. 95

LEAR. Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

FOOL. Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when Lady the brach⁴ may stand by the fire and stink.

LEAR. A pestilent gall to me!

FOOL. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech. 100

LEAR. Do.

FOOL. Mark it, nuncle:

Have more than thou showest,
Speak less than thou knowest,
Lend less than thou owest,⁵ 105
Ride more than thou goest,
Learn more than thou trowest,
Set less than thou throwest;⁶
Leave thy drink and thy whore,
And keep in-a-door, 110
And thou shalt have more
Than two tens to a score.⁷

KENT. This is nothing, fool.

FOOL. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfeed lawyer; you gave me nothing for 't. Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle? 115

LEAR. Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

FOOL. [to KENT] Prithee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to. He will not believe a fool.

LEAR. A bitter fool!

FOOL. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter 120

1. A small sum paid in advance.

2. If you can't please the party in power, you will be thrown out.

3. Contraction of "mine uncle"—a form of address used by fools to their male superiors.

4. Bitch. "Lady" was a common name for a female dog (see 1 Henry IV, III.i.235).

5. Ownest; "goest": walk.

6. Don't put all your winnings on one cast of the dice.

7. You will have more than twenty shillings to the pound; i.e., you will save money.

fool and a sweet fool?

LEAR. No, lad; teach me.

FOOL. That lord that counseled thee
To give away thy land,
Come place him here by me,
Do thou for him stand:
The sweet and bitter fool
Will presently appear;
The one in motley here,
The other found out there.

125

130

LEAR. Dost thou call me fool, boy?

FOOL. All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

KENT. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

FOOL. No, faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly⁸ out, they would have part on 't: and ladies too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they'll be snatching. Give me an egg, uncle, and I'll give thee two crowns.

LEAR. What two crowns shall they be?

FOOL. Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i' the middle, and gavest away both parts, thou borest thy ass on thy back o'er the dirt.⁹ Thou hadst little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipped that first finds it so.

145

[singing]

Fools had ne'er less wit in a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
They know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish.

LEAR. When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

150

FOOL. I have used it, nuncle, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mother; for when thou gavest them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches,

[singing]

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,¹⁰
And go the fools among.

155

Prithee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie. I would fain learn to lie.

LEAR. An¹ you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipped.

160

FOOL. I marvel what kin thou and thy daughters are. They'll have me whipped for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipped for lying; and sometimes I am whipped for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o' thing than a fool; and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast pared thy wit o' both sides, and

165

8. That monopolies on certain imports and raw materials were granted to courtiers was a source of common complaint.
9. Mud. In an Aesop fable, a man carries his ass instead of riding it.

10. Hide-and-go-seek.

1. If.

left nothing i' the middle. Here comes one o' the parings.

[Enter GONERIL.]

LEAR. How now, daughter! What makes that frontlet² on? Methinks you are too much of late i' the frown.

FOOL. Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O without a figure.³ I 170 am better than thou art now; I am a fool, thou art nothing.

[To CON.] Yes, forsooth, I will hold my tongue; so your face bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum,

He that keeps nor crust nor crum,

Weary of all, shall want some.

175

[Pointing to LEAR.] That's a shealed peascod.⁴

CON. Not only, sir, this your all-licensed⁵ fool,

But other of your insolent retinue

Do hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth

In rank⁶ and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir,

180

I had thought, by making this well known unto you,

To have found a safe⁷ redress; but now grow fearful,

By what yourself too late have spoke and done,

That you protect this course, and put it on⁸

By your allowance; which if you should, the fault

185

Would not 'scape censure, nor the redresses sleep,

Which, in the tender of a wholesome weal,⁹

Might in their working do you that offense,

Which else were shame, that then necessity

Will call discreet proceeding.

190

FOOL. For, you know, nuncle,

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,

That it had it¹ head bit off by it young.

So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.²

LEAR. Are you our daughter?

195

CON. Come, sir.

I would you would make use of that good wisdom,

Whereof I know you are fraught,³ and put away

These dispositions, that of late transform you

From what you rightly are.

200

FOOL. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse?

Whoop, Jug! I love thee.⁴

LEAR. Doth any here know me? This is not Lear.

Doth Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his notion⁵ weakens, his discernings

205

Are lethargied—Ha! waking? 'Tis not so.

2. I.e., frown (literally, a band worn on the forehead).

3. A zero without a number before it.

4. A shelled or empty peapod.

5. Permitted to say or do anything.

6. Gross.

7. Sure.

8. Instigate it.

9. Out of our concern for a healthy society "redresses."

1. Its. The couplet sounds like a proverb.

2. In the dark.

3. Well furnished.

4. A bit of nonsense, probably accompanied by a caper. "Jug" is a nickname for "Joan."

5. Intellectual power.

Who is it that can tell me who I am?

FOOL. Lear's shadow.

LEAR. I would learn that;⁶ for, by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false—persuaded I had 210 daughters.

FOOL. Which they will make an obedient father.

LEAR. Your name, fair gentlewoman?

GON. This admiration,⁷ sir, is much o' the savor

Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you

215

To understand my purposes aright.

As you are old and reverend, you should be wise.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disordered, so deboshed⁸ and bold,

That this our court, infected with their manners,

220

Shows⁹ like a riotous inn. Epicurism and lust

Make it more like a tavern or a brothel

Than a graced¹ palace. The shame itself doth speak

For instant remedy; be then desired

By her, that else will take the thing she begs,

225

A little to disquantity² your train;

And the remainder that shall still depend,³

To be such men as may besort your age,

And know themselves and you.

LEAR. Darkness and devils!

Saddle my horses! call my train together!

230

Degenerate bastard! I'll not trouble thee.

Yet have I left a daughter.

GON. You strike my people, and your disordered rabble

Make servants of their betters.

[Enter ALBANY.]

LEAR. Woe that too late repents!⁴—[to ALB.]

235

O, sir, are you come?

Is it your will? Speak, sir. Prepare my horses!

Ingratitude, thou marble-hearted fiend,

More hideous when thou show'st thee in a child

Than the sea-monster!

ALB. Pray, sir, be patient.

240

LEAR. [to GON.] Detested kite!⁵ thou liest:

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,

That all particulars of duty know,

And in the most exact regard support

The worships of their name. O most small fault,

245

How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!

That, like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature

6. The answer to his question. He ignores the Fool's answer.

7. Pretended astonishment, wondering who I am.

8. Debauched.

9. Appears.

1. Honorable.

2. Decrease in size.

3. Wait on you as dependents.

4. Woe to him who repents too late (a proverbial expression).

5. The carrion crow. In Shakespeare, a despicable creature symbolic of cowardice, meanness, cruelty, and death.

From the fixed place;⁶ drew from my heart all love,
 And added to the gall.⁷ O Lear, Lear, Lear!
 Beat at this gate, that let thy folly in, [striking his head] 250
 And thy dear judgment out! Go, go, my people.

ALB. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant
 Of what hath moved you.

LEAR. It may be so, my lord.

Hear, Nature, hear! dear goddess, hear!
 Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend 255
 To make this creature fruitful!
 Into her womb convey sterility!

Dry up in her the organs of increase;
 And from her derogate⁸ body never spring 260
 A babe to honor her! If she must teem,⁹

Create her child of spleen, that it may live
 And be a thwart, disnatured¹ torment to her!
 Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
 With cadent² tears fret channels in her cheeks;

Turn all her mother's pains and benefits³ 265
 To laughter and contempt, that she may feel
 How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
 To have a thankless child! Away, away! [Exit.]

ALB. Now, gods that we adore, whereof comes this?

GON. Never afflict yourself to know the cause; 270
 But let his disposition have that scope
 That dotage gives it.

[Re-enter LEAR.]

LEAR. What, fifty of my followers at a clap?
 Within a fortnight?

ALB. What's the matter, sir?

LEAR. I'll tell thee. [to GON.] Life and death! I am ashamed 275

That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus;
 That these hot tears, which break from me perforce,
 Should make thee worth them. Blasts and fogs upon thee!

The untented woundings⁴ of a father's curse
 Pierce every sense about thee! Old fond⁵ eyes, 280

Bewep this cause again, I'll pluck ye out,

And cast you, with the waters that you lose,

To temper⁶ clay. Yea, is it come to this?

Let it be so. Yet have I left a daughter,

Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable.⁷ 285

When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails

She'll flay thy wolfish visage. Thou shalt find

That I'll resume the shape which thou dost think

6. I.e., which, like a pulley or lever, moved a larger thing (my natural frame or disposition) from its regular place.

7. And put the bitter fluid, gall, there in place of love.

8. Debased.

9. Have children.

1. Perverse, unnatural.

2. Falling.

3. Maternal cares.

4. Wounds too deep to be cleaned with a "tent"—a roll of lint.

5. Foolish.

6. Moisten.

7. Willing to give comfort.

I have cast off for ever; thou shalt, I warrant thee.

[Exeunt LEAR, KENT, and ATTENDANTS.]

GON. Do you mark that, my lord?

290

ALB. I cannot be so partial, Goneril,

To the great love I bear you,—

GON. Pray you, content.⁸ What, Oswald, ho! [to the fool]

You sir, more knave than fool, after your master!

FOOL. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry and take the fool with thee. 295

A fox, when one has caught her,

And such a daughter,

Should sure to the slaughter,

If my cap would buy a halter:

So the fool follows after.⁹

[Exit.] 300

GON. This man hath had good counsel!—a hundred knights?

'Tis politic¹ and safe to let him keep

At point² a hundred knights? Yes, that on every dream,

Each buzz,³ each fancy, each complaint, dislike,

305

He may enguard his dotage with their powers,

And hold our lives in mercy.⁴ Oswald, I say!

ALB. Well, you may fear too far.

GON. Safer than trust too far:

Let me still⁵ take away the harms I fear,

Not fear still to be taken. I know his heart.

310

What he hath uttered I have writ my sister.

If she sustain him and his hundred knights,

When I have showed the unfitness,—

[Re-enter OSWALD.]

How now, Oswald!

What, have you writ that letter to my sister?

OSW. Yes, madam.

315

GON. Take you some company, and away to horse!

Inform him full of my particular fear,

And thereto add such reasons of your own

As may compact⁶ it more. Get you gone,

And hasten your return. [Exit OSWALD.] No, no, my lord, 320

This milky gentleness and course⁷ of yours

Though I condemn not, yet, under pardon,

You are much more attax'd⁸ for want of wisdom

Than praised for harmful mildness.⁹

ALB. How far your eyes may pierce I cannot tell:

325

Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

GON. Nay, then—

ALB. Well, well; the event.¹

[Exeunt.]

8. Be quiet.

9. The rhyming words were pronounced "haute" and "aute."

1. Prudent.

2. In armed readiness.

3. Rumor.

4. In jeopardy.

5. Always.

6. Confirm.

7. This mild and gentle course of action.

8. Criticized.

9. Dangerous lenity.

1. The outcome.

SCENE 5

[Enter LEAR, KENT, and FOOL.]

LEAR. Go you before to Gloucester with these letters.² Acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know than comes from her demand out of³ the letter. If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you.

KENT. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter. 5

[Exit.]
FOOL. If a man's brains were in 's heels, were't not in danger of kibes?⁴

LEAR. Ay, boy.

FOOL. Then, I prithee, be merry; thy wit shall ne'er go slipshod.⁵ 10

LEAR. Ha, ha, ha!

FOOL. Shalt see thy other daughter will use thee kindly;⁶ for though she's as like this as a crab's⁷ like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

LEAR. Why, what canst thou tell, my boy? 15

FOOL. She will taste as like this as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell why one's nose stands i' the middle on's⁸ face?

LEAR. No.

FOOL. Why, to keep one's eyes of either side's nose, that what a man cannot smell out, 'a may spy into. 20

LEAR. I did her wrong—

FOOL. Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell?

LEAR. No.

FOOL. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

LEAR. Why? 25

FOOL. Why, to put his head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.⁹

LEAR. I will forget my nature. So kind a father! Be my horses ready?

FOOL. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven 30 stars are no moe¹ than seven is a pretty reason.

LEAR. Because they are not eight?

FOOL. Yes, indeed. Thou wouldst make a good fool.

LEAR. To take 't again perforce! Monster ingratitude!

FOOL. If thou wert my fool, nuncle, I'd have thee beaten for 35 being old before thy time.

LEAR. How's that?

FOOL. Thou shouldst not have been old till thou hadst been wise.

LEAR. O, let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven! 40
Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!

2. This letter.

3. Question arising from.

4. Chilblains.

5. Wearing slippers, as would someone who was suffering from chilblains.

6. (1) Affectionately; (2) according to nature.

7. Crab apple, usually sour.

8. Of his.

9. The fool makes the cynical but common Elizabethan assumption that every married man is a cuckold.

1. More; "pretty": apt, cogent.

[Enter GENTLEMAN.]

How now! Are the horses ready?

GENT. Ready, my lord.

LEAR. Come, boy.

FOOL. She that's a maid now, and laughs at my departure,
Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter.²

45

[Exeunt.]

Act II

SCENE 1

[Enter EDMUND and CURAN meeting.]

EDM. Save thee, Curan.

CUR. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice that the Duke of Cornwall and Regan his duchess will be here with him this night.

EDM. How comes that?

5

CUR. Nay, I know not. You have heard of the news abroad—I mean the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-bussing arguments?³

EDM. Not I. Pray you, what are they?

CUR. Have you heard of no likely wars toward,⁴ 'twixt the Dukes 10 of Cornwall and Albany?

EDM. Not a word.

CUR. You may do, then, in time. Fare you well, sir.

[Exit.]

EDM. The duke be here tonight? The better! best!

This weaves itself perforce into my business.

15

My father hath set guard to take my brother;

And I have one thing, of a queasy⁵ question,

Which I must act. Briefness and fortune, work!

Brother, a word! Descend! Brother, I say!

[Enter EDGAR.]

My father watches. O sir, fly this place!

20

Intelligence is given where you are hid.

You have now the good advantage of the night.

Have you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall?

He's coming hither; now, i' the night, i' the haste,

And Regan with him: have you nothing said

25

Upon his party⁶ 'gainst the Duke of Albany?

Advise yourself.

EDG. I am sure on't, not a word.

EDM. I hear my father coming. Pardon me!

In cunning⁷ I must draw my sword upon you:

2. Addressed to the audience. An Elizabethan dirty joke: the maiden who laughs at me will lose her virginity soon unless all young men are castrated.

3. Whispered rumors.

4. Impending.

5. Requiring delicate management, but also rather nauseating.

6. On his side.

7. As a trick (to avoid suspicion of collusion).

Draw; seem to defend yourself; now quit you well.⁸ 30
 Yield! Come before my father. Light, ho, here!
 Fly, brother. Torches, torches! So, farewell. [Exit EDGAR.]
 Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion⁹

[Wounds his arm.]

Of my more fierce endeavor. I have seen drunkards
 Do more than this in sport. Father, father! 35
 Stop, stop! No help?

[Enter GLOUCESTER, and SERVANTS with torches.]

GLOU. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

EDM. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
 Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
 To stand auspicious mistress,—

GLOU. But where is he? 40

EDM. Look, sir, I bleed.

GLOU. Where is the villain, Edmund?

EDM. Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could—

GLOU. Pursue him, ho! Go after. [Exeunt some SERVANTS.] By no means what?

EDM. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship; 45

But that¹ I told him, the revenging gods

'Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend;

Spoke, with how manifold and strong a bond

The child was bound to the father; sir, in fine,

Seeing how loathly opposite² I stood 50

To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,³

With his prepared sword, he charges home

My unprovided body, lanced⁴ mine arm:

But when he saw my best alarumed spirits,

Bold in the quarrel's right, roused to the encounter, 55

Or whether gasted⁵ by the noise I made,

Full suddenly he fled.

GLOU. Let him fly far.

Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;

And found—dispatch.⁶ The noble duke my master,

My worthy arch and patron,⁷ comes to-night: 60

By his authority I will proclaim it,

That he which finds him shall deserve our thanks,

Bringing the murderous caitiff⁸ to the stake;

He that conceals him, death.

EDM. When I dissuaded him from his intent, 65

And found him pight⁹ to do it, with curst speech

I threatened to discover him. He replied,

"Thou unpossessing bastard! dost thou think

If I would stand against thee, would the reposal

Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee 70

8. Fight vigorously.

9. Persuade people.

1. When.

2. Bitterly opposed.

3. Deadly thrust.

4. Wounded.

5. Frightened.

6. I.e., when he is captured, let him be killed.

7. Chief patron.

8. Wretch.

9. Determined; "curst": angry.

Make thy words faithed?¹ No. What I should deny,—
 As this I would; ay, though thou didst produce
 My very character,²—I'd turn it all
 To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practice:
 And thou must make a dullard of the world,
 If they not thought the profits of my death
 Were very pregnant and potential spurs
 To make thee seek it."

75

GLOU.

Strong and fast'ned³ villain!

Would he deny his letter? I never got⁴ him. [Tucket within.]

Hark, the Duke's trumpets! I know not why he comes.

80

All ports⁵ I'll bar; the villain shall not 'scape;

The duke must grant me that. Besides, his picture

I will send far and near, that all the kingdom

May have due note of him; and of my land,

Loyal and natural⁶ boy, I'll work the means 85

To make thee capable.⁷

[Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and ATTENDANTS.]

CORN. How now, my noble friend! Since I came hither,

(Which I can call but now) I have heard strange news.

REG. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short

Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?

90

GLOU. O, madam, my old heart is cracked, is cracked!

REG. What, did my father's godson seek your life?

He whom my father named? Your Edgar?

GLOU. O, lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

REG. Was he not companion with the riotous knights

95

That tend upon my father?

GLOU. I know not, madam. 'Tis too bad, too bad!

EDM. Yes, madam, he was of that consórt.⁸

REG. No marvel, then, though he were ill affected.⁹

'Tis they have put him on¹ the old man's death,

100

To have th' expense and waste of his revénues.

I have this present evening from my sister

Been well informed of them; and with such cautions

That if they come to sojourn at my house,

I'll not be there.

CORN. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.

105

Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father

A child-like² office.

EDM. 'Twas my duty, sir.

GLOU. He did bewray³ his practice, and received

This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

CORN. Is he pursued?

GLOU. Ay, my good lord.

110

1. Believed.

2. Handwriting.

3. Hardened.

4. Begot.

5. Seaports, means of escape.

6. (1) Showing natural affection; (2) illegitimate.

7. I.e., of inheriting.

8. Gang.

9. Disloyal.

1. Incited him to procure.

2. Filial.

3. Reveal.

CORN. If he be taken, he shall never more
 Be feared of doing harm.⁴ Make your own purpose,
 How in my strength you please. For you, Edmund,
 Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
 So much commend itself, you shall be ours. 115
 Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;
 You we first seize on.

EDM. I shall serve you, sir,
 Truly, however else.

GLOU. For him I thank your grace.

CORN. You know not why we came to visit you,—

REG. Thus out of season, threading⁵ dark-eyed night. 120

Occasions, noble Gloucester, of some poise,⁶

Wherein we must have use of your advice:

Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,

Of differences, which I least thought of fit

To answer from our home. The several messengers 125

From hence attend dispatch.⁷ Our good old friend,

Lay comforts to your bosom, and bestow

Your needful counsel to our business,

Which craves the instant use.⁸

GLOU. I serve you, madam.

Your graces are right welcome. [Exeunt.] 130

SCENE 2

[Enter KENT and OSWALD, severally.]

OSW. Good dawning to thee, friend. Art of this house?

KENT. Ay.

OSW. Where may we set our horses?

KENT. I' the mire.

OSW. Prithee, if thou lovest me, tell me. 5

KENT. I love thee not.

OSW. Why, then, I care not for thee.

KENT. If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold,⁹ I would make thee care for me.

OSW. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not. 10

KENT. Fellow, I know thee.

OSW. What dost thou know me for?

KENT. A knave; a rascal; an eater of broken meats¹; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, hundred-pound, filthy, worsted-stockng knave;² a lily-livered, action-taking³ knave; a 15 whoreson, glass-gazing, superserviceable, finical rogue; one-

4. Be a public danger.

5. Making our way through.

6. Weight, importance.

7. Are waiting to be sent off.

8. Must be done immediately.

9. An obscure expression, possibly meaning "between my teeth."

1. One who lives on scraps.

2. Servants were provided with three suits a year; Oswald's total resources would not be over a hundred pounds; he wears only worsted stockings (gentlemen wore silk).

3. One who goes to law instead of fighting; a coward.

trunk-inheriting⁴ slave; one that wouldst be a bawd in way of good service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pandar, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch; one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deniest the least syllable of thy addition.⁵ 20

OSW. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one that is neither known of thee nor knows thee!

KENT. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me! Is it two days ago since I tripped up thy heels, and beat thee before the king? Draw, you rogue! For, though it be night, yet the moon shines. I'll make a sop of the moonshine⁶ of you. Draw, you whoreson cullionly barber-monger, draw!⁷ 25
[Drawing his sword.]

OSW. Away! I have nothing to do with thee.

KENT. Draw, you rascal! You come with letters against the king, and take Vanity the puppet's⁸ part against the royalty of her father. Draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado⁹ your shanks! Draw, you rascal! Come your ways! 30

OSW. Help, ho! murther! help!

KENT. Strike, you slave! Stand, rogue! Stand, you neat slave! Strike! 35
[Beating him.]

OSW. Help, ho! murther! murther!

[Enter EDMUND with his rapier drawn, CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOUCESTER, and SERVANTS.]

EDM. How now! What's the matter? [Parts them.]

KENT. With you, goodman boy, an you please! Come, I'll flesh¹ ye! Come on, young master! 40

GLOU. Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?

CORN. Keep peace, upon your lives!

He dies that strikes again. What is the matter?

REG. The messengers from our sister and the king.

CORN. What is your difference? Speak. 45

OSW. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

KENT. No marvel, you have so bestirred your valor. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in thee; a tailor made thee.²

CORN. Thou art a strange fellow. A tailor make a man?

KENT. Ay, a tailor, sir. A stone-cutter or a painter could not have made him so ill, though he had been but two hours at the trade. 50

CORN. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

OSW. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spared at suit of³ his gray beard — 55

4. One whose entire possessions would fit in one trunk.

5. Titles.

6. Full of holes, so the moon will shine through.

7. A base fellow who hangs around barber shops.

8. I.e., Goneril. Vanity was a character in the morality plays, which were often performed by puppets.

9. Score, cut cross-wise.

1. Initiate.

2. You are so cowardly that nature denies making you; a tailor made you (alluding to the proverb that it takes nine tailors to make a man).

3. Because of a plea by.

KENT. Thou whoreson zed! thou unnecessarry letter!⁴ My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted⁵ villain into mortar, and daub the walls of a jakes⁶ with him. Spare my gray beard, you wagtail?⁷

CORN. Peace, sirrah!

60

You beastly knave, know you no reverence?

KENT. Yes, sir, but anger hath a privilege.

CORN. Why art thou angry?

KENT. That such a slave as this should wear a sword,⁸

Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,

65

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords a-twain

Which are too intrinse t' unloose;⁹ smooth every passion

That in the natures of their lords rebel;

Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;

Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks¹

70

With every gale and vary² of their masters,

Knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

A plague upon your epileptic visage!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain

75

I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot.³

CORN. What, art thou mad, old fellow?

GLOU. How fell you out? say that.

KENT. No contraries hold more antipathy

Than I and such a knave.

80

CORN. Why dost thou call him knave? What's his offense?

KENT. His countenance likes⁴ me not.

CORN. No more, perchance, does mine, nor his, nor hers.

KENT. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain.

I have seen better faces in my time

85

Than stands on any shoulder that I see

Before me at this instant.

CORN. This is some fellow,

Who, having been praised for bluntness, doth affect

A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb

Quite from his nature.⁵ He cannot flatter, he,

90

An honest mind and plain, he must speak truth!

An they will take it, so; if not, he's plain.

These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbor more craft⁶ and more corrupter ends

4. Zed, still the English name for the letter z, is unnecessary because its sound can be expressed by s.

5. Coarse, unsifted.

6. Privy.

7. A bird that bobs its head up and down constantly.

8. Swords were supposed to be worn only by gentlemen, and Oswald is a mere parasitic servant.

9. Bite in two the holy cords of affection (between daughter and father, for instance), which are too intricately tied to be undone in any natural way. "Smooth": flatter.

1. Deny, affirm, and turn with the wind, as a halcyon or kingfisher was supposed to when hung up by the neck.

2. Varying gale.

3. Salisbury (Sarum) Plain had flocks of geese on it. Camelot was the legendary castle of King Arthur, sometimes located at Winchester.

4. Pleases.

5. Distorts the nature of plain speech.

6. Deceit.

- Than twenty silly ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely.⁷ 95
- KENT. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
Under the allowance of your great aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
On flickering Phoebus' front,⁸
- CORN. What mean'st by this? 100
- KENT. To go out of my dialect, which you discommend so much.
I know, sir, I am no flatterer. He that beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which for my part I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to 't.
- CORN. What was the offense you gave him? 105
- OSW. I never gave him any:
It pleased the king his master very late
To strike at me, upon his misconstruction.⁹
When he, conjunct,¹ and flattering his displeasure,
Tripped me behind; being down, insulted, railed, 110
And put upon him such a deal of man.
That worthied him, got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subdued;²
And, in the fleshment³ of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here again.
- KENT. None of these rogues and cowards 115
But Ajax is their fool.⁴
- CORN. Fetch forth the stocks!
You stubborn miscreant knave, you reverent braggart,
We'll teach you—
- KENT. Sir, I am too old to learn.
Call not your stocks for me. I serve the king; 120
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.
- CORN. Fetch forth the stocks! As I have life and honor, 125
There shall he sit till noon.
- REG. Till noon? Till night, my lord, and all night too!
- KENT. Why, madam, if I werc your father's dog,
You should not use me so.
- REG. Sir, being his knave, I will.
- CORN. This is a fellow of the self-same color 130
Our sister speaks of. Come, bring away the stocks!
[Stocks brought out.]
- CLOW. Let me beseech your grace not to do so.
His fault is much, and the good king his master
7. Than twenty obsequious servants who precisely adopt the manners prescribed for them.
8. Kent, mimicking the flattery of servants like Oswald, addresses Cornwall as if he were a planet, comparable to the sun.
9. Misunderstanding.
1. Taking the king's side.
2. Made himself out to be a hero, won honor for himself ... for attacking someone who wouldn't fight.
3. Furious excitement.
4. In Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida the cowardly, malicious Thersites treats the plain-spoken warrior Ajax as a fool.

Will check⁵ him for't. Your purposed low correction
 Is such as basest and contemned'st wretches 135
 For pilferings and most common trespasses
 Are punished with: the king must take it ill,
 That he, so slightly valued in his messenger,
 Should have him thus restrained.

CORN. I'll answer⁶ that.

REG. My sister may receive it much more worse, 140
 To have her gentleman abused, assaulted,
 For following her affairs. Put in his legs.

[KENT is put in the stocks.]

Come, my good lord, away.

[Exeunt all but GLOUCESTER and KENT.]

GLOU. I am sorry for thee, friend: 'tis the duke's pleasure,
 Whose disposition, all the world well knows, 145
 Will not be rubbed nor stopped: I'll entreat for thee.

KENT. Pray, do not, sir. I have watched⁷ and traveled hard;
 Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels:

Give you good morrow!

GLOU. The duke's to blame in this; 't will be ill-taken. [Exit.] 150

KENT. Good king, that must approve the common saw,⁸

Thou out of heaven's benediction comest

To the warm sun!

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,⁹ 155

That by thy comfortable beams I may

Peruse this letter! Nothing almost sees miracles

But misery.¹ I know 'tis from Cordelia,

Who hath most fortunately been informed

Of my obscuréd course; [reads] "and shall find time 160

From this enormous state, seeking to give

Losses their remedies." All weary and o'er-watched,

Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold

This shameful lodging.

Fortune, good night; smile once more; turn thy wheel!² 165

[Sleeps.]

SCENE 3

[Enter EDGAR.]

EDG. I heard myself proclaimed;

And by the happy hollow of a tree

Escaped the hunt. No port is free; no place,

That guard, and most unusual vigilance,

Does not attend my taking. Whiles I may 'scape, 5

5. Rebuke.

6. Be answerable for.

7. Gone without sleep.

8. Confirm the common saying.

9. I.e., the sun.

1. For those in misery, any relief seems almost miraculous.

2. Bring good fortune in place of the present bad. The goddess Fortuna was often portrayed turning a wheel.

I will preserve myself; and am bethought
 To take the basest and most poorest shape
 That ever penury, in contempt of man,
 Brought near to beast.³ My face I'll grime with filth,
 Blanket my loins, elf⁴ all my hair in knots,
 And with presented nakedness out-face
 The winds and persecutions of the sky.
 The country gives me proof⁵ and precedent
 Of Bedlam beggars,⁶ who, with roaring voices,
 Strike in their numbed and mortified bare arms
 Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
 And with this horrible object,⁷ from low farms,
 Poor pelting⁸ villages, sheep-cotes, and mills,
 Sometime with lunatic bans,⁹ sometime with prayers,
 Enforce their charity. Poor Turlygod! poor Tom!¹
 That's something yet! Edgar I nothing am. [Exit.]

SCENE 4

[Enter LEAR, FOOL, and GENTLEMAN.]

LEAR. 'Tis strange that they should so depart from home,
 And not send back my messenger.

GENT. As I learned,
 The night before there was no purpose in them
 Of this remove.²

KENT. Hail to thee, noble master!

LEAR. Ha!

Makest thou this shame thy pastime?³

KENT.

No, my lord.

FOOL. Ha, ha! he wears cruel garters.⁴ Horses are tied by the heads, dogs and bears by the neck, monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs. When a man's over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.⁵

LEAR. What's he that hath so much thy place mistook
 To set thee here?

KENT. It is both he and she;
 Your son and daughter.

LEAR. No.

KENT. Yes.

LEAR. No, I say.

KENT. I say, yea.

LEAR. No, no, they would not!

KENT. Yes, yes, they have!

3. I have got the idea of taking the basest and poorest shape that poverty ever brought a man to, making him like a beast.

4. Tangle.

5. Example.

6. See note 8, p. 899, above.

7. Spectacle.

8. Paltry.

9. Curses.

1. Names assumed by beggars.

2. Change of residence.

3. Are you in this disgraceful situation as a joke?

4. A pun on "crewe," thin worsted yarn, which was used for garters.

5. Stockings.

LEAR. By Jupiter, I swear, no!

20

KENT. By Juno, I swear, ay!

LEAR. They durst not do 't;

They would not, could not do 't. 'Tis worse than murder,
To do upon respect⁶ such violent outrage.

Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way
Thou mightst deserve, or they impose, this usage,
Coming from us.

25

KENT. My lord, when at their home

I did commend your highness' letters to them,
Ere I was risen from the place that showed
My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post,⁷
Stewed in his haste, half breathless, panting forth
From Goneril his mistress, salutations;

30

Delivered letters, spite of intermission,
Which presently they read; on whose contents,⁸
They summoned up their meiny, straight took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend

35

The leisure of their answer, gave me cold looks,
And meeting here the other messenger,
Whose welcome, I perceived, had poisoned mine,—

Being the very fellow that of late
Displayed so saucily against your highness,—
Having more man than wit about me, drew.

40

He raised the house with loud and coward cries.
Your son and daughter found this trespass worth
The shame which here it suffers.

FOOL. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild-geese fly that way.⁹

45

Fathers that wear rags
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear bags¹
Shall see their children kind.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key² to the poor.

50

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolors for thy daughters as thou canst tell in a year.³

LEAR. O, how this mother swells up toward my heart!

Hysterica passio; down, thou climbing sorrow,
Thy element's below!⁴ Where is this daughter?

55

KENT. With the earl, sir, here within.

LEAR. Follow me not; stay here.

[Exit.]

GENT. Made you no more offenses but what you speak of?

KENT. None. How chance the king comes with so small a train?

6. (1) Upon the respect due a King's messenger; (2) deliberately.

7. Sweating messenger.

8. Getting the message; "meiny": household.

9. A pseudo-proverb meaning things are still in a bad way.

1. Hang on to the moneybags.

2. Opens the door.

3. Punning on dolors (sorrows) and dollars (coins) and on tell (narrate) and tell (count).

4. The mother, or hysterica passio, was a hysteria supposedly marked by a rising of wind from the belly to the heart and finally to the throat.

FOOL. An thou hadst been set i' the stocks for that question, 60 thou hadst well deserved it.

KENT. Why, fool?

FOOL. We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no laboring i' the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes but blind men, and there's not a nose among twenty 65 but can smell him that's stinking. Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again. I would have none but knaves follow it, since 70 a fool gives it.

That sir which serves and seeks for gain,

And follows but for form,

Will pack⁵ when it begins to rain,

And leave thee in the storm. 75

But I will tarry; the fool will stay,

And let the wise man fly.

The knave turns fool that runs away;

The fool no knave, perdy.⁶

KENT. Where learned you this, fool? 80

FOOL. Not i' the stocks, fool.

[Re-enter LEAR, with GLOUCESTER.]

LEAR. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? they are weary?

They have traveled all the night? Mere fetches;⁷

The images of revolt and flying off.

Fetch me a better answer.

GLOU. My dear lord, 85

You know the fiery quality of the duke;

How unremoveable and fixed he is

In his own course.

LEAR. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!

Fiery? what quality? Why, Gloucester, Gloucester, 90

I'd speak with the Duke of Cornwall and his wife.

GLOU. Well, my good lord, I have informed them so.

LEAR. Informed them! Dost thou understand me, man?

GLOU. Ay, my good lord.

LEAR. The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father 95

Would with his daughter speak, commands her service.

Are they informed of this? My breath and blood!

Fiery? the fiery duke? Tell the hot duke that—

No, but not yet. May be he is not well.

Infirmity doth still neglect all office⁸ 100

Whereto our health is bound; we are not ourselves

When nature, being oppressed, commands the mind

To suffer with the body. I'll forbear;

And am fallen out with my more headier will,⁹

To take¹ the indisposed and sickly fit 105

5. Be off.

6. Assuredly (per Dieu).

7. Tricks, ruses.

8. Duty.

9. Am at odds with my impetuous will.

1. For taking.

For the sound man. Death on my state!² Wherefore

[looking on KENT]

Should he sit here? This act persuades me
That this remotion of the duke and her
Is practice only.³ Give me my servant forth.
Go tell the duke and 's wife I'd speak with them,
Now, presently!⁴ Bid them come forth and hear me,
Or at their chamber-door I'll beat the drum
Till it cry sleep to death.⁵

110

GLOU. I would have all well betwixt you.

[Exit.]

LEAR. O me, my heart, my rising heart! but, down!

115

FOOL. Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney did to the eels when she put 'em i' the paste⁶ alive; she knapped 'em o' the coxcombs with a stick, and cried "Down, wantons, down!" 'Twas her brother that, in pure kindness to his horse, buttered his hay.

[Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOUCESTER, and SERVANTS.]

LEAR. Good morrow to you both.

CORN.

Hail to your grace!

120

[KENT is set at liberty.]

REG. I am glad to see your highness.

LEAR. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason

I have to think so. If thou shouldst not be glad,

I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,

Sepulchring an adultress. [To KENT.] O, are you free?

125

Some other time for that. Belovéd Regan,

Thy sister's naught. O Regan, she hath tied

Sharp-toothed unkindness, like a vulture, here!⁷

[Points to his heart.]

I can scarce speak to thee; thou'lt not believe

With how depraved a quality—O Regan!

130

REG. I pray you, sir, take patience. I have hope

You less know how to value her desert

Than she to scant⁸ her duty.

LEAR.

Say, how is that?

REG. I cannot think my sister in the least

Would fail her obligation. If, sir, perchance

135

She have restrained the riots of your followers,

'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,

As clears her from all blame.

LEAR. My curses on her!

REG.

O, sir, you are old;

140

Nature in you stands on the very verge

Of her confine. You should be ruled and led

By some discretion,⁹ that discerns your state

Better than you yourself. Therefore, I pray you,

That to our sister you do make return;

2. Royal power.

3. This removal of the Duke and Regan is a mere trick.

4. Immediately.

5. Until its sound kills sleep.

6. Meat pie.

7. Lear calls himself a kind of Prometheus, who suffered the punishment of having an eagle feed on his liver.

8. Be neglectful of.

9. I.e., some discreet person.

Say you have wronged her, sir.

LEAR. Ask her forgiveness? 145

Do you but mark how this becomes the house:¹

"Dear daughter, I confess that I am old; [kneeling]

Age is unnecessary. On my knees I beg

That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food."

REG. Good sir, no more! These are unsightly tricks. 150

Return you to my sister.

LEAR. [Rising.] Never, Regan!

She hath abated² me of half my train;

Looked black upon me; struck me with her tongue

Most serpent-like, upon the very heart.

All the stored vengeance of heaven fall

On her ingrateful top! Strike her young bones,³

You taking⁴ airs, with lameness!

155

CORN. Fie, sir, fie!

LEAR. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames

Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty,

You fen-sucked fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,

To fall and blast her pride!

160

REG. O the blest gods! so will you wish on me,

When the rash mood is on.

LEAR. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse.

Thy tender-hefted⁵ nature shall not give

Thee o'er to harshness. Her eyes are fierce; but thine

Do comfort and not burn. 'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,

To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,⁶

And in conclusion to oppose the bolt

Against my coming in. Thou better know'st

The offices⁷ of nature, bond of childhood,

Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude;

Thy half o' the kingdom hast thou not forgot,

Wherein I thee endowed.

170

REG. Good sir, to the purpose. 175

LEAR. Who put my man i' the stocks? [Tucket within.]

CORN. What trumpet's that?

REG. I know't, my sister's. This approves⁸ her letter,

That she would soon be here.

[Enter OSWALD.]

Is your lady come?

LEAR. This is a slave, whose easy-borrowed pride

Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.

Out, varlet, from my sight!

180

CORN. What means your grace?

1. Our family, the royal family of Britain.

2. Deprived.

3. Unborn child (an expression from the old King Lear).

4. Infecting.

5. Gentle.

6. Allowances.

7. Duties.

8. Confirms.

- LEAR. Who stocked my servant? Regan, I have good hope Thou didst not know on 't. [Enter GONERIL.] Who comes here? O heavens,
If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old, 185
Make it your cause! Send down, and take my part!
[To GON.] Art not ashamed to look upon this beard?
O Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?
GON. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I offended?
All's not offense that indiscretion finds 190
And dotage terms so.⁹
LEAR. O sides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold? How came my man i' the stocks?
CORN. I set him there, sir; but his own disorders
Deserved much less advancement¹
LEAR. You! did you?
REG. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so. 195
If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me.
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment. 200
LEAR. Return to her, and fifty men dismissed?
No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage against the enmity o' the air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl,—
Necessity's sharp pinch! Return with her? 205
Why, the hot-blooded² France, that dowerless took Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg
To keep base life afoot. Return with her?
Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter³ 210
To this detested groom. [Pointing at OSWALD.]
GON. At your choice, sir.
LEAR. I prithee, daughter, do not make me mad.
I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell.
We'll no more meet, no more see one another.
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter; 215
Or rather a disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine. Thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle,⁴
In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee;
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it. 220
I do not bid the Thunder-bearer⁵ shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove.
Mend when thou canst; be better at thy leisure.

9. Not everything is an offense that poor judgment finds so and senility calls so.

1. His own misconduct deserved less promotion.

2. Passionate.

3. Packhorse.

4. Swollen tumor.

5. I.e., Jove.

I can be patient, I can stay with Regan,
I and my hundred knights.

REG. Not altogether so.

225

I looked not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome. Give ear, sir, to my sister;
For those that mingle reason with your passion
Must be content to think you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.

LEAR. Is this well spoken?

230

REG. I dare avouch it, sir. What, fifty followers?

Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many, sith that⁶ both charge and danger
Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house,
Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity? 'T is hard; almost impossible.

235

CON. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine?

REG. Why not, my lord? If then they chanced to slack you,
We could control them. If you will come to me,—
For now I spy a danger,—I entreat you
To bring but five-and-twenty. To no more
Will I give place or notice.

240

LEAR. I gave you all—

REG. And in good time you gave it.

LEAR. Made you my guardians, my depositaries;

245

But kept a reservation⁷ to be followed
With such a number. What, must I come to you
With five-and-twenty, Regan? Said you so?

REG. And speak't again, my lord; no more with me.

LEAR. Those wicked creatures yet do look well-favored,
When others are more wicked; not being the worst
Stands in some rank of praise. [To CON.] I'll go with thee:
Thy fifty yet doth double five-and-twenty,
And thou art twice her love.

250

CON. Hear me, my lord.

What need you five-and-twenty, ten, or five,
To follow in a house where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

255

REG. What need one?

LEAR. O, reason not the need! Our basest beggars

Are in the poorest thing superfluous.⁸
Allow not nature more than nature needs,
Man's life's as cheap as beast's. Thou art a lady;
If only to go warm were gorgeous,
Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,
Which scarcely keeps thee warm.⁹ But, for true need,— 260

6. Since.

7. Made you my stewardesses and trustees, but kept a reserve clause.

8. Our poorest beggars, if they own anything at all, have more than they need.

9. I.e., if dressing warmly is to be gorgeous, you are both more and less than that; for the gorgeous lady's clothes you wear are too scanty to keep you warm.

You heavens, give me that patience, patience I need! 265
 You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
 As full of grief as age; wretched in both!
 If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
 Against their father, fool me not so much¹
 To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger, 270
 And let not women's weapons, water-drops,
 Stain my man's cheeks! No, you unnatural hags,
 I will have such revenges on you both,
 That all the world shall—I will do such things,—
 What they are, yet I know not; but they shall be 275
 The terrors of the earth! You think I'll weep;
 No, I'll not weep.
 I have full cause of weeping, but this heart
 Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws²
 Or ere I'll weep. O fool, I shall go mad! 280

[Exeunt LEAR, GLOUCESTER, KENT, and FOOL.
Storm and tempest.]

CORN. Let us withdraw; 't will be a storm.

REG. This house is little; the old man and his people
 Cannot be well bestowed.

CON. 'Tis his own blame; hath put himself from rest,³
 And must needs taste his folly. 285

REG. For his particular,⁴ I'll receive him gladly,
 But not one follower.

CON. So am I purposed.

Where is my lord of Gloucester?

CORN. Followed the old man forth. He is returned.

[Re-enter GLOUCESTER.]

GLOU. The king is in high rage.

CORN. Whither is he going? 290

GLOU. He calls to horse, but will I know not whither.

CORN. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads himself.

CON. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

GLOU. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak winds
 Do sorely ruffle.⁵ For many miles about 295
 There's scarce a bush.⁶

REG. O, sir, to willful men,

The injuries that they themselves procure

Must be their schoolmasters. Shut up your doors.

He is attended with a desperate train;⁷

And what they may incense him to, being apt 300
 To have his ear abused, wisdom bids fear.

CORN. Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild night.

My Regan counsels well. Come out o' the storm. [Exeunt.]

1. Don't make me such a fool as.

2. Fragments.

3. He has separated himself from peace of mind.

4. As for himself alone.

5. Violently rage.

6. The Quarto reads "not a bush." The contradiction between either of these statements and Edgar's hollow tree in II.iii.2, has often been noticed.

7. There is no other indication that in these scenes Lear is accompanied by "a desperate train" (his knights).

Act III

SCENE 1

[Storm still. Enter KENT and a GENTLEMAN, at several doors.]

KENT. Who's there, besides foul weather?

GENT. One minded like the weather, most unquietly.

KENT. I know you. Where's the king?

GENT. Contending with the fretful elements;

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,

Or swell the curléd waters 'bove the main,⁸

That things might change or cease; tears his white hair,

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,

Catch in their fury, and make nothing of;⁹

Strives in his little world of man¹ to out-scom

The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,²

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf

Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,

And bids what will take all.³

KENT. But who is with him?

GENT. None but the fool, who labors to out-jest

His heart-struck injuries.⁴

KENT. Sir, I do know you;

And dare, upon the warrant of my note,

Commend a dear thing to you.⁵ There is division,

Although as yet the face of it be covered

With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall;

Who have—as who have not, that their great stars

Throned and set high?—servants, who seem no less,

Which are to France the spies and speculations

Intelligent of our state.⁶ What hath been seen,

Either in snuffs and packings⁷ of the dukes,

Or the hard rein which both of them have borne

Against the old kind king; or something deeper,

Whereof perchance these are but furnishings;⁸

But, true it is, from France there comes a power

Into this scattered kingdom; who already,

Wise in our negligence, have secret feet

In some of our best ports, and are at point⁹

To show their open banner. Now to you:

8. Land; "things": everything.

9. Show no respect for (opposite of "make much of").

1. I.e., microcosm.

2. The bear, sucked dry by its cubs and ravenously hungry, would nevertheless lie in its lair instead of seeking food.

3. A gambler's cry on the last throw of the dice—a cry of desperation.

4. To counter with his jests the injuries which have struck Lear to the heart.

5. Dare, on the basis of my knowledge of you, to entrust an important matter to you.

6. Who are France's spies and intelligence agents in our country.

7. Quarrels and plots against each other.

8. Trimmings.

9. Who already, taking advantage of our negligence, have gained a secret foothold and are ready.

If on my credit you dare build so far 35
 To make your speed to Dover, you shall find
 Some that will thank you, making just report
 Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow
 The king hath cause to plain.¹

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding; 40
 And, from some knowledge and assurance,² offer
 This office to you.

GENT. I will talk further with you.

KENT. No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more
 Than my out-wall, open this purse, and take 45
 What it contains. If you shall see Cordelia,—
 As fear not but you shall,—show her this ring,
 And she will tell you who your fellow is
 That yet you do not know. Fie on this storm!
 I will go seek the king. 50

GENT. Give me your hand. Have you no more to say?

KENT. Few words, but, to effect,³ more than all yet;
 That, when we have found the king,—in which your pain
 That way, I'll this,⁴—he that first lights on him
 Holla the other. [Exeunt severally.] 55

SCENE 2

Climax

[Enter LEAR and FOOL. Storm still.]

LEAR. Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks!⁵ rage! blow!
 You cataracts and hurricanoes,⁶ spout
 Till you have drenched our steeples, drowned the cocks!⁷
 You sulphurous and thought-executing fires,⁸
 Vaunt-couriers to oak-cleaving thunderbolts, 5
 Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,
 Smite flat the thick rotundity o' the world!
 Crack Nature's molds, all germens spill at once,⁹
 That make ingrateful man!

FOOL. O nuncle, court holy-water¹ in a dry house is better than 10 this rain-water out o' door. Good nuncle, in, and ask thy daughters' blessing! Here's a night pities neither wise man nor fool.

LEAR. Rumble thy bellyful! Spit, fire! spout, rain!
 Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters:
 I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;² 15

1. For making accurate report of the unnatural and maddening sorrow that the king can justifiably complain of.

2. Trustworthy information.

3. In importance.

4. In which troublesome task, you go that way, I'll go this.

5. In contemporary maps, winds were represented by faces with their cheeks puffed out, blowing.

6. Both words mean "waterspouts."

7. Weathercocks.

8. Lightning flashes which work ("execute") faster than thought.

9. Crack the molds Nature uses and destroy the seeds that make the ungrateful creature, man.

1. I.e., flattery.

2. I do not charge you elements with unnaturalness.

I never gave you kingdom, called you children,
 You owe me no subscription.³ Then let fall
 Your horrible pleasure. Here I stand, your slave,
 A poor, infirm, weak, and despised old man.
 But yet I call you servile ministers,⁴
 That have with two pernicious daughters joined
 Your high-engendered battles⁵ 'gainst a head
 So old and white as this. O! O! 't is foul!

FOOL. He that has a house to put 's head in has a good headpiece,⁶

The cod-piece that will house
 Before the head has any,
 The head and he shall louse;
 So beggars marry many.⁷
 The man that makes his toe
 What he his heart should make
 Shall of a corn cry woe,
 And turn his sleep to wake.⁸

For there was never yet fair woman but she made mouths in a glass.⁹

LEAR. No, I will be the pattern of all patience; I will say nothing.

[Enter KENT.]

KENT. Who's there?

FOOL. Marry, here 's grace and a cod-piece;¹ that's a wise man and a fool.

KENT. Alas, sir, are you here? things that love night
 Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies
 Gallow the very wanderers of the dark,²
 And make them keep their caves. Since I was man,
 Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
 Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Man's nature cannot carry
 The affliction nor the fear.

LEAR. Let the great gods,
 That keep this dreadful pother o'er our heads,
 Find out their enemies now.³ Tremble, thou wretch,
 That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
 Unwhipped of justice. Hide thee, thou bloody hand;
 Thou perjured, and thou simular of virtue
 That are incestuous.⁴ Caitiff, to pieces shake,

3. Submission, obedience.

4. Slavish agents.

5. Your heaven-born battalions.

6. (1) Helmet; (2) skull.

7. Codpiece: penis (from the piece of clothing covering it). "The man that gets children before he has a house will surely become a lousy vagabond. Thus it is that many beggars get married" (Kittredge's note).

8. The man who exchanges the place of his toe and his heart will get a corn on his heart that will hurt so he can't sleep at night.

9. A quasi-proverbial saying about the vanity of women. "Made mouths": made faces.

1. Grace refers to a noble person; the codpiece was prominent in a clown's costume.

2. Terrify the wild beasts.

3. By the terror inspired in guilty people.

4. You perjurer, and you incestuous man who pretends to be virtuous.

That under covert and convenient seeming
 Hast practiced on man's life.⁵ Close pent-up guilts 55
 Rive your concealing continents, and cry
 These dreadful summoners grace.⁶ I am a man
 More sinned against than sinning.

KENT. Alack, bare-headed?
 Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel;
 Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest. 60
 Repose you there, while I to this hard house—
 More harder than the stones whereof 'tis raised,
 Which even but now, demanding after you,
 Denied me to come in—return, and force
 Their scantied courtesy.

LEAR. My wits begin to turn. 65
 Come on, my boy. How dost, my boy? Art cold?
 I am cold myself. Where is this straw, my fellow?
 The art of our necessities is strange,
 That can make vile things precious.⁷ Come, your hovel.
 Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart 70
 That's sorry yet for thee.

FOOL. [singing]
 He that has and a little tiny wit,—
 With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,—
 Must make content with his fortunes fit,
 Though the rain it raineth every day.⁸ 75

LEAR. True, boy. Come, bring us to this hovel.
 [Exeunt LEAR and KENT.]

FOOL. This is a brave night to cool a courtesan.⁹
 I'll speak a prophecy ere I go:
 When priests are more in word than matter;
 When brewers mar their malt with water; 80
 When nobles are their tailors' tutors;
 No heretics burned, but wenches' suitors;
 When every case in law is right;
 No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;
 When slanders do not live in tongues; 85
 Nor cutpurses come not to throngs;
 When usurers tell their gold i' the field,
 And bawds and whores do churches build;
 Then shall the realm of Albion
 Come to great confusion. 90
 Then comes the time, who lives to see 't,

5. Wretch, who in clever and plausible deception has plotted a murder.

6. Carefully hidden crimes, burst out of the covering that hides you and beg mercy from these dreadful ministers of justice.

7. Necessity has a kind of strange magic which can make worthless things precious.

8. An adaptation of one verse of a song sung by Feste, the fool, at the end of Shakespeare's Twelfth Night. Lear's Fool alters it to emphasize the lack of wit of himself and his master.

9. A fine night to cool the lust of a courtesan.

That going shall be used with feet.
 This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time.¹
 [Exit.]

SCENE 3

[Enter GLOUCESTER and EDMUND.]

GLOU. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing.²
 When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

EDM. Most savage and unnatural!

GLOU. Go to;³ say you nothing. There's a division betwixt the dukes, and a worse matter than that. I have received a letter this night; 'tis dangerous to be spoken; I have locked the letter in my closet.⁴ These injuries the king now bears will be re- 10 venged home; there's part of a power already footed; we must incline to the king.⁵ I will seek him, and privily relieve him.
 Go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived if he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. Though I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king 15 my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund; pray you, be careful. [Exit.]

EDM. This courtesy, forbid thee,⁶ shall the duke
 Instantly know, and of that letter too.

This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me⁷

That which my father loses—no less than all.

The younger rises when the old doth fall.

[Exit.]

SCENE 4

[Enter LEAR, KENT, and FOOL.]

KENT. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord, enter:
 The tyranny of the open night's⁸ too rough
 For nature to endure.

[Storm still.]

LEAR. Let me alone.

KENT. Good my lord, enter here.

LEAR.

Wilt break my heart?

1. The "when . . . then" formula was a traditional medieval satiric mode in which the poet ticked off one abuse after another: when all are remedied, all will be well. One of the old "whens," erroneously thought to be by Chaucer, was called Merlin's Prophecy; the Fool, in identifying it, emphasizes the antiquity of the Lear setting.
 2. I.e., unnatural behavior of Regan and Cornwall.

3. Enough.

4. Private room.

5. These injuries the king suffers will be revenged to the full; part of an army is already landed; we must be on the side of the king.

6. Forbidden to you.

7. This deserves reward and must get for me.

8. Night in the open.

KENT. I had rather break mine own. Good my lord, enter.

LEAR. Thou think'st 'tis much that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin. So 'tis to thee;

But where the greater malady is fixed,⁹

The lesser is scarce felt. Thou'dst shun a bear;

10

But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea,

Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind's free,

The body's delicate.¹ The tempest in my mind

Doth from my senses take all feeling else

Save what beats there. Filial ingratitude!

15

Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand

For lifting food to 't? But I will punish home.²

No, I will weep no more. In such a night

To shut me out! Pour on; I will endure.

In such a night as this! O Regan, Goneril!

20

Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave all,—

O, that way madness lies; let me shun that;

No more of that.

KENT. Good my lord, enter here.

LEAR. Prithee, go in thyself; seek thine own ease:

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder

25

On things would hurt me more. But I'll go in.

[To the FOOL.] In, boy; go first. You houseless poverty,³—

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.

[FOOL goes in.]

Poor naked wretches, whereso'er you are,

That bide⁴ the pelting of this pitiless storm,

30

How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,

Your looped and windowed raggedness,⁵ defend you

From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en

Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp;

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,

35

That thou mayst shake the superflux to them,

And show the heavens more just.⁶

EDG. [within] Fathom and half, fathom and half!⁷

Poor Tom!

[The FOOL runs out from the hovel.]

FOOL. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit.

40

Help me, help me!

KENT. Give me thy hand. Who's there?

FOOL. A spirit, a spirit! He says his name's poor Tom.

KENT. What are thou that dost grumble there i' the straw? Come forth.

45

9. Chronic, incurable.

1. When the mind is at ease, the body is sensitive to physical pain.

2. Thoroughly.

3. The Fool is addressed.

4. Endure.

5. How shall your uncovered heads and unfed bodies, your tattered rags full of holes, like windows in a house.

6. Shake off the surplus you enjoy to the poor and show that the heavens distribute some kind of justice.

7. The rains are so heavy that Poor Tom pretends they are at sea and he is taking soundings.

[Enter EDGAR disguised as a madman.]

EDG. Away! the foul fiend follows me!

Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind.

Humh! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.⁸

LEAR. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? And art thou come to this? 50

EDG. Who gives any thing to poor Tom? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire; that hath laid knives under his pillow and halters in his pew; set ratsbane by his porridge;⁹ made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over 55 four-inched bridges, to course¹ his own shadow for a traitor. Bless thy five wits! Tom's a-cold,—O, do, de, do de, do de. Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking!² Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes: there could I have him now,—and there,—and there again, and there. 60

[Storm still.]

LEAR. What, has his daughters brought him to this pass?

Couldst thou save nothing? Didst thou give them all?

FOOL. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all shamed.

LEAR. Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air

Hang fated o'er men's faults light on thy daughters! 65

KENT. He hath no daughters, sir.

LEAR. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdued nature

To such a lowness but his unkind³ daughters.

Is it the fashion that discarded fathers

Should have thus little mercy on their flesh?⁴ 70

Judicious punishment! 't was this flesh begot

Those pelican daughters.⁵

EDG. Pillicock sat on Pillicock-hill.

Halloo, halloo, loo, loo!

FOOL. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen. 75

EDG. Take heed o' the foul fiend; obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array. Tom's a-cold.

LEAR. What hast thou been?

EDG. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that curled my 80 hair; wore gloves in my cap;⁶ served the lust of my mistress' heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I spake words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven: one that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it. Wine loved I deeply, dice dearly; and in woman out- 85

8. Poor Tom, pursued as he thinks by the devil, quotes snatches of old songs and plays. "Humh" signifies his shivering, as does "do de" in line 57.

9. The devil tried to capture souls of madmen by tempting them to the sin of suicide.

1. Chase.

2. Malign influences of planets and spirits. Lear picks up the theme in lines 64-

65.

3. Unnatural.

4. Lear notices the pins and splinters Edgar has stuck into his arm.

5. In legend the pelican was supposed to feed its offspring with its own blood. The word reminds Edgar of a children's rhyme.

6. As a favor from his mistress.

paramoured the Turk. False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand; hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shoes nor the rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman. Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets,⁷ thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend. Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says suum, mun, ha, no, nonny. Dolphin my boy, my boy, sessa! let him trot by.⁸ [Storm still.] 90

LEAR. Why, thou wert better in thy grave than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies. Is man no more than this? Consider him well. Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat⁹ no perfume. Ha! here's three on's are sophisticated!¹ Thou art the thing itself; unaccommodated² man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Off, off, you lendings! 100 come, unbutton here. [Tearing off his clothes.]

FOOL. Prithee, nuncle, be contented; 'tis a naughty³ night to swim in. Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest on's body cold. Look, here comes a walking fire. 105

[Enter GLOUCESTER, with a torch.]

EDG. This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet. He begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock.⁴ He gives the web and the pin,⁵ squinies⁶ the eye, and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white⁶ wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

St. Withold footed thrice the old; 110
He met the night-mare and her nine-fold;
Bid her alight,
And her troth plight,
And, aroint thee, witch, aroint thee!⁷

KENT. How fares your grace? 115

LEAR. What's he?

KENT. Who's there? What is't you seek?

GLOU. What are you there? Your names?

EDG. Poor Tom, that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt and the water;⁸ that in the fury of his 120 heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for sallets;⁹ swallows the old rat and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mantle of the standing-pool; who is whipped from tithing to tithing,¹ and stock-punished, and imprisoned; who hath had three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and 125 weapon to wear;

7. Slits or openings in petticoats.

8. Another line from an old ballad.

"Sessa" is an interjection meaning something like "Off you go!"

9. Civet cat.

1. I.e., three of us (Lear, Kent, and the Fool) are artificial (adulterated, impure).

2. "Without the trappings of civilization" (Muir's note).

3. Wicked.

4. Midnight.

5. "Web and pin": cataract; "squinies": squints.

6. Nearly ripe.

7. A charm. "Old": wold (open country); "fold"; foals; "aroint": begone.

8. Water newt.

9. Salads.

1. Parish to parish.

But mice and rats, and such small deer,²
Have been Tom's food for seven long year.

Beware my follower. Peace, Smulkin; peace, thou fiend!

GLOU. What, hath your grace no better company? 130

EDG. The prince of darkness is a gentleman. Modo he's call'd, and Mahu.

GLOU. Our flesh and blood is grown so vile, my lord,

That it doth hate what gets³ it.

EDG. Poor Tom's a-cold. 135

GLOU. Go in with me. My duty cannot suffer⁴

To obey in all your daughters' hard commands:

Though their injunction be to bar my doors,

And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you

Yet have I ventured to come seek you out.

140

And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

LEAR. First let me talk with this philosopher.⁵

What is the cause of thunder?

KENT. Good my lord, take his offer; go into the house.

LEAR. I'll take a word with this same learned Theban.⁶ 145

What is your study?

EDG. How to prevent⁷ the fiend, and to kill vermin.

LEAR. Let me ask you one word in private.

KENT. Importune him once more to go, my lord;

His wits begin to unsettle.

GLOU. Canst thou blame him? [Storm still.] 150

His daughters seek his death; ah, that good Kent!

He said it would be thus, poor banished man!

Thou say'st the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, friend,

I am almost mad myself. I had a son,

Now outlawed from my blood. He sought my life,

155

But lately, very late. I loved him, friend;

No father his son dearer. True to tell thee,

The grief hath crazed my wits. What a night's this!

I do beseech your grace,—

LEAR. O, cry you mercy,⁸ sir.

Noble philosopher, your company.

160

EDG. Tom's a-cold.

GLOU. In, fellow, there, into the hovel; keep thee warm.

LEAR. Come, let's in all.

KENT. This way, my lord.

LEAR. With him!

I will keep still⁹ with my philosopher.

KENT. Good my lord, soothe¹⁰ him; let him take the fellow. 165

GLOU. Take him you on.

KENT. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

LEAR. Come, good Athenian.

2. Animals.

3. Begets.

4. Allow me.

5. Natural philosopher, scientist.

6. Lear in his madness takes Poor Tom for a learned man from abroad: Thebes,

Athens, or Persia (III.vi.74).

7. Avoid.

8. I beg your pardon.

9. Remain always.

10. Humor.

GLOU. No words, no words: hush.

EDG. Child Rowland to the dark tower came,¹

170

His word was still,—Fie, foh, and fum,

I smell the blood of a British man.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 5

[Enter CORNWALL and EDMUND.]

CORN. I will have my revenge ere I depart his house.

EDM. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.²

CORN. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit,³ 5 set a-work by a reproveable badness in himself.

EDM. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party⁴ to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector! 10

CORN. Go with me to the duchess.

EDM. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

CORN. True or false, it hath made thee Earl of Gloucester. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our 15 apprehension.⁵

EDM. [aside] If I find him comforting the king, it will stuff his suspicion more fully.—I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.⁶

CORN. I will lay trust upon thee, and thou shalt find a dearer 20 father in my love. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 6

[Enter GLOUCESTER, LEAR, KENT, FOOL, and EDGAR.]

GLOU. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully. I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can; I will not be long from you.

KENT. All the power of his wits have given sway to his impatience: the gods reward your kindness! [Exit GLOUCESTER.] 5

EDG. Frateretto calls me; and tells me Nero is an angler in the lake of darkness.⁷ Pray, innocent, and beware the foul fiend.

FOOL. Prithee, nuncle, tell me whether a madman be a gentleman or a yeoman?

LEAR. A king, a king! 10

1. "Child": a candidate for knighthood. The line may be from a lost ballad; Browning built a notable poem on it. "Word": motto, which absurdly comes from Jack the Giant Killer.

2. "What people will think of me, since my natural feelings as a son thus give way to loyalty, rather frightens me"

(Muir's note).

3. A quality in him deserved death.

4. Which proves him a spy.

5. Arrest.

6. Filial feelings.

7. Frateretto is the name of one of his demons. The Emperor Nero is a fisherman in Chaucer's Monk's Tale.

FOOL. No, he's a yeoman that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman that sees his son a gentleman before him.

LEAR. To have a thousand with red burning spits

Come hissing in upon 'em —

EDG. The foul fiend bites my back. 15

FOOL. He's mad that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health,⁸ a boy's love, or a whore's oath.

LEAR. It shall be done; I will arraign them straight.⁹

[To EDGAR.] Come, sit thou here, most learned justicer;

[to the FOOL] Thou, sapient sir, sit here. Now, you she foxes! 20

EDG. Look, where he stands and glares! Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?¹

Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me —

FOOL. Her boat hath a leak,

And she must not speak 25

Why she dares not come over to thee.

EDG. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly for two white herring.

Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.²

KENT. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amazed: 30

Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?

LEAR. I'll see their trial first. Bring in the evidence.

[To EDGAR.] Thou robed man of justice, take thy place;

[to the FOOL] And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity,³

Bench by his side: [to KENT] you are o' the commission, 35

Sit you too,

EDG. Let us deal justly.

Sleepest or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?

Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin mouth, 40

Thy sheep shall take no harm.⁴

Pur! the cat is gray.

LEAR. Arraign her first; 'tis Goneril. I here take my oath before this honorable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

FOOL. Come hither, mistress. Is your name Goneril? 45

LEAR. She cannot deny it.

FOOL. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool.⁵

LEAR. And here's another, whose warped looks proclaim

What store⁶ her heart is made on. Stop her there!

Arms, arms, sword, fire! Corruption in the place! 50

8. Horses were supposed to be more subject to ailments than other animals.

9. I will legally try them (Goneril and Regan) right now.

1. Poor Tom points to Frateretto and asks the imaginary Goneril if she minds having onlookers at her trial. He then quotes (or sings) a line from a ballad which a lover addresses his sweetheart. "Bourn": brook.

2. The growling of his stomach from hunger Tom takes to be the croaking of the foul fiend.

3. I.e., judicial colleague.

4. Another ballad stanza. "Minikin": delicate, dainty.

5. The comment is a common one meaning "Pardon me; I didn't notice you," but the comedy is richer, and more like the Fool, if an actual stool is addressed. "Joint stool": a low stool made by joiner (carpenter).

6. Material.

False justicer, why hast thou let her 'scape?

EDG. Bless thy five wits!

KENT. O pity! Sir, where is the patience now,

That you so oft have boasted to retain?

EDG. [aside] My tears begin to take his part so much, 55

They'll mar my counterfeiting.⁷

LEAR. The little dogs and all,

Tray, Blanch, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.⁸

EDG. Tom will throw his head at them. Avaunt, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white, 60

Tooth that poisons if it bite;

Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,

Hound or spaniel, brach or lym,

Or bobtail tike or trundle-tail.

Tom will make them weep and wail: 65

For, with throwing thus my head,

Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fled.⁹

Do de, de, de. Sessa! Come, march to wakes and fairs and market-towns. Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.¹

LEAR. Then let them anatomize² Regan; see what breeds about 70 her heart. Is there any cause in nature that makes these hard hearts? [To EDGAR.] You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; I do not like the fashion of your garments. You will say they are Persian; but let them be changed.

KENT. Now, good my lord, lie there and rest awhile. 75

LEAR. Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains. So, so,

so. We'll go to supper i' the morning.³

FOOL. And I'll go to bed at noon.

[Re-enter GLOUCESTER.]

GLOU. Come hither, friend. Where is the king my master?

KENT. Here, sir; but trouble him not; his wits are gone. 80

GLOU. Good friend, I prithee, take him in thy arms;

I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him:

There is a litter ready; lay him in 't

And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet

Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master. 85

If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,

With thine, and all that offer to defend him,

Stand in assured loss. Take up, take up!

And follow me, that will to some provision

Give thee quick conduct.

KENT. Oppressed nature sleeps: 90

This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken sinews,

Which, if convenience will not allow,

7. Spoil my pretense.

8. Lear in his delirium thinks that his own dogs have sided with his daughters and now bark at him.

9. Another improvised charm. "Brach or lym": bitch or bloodhound; "hatch": the lower half of a divided door.

1. Beggars carried a horn to hold the drinks they begged.

2. Dissect.

3. The curtains are the curtains of his bed at home. He is aware that he should have supped before going to bed.

Stand in hard cure.⁴ [To the FOOL.] Come, help to bear thy master:

Thou must not stay behind.

GLOU.

Come come, away.

[Exeunt all but EDGAR.]

EDG. When we our betters see bearing our woes,

95

We scarcely think our miseries our foes.

Who alone suffers suffers most i' the mind,

Leaving free⁵ things and happy shows behind:

But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erskip

When grief hath mates, and bearing⁶ fellowship.

100

How light and portable my pain seems now,

When that which makes me bend makes the king bow;

He childed as I fathered! Tom, away!

Mark the high noises, and thyself bewray⁷

When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles thee,

105

In thy just proof repeals and reconciles thee.⁸

What will hap more tonight, safe 'scape the king!

Lurk, lurk.⁹

[Exit.]

SCENE 7

[Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GONERIL, EDMUND, and SERVANTS.]

CORN. [To GONERIL] Post speedily to my lord your husband; show him this letter. The army of France is landed. Seek out the villain Gloucester. [Exeunt some of the SERVANTS.]

REG. Hang him instantly.

CON. Pluck out his eyes.

5

CORN. Leave him to my displeasure. Edmund, keep you our sister company. The revenges we are bound to¹ take upon your traitorous father are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate² preparation. We are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister: farewell, my lord of Gloucester.

[Enter OSWALD.]

How now! Where's the king?

OSW. My lord of Gloucester hath conveyed him hence.

Some five or six and thirty of his knights,

15

Hot questrists³ after him, met him at gate;

Who, with some other of the lords dependants,

Are gone with him towards Dover; where they boast

To have well-armed friends.

4. This rest might have restored your racked nerves, which can hardly be cured without it.

5. Carefree.

6. Endurance, suffering.

7. Notice signs of discord among the powerful, and reveal yourself.

8. When the false charges which hurt you so much are proved unfounded and you are called back from exile and reconciled with your father.

9. Remain in hiding.

1. Ready to.

2. Rapid.

3. Seekers.

CORN. Get horses for your mistress.

GON. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

CORN. Edmund, farewell.

[Exeunt GONERIL, EDMUND, and OSWALD.]

Go seek the traitor Gloucester,
Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.

[Exeunt other SERVANTS.]

Though well we may not pass upon his life
Without the form of justice, yet our power
Shall do a courtesy to⁴ our wrath, which men
May blame, but not control. Who's there? the traitor?

[Enter GLOUCESTER, brought in by two or three.]

REG. Ingrateful fox! 'tis he.

CORN. Bind fast his corky⁵ arms.

GLOU. What mean your graces? Good my friends, consider

You are my guests. Do me no foul play, friends.

CORN. Bind him, I say. [SERVANTS bind him.]

REG. Hard, hard. O filthy⁶ traitor!

GLOU. Unmerciful lady as you are, I'm none.

CORN. To this chair bind him. Villain, thou shalt find—

[REGAN plucks his beard.]

GLOU. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done

To pluck me by the beard.

REG. So white, and such a traitor!

GLOU. Naughty⁷ lady,

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,

Will quicken,⁸ and accuse thee. I am your host.

With robbers' hands my hospitable favors

You should not ruffle⁹ thus. What will you do?

CORN. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France?

REG. Be simple answered,¹ for we know the truth.

CORN. And what confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed² in the kingdom?

REG. To whose hands have you sent the lunatic king?

Speak.

GLOU. I have a letter guessingly set down,

Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,

And not from one opposed.

CORN. Cunning.

REG. And false.

CORN. Where hast thou sent the king?

GLOU. To Dover.

REG. Wherefore to Dover? Wast thou not charged at peril—

CORN. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that.

GLOU. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.³

4. Yield to.
5. Dry and withered.
6. Odious.
7. Wicked.
8. Come to life.

9. Do violence to.
1. I.e., frank.
2. Recently landed.
3. The image is of a bear tied to a stake and baited by dogs.

REG. Wherefore to Dover?

GLOU. Because I would not see thy cruel nails

Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister

In his anointed⁴ flesh stick boarish fangs.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head

In hell-black night endured, would have buoyed up,

And quenched the stelléd fires.⁵

Yet, poor old heart, he help the heavens to rage.

If wolves had at thy gate howled that dern⁶ time,

Thou shouldst have said "Good porter, turn the key."

All cruels else subscribed.⁷ But I shall see

The wingéd vengeance overtake such children.

CORN. See 't shalt thou never. Fellows, hold the chair.

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.

GLOU. He that will think to live till he be old,

Give me some help! O cruel! O ye gods!

REG. One side will mock another. The other too!

CORN. If you see vengeance,—

FIRST SERV. Hold your hand, my lord:

I have served you ever since I was a child;

But better service have I never done you

Than now to bid you hold.

REG. How now, you dog!

FIRST SERV. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,

I'd shake it on this quarrel.

REG. What do you mean?

CORN. My villain!

FIRST SERV. Why, then, come on, and take the chance of anger.

REG. Give me thy sword. A peasant stand up thus!

[CORNWALL is wounded.]

[Takes a sword, and runs at him behind.]

FIRST SERV. O, I am slain! My lord, you have one eye left

To see some inischief on him. O!

[Dies.] 85

CORN. Lest it see more, prevent it. Out, vile jelly!

Where is thy luster now?

GLOU. All dark and comfortless. Where's my son Edmund?

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature,

To quit this horrid act.⁸

REG. Out,⁹ treacherous villain!

Thou call'st on him that hates thee. It was he

That made the overture¹ of thy treasons to us;

Who is too good to pity thee.

GLOU. O my follies! Then Edgar was abused.

Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

REG. Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell

His way to Dover.

[Exit one with GLOUCESTER.]

4. As a king.

5. Would have risen up and quenched the fires of the stars.

6. Dire, dread.

7. I.e., all other cruel creatures submitted to the fury of the storm, but you did not.

8. Arouse all your filial feelings to revenge this horrid act.

9. Out upon you! (a curse).

1. Disclosure.

How is't, my lord? how look you?²

CORN. I have received a hurt. Follow me, lady;
Turn out that eyeless villain. Throw this slave
Upon the dunghill. Regan, I bleed apace. 100
Untimely comes this hurt. Give me your arm.

[Exit CORNWALL led by REGAN.]

SEC. SERV. I'll never care what wickedness I do,
If this man come to good.

THIRD SERV. If she live long,
And in the end meet the old³ course of death, 105
Women will all turn monsters.

SEC. SERV. Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bedlam
To lead him where he would. His roguish madness
Allows itself to any thing.⁴

THIRD SERV. Go thou; I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs⁵ 110
To apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven help him!
[Exeunt severally.]

Act IV

SCENE 1

[Enter EDGAR.]

EDG. Yet better thus, and known to be contemned
Than still contemned and flattered.⁶ To be worst,
The lowest and most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear.⁷
The lamentable change is from the best; 5
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air that I embrace!
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst
Owes nothing to thy blasts. But who comes here?

[Enter GLOUCESTER, led by an OLD MAN.]

My father, poorly led? World, world, O world! 10
But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee,
Life would not yield to age.⁸

OLD MAN. O, my good lord, I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

GLOU. Away, get thee away! Good friend, be gone. 15
Thy comforts can do me no good at all;
Thee they may hurt.

OLD MAN. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

GLOU. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes;

2. How do you seem to be?

3. Natural.

4. Since he is a mad vagabond (rogue) he will not be called to account.

5. The usual application for wounds in the eyes.

6. I.e., it is better to be a beggar, publicly known to be condemned, than always ("still") to be condemned by flattery, as a prince is.

7. The one cast to the bottom by fortune can hope to move up; he doesn't fear falling lower.

8. "The only thing that makes us grow old and die is our hatred of life in this world, and that hatred is caused by the strange vicissitudes of fortune" (Kittredge's note).

- I stumbled when I saw. Full oft 'tis seen,
 Our means secure us, and our mere defects
 Prove our commodities.⁹ O dear son Edgar,
 The food of thy abuséd father's wrath!¹
 Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
 I'd say I had eyes again!
- OLD MAN. How now! Who's there? 20
- EDG. [aside] O gods! Who is't can say "I am at the worst"?
 I am worse than e'er I was.
- OLD MAN. 'Tis poor mad Tom.
- EDG. [aside] And worse I may be yet: the worst is not So long as we can say "This is the worst."
- OLD MAN. Fellow, where goest?
- GLOU. Is it a beggar-man? 30
- OLD MAN. Madman and beggar too.
- GLOU. He has some reason, else he could not beg.
 I' the last night's storm I such a fellow saw;
 Which made me think a man a worm.² My son
 Came then into my mind, and yet my mind 35
 Was then scarce friends with him. I have heard more since.
 As flies to wanton³ boys are we to the gods;
 They kill us for their sport.
- EDG. [aside] How should this be?
 Bad is the trade that must play fool to sorrow,
 Angering itself and others.—Bless thee, master! 40
- GLOU. Is that the naked fellow?
- OLD MAN. Ay, my lord.
- GLOU. Then, prithee, get thee gone. If, for my sake,
 Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain,
 I' the way toward Dover, do it for ancient⁴ love;
 And bring some covering for this naked soul, 45
 Who I'll entreat to lead me.
- OLD MAN. Alack, sir, he is mad.
- GLOU. 'Tis the times' plague, when madmen lead the blind.
 Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;
 Above the rest,⁵ be gone.
- OLD MAN. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have, Come on 't what will. 50 [Exit.]
- GLOU. Sirrah, naked fellow,—
- EDG. Poor Tom's a-cold. [aside] I cannot daub it further.⁶
- GLOU. Come hither, fellow.
- EDG. [aside] And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed. 55
- GLOU. Know'st thou the way to Dover?
- EDG. Both stile and gate, horse-way and foot-path. Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits. Bless thee, good man's

9. I.e., a truth often observed is that prosperity makes us careless but adversity proves to be our best possession.

1. The one on whom his father fed his anger.

2. "How much less man, that is a worm" (Job xxv.6).

3. Sportive, playful.

4. Former, bygone.

5. All.

6. Pretend anymore.

son, from the foul fiend! Five fiends have been in Poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbididance, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo, of murder; Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing,⁷ who since possesses chambermaids and waiting-women. So, bless thee, master!

GLOU. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heavens' plagues
Have humbled to all strokes.⁸ That I am wretched 65
Makes thee the happier. Heavens, deal so still!
Let the superfluous and lust-dieted⁹ man,
That slaves your ordinance,¹ that will not see
Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly;
So distribution should undo excess, 70
And each man have enough. Dost thou know Dover?

EDG. Ay, master.

GLOU. There is a cliff, whose high and bending² head
Looks fearfully in the confined deep.³
Bring me but to the very brim of it, 75
And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear
With something rich about me. From that place
I shall no leading need.

EDG. Give me thy arm.

Poor Tom shall lead thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter GONERIL and EDMUND.]

GON. Welcome, my lord. I marvel our mild husband
Not met us on the way.⁴

[Enter OSWALD.]

Now where's your master?

OSW. Madam, within, but never man so changed.
I told him of the army that was landed;
He smiled at it. I told him you were coming; 5
His answer was "The worse." Of Gloucester's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I informed him, then he called me sot,⁵
And told me I had turned the wrong side out.
What most he should dislike seems pleasant to him; 10
What like, offensive.

GON. [to EDM.] Then shall you go no further.
It is the cowish⁶ terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake. He'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer.⁷ Our wishes on the way 15

7. Making faces.

8. Have brought so low as to accept humbly the bitterest strokes of Fortune.

9. Overly self-indulgent.

1. Makes your law subject to him.

2. Beetling.

3. Look into the sea, hemmed in by cliffs.

4. I.e., from Gloucester's castle; they have arrived at Goneril and Albany's castle.

5. Fool.

6. Cowardly.

7. He will overlook offenses which would require him to punish.

May prove effects.⁸ Back, Edmund, to my brother;
 Hasten his musters and conduct his powers.
 I must change arms at home, and give the distaff
 Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant
 Shall pass between us. Ere long you are like to hear,
 If you dare venture in your own behalf,
 A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech;

20

[Giving a favor.]

Decline your head. This kiss, if it durst speak,
 Would stretch thy spirits up into the air.
 Conceive, and fare thee well.

25

EDM. Yours in the ranks of death.⁹

GON.

My most dear Gloucester!

[Exit EDMUND.]

O, the difference of man and man!
 To thee a woman's services are due:
 My foot usurps my body.¹

OSW. Madam, here comes my lord.

[Exit.] 30[Enter ALBANY.]GON. I have been worth the whistle.²

ALB.

O Goneril!

You are not worth the dust which the rude wind
 Blows in your face. I fear your disposition.
 That nature, which contemns its origin,
 Cannot be bordered certain in itself.³
 She that herself will sliver and disbranch
 From her material sap, perforce must wither
 And come to deadly use.⁴

35

GON. No more; the text is foolish.⁵

ALB. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;

40

Filths savor but themselves. What have you done?

Tigers, not daughters, what have you performed?

A father, and a gracious aged man,

Whose reverence even the head-lugged⁶ bear would lick,

Most barbarous, most degenerate, have you madded.

45

Could my good brother suffer you to do it?

A man, a prince, by him so benefited!

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits⁷Send quickly down to tame these vild⁸ offenses,

8. Our desires expressed on the way here (that you might take Albany's place as my husband) may be fulfilled. "Brother": brother-in-law, Cornwall.

9. Some critics see sexual innuendoes in "spirits," "conceive," and "death."

1. I.e., "a woman might justly adore Edmund, but Albany in the role of husband is as if the foot presumed to control the whole body" (Brooke's note).

2. Goneril, commenting bitterly on Albany's failure to meet her on the way refers to a proverb, "It is a poor dog that is not worth the whistling."

3. I have fears concerning your disposition.

The nature that renounces its source cannot be trusted to keep within natural or moral limits.

4. I.e., she who cuts herself off from the tree that gave her life must be a withered branch, ready for burning ("deadly use").

5. She suggests that Albany is starting to preach a sermon, and she will hear no more of it.

6. Tugged along by a chain around its head.

7. Lightning and thunderbolt, as distinguished from invisible spirits.

8. Vile.

It will come, 50
 Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
 Like monsters of the deep.

GON. Milk-livered man!
 That bear'st a cheek for blows,⁹ a head for wrongs:
 Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning
 Thine honor from thy suffering; that not know'st 55
 Fools do those villains pity who are punished
 Ere they have done their mischief. Where's thy drum?
 France spreads his banners in our noiseless¹ land,
 With plumed helm thy state² begins to threaten;
 Whiles thou, a moral³ fool, sit'st still, and criest 60
 "Alack, why does he so?"

ALB. See thyself, devil!
 Proper deformity shows not in the fiend
 So horrid as in woman.⁴

GON. O vain fool!

ALB. Thou changéd and self-covered thing, for shame,
 Be-monster not thy feature.⁵ Were't my fitness 65
 To let these hands obey my blood,⁶
 They are apt enough to dislocate and tear
 Thy flesh and bones. Howe'er thou art a fiend,
 A woman's shape doth shield thee.

GON. Marry, your manhood! mew! 70
 [Enter a MESSENGER.]

ALB. What news?

MESS. O, my good lord, the Duke of Cornwall's dead;
 Slain by his servant, going to put out
 The other eye of Gloucester.

ALB. Gloucester's eyes?

MESS. A servant that he bred, thrilled with remorse,⁷ 75
 Opposed against the act, bending his sword
 To his great master; who, thereat enraged,
 Flew on him, and amongst them felled him dead;
 But not without that harmful stroke, which since
 Hath plucked him after.

ALB. This shows you are above, 80
 You justicers, that these our nether crimes⁸
 So speedily can venge! But, O poor Gloucester!
 Lost he his other eye?

MESS. Both, both, my lord.
 This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer;

9. To be understood in the light of Matthew v.39, "whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also," though King Lear has a pre-Christian setting.

1. Because the drum of Albany's army has not yet sounded.

2. Throne, power.

3. Moralizing.

4. The ugliness which is natural

("proper") in a demon is not so horrid as in a woman.

5. I.e., you hypocrite, do not allow your whole shape ("feature") to become that of a monster.

6. Passion.

7. A servant he had brought up, pierced by compassion.

8. I.e., you judges, that these crimes here below, on earth.

- "T is from your sister. 85
- GON. [aside] One way I like this well;
 But being a widow, and my Gloucester with her,
 May all the building in my fancy pluck
 Upon my hateful life.⁹ Another way,
 The news is not so tart.—I'll read, and answer. [Exit.] 90
- ALB. Where was his son when they did take his eyes?
 MESS. Come with my lady hither.
- ALB. He is not here.
- MESS. No, my good lord; I met him back again.¹
- ALB. Knows he the wickedness?
- MESS. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he informed against him; 95
 And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment
 Might have the freer course.
- ALB. Gloucester, I live
 To thank thee for the love thou show'dst the king,
 And to revenge thine eyes. Come hither, friend.
 Tell me what more thou know'st. [Exeunt.] 100

SCENE 3

[Enter KENT and a GENTLEMAN.]

- KENT. Why the King of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?
- GENT. Something he left imperfect in the state, which since his coming forth is thought of; which imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger, that his personal return was most 5 required and necessary.
- KENT. Who hath he left behind him general?
- GENT. The Marshall of France, Monsieur LaFar.
- KENT. Did your letters pierce² the queen to any demonstration of grief? 10
- GENT. Ay, sir. She took them, read them in my presence;
 And now and then an ample tear trilled³ down
 Her delicate cheek. It seemed she was a queen
 Over her passion, who, most rebel-like,
 Sought to be king o'er her.
- KENT. O, then it moved her. 15
- GENT. Not to a rage. Patience and sorrow strove
 Who should express her goodliest. You have seen
 Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears
 Were like, a better way.⁴ Those happy smilets,
 That played on her ripe lip, seemed not to know 20
 What guests were in her eyes, which parted thence,
 As pearls from diamonds dropped. In brief,
 Sorrow would be a rarity most beloved,
 If all could so become it.

9. May destroy all my castles in the air and make my life hateful to me.

1. On the way back.

2. Move.

3. Trickled.

4. But in a better fashion.

- KENT. Made she no verbal question?
 GENT. 'Faith, once or twice she heaved the name of "father" 25
 Pantingly forth, as if it pressed her heart;
 Cried "Sisters! sisters! Shame of ladies! sisters!
 Kent! father! sisters! What, i' the storm? i' the night?
 Let pity not be believed!" There she shook
 The holy water from her heavenly eyes, 30
 And clamor moistened.⁵ Then away she started
 To deal with grief alone.
- KENT. It is the stars,
 The stars above us, govern our conditions;⁶
 Else one self mate and make⁷ could not beget
 Such different issues. You spoke not with her since? 35
- GENT. No.
- KENT. Was this before the king returned?
- GENT. No, since.
- KENT. Well, sir, the poor distressed Lear's i' the town;
 Who sometime, in his better tune,⁸ remembers
 What we are come about, and by no means 40
 Will yield to see his daughter.
- GENT. Why, good sir?
- KENT. A sovereign shame so elbows him; his own unkindness,
 That stripped her from his benediction, turned her
 To foreign casualties,⁹ gave her dear rights
 To his dog-hearted daughters, these things sting 45
 His mind so venomously, that burning shame
 Detains him from Cordelia.
- GENT. Alack, poor gentleman!
- KENT. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers you heard not?
- GENT. 'Tis so, they are afoot.
- KENT. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master Lear, 50
 And leave you to attend him. Some dear cause¹
 Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
 When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
 Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go
 Along with me. [Exeunt.] 55

SCENE 4

[Enter, with drum and colors, CORDELIA, DOCTOR, and SOLDIERS.]

- COR. Alack, 'tis he! Why, he was met even now
 As mad as the vexed² sea; singing aloud;
 Crowned with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
 With hor-docks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
 Darnel,³ and all the idle weeds that grow 5

5. "Followed her cries of sorrow with tears" (Kittredge's note).

6. Characters.

7. Mate.

8. In his lucid intervals.

9. Chances.

1. Important reason.

2. Turbulent.

3. All common weeds.

- In our sustaining corn. A century⁴ send forth;
 Search every acre in the high-grown field,
 And bring him to our eye. [Exit an OFFICER.] What can man's wisdom
 In the restoring his bereaved sense?⁵
 He that helps him take all my outward worth. 10
 DOCT. There is means, madam.
 Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
 The which he lacks. That to provoke in him,
 Are many simples operative, whose power
 Will close the eye of anguish.⁶
- COR. All blest secrets, 15
 All you unpublished virtues of the earth,
 Spring with my tears!⁷ be aidant and remediate⁸
 In the good man's distress! Seek, seek for him;
 Lest his ungoverned rage dissolve the life
 That wants the means to lead it.⁹
 [Enter a MESSENGER.]
- MESS. News, madam; 20
 The British powers are marching hitherward.
 COR. 'Tis known before; our preparation stands
 In expectation of them. O dear father,
 It is thy business that I go about;
 Therefore great France 25
 My mourning and importuned¹ tears hath pitied.
 No blown² ambition doth our arms incite,
 But love, dear love, and our aged father's right.
 Soon may I hear and see him! [Exeunt.]

SCENE 5

- [Enter REGAN and OSWALD.]
 REG. But are my brother's powers set forth?
 OSW. Ay, madam.
 REG. Himself in person there?
 OSW. Madam, with much ado.³
 Your sister is the better soldier.
 REG. Lord Edmund spake not with your lord at home?
 OSW. No, madam.
 REG. What might import my sister's letter to him?
 OSW. I know not, lady.
 REG. Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.
 It was great ignorance,⁴ Gloucester's eyes being out, 10

4. A hundred soldiers.

5. I.e., what can medical science do to restore his lost sanity?

6. I.e., sleep, which he lacks, is nature's fostering nurse, and we have many powerful herbs ("simples") which will deaden his pain and put him to sleep.

7. May all unknown herb remedies spring up, watered by my tears.

8. Helpfully remedial.

9. Lest his mad frenzy take his life, since he is without the "means" (i.e., reason) to lead it.

1. Importuning.

2. Puffed up, inflated.

3. After much persuasion.

4. Folly.

To let him live. Where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted⁵ life; moreover, to descry
The strength o' the enemy.

15

OSW. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.

REG. Our troops set forth tomorrow. Stay with us;

The ways are dangerous.

OSW. I may not, madam:

My lady charged my duty in this business.

REG. Why should she write to Edmund? Might not you

20

Transport her purposes by word? Belike,

Something—I know not what. I'll love thee much,

Let me unseal the letter.

OSW. Madam, I had rather—

REG. I know your lady does not love her husband;

I am sure of that; and at her late being here

25

She gave strange ocellades⁶ and most speaking looks

To noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosom.⁷

OSW. I, madam?

REG. I speak in understanding; y'are, I know't.

Therefore I do advise you, take this note:⁸

30

My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talked;

And more convenient is he for my hand

Than for your lady's. You may gather more.

If you do find him, pray you, give him this;⁹

And when your mistress hears thus much¹⁰ from you,

35

I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her.

So, fare you well.

If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,

Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

40

OSW. Would I could meet him, madam! I should show

What party I do follow.

REG. Fare thee well.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 6

[Enter GLOUCESTER, and EDGAR dressed like a peasant.]

GLOU. When shall we come to the top of that same hill?

EDG. You do climb up it now. Look how we labor.

GLOU. Methinks the ground is even.¹

EDG. Horrible steep.

Hark, do you hear the sea?

GLOU. No, truly.

EDG. Why, then, your other senses grow imperfect

5

By your eyes' anguish.

GLOU. So may it be, indeed.

Methinks thy voice is altered, and thou speakest

5. Darkened through blindness.

6. Amorous glances.

7. In her confidence.

8. Take note of what I say.

9. A love-token.

10. What I have told her.

1. Flat.

- In better phrase and matter than thou didst.
 EDG. Y^e are much deceived. In nothing am I changed
 But in my garments.
- GLOU. Methinks y^e are better spoken. 10
 EDG. Come on, sir; here's the place. Stand still. How fearful
 And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!
 The crows and choughs² that wing the midway air
 Show scarce so gross³ as beetles. Halfway down
 Hangs one that gathers sampire,⁴ dreadful trade!
 Methinks he seems no bigger than his head. 15
 The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
 Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark,
 Diminished to her cock;⁵ her cock, a buoy
 Almost too small for sight. The murmuring surge,
 That on the unnumbered idle pebble⁶ chafes,
 Cannot be heard so high. I'll look no more,
 Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight⁷
 Topple down headlong.
- GLOU. Set me where you stand.
 EDG. Give me your hand. You are now within a foot 25
 Of th^e extreme verge. For all beneath the moon
 Would I not leap upright.
- GLOU. Let go my hand.
 Here, friend, 's another purse; in it a jewel
 Well worth a poor man's taking. Fairies and gods
 Prosper it with thee! Go thou farther off;
 Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going. 30
- EDG. Now fare you well, good sir.
 GLOU. With all my heart.
- EDG. [aside] Why I do trifle thus with his despair
 Is done to cure it.
- GLOU. [kneeling] O you mighty gods! 35
 This world I do renounce, and, in your sights,
 Shake patiently my great affliction off.
 If I could bear it longer, and not fall
 To quarrel with your great opposeless⁸ wills,
 My snuff and loathed part of nature⁹ should 40
 Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him!
 Now, fellow, fare thee well. [He falls forward and swoons.]
- EDG. Gone, sir; farewell.—
 And yet I know not how conceit¹ may rob
 The treasury of life, when life itself
 Yields² to the theft. Had he been where he thought, 45
 By this had thought been past. Alive or dead?

2. Jackdaws.

3. Large.

4. An aromatic plant used in pickling.

5. Cockboat.

6. Innumerable barren pebbles.

7. My vision being distorted.

8. Succumb to rebellion against. "Op-poseless": irresistible.

9. Snuff: burnt part of a wick. The remainder of his life, loathsome to him, would be a snuff.

1. Imagination, delusion.

2. Consents.

Ho, you sir! friend! Hear you, sir? speak!
Thus might he pass indeed. Yet he revives.
What are you, sir?

GLOU. Away, and let me die.

EDG. Hadst thou been aught but gossamer, feathers, air, 50
So many fathom down precipitating,³
Thou'dst shivered like an egg; but thou dost breathe;
Hast heavy substance;⁴ bleed'st not; speak'st; art sound.
Ten masts at each⁵ make not the altitude
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell. 55
Thy life's a miracle. Speak yet again.

GLOU. But have I fallen, or no?

EDG. From the dread summit of this chalky bourn.⁶
Look up a-height; the shrill-gorged⁷ lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Do but look up. 60

GLOU. Alack, I have no eyes.

Is wretchedness deprived that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile⁸ the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

EDG. Give me your arm. 65

Up—so. How is 't? Feel you your legs? You stand.

GLOU. Too well, too well.

EDG. This is above all strangeness.

Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

GLOU. A poor unfortunate beggar.

EDG. As I stood here below, methought his eyes 70
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,
Horns whelked⁹ and waved like the enridged sea:
It was some fiend. Therefore, thou happy father,¹
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honors
Of men's impossibilities, have preserved thee. 75

GLOU. I do remember now. Henceforth I'll bear

Affliction till it do cry out itself

"Enough, enough," and die. That thing you speak of,

I took it for a man; often 't would say

"The fiend, the fiend"—he led me to that place. 80

EDG. Bear free² and patient thoughts. But who comes here?

[Enter LEAR, fantastically dressed with wild flowers.]

The safer sense will ne'er accommodate

His master thus.³

LEAR. No, they cannot touch me for coining; I am the king himself.⁴ 85

3. Falling headlong.

4. Substantial weight.

5. End to end.

6. Boundary (i.e., the cliff).

7. Shrill-throated.

8. Cheat.

9. Twisted.

1. Old man (Edgar does not reveal his identity). "Clearest": glorious.

2. Happy.

3. A man in his right senses would never dress this way.

4. The king had the exclusive privilege of coining.

EDG. O thou side-piercing sight!

LEAR. Nature's above art in that respect. There's your press-money.⁵ That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper.⁶ Draw me a clothier's yard.⁷ Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace; this piece of toasted cheese will do 't. There's my gauntlet;⁸ I'll prove it on a giant. Bring up the brown bills.⁹ O, well flown, bird! i' the clout, i' the clout.¹ Hewgh! Give the word.² 90

EDG. Sweet marjoram.

LEAR. Pass.

GLOU. I know that voice.

LEAR. Ha! Goneril, with a white beard! They flattered me like a dog; and told me I had white hairs in my beard ere the black ones were there. To say "aye" and "no" to everything that I said!³—"Aye" and "no" too was no good divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men o' their words! They told me I was everything. 'Tis a lie, I am not ague-proof. 95

GLOU. The trick⁴ of that voice I do well remember.

Is 't not the king?

LEAR. Aye, every inch a king!

When I do stare, see how the subject quakes.

I pardon that man's life. What was thy cause?⁵

Adultery?

Thou shalt not die. Die for adultery? No.

The wren goes to 't, and the small gilded fly

Does lecher in my sight.

Let copulation thrive; for Gloucester's bastard son

Was kinder to his father than my daughters

Got 'tween the lawful sheets. To 't luxury, pell-mell!⁶

For I lack soldiers. Behold yond simpering dame,

Whose face between her forks presages snow;⁷

That minces virtue, and does shake the head

To hear of pleasure's name;

The fitchew, nor the soiled horse, goes to 't

With a more riotous appetite.⁸

Down from the waist they are Centaurs,⁹

5. Money paid to recruits.

6. Scarecrow.

7. The standard English arrow was a cloth-yard long.

8. A glove thrown down as a challenge to a duel.

9. Halberds or pikes, painted brown to resist rust.

1. The bull's-eye.

2. Password. Edgar chooses the name of a herb supposed to be good for diseases of the brain.

3. I.e., to agree with me always, as flatterers do. "No good divinity": i.e., bad theology. Several Biblical texts say that your aye should mean aye, and your no, no.

4. Peculiarity.

5. Legal charge, offense.

6. Promiscuously: "luxury": lust.

7. I.e., whose face presages snow between her forks (legs).

8. I.e., neither the polecat nor the well-fed horse pursues sex more violently.

9. Creatures in Greek mythology, half human, half horse, supposed to be extremely lustful.

Though women all above.
 But to the girdle do the gods inherit.¹
 Beneath is all the fiends'; there's hell, there's darkness, 125
 There's the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding,
 Stench, consumption! Fie, fie, fie! pah! pah!
 Give me an ounce of civet,² good apothecary,
 To sweeten my imagination.
 There's money for thee. 130

GLOU. O, let me kiss that hand!

LEAR. Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality.

GLOU. O ruined piece³ of nature! This great world⁴

Shall so wear out to nought. Dost thou know me?

LEAR. I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thou squiny⁵ 135 at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid; I'll not love. Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.

GLOU. Were all the letters suns, I could not see one.

EDG. [aside] I would not take this from report. It is,
 And my heart breaks at it. 140

LEAR. Read.

GLOU. What, with the case of eyes?⁶

LEAR. O, ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light.⁷ Yet you see how this world goes. 145

GLOU. I see it feelingly.

LEAR. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes with no eyes. Look with thine ears. See how yond justice rails upon yond simple⁸ thief. Hark, in thine ear. Change places and, handy-dandy,⁹ which is the justice, which is the thief? Thou 150 hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?

GLOU. Aye, sir.

LEAR. And the creature¹ run from the cur? There thou mightst behold the great image of authority: a dog's obeyed in office.
 Thou rascal beadle,² hold thy bloody hand! 155
 Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own back;
 Thou hotly lusts to use her in that kind
 For which thou whipp'st her. The usurer hangs the cozener.³
 Through tattered clothes small vices do appear;
 Robes and furred gowns hide all. Plate sin with gold, 160
 And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
 Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw does pierce it.

1. I.e., the gods rule only down to the belt.

2. Perfume.

3. Masterpiece. It was commonplace to consider man the masterpiece of Nature's creation.

4. The universe.

5. Squint.

6. Eye sockets.

7. I.e., your eyes are in a sad plight with a pun on "case" as socket) and your purse in a pleasant one (with a pun on "light" as "of little weight" and perhaps also "visible").

8. Low-class, ordinary.

9. A child's game in which one is asked to tell which closed fist contains an object.

1. Human being.

2. Minor constable.

3. The judge practices usury but hangs a small cheater.

None does offend, none, I say, none; I'll able 'em;⁴
 Take that of me,⁵ my friend, who have the power
 To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes;
 And, like a scurvy politician,⁶ seem
 To see the things thou dost not. Now, now, now, now!
 Pull off my boots. Harder, harder! So.⁷

165

EDG. O, matter and impertinency⁸ mixed!

Reason in madness!

170

LEAR. If thou wilt weep⁹ my fortunes, take my eyes.

I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloucester:

Thou must be patient. We came crying hither;

Thou knows't, the first time that we smell the air,

We wail and cry. I will preach to thee. Mark.

175

[LEAR takes off his crown of weeds and flowers.]

GLOU. Alack, alack the day!

LEAR. When we are born, we cry that we are come

To this great stage of fools. This' a good block;¹

It were a delicate stratagem, to shoe

A troop of horse with felt. I'll put 't in proof;²

180

And when I have stol'n upon these sons-in-law,

Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill!

[Enter a GENTLEMEN, with ATTENDANTS.]

GENT. O, here he is; lay hand upon him. Sir,

Your most dear daughter—

LEAR. No rescue? What, a prisoner? I am even 185

The natural fool of fortune. Use me well;

You shall have ransom. Let me have surgeons;

I am cut to the brains.

GENT. You shall have any thing.

LEAR. No seconds?³ all myself?

Why, this would make a man a man of salt,⁴

190

To use his eyes for garden water-pots,

Aye, and laying autumn's dust.

GENT. Good sir—

LEAR. I will die bravely, like a smug bridegroom.⁵ What!

I will be jovial. Come, come; I am a king,

My masters, know you that?

195

GENT. You are a royal one, and we obey you.

LEAR. Then there's life in't. Nay, if you get it, you shall get it with running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.⁶

[Exit running; ATTENDANTS follow.]

4. Authorize.

5. He hands him an imaginary pardon.

6. A vile trickster, a Machiavellian.

7. Lear imagines that he has just come in from hunting, as in I.iv.

8. Sense and nonsense.

9. Cry over.

1. "All the world's a stage" is a commonplace. Lear then thinks of the "stage" as a platform to preach from, but the word "block" suggests a mounting-block for getting on horseback, and, in another sense, hats, whence "felt."

2. Try the experiment.

3. Helpers.

4. Because of his tears.

5. "Bravely": (1) courageously; (2) in fine clothes. "Smug": neat.

6. I.e., the case is not yet desperate; but if you want me, you will have to catch me. "Sa, sa": a hunting cry, urging the hounds to greater speed.

GENT. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch,
 Past speaking of in a king! Thou hast one daughter, 200
 Who redeems nature from the general curse
 Which twain have brought her to.

EDG. Hail, gentle⁷ sir.

GENT. Sir, speed you. What's your will?

EDG. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward?⁸

GENT. Most sure and vulgar.⁹ Everyone hears that, 205
 Which can distinguish sound.

EDG. But, by your favor,

How near's the other army?

GENT. Near and on speedy foot. The main descry

Stands on the hourly thought.¹

EDG. I thank you, sir. That's all. 210

GENT. Though that the queen on special cause is here,
 Her army is moved on.

EDG. I thank you, sir. [Exit GENT.]

GLOU. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from me;

Let not my worser spirit² tempt me again

To die before you please!

EDG. Well pray you, father. 215

GLOU. Now, good sir, what are you?

EDG. A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows;

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to³ good pity. Give me your hand,

I'll lead you to some bidding.⁴

GLOU. Hearty thanks. 220

The bounty and the benison of heaven

To boot, and boot!

[Enter OSWALD.]

OSW. A proclaimed prize! Most happy!

That eyeless head of thine was first framed flesh

To raise my fortunes. Thou old unhappy traitor, 225

Briefly thyself remember.⁵ The sword is out

That must destroy thee.

GLOU. Now let thy friendly hand

Put strength enough to 't. [EDGAR interposes.]

OSW. Wherefore, bold peasant.

Darest thou support a published⁶ traitor? Hence,

Lest that the infection of his fortune take 230

Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

EDG. Chill not let go, zir, without vurther 'casion.⁷

OSW. Let go, slave, or thou diest!

EDG. Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor volk pass. An chud⁸ ha' bin zwaggered out of my life, 't would not ha' bin 235

7. Noble.

8. In preparation.

9. Common knowledge.

1. We expect to descry the main force within the hour.

2. My evil genius.

3. Susceptible to.

4. Abode.

5. Remember your sins and repent.

6. Proclaimed.

7. Conventional rustic dialect, similar to that of Somersetshire. "Chill": I will.

8. If I should.

zo long as 'tis by a vortnight. Nay, come not near th' old man; keep out, che vor ye, or ise try whether your costard or my ballow be the harder.⁹ Chill be plain with you.

OSW. Out, dunghill!

EDG. Chill pick your teeth, zir. Come! No matter vor your foins.¹ 240

[They fight, and EDGAR knocks him down.]

OSW. Slave, thou hast slain me. Villain, take my purse.

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body;
And give the letters² which thou find'st about me
To Edmund earl of Gloucester. Seek him out
Upon the British party. O, untimely death!

Death!

[He dies.] 245

EDG. I know thee well: a serviceable villain;
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress
As badness would desire.

GLOU. What, is he dead?

EDG. Sit you down, father; rest you. 250

Let's see his pockets; the letters that he speaks of
May be my friends. He's dead; I am only sorry
He had no other death'sman. Let us see.

Leave, gentle wax;³ and, manners blame us not.

To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their hearts;
Their papers, is more lawful. 255

[Reads.] "Let our reciprocal vows be remembered. You have many opportunities to cut him off.⁴ If your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror. Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my jail; from the loathed warmth wherof deliver me, and supply the place for your labor. 260

Your—wife, so I would say—
Affectionate servant,⁵

"CONERIL." 265

O undistinguished space of woman's will!⁶

A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;

And the exchange my brother! Here, in the sands,

Thee I'll rake up, the post unsanctified⁷

Of murderous lechers; and in the mature time⁸

With this ungracious paper strike the sight 270

Of the death-practiced⁹ duke. For him 'tis well

That of thy death and business I can tell.

GLOU. The king is mad. How stiff¹ is my vile sense,

That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling 275

Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract;

So should my thoughts be severed from my griefs,

9. Keep out, I warrant you, or I'll see whether your head or my cudgel is harder.

1. Thrusts.

2. I.e., letter.

3. By your leave, gentle wax (as he unseals the letter).

4. I.e., kill Albany.

5. I.e., lover.

6. O limitless extent of woman's lust.

7. Unholy letter-carrier.

8. When time is ripe.

9. Whose death was plotted.

1. Unbending.

End of
I am the wax
(gentle)

And woes by wrong imaginations lose
The knowledge of themselves.²

[Drum afar off.]

EDG.

Give me your hand.

Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum.

Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend.

[Exeunt.]

280

SCENE 7

[Enter CORDELIA, KENT, DOCTOR, and a GENTLEMAN.]

COR. O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work,
To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,
And every measure fail me.³

KENT. To be acknowledged, madam, is o'erpaid.
All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more nor clipped, but so.⁴

5

COR. Be better suited.
These weeds are memories of those worser hours.⁵
I prithee, put them off.

KENT. Pardon me, dear madam;
Yet to be known shortens my made intent.⁶
My boon I make it, that you know me not Till time and I think meet.

10

COR. Then be 't so, my good lord. [To the DOCTOR.] How does the king?

DOCT. Madam, sleeps still.

COR. O you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
The untuned and jarring senses, O, wind up
Of this child-changed father!⁷

15

DOCT. So please your majesty
That we may wake the king? He hath slept long.

COR. Be governed by your knowledge, and proceed
I' the sway of your own will. Is he arrayed?⁸

20

[Enter LEAR in a chair carried by SERVANTS.]

GENT. Aye, madam. In the heaviness of his sleep
We put fresh garments on him.

DOCT. Be by, good madam, when we do awake him;
I doubt not of his temperance.⁹

COR. Very well.

[Music.]

DOCT. Please you, draw near. Louder the music there!

25

COR. O my dear father! Restoration hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms that my two sisters

2. I.e., I would be better off mad; then my troubles would be separated from my thoughts and accordingly would have no knowledge of themselves.

3. Since Kent's goodness is immeasurable.

4. Neither amplified nor abbreviated, but accurate.

5. Be better dressed. These clothes recall your hours of trouble.

6. I am not ready to be known yet.

7. Tune up the out-of-tune senses of this father who is changed into a child.

8. Dressed.

9. Normality.

Have in thy reverence made!¹

KENT.

Kind and dear princess!

COR. Had you not been their father, these white flakes

30

Had challenged pity of them.² Was this a face

To be opposed against the warring winds?

To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?

In the most terrible and nimble stroke

Of quick, cross lightning? to watch—poor perdu!—

35

With this thin helm?³ Mine enemy's dog,

Though he had bit me, should have stood that night

Against my fire; and wast thou fain, poor father,

To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,

In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!

40

'Tis wonder that thy life and wits at once

Had not concluded all. He wakes; speak to him.

DOCT. Madam, do you; 'tis fittest.

COR. How does my royal lord? How fares your majesty?

LEAR. You do me wrong to take me out o' the grave.

45

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound

Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears

Do scald like molten lead.⁴

COR.

Sir, do you know me?

LEAR. You are a spirit, I know. When did you die?

COR. Still, still, far wide!⁵

50

DOCT. He's scarce awake. Let him alone awhile.

LEAR. Where have I been? Where am I? Fair daylight?

I am mightily abused.⁶ I should e'en die with pity,

To see another thus. I know not what to say.

I will not swear these are my hands. Let's see.

55

I feel this pin prick. Would I were assured

Of my condition!

COR.

O, look upon me, sir,

And hold your hands in benediction o'er me:

No, sir, you must not kneel.

LEAR. Pray, do not mock me.

60

I am a very foolish fond⁷ old man,

Fourscore and upward, not an hour more nor less;

And, to deal plainly,

I fear I am not in my perfect mind.

Methinks I should know you, and know this man;

65

Yet I am doubtful; for I am mainly⁸ ignorant

What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not

Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me;

1. Have done to you, who should be treated with reverence.

2. These white hairs would have claimed pity from them.

3. Poor solitary sentinel, with this thin head protection (his hair).

4. In the New Testament Apocrypha the damm'd in hell are tormented on wheels of fire.

5. Wandering in the mind.

6. Deluded.

7. In his dotage.

8. Completely.

For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia. 70

COR. And so I am, I am.

LEAR. Be your tears wet? Yes, faith. I pray, weep not.

If you have poison for me, I will drink it.

I know you do not love me; for your sisters

Have, as I do remember, done me wrong. 75

You have some cause, they have not.

COR. No cause, no cause.

LEAR. Am I in France?

KENT. In your own kingdom, sir.

LEAR. Do not abuse⁹ me.

DOCT. Be comforted, good madam. The great rage,¹

You see, is killed in him; and yet it is danger 80

To make him even o'er the time he has lost.²

Desire him to go in. Trouble him no more

Till further settling.³

COR. Will't please your highness walk?

LEAR. You must bear with me:

Pray you now, forget and forgive. I am old and foolish. 85

[Exeunt all but KENT and GENTLEMAN.]

GENT. Holds it true, sir, that the Duke of Cornwall was so slain?

KENT. Most certain, sir.

GENT. Who is conductor⁴ of his people?

KENT. As 'tis said, the bastard son of Gloucester.

GENT. They say Edgar, his banished son, is with the Earl of Kent 90 in Germany.

KENT. Report is changeable. 'Tis time to look about. The powers of the kingdom approach apace.⁵

GENT. The arbitrement⁶ is like to be bloody. Fare you well, sir.

[Exit.]

KENT. My point and period will be thoroughly wrought,⁷ 95

Or well or ill, as this day's battle's fought. [Exit.]

Act V

SCENE 1

[Enter, with drum and colors, EDMUND, REGAN, GENTLEMEN, and SOLDIERS.]

EDM. Know of the duke if his last purpose hold,

Or whether since he is advised by aught

To change the course.⁸ He's full of alteration

And self-reproving. Bring his constant pleasure.⁹

[To a GENTLEMAN, who goes out.]

9. Delude.

1. Violent delirium.

2. I.e., it is dangerous to make him go over his recent experiences.

3. Till he has calmed down.

4. Leader.

5. The British forces are approaching rapidly.

6. Decisive battle.

7. The end and purpose of my life will be completely worked out.

8. Find out from Albany if he still intends to fight or has changed his mind.

9. Fixed decision.

REG. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.¹

5

EDM. 'Tis to be doubted,² madam.

REG. Now, sweet lord,
You know the goodness I intend upon you.
Tell me—but truly—but then speak the truth,
Do you not love my sister?

EDM. In honored love.

REG. But have you never found my brother's way
To the forfended³ place?

10

EDM. That thought abuses you.

REG. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct
And bosomed with her, as far as we call hers.⁴

EDM. No, by mine honor, madam.

REG. I never shall endure her. Dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.

15

EDM. Fear me not.

She and the duke her husband!

[Enter, with drum and colors, ALBANY, GONERIL, and SOLDIERS.]

GON. [aside] I had rather lose the battle than that sister
Should loosen⁵ him and me.

ALB. Our very loving sister, well be-met.

20

Sir, this I hear: the king is come to his daughter,
With others whom the rigor of our state⁶

Forced to cry out. Where I could not be honest,
I never yet was valiant. For this business,

It toucheth us, as France invades our land,
Not bolds the king, with others, whom, I fear,
Most just and heavy causes make oppose.⁷

25

EDM. Sir, you speak nobly.

REG. Why is this reasoned?⁸

GON. Combine together 'gainst the enemy;
For these domestic and particular broils
Are not the question here.

30

ALB. Let's then determine
With the ancient of war on our proceeding.⁹

EDM. I shall attend you presently at your tent.

REG. Sister, you'll go with us?

GON. No.

35

REG. 'Tis most convenient; pray you, go with us.

GON. [aside] O, ho, I know the riddle.—I will go.

[As they are going out, enter EDGAR disguised.]

EDG. If e'er your grace had speech with man so poor,
Hear me one word.

1. I.e., Oswald has certainly come to harm.

2. Feared.

3. Forbidden.

4. I am afraid you have been intimate with her, in every sense of the word.

5. Separate.

6. Harshness of our rule.

7. It concerns us because France invades our land, but not because it supports the king and others who have great and justified grievances and for that reason oppose us.

8. Why discuss it?

9. Consult with veterans on our strategy.

- ALB. I'll overtake you. Speak.
[Exeunt all but ALBANY and EDGAR.]
- EDG. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter. 40
 If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
 For him that brought it. Wretched though I seem,
 I can produce a champion that will prove
 What is avouched¹ there. If you miscarry,
 Your business of the world hath so an end, 45
 And machination² ceases. Fortune love you!
- ALB. Stay till I have read the letter.
- EDG. I was forbid it.
 When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
 And I'll appear again.
- ALB. Why, fare thee well. I will o'erlook³ thy paper. 50
[Exit EDGAR.]
- [Re-enter EDMUND.]
- EDM. The enemy's in view; draw up your powers.
 Here is the guess of their true strength and forces
 By diligent discovery; but your haste
 Is now urged on you.
- ALB. We will greet the time.⁴ [Exit.]
- EDM. To both these sisters have I sworn my love; 55
 Each jealous of the other, as the stung
 Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
 Both? one? or neither? Neither can be enjoyed,
 If both remain alive. To take the widow
 Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril; 60
 And hardly shall I carry out my side,
 Her husband being alive. Now then we'll use
 His countenance⁵ for the battle; which being done,
 Let her who would be rid of him devise
 His speedy taking off.⁶ As for the mercy 65
 Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia,
 The battle done, and they within our power,
 Shall never see his pardon; for my state
 Stands on me to defend, not to debate.⁷ [Exit.]

SCENE 2

[Alarum within. Enter, with drum and colors, LEAR, CORDELIA, and SOLDIERS, over the stage; and exeunt.]

[Enter EDGAR and GLOUCESTER.]

- EDG. Here, father,⁸ take the shadow of this tree
 For your good host; pray that the right may thrive:

1. Asserted; "miscarry": are defeated.
 2. Plotting.
 3. Read.
 4. Meet the emergency.
 5. Authority.

6. Killing.
 7. My interests require me to act, not discuss moral considerations.
 8. Old man (Edgar has not revealed his identity).

If ever I return to you again,
I'll bring you comfort.

GLOU. Grace go with you, sir! [Exit EDGAR.]
[Alarum and retreat within. Re-enter EDGAR.]

EDG. Away, old man! give me thy hand! away! 5
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en.
Give me thy hand! come on!

GLOU. No farther, sir; a man may rot even here.

EDG. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither; 10
Ripeness is all. Come on!

GLOU. And that's true, too. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 3

[Enter, in conquest, with drum and colors, EDMUND;
LEAR and CORDELIA, prisoners; CAPTAIN, SOLDIERS, &c.]

EDM. Some officers take them away. Good guard,
Until their greater pleasures first be known
That are to censure them.⁹

COR. We are not the first
Who, with best meaning, have incurred the worst. 5
For thee, oppress'd king, am I cast down;
Myself could else out-frown false Fortune's frown.
Shall we not see these daughters and these sisters?

LEAR. No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison.
We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage.
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,¹ 10
And ask of thee forgiveness. So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded butterflies,² and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses and who wins; who 's in, and who 's out; 15
And take upon 's the mystery of things,³
As if we were Gods' spies; and we'll wear out,
In a walled prison, packs and sects of great ones,⁴
That ebb and flow by the moon.

EDM. Take them away.
LEAR. Upon such sacrifices,⁵ my Cordelia, 20
The gods themselves throw incense. Have I caught thee?
He that parts us shall bring a brand from heavens,
And fire us hence like foxes.⁶ Wipe thine eyes;
The good-years shall devour them, flesh and fell,⁷
Ere they shall make us weep! We'll see 'em starved first. 25

9. Until we know the wishes of the higher authorities who are to judge them.

1. It was considered shocking for a parent to kneel to his child.

2. Foppish courtiers.

3. Profess to understand the mysterious course of events.

4. We will outlast, in prison, cliques and parties.

5. As their renunciation of the world.

6. I.e., smoke us out as hunters smoke foxes from their holes.

7. Time shall devour them (Goneril and Regan), flesh and skin.

Come. [Exeunt LEAR and CORDELIA, guarded.]

EDM. Come hither, captain; hark.

Take thou this note [giving a paper]. Go follow them to prison:

One step I have advanced thee. If thou dost
As this instructs thee; thou dost make thy way 30
To noble fortunes. Know thou this, that men
Are as the time is. To be tender-minded
Does not become a sword. Thy great employment
Will not bear question.⁸ Either say thou'lt do 't,
Or thrive by other means.

CAPT. I'll do 't, my lord. 35

EDM. About it; and write happy⁹ when thou hast done.

Mark, I say, instantly; and carry it so
As I have set it down.¹

CAPT. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;

If it be a man's work, I'll do 't. [Exit.] 40

[Flourish. Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, another
CAPTAIN, and SOLDIERS.]

ALB. Sir, you have showed today your valiant strain,
And fortune led you well. You have the captives
That were the opposites of this day's strife.
I do require them of you, so to use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety 45
May equally determine.

EDM. Sir, I thought it fit
To send the old and miserable king
To some retention and appointed guard;
Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side, 50
And turn our impressed lances in our eyes²
Which do command them. With him I sent the queen;
My reason all the same; and they are ready
Tomorrow, or at further space, t' appear
Where you shall hold your session. At this time 55
We sweat and bleed; the friend hath lost his friend;
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are cursed
By those that feel their sharpness.³
The question of Cordelia and her father
Requires a fitter place.

ALB. Sir, by your patience, 60
I hold you but a subject of this war,
Not as a brother.

REG. That's as we list to grace him.⁴

8. Cannot be discussed.

9. Consider yourself fortunate.

1. Do it immediately and do it just as I have written it down.

2. I.e., to win popular support and turn conscripted soldiers against us.

3. I.e., the best causes are injured by high feelings.

4. That depends on how much I please to honor him.

Methinks our pleasure might have been demanded,
 Ere you had spoken so far. He led our powers;
 Bore the commission of my place and person;
 The which immediacy⁵ may well stand up,
 And call itself your brother. 65

GON. Not so hot!
 In his own grace he doth exalt himself,
 More than in your addition.⁶

REG. In my rights,
 By me invested, he compeers the best.⁷ 70

GON. That were the most, if he should husband you.

REG. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

GON. Holla, holla!
 That eye that told you so looked but a-squint.

REG. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer
 From a full-flowing stomach.⁸ General, 75
 Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony:
 Dispose of them, of me; the walls⁹ are thine.
 Witness the world, that I create thee here
 My lord and master.

GON. Mean you to enjoy him?

ALB. The let-alone lies not in your good will. 80

EDM. Nor in thine, lord.

ALB. Half-blooded fellow, yes.

REG. [to EDMUND] Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine.

ALB. Stay yet; hear reason. Edmund, I arrest thee
 On¹ capital treason; and, in thine attain,
 This gilded serpent [pointing to GONERIL]. For your claim, fair sister, 85
 I bar it in the interest of my wife;
 'Tis she is sub-contracted to this lord,
 And I, her husband, contradict your banes.²
 If you will marry, make your loves to me,
 My lady is bespoke.

GON. An interlude!³ 90

ALB. Thou art armed, Gloucester. Let the trumpet sound.

If none appear to prove upon thy head

Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,

There is my pledge [throwing down a glove]; I'll prove it on thy heart,

Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less 95
 Than I have proclaimed thee.

5. I.e., being my immediate representative.

6. He ranks higher by his own qualities than by the titles you confer on him.

7. By virtue of the rights I have vested in him, he equals the highest rank.

8. From a tide of high resentment.

9. I.e., Regan's person, referring to the common conceit that the lady is a castle, besieged by her lover.

1. For.

2. Banns (announcements in church of an impending marriage).

3. I.e., what a drama this is!

REG. Sick, O, sick!

CON. [aside] If not, I'll ne'er trust medicine.⁴

EDM. There 's my exchange [throwing down a glove]. What in the world he is That names me traitor, villain-like he lies.
Call by thy trumpet. He that dares approach, 100
On him, on you, who not? I will maintain⁵
My truth and honor firmly.

ALB. A herald, ho!

EDM. A herald, ho, a herald!

ALB. Trust to thy single virtue⁶; for thy soldiers,
All levied in my name, have in my name 105
Took their discharge.

REG. My sickness grows upon me.

ALB. She is not well; convey her to my tent. [Exit REGAN, led.]
[Enter a HERALD.]
Come hither, herald,—Let the trumpet sound,—
And read out this.

CAPT. Sound, trumpet! [A trumpet sounds.]

HER. [reads] "If any man of quality or degree within the lists 110 of the army will maintain upon Edmund, supposed Earl of Gloucester, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet. He is bold in his defense."

EDM. Sound! [First trumpet.]

HER. Again! [Second trumpet. 115]

HER. Again! [Third trumpet.]
[Trumpet answers within.]
[Enter EDGAR, at the third sound, armed, with a trumpet before him.]

ALB. Ask him his purposes, why he appears
Upon this call o' the trumpet.

HER. What are you?
Your name, your quality? and why you answer
This present summons?

EDG. Know, my name is lost; 120
By treason's tooth bare-gnawn and canker-bit.⁷
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope.

ALB. Which is that adversary?

EDG. What's he that speaks for Edmund Earl of Gloucester?

EDM. Himself. What say'st thou to him?

EDG. Draw thy sword, 125
That, if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Here is mine.
Behold, it is the privilege of mine honors,
My oath, and my profession. I protest,

4. Poison.
5. Prove in combat.
6. Your own personal strength.

7. I.e., gnawn and eaten by the tooth of the caterpillar, treason.

- Maugre⁸ thy strength, youth, place, and eminence, 130
 Despite thy victor sword and fire-new⁹ fortune,
 Thy valor and thy heart, thou art a traitor;
 False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father;
 Conspirant 'gainst this high-illustrious prince;
 And, from the extremest upward of thy head 135
 To the descent and dust below thy foot,
 A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou "No,"
 This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent
 To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak,
 Thou liest.
- EDM. In wisdom I should ask thy name; 140
 But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike
 And that thy tongue some say¹ of breeding breathes,
 What safe and nicely I might well delay
 By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn.
 Back do I toss these treasons to thy head; 145
 With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart;
 Which, for they yet glance by and scarcely bruise,
 This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
 Where they shall rest for ever. Trumpets, speak!
 [Alarums. They fight. EDMUND falls.]
- ALB. Save him, save him!²
- CON. This is practice,³ Gloucester: 150
 By the law of arms thou wast not bound to answer
 An unknown opposite. Thou art not vanquished,
 But cozened and beguiled.
- ALB. Shut your mouth, dame,
 Or with this paper shall I stople it.⁴
 Thou worse than any name, read thine own evil. 155
 No tearing, lady! I perceive you know it.
 [Gives the letter to EDMUND.]
- CON. Say, if I do, the laws are mine, not thine.
 Who can arraign me for 't?
- ALB. Most monstrous! oh!
 Know'st thou this paper?
- CON. Ask me not what I know. [Exit.] 160
- ALB. Go after her: she's desperate; govern her.
- EDM. What you have charged me with, that have I done;
 And more, much more; the time will bring it out.
 'Tis past, and so am I. But what art thou
 That hast this fortune⁵ on me? If thou 'rt noble,
 I do forgive thee.
- EDG. Let's exchange charity. 165

8. Despite.

9. Brand new.

1. Smack.

2. A puzzle, variously explained. Dr. Johnson thought Albany wanted Edmund's life saved temporarily so he could be proved guilty; other editors give the line to Goneril.

3. Trickery.

4. Plug it up.

5. This downfall, turn of the wheel of Fortune. Cf. line 204, below.

I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund;
 If more, the more thou hast wronged me.
 My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.
 The gods are just, and of our pleasant⁶ vices
 Make instruments to plague us. 170
 The dark and vicious place where thee he got⁷
 Cost him his eyes.

EDM. Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true;
 The wheel is come full circle! I am here.

ALB. Methought thy very gait did prophesy
 A royal nobleness. I must embrace thee. 175
 Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I
 Did hate thee or thy father!

EDG. Worthy prince. I know 't.

ALB. Where have you hid yourself?

How have you known the miseries of your father?

EDG. By nursing them, my lord. List a brief tale; 180
 And when 'tis told, O, that my heart would burst!
 The bloody proclamation to escape,
 That followed me so near,—O, our lives' sweetness!
 That we the pain of death would hourly die
 Rather than die at once!⁸—taught me to shift 185
 Into a madman's rags; to assume a semblance
 That very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
 Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
 Their precious stones new lost; became his guide,
 Led him, begged for him, saved him from despair; 190
 Never,—O fault!—revealed myself unto him,
 Until some half-hour past, when I was armed:
 Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
 I asked his blessing, and from first to last
 Told him my pilgrimage. But his flawed heart,— 195
 Alack, too weak the conflict to support!—
 'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
 Burst smilingly.

EDM. This speech of yours hath moved me,
 And shall perchance do good; but speak you on;
 You look as you had something more to say. 200

ALB. If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;
 For I am almost ready to dissolve,⁹
 Hearing of this.

EDG. This would have seemed a period
 To such as love not sorrow; but another,
 To amplify too much would make much more, 205
 And top extremity.¹⁰

6. Pleasure-giving.

7. Begot.

8. I.e., how sweet life must be to persuade us to go on dying every hour rather than dying once for all.

9. Melt in tears.

10. This would have seemed the end to those who don't love sorrow; only another sorrow, if I were to tell all about it, would go beyond that extreme limit.

Whilst I was big¹ in clamor came there in a man,
 Who, having seen me in my worst estate,
 Shunned my abhorred society; but then, finding
 Who 'twas that so endured, with his strong arms 210
 He fastened on my neck, and bellowed out
 As he'd burst heaven; threw him on² my father;
 Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him
 That ever ear received; which in recounting
 His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life 215
 Began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sounded,
 And there I left him tranced.³

ALB. But who was this?

EDG. Kent, sir, the banished Kent; who in disguise
 Followed his enemy king, and did him service
 Improper for a slave.⁴ 220

[Enter a GENTLEMAN, with a bloody knife.]

GENT. Help, help, O, help!

EDG. What kind of help?

ALB. Speak, man.

EDG. What means that bloody knife?

GENT. 'Tis hot, it smokes,

It came even from the heart of—O, she's dead!

ALB. Who dead? speak, man.

GENT. Your lady, sir, your lady! and her sister 225

By her is poisoned; she hath confessed it.

EDM. I was contracted to them both. All three

Now marry in an instant.

[Enter KENT.]

EDG. Here comes Kent.

ALB. Produce their bodies, be they alive or dead:

This judgment of the heavens, that makes us tremble,
 Touches us not with pity. [Exit GENTLEMAN.] 230

O, is this he?

The time will not allow the compliment⁵

Which very manners urges.

KENT. I am come

To bid my king and master aye good night.

Is he not here?

ALB. Great thing of us forgot! 235

Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's Cordelia?

See'st thou this object, Kent?

[The bodies of GONERIL and REGAN are brought in.]

KENT. Alack, why thus?

EDM. Yet Edmund was beloved.

The one the other poisoned for my sake,

1. Loud.

2. Embraced.

3. Senseless.

4. I.e., followed the king who was hostile to him and did service for him you wouldn't ask a slave to do.

5. Ceremony.

And after slew herself.

240

ALB. Even so. Cover their faces.

EDM. I pant for life. Some good I mean to do,
 Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,
 Be brief in it, to the castle; for my writ
 Is on the life of Lear and on Cordelia:
 Nay, send in time.

245

ALB. Run, run, O, run!

EDG. To who, my lord? Who hath the office? send Thy token of reprieve.

EDM. Well thought on. Take my sword,
 Give it the captain.

ALB. Haste thee for thy life. [Exit EDGAR.] 250

EDM. He hath commission from thy wife and me
 To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
 To lay the blame upon her own despair,
 That she fordid⁶ herself.

ALB. The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile. 255

[EDMUND is borne off.]

[Re-enter LEAR, with CORDELIA dead in his arms; EDGAR,
 CAPTAIN, and others following.]

LEAR. Howl, howl, howl, howl! O, you are men of stones:
 Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so
 That heaven's vault should crack. She's gone forever!
 I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
 She's dead as earth. Lend me a looking-glass;
 If that her breath will mist or strain the stone,⁷
 Why, then she lives.

260

KENT. Is this the promised end?⁸

EDG. Or image of that horror?

ALB. Fall, and cease!⁹

LEAR. This feather stirs; she lives! If it be so,
 It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows
 That ever I have felt.

265

KENT. [kneeling] O my good master!

LEAR. Prithee, away.

EDG. 'Tis noble Kent, your friend.

LEAR. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all!
 I might have saved her; now she's gone for ever!
 Cordelia, Cordelia! stay a little. Ha!
 What is 't thou say'st? Her voice was ever soft,
 Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.
 I killed the slave that was a-hanging thee.

270

CAPT. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

LEAR. Did I not, fellow?

275

I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion¹

6. Destroyed.

7. Mirror (of polished crystal).

8. Doomsday, the Last Judgment.

9. Let the heavens fall, and everything come to an end.

1. Light sword.

I would have made them skip: I am old now,
 And these same crosses² spoil me. Who are you?
 Mine eyes are not o' the best. I'll tell you straight.³

KENT. If fortune brag of two she loved and hated,
 One of them we behold. 280

LEAR. This is a dull sight. Are you not Kent?

KENT. The same,

Your servant Kent. Where is your servant Caius?

LEAR. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;
 He'll strike, and quickly too. He's dead and rotten. 285

KENT. No, my good lord; I am the very man,—

LEAR. I'll see that straight.⁴

KENT. That, from your first of difference and decay,⁵
 Have followed your sad steps.

LEAR. You are welcome hither.

KENT. Nor no man else. All's cheerless, dark, and deadly. 290

Your eldest daughters have fordone themselves,
 And desperately⁶ are dead.

LEAR. Aye, so I think.

ALB. He knows not what he says; and vain it is That we present us to him.

EDG. Very bootless.⁷

[Enter a CAPTAIN.]

CAPT. Edmund is dead, my lord.

ALB. That's but a trifle here. 295

You lords and noble friends, know our intent.

What comfort to this great decay⁸ may come

Shall be applied. For us, we will resign,

During the life of this old majesty,

To him our absolute power; [to EDGAR and KENT] you, to your rights; 300

With boot, and such addition⁹ as your honors

Have more than merited. All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cup of their deserving. O, see, see!

LEAR. And my poor fool¹ is hanged! No, no, no life! 305

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,

And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no more,

Never, never, never, never, never!

Pray you, undo this button. Thank you, sir.

Do you see this? Look on her, look, her lips,

Look there, look there!

[Dies.] 310

EDG. He faints! My lord, my lord!

KENT. Break, heart; I prithee, break!

2. Troubles, frustrations.

3. Straightway.

4. Look into it immediately.

5. Beginning of change and decline in fortunes.

6. From despair.

7. Futile.

8. This great man ruined.

9. More besides, and such titles.

1. An affectionate term, referring to Cordelia.

EDG. Look up, my lord.
 KENT. Vex not his ghost.² O, let him pass! He hates him much
 That would upon the rack of this tough world
 Stretch him out longer.³

EDG. He is gone, indeed. 315

KENT. The wonder is, he hath endured so long.

He but usurped his life.

ALB. Bear them from hence. Our present business

Is general woe. [to KENT and EDGAR] Friends of my soul, you twain

Rule in this realm, and the gored⁴ state sustain. 320

KENT. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;

My master calls me, I must not say no.

EDG. The weight of this sad time we must obey;

Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.

The oldest hath borne most; we that are young 325

Shall never see so much, nor live so long.⁵

[Exeunt, with dead march.]

1604-5

1608

2. Departing spirit.

3. The rack was an instrument of torture in which the victim's arms and legs were pulled, even to dislocation.

4. Wounded.

5. These lines are given to Albany in the Quarto, to Edgar in the Folio. Editors who follow the Quarto argue that Shakespeare always gives the concluding speech in a tragedy to the highest-ranking person who survives. Those who follow the Folio say that Edgar must reply to Albany's "Friends of my soul" and that "we that are young" suits Edgar better than Albany. In effect, Edgar tacitly accepts the commission to rule which Kent has had to decline, so he is the highest-ranking survivor.

THOMAS NASHE

(1567-1601)

Nashe, a Cambridge graduate, was a versatile writer of controversial pamphlets, satire, plays, a novel, and lyric verse. He was one of the university wits who came to London and wrote for the stage and the press. They lived short and precarious lives: Nashe was about 33 when he died; his friend Christopher Marlowe died at 29, George Peele at 30, and Robert Greene at 32. Nashe's personal enemy was an older man, Gabriel Harvey, Spenser's friend; with him he exchanged a series of vituperative and slanderous pamphlets in which Nashe's talent for invective was exploited to the fullest, until the ecclesiastical authorities ordered, in June, 1599, that "all Nashe's books and Doctor Harvey's books be taken wheresoever they may be found and that none of their books be ever printed hereafter."

Nashe's picaresque narrative, The Unfortunate Traveler, or the Life of Jack Wilton, is a rambling account of escapades all over Europe, including some fictional exploits attributed to the poet Surrey. He wrote a festive comedy, Summer's Last Will and Testament; an attack upon women called The Anatomy of Absurdity; an attack on social abuses of every kind entitled Pierce Penniless His Supplication to the Devil; and a strident comparison between the sins of the Jews which led to the destruction of Jerusalem and the current morals and manners of London, called Christ's Tears Over Jerusalem. Nashe's outlook, like that of many satirists, was conservative: he praised the past in comparison with the present. But his prose style sometimes sounds quite modern. It is headlong, impatient, colloquial, and vivid. One of his own phrases best describes it: "No wind that blows strong but is boisterous."

Spring, the Sweet Spring¹

Spring, the sweet spring, is the year's pleasant king,
Then blooms each thing, then maids dance in a ring,
Cold doth not sting, the pretty birds do sing:
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!²

The palm and may make country houses gay,
Lambs frisk and play, the shepherds pipe all day,
And we hear aye birds tune this merry lay:
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!

The fields breathe sweet, the daisies kiss our feet,
Young lovers meet, old wives a-sunning sit,
In every street these tunes our ears do greet:
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!

Spring, the sweet spring!

1592

1600

A Litany in Time of Plague

Adieu, farewell, earth's bliss;
This world uncertain is;
Fond³ are life's lustful joys;
Death proves them all but toys;⁴
None from his darts can fly;
I am sick, I must die.
Lord, have mercy on us!

Rich men, trust not in wealth,
Gold cannot buy you health;
Physic himself must fade.
All things to end are made,
The plague full swift goes by;
I am sick, I must die.
Lord, have mercy on us!

1. This and the following lyric are from A Pleasant Comedy Called Summer's Last Will and Testament, acted before the Archbishop of Canterbury in his palace at Croydon in 1592, and published in 1600.

2. The calls of the cuckoo, the nightingale, the lapwing, and the owl respectively.

3. Foolish.

4. Trifles.

Beauty is but a flower
Which wrinkles will devour;
Brightness falls from the air;
Queens have died young and fair;
Dust hath closed Helen's eye.
I am sick, I must die. 15

Lord, have mercy on us!

Strength stoops unto the grave,
Worms feed on Hector brave;
Swords may not fight with fate,
Earth still holds ope her gate. 25
"Come, come!" the bells do cry.
I am sick, I must die.

Lord, have mercy on us.

Wit with his wantonness
Tasteth death's bitterness; 30
Hell's executioner
Hath no ears for to hear
What vain art can reply.
I am sick, I must die.

Lord, have mercy on us. 35

Haste, therefore, each degree,
To welcome destiny;
Heaven is our heritage,
Earth but a player's stage;
Mount we unto the sky. 40
I am sick, I must die.

Lord, have mercy on us.

1592

1600

From Pierce Penniless, His Supplication to the Devil

An Invective against Enemies of Poetry

With the enemies of poetry I care not if I have a bout, and those are they that term our best writers but babbling ballad-makers, holding them fantastical fools, that have wit but cannot tell how to use it. I myself have been so censured among some dull-headed divines,¹ who deem it no more cunning to write an exquisite poem than to preach pure Calvin or distill the juice of a commentary in a quarter sermon.² Prove it when you will, you slow-spirited Saturnists,³ that have nothing but the pilferies of your pen to polish an exhortation withal; no eloquence but tautologies to tie the

1. Specifically, the Reverend Richard Harvey, brother of Gabriel, in an epistle prefixed to some copies of The Lamb of God (1590).
2. I.e., plagiarize from Calvin or another commentator on those rare (once a quarter) occasions when you preach at all.

3. Dull, morose persons.

ears of your auditory unto you; no invention but "here it is to be noted, I stole this note out of Beza or Marlorat";⁴ no wit to move, no passion to urge, but only an ordinary form of preaching, blown up by use of often hearing and speaking; and you shall find there goes more exquisite pains and purity of wit to the writing of one such rare poem as *Rosamund*⁵ than to a hundred of your dunstical sermons.

Should we (as you) borrow all out of others, and gather nothing of ourselves. Our names should be baffuld⁶ on every bookseller's stall, and not a chandler's mustard pot but would wipe his mouth with our waste paper. "New herrings, new!"⁷ we must cry, every time we make ourselves public, or else we shall be christened with a hundred new titles of idiotism. Nor is poetry an art whereof there is no use in a man's whole life but to describe discontented thoughts and youthful desires; for there is no study but it doth illustrate and beautify. How admirably shine those divines above the common mediocrity, that have tasted the sweet springs of Parnassus!

Silver-tongued Smith,⁸ whose well-tuned style hath made thy death the general tears of the Muses, quaintly couldst thou devise heavenly ditties to Apollo's lute, and teach stately verse to trip it as smoothly as if Ovid and thou had but one soul. Hence alone did it proceed that thou wert such a plausible pulpit man, that before thou enteredst into the rough ways of theology thou refinedst, preparedst, and purifiedst thy mind with sweet poetry. If a simple man's censure may be admitted to speak in such an open theater of opinions, I never saw abundant reading better mixed with delight, or sentences which no man can challenge of profane affectation sounding more melodious to the ear or piercing more deep to the heart.

To them that demand what fruits the poets of our time bring forth, or wherein they are able to prove themselves necessary to the state, thus I answer: first and foremost, they have cleansed our language from barbarism and made the vulgar sort⁹ here in London (which is the fountain whose rivers flow round about England) to aspire to a richer purity of speech than is communicated with the commonality of any nation under heaven. The virtuous by their praises they encourage to be more virtuous; to vicious men they are as infernal hags to haunt their ghosts with eternal infamy after death. The soldier, in hope to have his high deeds celebrated by their pens, despiseth a whole army of perils, and acteth wonders exceeding all human conjecture. Those that care neither for God

4. Theodore Beza (1519-1605), successor of Calvin at Geneva; most eminent Protestant divine in Europe.
Augustine Marlorat (1506-63), another of the Geneva reformers.
5. Samuel Daniel's The Complaint of Rosamund (1592).

6. Treated with scorn.

7. A fishmonger's street cry.

8. Henry Smith (1550-91), a very popular preacher. He published some verse in Latin.

9. Common people.

nor the devil, by their quills are kept in awe. Multi famam, saith one, pauci conscientiam verentur.¹

Let God see what he will, they would be loath to have the shame of the world. What age will not praise immortal Sir Philip Sidney, whom noble Salustius² (that thrice singular French poet) hath famoused; together with Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Keeper, and merry Sir Thomas More, for the chief pillars of our English speech. Not so much but Chaucer's host, Bailly in Southwark, and his wife of Bath he keeps such a stir with, in his Canterbury Tales, shall be talked of whilst the Bath is used, or there be ever a bad house in Southwark.³ Gentles, it is not your lay chronographers, that write of nothing but of mayors and sheriffs and the dear year⁴ and the great frost, that can endow your names with never-dated glory; for they want the wings of choice words to fly to heaven, which we have; they cannot sweeten a discourse, or wrest admiration from men reading, as we can, reporting the meanest accident. Poetry is the honey of all flowers, the quintessence of all sciences, the marrow of wit, and the very phrase of angels. How much better is it, then, to have an elegant lawyer to plead one's cause, than a stutting townsman that loseth himself in his tale and doth nothing but make legs;⁵ so much it is better for a nobleman or gentleman to have his honor's story related, and his deeds emblazoned, by a poet, than a citizen.

Alas, poor Latinless authors, they are so simple they know not what they do; they no sooner spy a new ballad, and his name to it that compiled it, but they put him in for one of the learned men of our time. I marvel how the masterless men, that set up their bills in Paul's⁶ for services, and such as paste up their papers on every post, for arithmetic and writing schools, 'scape eternity amongst them. I believe both they and the knight marshal's men, that nail up mandates at the court gate for annoying the palace with filth or making water, if they set their names to the writing, will shortly make up the number of the learned men of our time, and be as famous as the rest. For my part, I do challenge⁷ no praise of learning to myself, yet have I worn a gown in the University, and so hath caret tempus non habet moribus;⁸ but this I dare presume, that if any Maecenas⁹ bind me to him by his bounty or extend some sound liberality to me worth the speaking of, I will do him as much honor as any poet of my beardless years shall in England. Not that I am so

1. "Many respect fame; only a few, conscience," Pliny, Epistles III.20.

2. Guillaume de Saluste du Bartas (1544-90), an immensely popular religious poet, both in French and in English translation. It is in his Second Semaine that he praises Sidney, Bacon, and More.

3. Southwark was notorious for its brothels.

4. Year of high prices.

5. Bow and scrape.

6. Advertisements for jobs were commonly posted on the west door of the cathedral.

7. Claim.

8. (Bad Latin) i.e., even unlearned persons have worn a university gown.

9. Roman patron of poets, especially Virgil and Horace.

confident what I can do, but that I attribute so much to my thankful mind above others, which I am persuaded would enable me to work miracles.

On the contrary side, if I be evil intreated, or sent away with a flea in mine ear, let him look that I will rail on him so undly; not for an hour or a day, whiles the injury is fresh in my memory; but in some elaborate polished poem, which I will leave to the world when I am dead, to be a living image to all ages of his beggarly parsimony and ignoble illiberality; and let him not (whatsoever he be) measure the weight of my words by this book, where I write quicquid in buccam venerit,¹ as fast as my hand can trot; but I have terms (if I be vexed) laid in steep in *aqua fortis*² and gunpowder, that shall rattle through the skies and make an earthquake in a peasant's ears. Put case (since I am not yet out of the theme of wrath) that some tired jade belonging to the press, whom I never wronged in my life, hath named me expressly in print³ (as I will not do him) and accuse me of want of learning, unbraiding me for reviving in an epistle of mine, the reverent memory of Sir Thomas More, Sir John Cheke, Doctor Watson, Doctor Haddon, Doctor Carr, Master Ascham,⁴ as if they were no meat but for his master-ship's mouth, or none but some such as the son of a ropemaker were worthy to mention them. To show how I can rail, thus would I begin to rail on him, "Thou that hadst thy hood turned over thy ears when thou wert a bachelor,⁵ for abusing of Aristotle and setting him upon the school gates painted with ass's ears on his head, is it any discredit for me, thou great babound,⁶ thou pygmy brag-gart, thou pamphleter of nothing but paeans,⁷ to be censured by thee, that hast scorned the prince of philosophers? Thou that in thy dialogues sold'st honey for a halfpenny, and the choicest writers extant for cues⁸ apiece, that camest to the logic schools when thou wert a freshman and writ'st phrases, off with thy gown and untruss, for I mean to lash thee mightily. Thou hast a brother,⁹ hast thou not, student in almanacs, go to, I'll stand to it, fathered one of thy bastards (a book, I mean) which being of thy begetting was set forth under his name?"

* * *

The Defense of Plays

That state or kingdom that is in league with all the world, and hath no foreign sword to vex it, is not half so strong or confirmed to

1. Whatever occurs to me.

2. Soaking in nitric acid.

3. I.e., Richard Harvey in The Lamb of God. Nashe has a marginal note at this point which reads: "I would tell you in what book it is, but I am afraid it would make his book sell in his latter days, which hitherto hath lain dead and been a great loss to the printer."

4. Humanists praised by Nashe in his preface to Greene's Menaphon (1589).

5. Bachelor of Arts, recent graduate.

6. Baboon.

7. A reference to Richard Harvey's Ephemeron, Sive Pacan (1583).

8. Quadrans, 1/4 of a penny.

9. John Harvey, who published almanacs for 1583 and 1589.

endure as that which lives every hour in fear of invasion. There is a certain waste of the people for whom there is no use but war; and these men must have some employment still to cut them off; Nam si foras hostem non habent, domi invenient.¹ If they have no service abroad, they will make mutinies at home. Or if the affairs of the state be such as cannot exhale all these corrupt excrements, it is very expedient they have some light toys to busy their heads withal, cast before them as bones to gnaw upon, which may keep them from having leisure to intermeddle with higher matters.

To this effect, the policy of plays is very necessary, howsoever some shallow-brained censors (not the deepest searchers into the secrets of government) mightily oppugn them. For whereas the afternoon being idlest time of the day, wherein men that are their own masters (as gentlemen of the court, the Inns of the Court,² and the number of captains and soldiers about London) do wholly bestow themselves upon pleasure, and that pleasure they divide (how virtuously, it skills³ not) either into gaming, following of harlots, drinking, or seeing a play; is it not then better (since of four extremes all the world cannot keep them but they will choose one) that they should betake them to the least, which is plays? Nay, what if I prove plays to be no extreme, but a rare exercise of virtue? First, for the subject of them, (for the most part) it is borrowed out of our English chronicles, wherein our forefathers' valiant acts (that have lain long buried in rusty brass and worm-eaten books) are revived, and they themselves raised from the grave of oblivion, and brought to plead their aged honors in open presence; than which, what can be a sharper reproof to these degenerate effeminate days of ours?

How would it have joyed brave Talbot,⁴ the terror of the French, to think that after he had lain two hundred years in his tomb, he should triumph again on the stage, and have his bones new embalmed with the tears of ten thousand spectators at least (at several times) who in the tragedian that represents his person imagine they behold him fresh bleeding.

I will defend it against any collian⁵ or clubfisted usurer of them all, there is no immortality can be given a man on earth like unto plays. What talk I to them of immortality, that are the only underminers of honor, and do envy any man that is not sprung up by base brokery like themselves. They care not if all the ancient houses were rooted out, so that like the burgomasters of the Low Countries they might share the government amongst them as states, and be quartermasters of our monarchy. All arts to them are vanity; and if

1. Adapted from Livy, Book XXX, xlv, 9. Nashe translates.

2. Law schools.

3. Matters.

4. In the play Harey the VI produced by Strange's men for Henslowe on March 3, 1592. What relation this play had to the Shakespearean 1 Henry VI is uncertain, but Nashe's reference would fit I.iv.39-43, and II.iii.14-24. 5. Rascal (the usual form is "cul-lion").

you tell them what a glorious thing it is to have Henry the Fifth represented on the stage leading the French king prisoner, and forcing both him and the Dolphin⁶ to swear fealty, "Aye, but," will they say, "what do we get by it?" Respecting neither the right of fame that is due to true nobility deceased, nor what hopes of eternity are to be proposed to adventurous minds, to encourage them forward, but only their execrable lucre and filthy unquenchable avarice.

They know when they are dead they shall not be brought upon the stage for any goodness, but in a merriment of the usurer and the devil, or buying arms of the herald, who gives them the lion without tongue, tail, or talons, because his master whom he must serve is a townsman and a man of peace, and must not keep any quarreling beasts to annoy his honest neighbors.

In plays, all cozenages,⁷ all cunning drifts over-gilded with outward holiness, all stratagems of war, all the cankerworms that breed on the rust of peace, are most lively anatomized; they show the ill success of treason, the fall of hasty climbers, the wretched end of usurpers, the misery of civil dissension, and how just God is evermore in punishing of murder. And to prove every one of these allegations could I propound the circumstances of this play and that play, if I meant to handle this theme otherwise than obiter.⁸ What should I say more? They are sour pills of reprehension wrapped up in sweet words. Whereas some petitioners of the counsel against them object,⁹ they corrupt the youth of the city and withdraw prentices from their work; they heartily wish they might be troubled with none of their youth nor their prentices; for some of them (I mean the ruder handicrafts' servants) never come abroad but they are in danger of undoing; and as for corrupting them when they come, that's false; for no play they have encourageth any man to tumults or rebellion, but lays before such the halter and the gallows; or praiseth or approveth pride, lust, whoredom, prodigality, or drunkenness, but beats them down utterly. As for the hindrance of trades and traders of the city by them, that is an article foisted in by the vintners, alewives, and victualers, who surmise if there were no plays they should have all the company that resort to them lie boozing and beer-bathing in their houses every afternoon. Nor so, nor so, good brother bottle-ale, for there are other places besides where money can bestow itself; the sign of the smock¹ will wipe your mouth clean; and yet I have heard ye have made her a tenant to your taphouses. But what shall he do that hath spent himself? Where shall he haunt? Faith, when dice, lust, and drunkenness, and all, have dealt upon him, if there be never a play for him to go

6. Dauphin (son of the king of France).

7. Deceptions, cheats.

8. By the way.

9. "The confutation of citizens' objections against players" [Nashe's marginal note].

1. I.e., of a prostitute.

to for his penny, he sits melancholy in his chamber, devising upon felony or treason, and how he may best exalt himself by mischief.

In Augustus' time (who was the patron of all witty sports) there happened a great fray in Rome about a player, insomuch as all the city was in an uproar; whereupon, the emperor (after the broil was somewhat overblown) called the player before him, and asked what was the reason that a man of his quality durst presume to make such a brawl about nothing. He smilingly replied, "It is good for thee, Oh Caesar, that the people's heads are troubled with brawls and quarrels about us and our light matters; for otherwise they would look into thee and thy matters." Read Lipsius² or any profane or Christian politician, and you shall find him of this opinion. Our players are not as the players beyond sea, a sort of squirting bawdy comedians, that have whores and common courtesans to play women's parts, and forbear no immodest speech or unchaste action that may procure laughter; but our scene is more stately furnished than ever it was in the time of Roscius, our representations honorable and full of gallant resolution, not consisting like theirs of pantaloons, a whore, and a zany,³ but of emperors, kings, and princes; whose true tragedies (Sophocleo cothurno)⁴ they do vaunt.

Not Roscius nor Aesope,⁵ those admired tragedians that have lived ever since before Christ was born, could ever perform more in action than famous Ned Allen.⁶ I must accuse our poets of sloth and partiality that they will not boast in large impressions what worthy men (above all nations) England affords. Other countries cannot have a fiddler break a string but they will put it in print, and the old Romans in the writings they published thought scorn to use any but domestical examples of their own home-bred actors, scholars, and champions, and them they would extol to the third and fourth generation; cobblers, tinkers, fencers, none escaped them, but they mingled them all in one gallimaufry of glory.

Here I have used a like method, not of tying myself to mine own country, but by insisting in the experience of our time; and if I ever write anything in Latin (as I hope one day I shall), not a man of any desert here amongst us, but I will have up. Tarlton, Ned Allen, Knell, Bentley,⁷ shall be made known to France, Spain, and Italy; and not a part that they surmounted in, more than other, but I will there note and set down, with the manner of their habits and attire.⁸

2. Justus Lipsius (1547-1606), Belgian scholar and historian.

3. Type parts in the commedia dell'arte.

4. "With Sophoclean dignity."

5. These two Roman actors flourished about 70 B.C.

6. Edward Alleyn (1566-1626), partner and son-in-law of Henslowe, the manager. He retired from the stage about 1603-4. He founded Dulwich College.

7. Actors older than Alleyn, and famous in the period before 1588. Richard Tarlton (d. 1588) was the most popular Elizabethan comedian.

8. Nashe never fulfilled this resolution.

Sixteenth-Century Lyrics

The 16th century was one of the great ages for lyric poetry in English. As J. J. Jusserand puts it, in his Literary History of the English People, "Indefatigable, the poets now sing verses worthy of remembrance, on every subject, amorous, religious, epic, satirical, pastoral, didactic, moving from the world of insects to the world of heroes. Songs rise naturally to their lips, no one knows why, they do not know why."

The lyrics written by courtiers, in the first half of the century as well as later, were poems intended to be set to music and sung. In the courts of all the Tudor sovereigns music flourished; skill in composition was an excellent qualification for a servant, and noblemen, even crowned heads themselves, pursued the art. Sometimes a courtly poet would compose new words to a popular tune. The songs of Wyatt and other courtiers collected in Tottel's Miscellany are only a remnant of the large amount of lyrical verse written in the courts of Henry VIII and Edward VI. The courtly "makers," as they have been called, were of course able to imitate and borrow foreign stanza forms and popular themes from the poetry of Italy and France. But at their best they wrote lyrics in the native English tradition also, and the fusing of native and foreign strains may well be the best reason for the flourishing of lyric poetry in the last decades of the century.

In Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, the Duke calls upon a court jester to repeat a song he has heard him sing:

O fellow, come, the song we had last night.
Mark it, Ccsario; it is old and plain.
The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it. It is silly sooth,
And dallies with the innocence of love
Like the old age.

Singing at court is pictured here; moreover, it is part of a play, thereby illustrating another source of lyric poetry in Elizabethan England: the drama. Acting companies used boys to play their female parts, and often these boys had been trained as singers; the playwright would provide them opportunities to display their talents. In Thomas Dekker's play of craftsmen's life, The Shoemakers' Holiday, the workers sing while they cobble shoes, and Shakespeare's gravedigger, in Hamlet, sings while he works.

The popular ballad, with its simple four-line stanza form, of anonymous or perhaps composite authorship, can be traced back to the 15th century, and, with the invention of printing, a more commercial form, the broad-side ballad, became popular. Copies of broadside ballads were sold by traveling peddlers like Autolycus in Shakespeare's Winter's Tale; they were often crude affairs, and exploited the latest murder or scandal like the sensational newspaper of modern times.

At the other extreme were the two kinds of art song, the madrigal and the air. A madrigal is a song for two or more voices in counterpoint, usually a setting of a poem expressing the woes of the Petrarchan lover, although any subject is possible. The music is highly imitative of the meaning of the words, but since the separate voices are usually not on the same word at the same time, it is often difficult to understand a madrigal being sung. There is evidence that many Elizabethans could sing a part in a madrigal at sight—a feat which now requires a high degree of musical training. The words must be contained within one rather short stanza, since the music is so closely adapted to the meaning and since phrases are repeated many times in the different voices.

The air, a much less complicated musical form, used words arranged in stanzas; it was a single, recurring melody for the voice with a three-part accompaniment on the lute. Words written for the lute-song or air were much more frequently excellent lyric poems than the words written for madrigals, which tended to be not much more than epigrams. The finest poet of airs was Thomas Campion, who was also a composer. He had a remarkably sensitive ear and a thorough understanding of the problems of versification and musical setting. The genius of Campion and of Ben Jonson solved the vexed problem of whether English quantitative verse (verse which relies upon length and duration of syllables, rather than accent) could be successful.

The 16th century produced more anonymous lyrics than it did lyrics the authors of which can be identified. There are several reasons for this. The Elizabethan period shared the medieval idea that pride of individual authorship was unimportant. Moreover many poems circulated in manuscript and were copied into manuscript books one after the other, without particular care for identifying authorship. Sometimes publishers obtained such collections and printed them, either not knowing or not caring about the authorship of individual poems. The first great 16th-century anthology, Tottel's Miscellany (1557), has a large number of poems attributed to "Uncertain Authors," only a few of whom have been identified up to the present time; a very popular anthology at the end of the century, The Phoenix Nest, gives no name at all for some poems and attributes others to "Ignoto."

Another reason for the survival of anonymous poems was that they were often the lyrics for songs. The composer published his musical settings with the words, so that they could be sung, but few publishers gave credit to the author of the words. An exception was Thomas Campion. There was a casualness about authorship that seems strange to us. Aristocrats and courtiers, though they wrote poetry, often did not wish to be known as writers—it would seem beneath them. On the other hand, the art was less specialized in those days: lawyers, statesmen, explorers, parsons, soldiers, merchants—it was a rare Elizabethan who would not try his hand at a verse.

SIR WALTER RALEGH

(1552-1618)

The brilliant and versatile Raleigh was a soldier, courtier, poet, philosopher, explorer and colonizer, student of science, and historian. He is popularly known now as the founder of Virginia and the introducer of tobacco into Europe, but in his own time he was known for his skeptical mind, his great favor with the queen, his hatred of Spain, and, to Edmund Spenser and others, his poetry. The major part of his verse has not survived; it was a long poem to the queen called Cynthia; it was never printed and we have only a few stanzas in manuscript. Some of his shorter poems were very popular and were printed in anthologies or songbooks. His reply to Marlowe's Passionate Shepherd is only one of several such answers; both Donne and Herrick wrote them, but Raleigh's is the best. His poem The Lie, with its attacks upon social classes and institutions, in its turn provoked many answers. Farewell, False Love is an early poem of Raleigh's which was set to music by the composer William Byrd in 1588.

From 1603 to his execution in 1618 Raleigh was kept imprisoned in the Tower of London by King James, except for a period in 1617 when he made his ill-fated last voyage to Guiana. In prison he wrote his long, unfinished History of the World; it confines itself to the earliest times and does not deal with recent history because, as Raleigh remarked, he who follows truth too closely at the heels might get kicked in the teeth. The most famous passage in the History is at the end. An apostrophe to Death, it is a fine example of rotund 17th-century prose:

O eloquent, just, and mighty Death! Whom none could advise, thou hast persuaded; what none hath dared, thou hast done; and whom the world hath flattered thou only hast cast out of the world and despised. Thou hast drawn together all the farfetched greatness, all the pride, cruelty, and ambition of man, and covered it all over with these two narrow words, Hic jacet! [Here lies]

Raleigh was a passionate man, like Hotspur and Hamlet, and of course he had enemies. Yet by 1618 popular sympathy was so much in his favor that, as Trevelyan said, "the ghost of Raleigh pursued the House of Stuart to the scaffold." Had he not earned a name as the founder of Virginia, the eloquent and grave historian, "a scafaring man, a soldier and a courtier," as he described himself on the scaffold, he would still be the poet Spenser praised, "the sommers nightingale" who tooke in hond

My pipe, before that acmuléd [imitated] of many,
And plaid thereon; (for well that skil he cond) [knew]
Himself as skilfull in that art as any.

The Nymph's Reply to the Shepherd See p. 744

If all the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,

These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee and be thy love.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold,
And Philomel¹ becometh dumb;
The rest complains of cares to come.

5

The flowers do fade, and wanton fields
To wayward winter reckoning yields;
A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall.

10

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle,² and thy posies
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten—
In folly ripe, in reason rotten.

15

Thy belt of straw and ivy buds,
Thy coral clasps and amber studs,
All these in me no means can move
To come to thee and be thy love.

20

But could youth last and love still breed,
Had joys no date³ nor age no need,
Then these delights my mind might move
To live with thee and be thy love.

[On the Life of Man]

What is our life? a play of passion;
Our mirth the music of division;⁴
Our mothers' wombs the tiring-houses⁵ be
Where we are dressed for this short comedy.
Heaven the judicious sharp spectator is,

5

That sits and marks still who doth act amiss;
Our graves that hide us from the searching sun
Are like drawn curtains when the play is done.
Thus march we, playing, to our latest rest,
Only we die in earnest—that's no jest.

10

1612

[Sir Walter Raleigh to His Son]

Three things there be that prosper up apace
And flourish, whilst they grow asunder far,
But on a day, they meet all in one place,

1. The nightingale.

2. Skirt, outer petticoat.

3. Ending.

4. The more rapid accompaniment to,

or variation on, a musical theme.

5. Dressing rooms in an Elizabethan theater.

And when they meet, they one another mar;
 And they be these: the wood, the weed, the wag. 5
 The wood is that which makes the gallow tree;
 The weed is that which strings the hangman's bag;
 The wag, my pretty knave, betokeneth thee.
 Mark well, dear boy, whilst these assemble not,
 Green springs the tree, hemp grows, the wag is wild, 10
 But when they meet, it makes the timber rot;
 It frets the halter, and it chokes the child.
 Then bless thee, and beware, and let us pray
 We part not with thee at this meeting day.

ca. 1600

Walsingham⁶

"As you came from the holy land X of Walsingham, A
 Met you not with my true love X
 by the way as you came?" A

"How shall I know your true love, 5 that have met many one
 As I went to the holy land,
 that have come, that have gone?"

"She is neither white nor brown,
 but as the heavens fair: 10
 There is none hath a form so divine in the carth or the air."

"Such an one did I meet, good sir,
 such an angelic face,
 Who like a queen, like a nymph, did appear 15
 by her gait, by her grace."

"She hath left me here all alone,
 all alone as unknown,
 Who sometimes did lead me with herself,
 and me loved as her own." 20

"What's the cause that she leaves you alone
 and a new way doth take,
 Who loved you once as her own
 and her joy did you make?"

"I have loved her all my youth, 25
 but now, old, as you see;
 Love likes not the falling fruit
 from the withered tree."

6. A priory popular for pilgrimages before its destruction in 1538. There were several traditional ballads on the subject; Raleigh's imitation is a dialogue between an old man and a pilgrim. They speak alternately, until the last four stanzas, when the pilgrim speaks.

"Know that love is a careless child
and forgets promise past;
He is blind, he is deaf when he list
and in faith never fast. 30

"His desire is a dureless⁷ content and a trustless joy;
He is won with a world of despair
and is lost with a toy. 35

"Of womenkind such indeed is the love,
(or the word 'love' abused)
Under which many childish desires and conceits are excused. 40

"But Love is a durable fire in the mind ever burning—
Never sick, never old, never dead, from itself never turning."

The Lie

Go, soul, the body's guest,
Upon a thankless errand;
Fear not to touch the best;
The truth shall be thy warrant.
Go, since I needs must die,
And give the world the lie. 5

Handwritten notes:
Iambic trimeter
Apostrophe
Personification
Anaphora

Say to the court, it glows
And shines like rotten wood;
Say to the church, it shows
What's good, and doth no good.
If church and court reply,
Then give them both the lie. 10

Handwritten notes:
A
B
A
B
C
C

Tell potentates, they live
Acting by others' action;
Not loved unless they give,
Not strong but by a faction.
If potentates reply,
Give potentates the lie. 15

Tell men of high condition,
That manage the estate,
Their purpose is ambition,
Their practice only hate.
And if they once reply,
Then give them all the lie. 20

Tell them that brave it⁸ most,
 They beg for more by spending,
 Who, in their greatest cost,
 Seek nothing but commending.
 And if they make reply,
 Then give them all the lie.

25

Diacope?

Isocolon
Anaphora

Tell zeal it wants devotion; A
 Tell love it is but lust; B
 Tell time it is but motion; A
 Tell flesh it is but dust. B
 And wish them not reply, C
 For thou must give the lie. C

30

35

Tell age it daily wasteth;
 Tell honor how it alters;
 Tell beauty how she blasteth;
 Tell favor how it falters.
 And as they shall reply,
 Give every one the lie.

40

Tell wit how much it wrangles
 In tickle⁹ points of niceness;
 Tell wisdom she entangles
 Herself in overwiseness.
 And when they do reply,
 Straight give them both the lie.

45

Tell physic of her boldness;
 Tell skill it is pretension;
 Tell charity of coldness;
 Tell law it is contention.
 And as they do reply,
 So give them still the lie.

50

Tell fortune of her blindness;
 Tell nature of decay;
 Tell friendship of unkindness;
 Tell justice of delay.
 And if they will reply,
 Then give them all the lie.

55

60

Tell arts they have no soundness,
 But vary by esteeming;
 Tell schools they want profoundness,
 And stand too much on seeming.
 If arts and schools reply,
 Give arts and schools the lie.

65

Tell faith it's fled the city;
 Tell how the country erreth;

8. I.e., those who spend much on clothes. 9. Delicate.

Tell manhood shakes off pity;
Tell virtue least preferreth. 70
And if they do reply,
Spare not to give the lie.

So when thou hast, as I
Commanded thee, done blabbing—
Although to give the lie 75
Deserves no less than stabbing—
Stab at thee he that will,
No stab the soul can kill.

ca. 1592

Farewell, False Love

imbc pent

Farewell, false love, the oracle of lies,
A mortal foe and enemy to rest;
An envious boy, from whom all cares arise,
A bastard vile, a beast with rage possessed;
A way of error, a temple full of treason,
In all effects contrary unto reason. 5

A }
B }
A } set
B }
C }
C }

A poisoned serpent covered all with flowers,
Mother of sighs and murthurer of repose,
A sea of sorrows from whence are drawn such showers
As moisture lends to every grief that grows; 10
A school of guile, a net of deep deceit,
A gilded hook that holds a poisoned bait.

A fortress foiled¹ which reason did defend,
A siren song, a fever of the mind,
A maze wherein affection finds no end,
A raging cloud that runs before the wind,
A substance like the shadow of the sun,
A goal of grief for which the wisest run. 15

A quenchless fire, a nurse of trembling fear,
A path that leads to peril and mishap;
A true retreat of sorrow and despair,
An idle boy that sleeps in pleasure's lap,
A deep distrust of that which certain seems,
A hope of that which reason doubtful deems. 20

Sith² then thy trains my younger years betrayed,
And for my faith ingratitude I find,
And sith repentance hath my wrongs bewrayed³
Whose course was ever contrary to kind—
False love, desire, and beauty frail, adieu!
Dead is the root whence all these fancies grew. 25

30
1588

1. Overthrown.

2. Since; "trains": tricks, stratagems.

3. Revealed.

The Author's Epitaph, Made By Himself⁴

Even such is time, which takes in trust ^{A person on trust}
 Our youth, our joys, and all we have, ^B
 And pays us but with age and dust, ^A
 Who in the dark and silent grave ^B
 When we have wandered all our ways ^C
 Shuts up the story of our days, ^E
 And from which earth, and grave, and dust ^A
 The Lord shall raise me up, I trust. ^A

1618

4. In the 17th century it was thought that Raleigh composed this poem the night before his execution and wrote it in his Bible. It is actually a version of the last stanza of a love poem, "Nature, That Washed Her Hands in Milk" (about 1592). Only the first three words and the final couplet are changed.

ST. ROBERT SOUTHWELL
 (1561-1595)

Father Robert Southwell, S.J., was the younger son of a prominent English family who went to the English seminary for Catholics at Douai as a youth, then to Rome, where he entered the Society of Jesus. In 1586 he returned to England. His mission was a dangerous one, and he probably foresaw the martyrdom he was to suffer in 1595. He wrote a good deal of religious prose and verse; the most famous of his lyrics is The Burning Babe. Ben Jonson remarked to William Drummond of Hawthornden that if he had written The Burning Babe he would have been willing to destroy many of his own poems.

The Burning Babe

As I in hoary winter's night stood shivering in the snow,
 Surprised I was with sudden heat which made my heart to glow;
 And lifting up a fearful eye to view what fire was near,
 A pretty babe all burning bright did in the air appear;
 Who, scorched with excessive heat, such floods of tears did shed . 5
 As though his floods should quench his flames which with his tears were fed.

"Alas," quoth he, "but newly born in fiery heats I fry,¹
 Yet none approach to warm their hearts or feel my fire but I!
 My faultless breast the furnace is, the fuel wounding thorns,
 Love is the fire, and sighs the smoke, the ashes shame and scorns; 10
 The fuel justice layeth on, and mercy blows the coals,
 The metal in this furnace wrought are men's defiled souls,
 For which, as now on fire I am to work them to their good,
 So will I melt into a bath to wash them in my blood."
 With this he vanished out of sight and swiftly shrunk away, 15
 And straight I called unto mind that it was Christmas day.

1602

1. Burn.

SAMUEL DANIEL

(1562-1619)

Samuel Daniel, translator, historian, and poet, was a follower of the Countess of Pembroke, Sidney's sister. He wrote classical tragedies, a verse history of the Civil Wars Between the Two Houses of Lancaster and York (1594-1609), a late defense of learning in Musophilus, and one of the better Elizabethan sonnet cycles, Delia (1592). His Defense of Rhyme (1603), written in answer to Thomas Campion's criticisms of the use of rhyme, is an important contribution to the critical debates of the time. As a lyric poet, Daniel is restrained, quiet, and eloquent.

From Delia Iambic pent

33

When men shall find thy flower, thy glory pass,	A
And thou, with careful brow sitting alone,	B
Received hast this message from thy glass,	A
That tells thee truth, and says that all is gone,	B
Fresh shalt thou see in me the wounds thou madest,	B	5
Though spent thy flame, in me the heat remaining,	C
I that have loved thee thus before thou fadest,	D
My faith shall wax, when thou art in thy waning.	C
The world shall find this miracle in me,	D
That fire can burn when all the matter's spent;	C
Then what my faith hath been thyself shall see,	D	10
And that thou wast unkind thou mayst repent.	C
Thou mayst repent that thou hast scorned my tears,	D
When winter snows upon thy golden hairs.	C

34

When winter snows upon thy golden hairs,
And frost of age hath nipped thy flowers near;
When dark shall seem thy day that never clears,
And all lies with' red that was held so dear;
Then take this picture which I here present thee,	5
Limned with a pencil ¹ not all unworthy.
Here see the gifts that God and nature lent thee;
Here read thy self and what I suff' red for thee.
This may remain thy lasting monument,
Which happily ² posterity may cherish.	10
These colors with thy fading are not spent;
These may remain when thou and I shall perish.
If they remain, then thou shalt live thereby:
They will remain, and so thou canst not die.

1. I.e., painted with a brush.

2. Perhaps.

45 Apostrophe

Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night,
 Brother to Death, in silent darkness born,
 Relieve my languish and restore the light;
 With dark forgetting of my cares, return.
 And let the day be time enough to mourn
 The shipwreck of my ill-adventured youth;
 Let waking eyes suffice to wail their scorn
 Without the torment of the night's untruth.
 Cease, dreams, th' imagery of our day desires,
 To model forth the passions of the morrow;
 Never let rising sun approve you liars,
 To add more grief to aggravate my sorrow.
 Still let me sleep, embracing clouds in vain,
 And never wake to feel the day's disdain.

5

10

46

Let others sing of knights and paladins
 In aged accents and untimely³ words,
 Paint shadows in imaginary lines
 Which well the reach of their high wits records;
 But I must sing of thee and those fair eyes.
 Authentic shall my verse in time to come,
 When yet th' unborn shall say, "Lo where she lies,
 Whose beauty made him speak that else was dumb."
 These are the arks, the trophies I erect,
 That fortify thy name against old age;
 And these thy sacred virtues must protect Against the dark and time's consuming rage.
 Though th' error of my youth they shall discover,
 Suffice, they show I lived and was thy lover.

5

10

1592

3. Obsolete.

MICHAEL DRAYTON

(1563-1631)

Drayton's long career as a poet extended from the early 1590's until well on in the 17th century. He was born about a year earlier than Shakespeare and in the same county, Warwickshire. He collaborated in plays, wrote sonnets, pastorals, odes, poetic epistles, and a versified history called The Barons' Wars, but he intended as his masterpiece a 30,000-line historical-geographical poem about the English countryside called Poly-Olbion. His lifelong devotion to Anne Goodere, Lady Rainsford, is memorialized in his sonnets to a lady called Idea. He revised his sonnets and added to them as they were republished, so one can trace his development from an Elizabethan to a 17th-century poet. He wrote of himself:

"My muse is rightly of the English strain
 That cannot long one fashion entertain."

From Idea

Iambic pent
6

How many paltry, foolish, painted things,
 That now in coaches trouble every street,
 Shall be forgotten, whom no poet sings,
 Ere they be well wrapped in their winding sheet?
 Where¹ I to thee eternity shall give
 When nothing else remaineth of these days,
 And queens hereafter shall be glad to live
 Upon the alms of thy superfluous praise.
 Virgins and matrons, reading these my rhymes,
 Shall be so much delighted with thy story
 That they shall grieve they lived not in these times
 To have seen thee, their sex's only glory;
 So shalt thou fly above the vulgar throng,
 Still to survive in my immortal song.

1619

37

Dear, why should you command me to my rest
 When now the night doth summon all to sleep?
 Methinks this time becometh lovers best;
 Night was ordained together friends to keep.
 How happy are all other living things
 Which, though the day disjoin by several flight,
 The quiet evening yet together brings,
 And each returns unto his love at night.
 O thou, that art so courteous else to all,
 Why shouldst thou, Night, abuse me only thus,
 That every creature to his kind doth call
 And yet 'tis thou dost only sever us.
 Well could I wish it would be ever day
 If when night comes you bid me go away.

1602

50 "epic" simile

As in some countries far removed from hence
 The wretched creature destinéd to die,
 Having the judgment due to his offense,
 By surgeons begged, their art on him to try;
 Which on the living work without remorse,
 First make incision on each mastering² vein,
 Then staunch the bleeding, then trans-pierce the corse,
 And with their balms recure the wounds again;
 Then poison, and with physic him restore;
 Not that they fear the hopeless man to kill,
 But their experience to increase the more;

1. Whereas.

2. Master, principal.

Even so my mistress works upon my ill
 By curing me and killing me each hour
 Only to show her beauty's sovereign power.

1605

61

Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part; A
 Nay, I have done, you get no more of me, B
 And I am glad, yea glad with all my heart Alas C long
 That thus so cleanly I myself can free; D
 Shake hands forever, cancel all our vows, E 5
 And when we meet at any time again,
 Be it not seen in either of our brows
 That we one jot of former love retain.
 Now at the last gasp of love's latest breath,
 When, his pulse failing, passion speechless lies, F pl's 10
 When faith is kneeling by his bed of death,
 And innocence is closing up his eyes;
 Now if thou wouldst, when all have given him over, G
 From death to life thou mightst him yet recover. pl's G

1619

THOMAS CAMPION

(1567-1620)

Thomas Campion was a law student, a physician, a composer, and a poet. His first poetic attempts were in Latin. His love of classical, quantitative versification carried over into his English poems and songs, as well as into his critical theory, which he expounded in his Observations in the Art of English Poesy. (In quantitative verse the syllables are arranged in pattern according to their length and duration, rather than according to accent or stress; cf. Campion's Rose-Cheeked Laura.) But his greatest achievement as a lyric poet—and he is one of the very best in the language—comes from the fact that he was both poet and composer. He says in the preface to one of his books, "I have chiefly aimed to couple my words and notes lovingly together, which will be much for him to do that hath not power over both."

My Sweetest Lesbia¹

My sweetest Lesbia, let us live and love,
 And though the sager sort our deeds reprove,

1. Imitated and partly translated from a poem by Catullus (87-ca. 54 B.C.), the Latin lyric poet who often celebrated the charms of Lesbia in his verses.

This and the two lyrics which follow appeared in A Book of Airs, which contains Campion's first work as a composer.

Let us not weigh them. Heaven's great lamps do dive
Into their west, and straight again revive,
But soon as once set is our little light, 5
Then must we sleep one ever-during night.

If all would lead their lives in love like me,
Then bloody swords and armor should not be;
No drum nor trumpet peaceful sleeps should move,
Unless alarm came from the camp of love. 10
But fools do live, and waste their little light,
And seek with pain their ever-during night.

When timely death my life and fortune ends,
Let not my hearse be vexed with mourning friends,
But let all lovers, rich in triumph, come 15
And with sweet pastimes grace my happy tomb;
And Lesbia, close up thou my little light,
And crown with love my ever-during night. 1601

When to Her Lute Corinna Sings

When to her lute Corinna sings,
Her voice revives the leaden strings,
And doth in highest notes appear
As any challenged echo clear;
But when she doth of mourning speak, 5
Ev'n with her sighs the strings do break.

And as her lute doth live or die,
Led by her passion, so must I:
For when of pleasure she doth sing,
My thoughts enjoy a sudden spring, 10
But if she doth of sorrow speak,
Ev'n from my heart the strings do break. 1601

When Thou Must Home to Shades of Underground

When thou must home to shades of underground,
And there arrived, a new admiréd guest,
The beauteous spirits do engirt thee round,
White Iope,² blithe Helen, and the rest,
To hear the stories of thy finished love 5
From that smooth tongue whose music hell can move,
Then wilt thou speak of banqueting delights,
Of masques and revels which sweet youth did make,

2. Daughter of Aeolus, also known as Cassiopeia.

Of tourneys and great challenges of knights,
 And all these triumphs for thy beauty's sake;
 When thou hast told these honors done to thee,
 Then tell, Oh tell, how thou didst murder me.

10

1601

Rose-cheeked Laura³

Rose-cheeked Laura, come,
 Sing thou smoothly with thy beauty's
 Silent music, either other
 Sweetly gracing.

Lovely forms do flow
 From concent⁴ divinely framed;
 Heav'n is music, and thy beauty's
 Birth is heavenly.

5

These dull notes we sing
 Discords need for helps to grace them;
 Only beauty purely loving Knows no discord,

10

But still moves delight,
 Like clear springs renewed by flowing,
 Ever perfect, ever in them-Selves eternal.

15

1602

What If a Day

What if a day, or a month, or a year
 Crown thy delights with a thousand sweet contentings?
 Cannot a chance of a night or an hour
 Cross thy desires with as many sad tormentings?

Fortune, honor, beauty, youth
 Are but blossoms dying;
 Wanton pleasure, doting love
 Are but shadows flying.
 All our joys are but toys,
 Idle thoughts deceiving;
 None have power of an hour
 In their lives' bereaving.

5

10

Earth's but a point to the world, and a man
 Is but a point to the world's comparéd centure;⁵

3. Written by Campion to illustrate his theories of versification in Observations in the Art of English Poesy, this song is a brilliant example of the way in which quantitative verse can be made musically effective in English.

4. Playing or singing together in harmony.

5. Circumference (literally, a belt or girdle).

Shall then the point of a point be so vain 15
As to triumph in a sely⁶ point's adventure?
As is hazard that we have,
There is nothing biding;
Days of pleasure are like streams
Through fair meadows gliding. 20
Weal and woe, time doth go,
Time is never turning;
Secret fates guide our states,
Both in mirth and mourning. 1606

Never Love Unless You Can

Never love unless you can
Bear with all the faults of man;
Men sometimes will jealous be,
Though but little cause they see,
And hang the head, as discontent, 5
And speak what straight they will repent.

Men that but one saint adore
Make a show of love to more;
Beauty must be scorned in none,
Though but truly served in one; 10
For what is courtship but disguise?
True hearts may have dissembling eyes.

Men when their affairs require
Must a while themselves retire,
Sometimes hunt, and sometimes hawk, 15
And not ever sit and talk.
If these and such like you can bear,
Then like, and love, and never fear. 1617

There Is a Garden in Her Face

There is a garden in her face,
Where roses and white lilies grow,
A heavenly paradise is that place,
Wherein all pleasant fruits do flow.
There cherries grow, which none may buy 5
Till "Cherry ripe!"⁷ themselves do cry.

Those cherries fairly do enclose
Of orient pearl a double row;
Which when her lovely laughter shows,
They look like rosebuds filled with snow. 10

6. Innocent, insignificant.

7. A familiar cry of London street vendors.

Yet them nor peer nor prince can buy,
Till "Cherry ripe!" themselves do cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still;
Her brows like bended bows do stand,
Threatening with piercing frowns to kill
All that attempt with eye or hand
Those sacred cherries to come nigh,
Till "Cherry ripe!" themselves do cry.

15

1617

Think'st Thou to Seduce Me Then¹

Think'st thou to seduce me then with words that have no meaning?
Parrots so can learn to prate, our speech by pieces gleaning;
Nurses teach their children so about the time of weaning.

Learn to speak first, then to woo; to wooing much pertaineth;
He that courts us, wanting art, soon falters when he feigneth,
Looks asquint on his discourse,² and smiles when he complaineth.

5

Skillful anglers hide their hooks, fit baits for every season;
But with crooked pins fish thou, as babes do that want reason:
Gudgeons³ only can be caught with such poor tricks of treason.

Ruth⁴ forgive me, if I erred from human heart's compassion,
When I laughed sometimes too much to see thy foolish fashion;
But, alas, who less could do that found so good occasion?

10

1617

Fain Would I Wed

Fain would I wed a fair young man that night and day could please me,

When my mind or body grieved that had the power to ease me.

Maids are full of longing thoughts that breed a bloodless sickness,
And that, oft I hear men say, is only cured by quickness.

Oft I have been wooed and praised, but never could be movéd;

5

Many for a day or so I have most dearly lovéd,

But this foolish mind of mine straight loathes the thing resolvéd;

If to love be sin in me, that sin is soon absolvéd.

Sure I think I shall at last fly to some holy order;

When I once am settled there, then can I fly no farther.

10

Yet I would not die a maid, because I had a mother,

As I was by one brought forth, I would bring forth another.

1617

1. In this poem and the one following, Campion assumes the voice of a female speaker; the procedure is rare enough among early poets to call for comment. Both poems are written in the old-fashioned metrical form known as "fourteeners"—verses of fourteen or fifteen syllables, bles, with seven accented beats.

2. Looks away from the lady to check on his script.

3. Small fish.

4. Pity, which misled the girl into seeming too complaisant.

ANONYMOUS LYRICS¹

Back and Side Go Bare, Go Bare²

Back and side go bare, go bare,
Both foot and hand go cold;
But, belly, God send thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old.

I cannot eat but little meat, 5
My stomach is not good;
But sure I think that I can drink
With him that wears a hood.³
Though I go bare, take ye no care,
I am nothing a-cold; 10
I stuff my skin so full within
Of jolly good ale and old.
Back and side go bare, go bare, etc.

I love no roast but a nut-brown toast,⁴
And a crab laid in the fire; 15
A little bread shall do me stead,
Much bread I not desire.
No frost nor snow, no wind, I trow,⁵
Can hurt me if I would,
I am so wrapped, and thoroughly lapped 20
Of jolly good ale and old.
Back and side go bare, etc.

And Tib my wife, that as her life
Loveth well good ale to seek,
Full oft drinks she, till ye may see 25
The tears run down her cheeks.
Then doth she troll⁶ to me the bowl,
Even as a maltworm should,
And saith, "Sweetheart, I took my part
Of this jolly good ale and old." 30
Back and side go bare, etc.

Now let them drink, till they nod and wink,
Even as good fellows should do;
They shall not miss to have the bliss
Good ale doth bring men to; 35
And all poor souls that have scoured bowls
Or have them lustily trolled,

1. For discussion, see the introduction to the Lyrics section.

2. One of the best of English drinking songs, this is sung in Gammer Gurton's Needle, a pioneer play in the development of native English comedy. The play is often ascribed to a "Mr. S., Master of Art," who probably wrote it for performance at Cambridge University.

3. Specifically, with a monk; generally, with anybody.

4. Toast was often dipped in beverages; "crab": crab apple.

5. Think, suppose.

6. Pass.

God save the lives of them and their wives,
Whether they be young or old.

Back and side go bare, go bare,
Both foot and hand go cold;
But, belly, God send thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old.

40

1575

In Praise of a Contented Mind¹

My mind to me a kingdom is;
Such perfect joy therein I find
That it excels all other bliss
That world affords or grows by kind.²
Though much I want³ which most men have,
Yet still my mind forbids to crave.

5

No princely pomp, no wealthy store,
No force to win the victory,
No wily wit to salve a sore,
No shape to feed each gazing eye;
To none of these I yield as thrall.
For why⁴ my mind doth serve for all.

10

I see how plenty suffers oft,
How hasty climbers soon do fall;
I see that those that are aloft
Mishap doth threaten most of all;
They get with toil, they keep with fear.
Such cares my mind could never bear.

15

Content I live, this is my stay;
I seek no more than may suffice;
I press to bear no haughty sway;
Look what⁵ I lack my mind supplies;

20

1. One of the most popular of Elizabethan lyrics, My Mind to Me a Kingdom Is, is of uncertain authorship. It was long attributed to the courtier-poet and friend of Sidney, Sir Edward Dyer, but a recent study by Steven W. May has shown that it more probably is by Edward de Vere, seventeenth Earl of Oxford, also a courtier, poet, and patron of men of letters. Aristocratic poets did not publish their poems but allowed them to circulate in manuscript. Several manuscripts of this poem survive; May has printed from an Inner Temple manuscript the best text of the poem, which is followed, in modernized form, here. In 1588 the great Elizabethan composer William Byrd set it to music in his Psalms, Son- nets, and Songs of Sadness and Pity. There were other musical settings later; the poem was printed as a broadside ballad and remained popular down through the 17th century. It may be regarded as the culmination of the celebration in the 16th century of the ideal of otium or the contented mind. It is of course related to the idyllic simplicity of pastoral and to the glorification of the "mean estate" (moderate living) in such poems as Surrey's My Friend, the Things That Do Attain.

2. Nature.

3. Lack.

4. Because.

5. Whatever.

Lo, thus I triumph like a king,
 Content with that my mind doth bring.
 Some have too much, yet still do crave; 25
 I little have, and seek no more.
 They are but poor, though much they have,
 And I am rich with little store:
 They poor, I rich; they beg, I give;
 They lack, I leave;⁶ they pine, I live. 30
 I laugh not at another's loss;
 I grudge not at another's gain;
 No worldly waves my mind can toss;
 My state at one doth still remain.
 I fear no foe, nor fawning friend; 35
 I loathe not life, nor dread my end.
 Some weigh their pleasure by their lust,⁷
 Their wisdom by their rage of will,⁸
 Their treasure is their only trust;
 And cloaked craft their store of skill. 40
 But all the pleasure that I find
 Is to maintain a quiet mind.
 My wealth is health and perfect ease;
 My conscience clear my chief defense;
 I neither seek by bribes to please, 45
 Nor by deceit to breed offense.
 Thus do I live; thus will I die.
 Would all did so as well as I!

1581

1588

Through Amaryllis Dance in Green⁹

Though Amaryllis dance in green
 Like fairy queen;
 And sing full clear
 Corinna can, with smiling, cheer.
 Yet since their eyes make heart so sore, 5
 Heigh ho, heigh ho, 'chill¹ love no more.
 My sheep are lost for want of food,
 And I so wood,²
 That all the day

6. Bequeath, as in a will; "pine": dwindle away.

7. Sensual delight.

8. I.e., wild desires.

9. William Byrd set this anonymous lyric to music in his song book entitled Psalms, Sonnets, and Songs of Sadness and Piety. It is a "ballet"— a dance-song of short stanzas with refrain—an appropriate form for this quaint rustic song of the renunciation of love.

1. The rustic dialect form for "I will": (i)ch (w)ill.

2. Frantic.

I sit and watch a herdmaid gay, 10
 Who laughs to see me sigh so sore,
 Heigh ho, heigh ho, 'chill love no more.

 Her loving looks, her beauty bright
 Is such delight,
 That all in vain 15
 I love to like and lose my gain,
 For her that thanks me not thercof,
 Heigh ho, heigh ho, 'chill love no more.

 Ah wanton eyes, my friendly foes,
 And cause of woes, 20
 Your sweet desire
 Breeds flames of ice and freeze in fire.
 Ye scorn to see me weep so sore,
 Heigh ho, heigh ho, 'chill love no more.
 Love ye who list, I force him not, 25
 Sith, God it wot,
 The more I wail,
 The less my sighs and tears prevail.
 What shall I do but say therefore,
 Heigh ho, heigh ho, 'chill love no more. 30
1588

[The Queen's Champion Retires]¹

His golden locks time hath to silver turned;
 O time too swift, O swiftness never ceasing!
 His youth 'gainst time and age hath ever spurned,
 But spurned in vain; youth waneth by increasing:²
 Beauty, strength, youth are flowers but fading seen; 5
 Duty, faith, love are roots, and ever green.

His helmet now shall make a hive for bees;
 And lovers' sonnets turned to holy psalms;
 A man-at-arms must now serve on his knees
 And feed on prayers, which are age's alms:³ 10
 But though from court to cottage he depart,
 His saint⁴ is sure of his unspotted heart.

1. Sir Henry Lee, Master of the Armory, served as the Queen's Champion, undertaking to defend her honor against all comers, at an annual tournament or joust from 1559 to 1590. He then retired, at the age of 57, in favor of the Earl of Cumberland. On that occasion this lyric was sung by Robert Hales, the Queen's lutenist, on behalf of Lee. The authorship, sometimes ascribed to George Peele because the poem was first printed at the end of his Polyhymnia, is uncertain. It may be by Lee himself.

2. I.e., paradoxically, as one's growth increases, his youth decreases.

3. I.e., prayers are the only alms a retired, aged man can give.

4. Ladylove.

And when he saddest⁵ sits in homely cell,
He'll teach his swains this carol for a song;
"Blessed be the hearts that wish my sovereign well;
Cursed be the souls that think her any wrong."
Goddess,⁶ allow this aged man his right
To be your beadsman⁷ now, that was your knight.

1590

The Shepherd's Consort⁸

Hark, jolly shepherds, hark! Hark you yon lusty ringing!
How cheerfully the bells dance, whilst the jolly lads are springing!
Go then, why sit we here delaying,
And all you lads and merry lasses playing?
How gaily Flora leads it;
And how she sweetly treads it!
The woods and groves they ring loudly resounding,
With echo sweet rebounding!

1594

Come Away, Come, Sweet Love!¹

Come away, come, sweet love! The golden morning breaks;
All the earth, all the air of love and pleasure speaks.

Teach thine arms then to embrace,
And sweet rosy lips to kiss,
And mix our souls in mutual bliss;
Eyes were made for beauty's grace,
Viewing, rucing love-long pain,
Procured by beauty's rude disdain.

5

Come away, come, sweet love! The golden morning wastes,
While the sun from his sphere his fiery arrows casts
Making all the shadows fly,
Playing, staying in the grove
To entertain the stealth of love.
Thither, sweet love, let us hie,
Flying, dying in desire,
Winged with sweet hopes and heavenly fire.

15

Come away, come, sweet love! Do not in vain adorn
Beauty's grace, that should rise like to the naked morn.

5. "In serious mood," not "melancholy."

6. Queen Elizabeth, often honored as the moon goddess Diana (Cynthia).

7. One who offers prayers in behalf of someone.

8. Song. This poem is set to music in Thomas Morley's Madrigals to Four Voices (1594) and appears again as the final poem in the great pastoral anthology, England's Helicon (1600).

1. An aubade (or morning song to one's lady), set to music by John Dowland in his First Book of Songs or Aires. Dowland (1563-1626) was a famous composer and lutenist.

Lilies on the riverside
 And fair Cyprian² flowers new-blown
 Desire no beauties but their own,
 Ornament is nurse of pride;
 Pleasure measure love's delight.
 Haste then, sweet love, our wishéd flight!

20

1597

Thule, the Period of Cosmography³

Thule, the period of cosmography,
 Doth vaunt of Hecla,⁴ whose sulphurous fire
 Doth melt the frozen clime and thaw the sky;
 Trinacrian Aetna's⁵ flames ascend not higher.
 These things seem wondrous, yet more wondrous I,
 Whose heart with fear doth freeze, with love doth fry.

5

The Andalusian⁶ merchant, that returns
 Laden with cochineal and China dishes,
 Reports in Spain how strangely Fogo⁷ burns
 Amidst an ocean full of flying fishes.
 These things seem wondrous, yet more wondrous I,
 Whose heart with fear doth freeze, with love doth fry.

10

1600

Madrigal⁸

My love in her attire doth show her wit,
 It doth so well become her;
 For every season she hath dressings fit,
 For winter, spring, and summer.
 No beauty she doth miss
 When all her robes are on;
 But beauty's self she is
 When all her robes are gone.

5

1602

2. Pertaining to Venus, the Cyprian goddess; hence, spring flowers.

3. "Thule" or "Ultima Thule" was a general name for the Arctic; "period of cosmography" suggests the end point of navigation, a full stop. This remarkable poem, which draws upon Elizabethan interest in exploration and discovery to illustrate the conventional pangs of a lover, first appeared in a book of madrigals by Thomas Weelkes.

 4. A volcano in Iceland.

5. Mt. Etna, a volcano on the island of Sicily. The poet is quoting Virgil, Aeneid III, 554: e fluctu Trinacria cernitur Aetna ("out of the waves appears Trinacrian [i.e., Sicilian] Aetna").

6. From southern Spain. "Cochineal": a red dye.

7. One of the Cape Verde Islands, 300

Weep You No More, Sad Fountains⁹

Weep you no more, sad fountains;
 What need you flow so fast?
 Look how the snowy mountains
 Heaven's sun doth gently waste.
 But my sun's heavenly eyes
 View not your weeping,
 That now lie sleeping
 Softly, now softly lies
 Sleeping.
 Sleep is a reconciling,
 A rest that peace begets.
 Doth not the sun rise smiling
 When fair at even he sets?
 Rest you then, rest, sad eyes,
 Melt not in weeping
 While she lies sleeping
 Softly, now softly lies
 Sleeping.

5
10
15
1603

The Silver Swan¹

The silver swan, who living had no note.
 When death approached, unlocked her silent throat;
 Leaning her breast against the reedy shore,
 Thus sung her first and last, and sung no more:
 "Farewell, all joys; Oh death, come close mine eyes;
 More geese than swans now live, more fools than wise."

5
1612 miles off the coast of Africa, west of Dakar. Francis Drake visited it in 1578; the account in Hakluyt's Principal Navigations includes details used here: "The Isle of Fogo * * * called by the Portingals Ila del fogo, that is, the burning Island: in the Northside whereof is a consuming fire, the matter is sayd to bee of Sulphure * * * Being departed from these Islands, we drew towards the line [the Equator], where wee were becalmed the space of 3. weekes * * * we had the commoditie of great store [plenty] of fish, as Dolphin, Bonitas, and flying fishes, whereof some fell into our shippes, where hence they could not rise againe for want of moisture, for when their wings are drie, they cannot flie."

8. This sophisticated courtly lyric was printed in an anthology entitled A Poetical Rhapsody (1602).

9. This anonymous lyric comes from another song book of John Dowland's (his Third and Last Book of Songs or Aires). Like a number of other song-book lyrics which were apparently written only with the object of being set to music, its versification is quantitative.

1. From Orlando Gibbons' First Set of Madrigals and Motets. In this short lyric, Gibbons, who was one of the last of the madrigalists, may be mourning the demise of his art.

Prose of the Sixteenth Century

Three mind-shattering experiences struck England in quick succession during the first quarter of the 16th century. They were the humanism of the Italian Renaissance, which for a hundred years had been moving north across Europe, the Reformation of the Roman church set in motion by Martin Luther, and the discovery of the New World by Christopher Columbus. The broad impact of the Renaissance on English culture is richly represented in the poetry and drama of the Elizabethan age from Sidney, Spenser, and Marlowe to Shakespeare and Donne. But English prose, as it existed during most of the 15th and 16th centuries, was not an instrument in which anyone felt very much confidence; it was not, therefore, much exercised in works of "high" literature. Malory is the sole exception, but Malory writes a variety of English prose akin to early epic poetry—incantatory, evocative, indefinite. A modern English prose style was forged only gradually, in the exploration and exposition of urgent practical problems—among the chief of which were the issues posed by the Reformation of the church, and the speculations aroused by the discovery of new continents and unknown civilizations.

When Martin Luther nailed his 95 theses to the cathedral door at Wittenberg on the first of November, 1517, neither he nor anyone else knew what he was doing. Luther thought he was simply opening up some topics for academic discussion. But his ideas were hailed as, and immediately became, the slogans of a mass revolution, which swept Luther and the entire Christian world into deep waters of thought and feeling which had never before been sounded.

For medieval people, the Roman Catholic apostolic church was a universal, infallible, omniscient guide to the conduct of life from cradle to grave. They walked hand in hand with it, consulting its spokesmen at regular intervals, corrected by its discipline, comforted by its sacraments, sustained by its promises. The Bible, being in a special language which only clergymen could read, served to guide them, and they guided the laity. Ordinary people did not need to have a highly developed religious conscience (which is rather like a magnetic compass to navigate by) because they had something better—an infallible, divinely inspired, constant companion. Thus arose the vast system of confession, penance, and absolution, of indulgences and pardons and remission of sins, which gave the Catholic hierarchy so much power over their flock. Under the circumstances, it mattered hardly at all that the Bible, the order of the Mass, and most of the theological discussions were in Latin, which lay people could not understand. Understanding was not really part of their function.

But when Luther revolted against the ancient church, was cast out by it, and founded his own church, he did so in the name of a conscience—his own—enlightened by a personal reading of the Scriptures. Two consequences immediately followed. To decide rationally whether Luther, or the Pope, or some third party was right, everyone had to read the Bible for themselves. That is no light undertaking at best, for it is a long, hard book, confusing and apparently contradictory in many passages. Before most of us can even start to read this gigantic compendium of history, prophecy, and moral instruction, it has to be translated from the original Hebrew and Greek into the different vernaculars. That is a job of inconceivable complexity, at which scholars have been laboring from Luther's day to our own. And since membership in any particular church was now essentially voluntary, the whole focus of the religious service shifted, from adoration and lustration (as by the Mass) to persuasion and edification (as by the sermon). Finally, books of controversial and polemical divinity began to be written in the national languages, not only between Catholic and Protestant champions, but by different Protestant groups against one another. By studying these controversies, hearing these sermons, reading the Bible constantly, and purifying their consciences as much as possible, people (it was supposed) could decide for themselves what was the safest way to salvation.

Though the English Reformation under Henry VIII was more gradual, more moderate, and far less violent than it was on the Continent, the same basic changes took place nonetheless. The first reformers in England were among the first translators of the Bible; William Tyndale, boldest and most influential of the group, paid for his pioneer's assurance by being burned at the stake. Yet within three years of his death in 1536, an English Bible was on public sale everywhere in the land; and there can be no doubt that the impulse to read the Bible, and learn about one's eternal destination, was responsible for a tremendous forward leap in the basic literacy of the nation.

When people can read, there will be many interpretations of what is read, particularly if the subject matter is religious. A very large proportion of the books published in the second half of the 16th century were religious in content. Many of them were controversial, and there were, in very general terms, three parties to the controversy. First there was the "old religion," the Catholic church of Rome, which enjoyed a certain amount of toleration until 1570, when a papal bull declared Elizabeth to be not the rightful sovereign of England and absolved her subjects from obedience to her. After that, to publish anything expressing the Roman Catholic view was very dangerous. At the opposite extreme was the position of the protestants who had gone into exile during the reign of the Catholic Mary Tudor and returned when her protestant sister Elizabeth succeeded her. The most vigorous of these was John Foxe, whose Acts and Monuments (commonly called "The Book of Martyrs") fomented hatred for the church of Rome and all its actions under Queen Mary. The center position was that of the Church of England, which kept the bishops and other prelates of the Roman church, and some of its ceremonies, but denied the authority of the Pope. This position was attacked in a series of brilliant satiric underground pamphlets attributed to Martin Marprelate. The style of these was popular and colloquial, and from the point of view of the government, this made them all the more dangerous. The Elizabethan police sought out the secret press on which the tracts were printed (it was carried around the country on the back of a haywagon), and the men responsible disappeared into prison, where, conveniently, while waiting for trial, several of them died.

It came as the climax of an increasingly bitter controversy within the English church between puritan Presbyterians and conservative Episcopalians—a controversy which had already lasted almost fifty years—when Richard Hooker brought forth in 1594 the first part of his monumental treatise, Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity. It is a forbidding title and a rigorous book; but it can still be read for pleasure, and it fully deserves its reputation as the first finished monument of modern English prose. Suaviter in modo, fortiter in re is the appropriate Latin tag: “softly as far as words go, but no compromise on principles.” Gently, slowly, irresistibly, with manifold expressions of Christian charity, and with remorseless logic, Hooker crushes his antagonists like a boa constrictor enveloping a rabbit. His premises are laid so widely and deeply that one can hardly disagree with them and retain any pretense to rationality; then gradually he begins to tighten his conclusions. If the Puritan revolution, based on conscience, could have been stopped by careful logic or judicious common sense, Hooker’s book would doubtless have stopped it. But conscience is a prickly, uncontrollable force, and the Puritans would not be argued out of their conscientious objections to the discipline of the English church.

The discovery of America was accomplished by an Italian in the service of the Spanish crown; Spaniards explored and conquered the great kingdoms of Mexico and Peru, while Portuguese navigators first turned the Cape of Good Hope on their way to India, and the tip of South America on their way around the world. The English were thus relative latecomers to the work of exploring and exploiting the New World. Sir Walter Raleigh attempted the first wretched and unsuccessful colony in Virginia fully a hundred years after Pope Alexander VI had categorically divided the New World between Spain and Portugal. By that time there were well-established Portuguese colonies up and down the coast of South America and India; and the Spanish were entrenched not only in Mexico and the American southwest, but in Florida and California. But though the English were slow in starting to compete with their Latin rivals, the voyages of discovery struck at English imaginations almost as soon as they were known. Gold and silver were the loot that stirred practical men to action: but the idea of a separate, remote civilization based on a new and different dispensation from God also deeply appealing. The language in which the conditions of the new world were described would have to be clear and straightforward, what Shakespeare called “a round, unvarnished tale.”

Plain, practical prose, often on technical or scientific topics, and cast in the common, vernacular speech, flourished in England during the latter years of Elizabeth; it was a development largely unlike anything on the Continent. On the whole, the universities, which tended to be conservative, had little part on this activity. But the lectures established by Sir Thomas Gresham in the City of London were free for all to attend, and they were mostly in English. They provided the foundations for a practical vernacular technology, a pragmatic mingling of learned theory with homely practice, which could not fail to be profoundly influential, both on the material culture of England and on the language English people spoke. In 1600 Sir William Gilbert published in Latin his great treatise on magnetism, as Sir William Harvey in 1628 announced the circulation of the blood in the learned language. But Harvey's theory had been set forth in English lectures twelve years before he published to the learned world at large; and Gilbert worked closely with the navigators and mariners of English vessels in developing both his learned theories and some practical applications of them.

Meanwhile, scholars, clergymen, and courtiers were experimenting with literary ways to make English more sonorous and rhetorically more complex; and not all these experiments were without influence. During the last half of the century, English vocabulary was enormously enriched by a mass of words adapted from Greek and Latin originals; some evidently seemed artificial or pretentious, and were dropped, but many others were permanently adopted into the language. Whether Cicero or Seneca or some other classical author was the best model for an English prose stylist was much debated; the point was never conclusively settled, but the parties sometimes emerged from their dispute with a widened range of stylistic possibilities before them. The short-lived fad of "Euphuism"—an experiment in exaggerated, aphoristic, sententious prose begun by John Lyly in 1579 and concluded by the same author in 1580, was so out of fashion that it was parodied in 1598 by Shakespeare in 1 Henry IV II.iv.347-63.

The English language had been vindicated as a medium for God's word, as a vehicle for the sufferings of Protestant martyrs, as a suitable language for the instruction of an ambitious courtier, for the description of a newly explored country, or for the defense of poetry against its detractors. It could carry to every literate person the lives of the eminent Greeks and Romans and the chronicles of the English kings. It could make available to those who know no continental language the literary treasures of Italy and France and Spain, as well as those of what Ben Jonson called "insolent Greece" and "haughty Rome." It was a language still expanding rapidly, in vocabulary, with borrowings from other languages and new word-coinages, in syntax and in variety of styles. In fact Richard Mulcaster, Spenser's schoolmaster, saw in the expanding vocabulary of England a parallel to her growth in exploration and colonizing—her emergence as a world power. But the language remained, like the people who spoke and wrote it, close to the soil. Richard Carew, in his Epistle on the Excellency of the English Tongue, written in the last decade of the 16th century, commented on its variety: "Moreover, the copiousness of our language appeareth on the diversity of our dialects, for we have court, we have country English, we have northern and southern, gross and ordinary, which differ from each other, not only in the terminations, but also in many words, terms, and phrases, and express the same things in divers sorts, yet all right English alike; neither can any tongue (as I am persuaded) deliver a matter with more variety than ours, both plainly and by proverbs and metaphors."

TRANSLATING THE BIBLE (Isaiah liii.3-6)

The English Reformation made it imperative to read the Bible for oneself; hence fewer tasks were more important than rendering the Bible from its Greek and Hebrew originals into the vernacular. In England William Tyndale began his translation in 1523; he had to do it surreptitiously and outside the country; he finally suffered martyrdom for his efforts. In 1530 a royal proclamation condemned Tyndale's translation and all other versions in the vulgar tongue. Then in 1535 Miles Coverdale published, in Zürich, the first complete Bible in English. By this time the official attitude was changing, and in 1540 the so-called Great Bible was published, the first English Bible issued with official sanction—evidence of the extent of the breach between the English church and the Church of Rome.

The Geneva Bible (1560) was the work of Protestant refugees who fled to the Continent in the reign of the Catholic Queen Mary. It was the first Bible to divide the chapters into verses in the modern manner, and the first English Bible to be printed in Roman type rather than the old black letter or Gothic type. It was handy in size, and in many instances more accurate than its predecessors, but the marginal commentary was strongly biased in the Protestant direction. The Bishops' Bible (1568) was an attempt on the part of the Elizabethan church to counter the extreme Protestantism of the Geneva Bible. The bishops who sponsored it could indeed insist that their Bible be the official one used in churches, but the people continued to read the Geneva Bible at home, and its influence remained very great throughout the century. A Catholic translation into English, based upon the Latin Vulgate, was a belated concession to the demand for the scriptures in the vernacular. It was published by English refugees abroad, the New Testament at Rheims in 1582 and the Old Testament at Douai in 1609-10. Though it was outside the main English tradition, it was not without its influence upon the King James Version which was to follow.

King James did not like the popular Geneva Bible (some of its commentary was not highly favorable to kings). As a part of the religious settlement which took place early in his reign, he authorized a group of translators to make a new version of the Bible in English. The resulting work has been called "the noblest monument of English prose"; it owes more to Tyndale than to any other predecessor, but it has extraordinary beauties of its own. We have chosen to reprint versions of a passage from Isaiah that shows the King James Version at its most felicitous. Our last example comes from the New English Bible of 1970.

Translating the Bible (Isaiah liii.3-6)

From The Great Bible

He is despised and abhorred of men. He is such a man as is aful of sorrow and as hath good experience of infirmities. We have reckoned him so vile that we hid our faces from him. Yea, he was despised and therefore we regarded him not.

Howbeit he only hath taken on him our infirmities and borne our pains. Yet we did judge him, as though he were plagued and cast down of God and punished.

Whereas he (notwithstanding) was wounded for our offenses and smitten for our wickedness. For the chastisement of our peace was laid upon him and with his stripes we are healed.

As for us, we have gone all astray, like sheep; every one hath turned his own way. But the Lord hath heaped together upon him the iniquity of us all.

1539-40

From The Coverdale Bible

He shall be the most simple and despised of all which yet hath good experience of sorrows and infirmities. We shall reckon him so simple and so vile that we shall hide our faces from him.

Howbeit of a truth he only taketh away our infirmity and beareth our pain, yet we shall judge him as though he were plagued and cast down of God.

Whereas he, notwithstanding, shall be wounded for our offenses and smitten for our wickedness. For the pain of our punishment shall be laid upon him and with his stripes shall we be healed.

As for us we go all astray, like sheep. Every one turneth his own way. But through him the Lord pardoneth all our sins.

1550

From The Geneva Bible

He is despised and rejected of men. He is a man full of sorrows and hath experience of infirmities. We hid as it were our faces from him. He was despised and we esteemed him not.

Surely he hath borne our infirmities and carried our sorrows; yet we did judge him as plagued, and smitten of God, and humbled.

But he was wounded for our transgressions; he was broken for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed.

All we like sheep have gone astray. We have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all.

1560

From The King James Bible

He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. And we hid as it were our faces from him. He was despised, and we esteemed him not.

Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

But he was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities. The chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed.

All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

1611

From The New English Bible

He was despised, he shrank from the sight of men, tormented and humbled by suffering;
we despised him, we held him of no account,
a thing from which men turn away their eyes.

Yet on himself he bore our sufferings,
our torments he endured,
while we counted him smitten by God,
struck down by disease and misery;

but he was pierced for our transgressions,
tortured for our iniquities;
the chastisement he bore is health for us
and by his scourging we are healed.

We had all strayed like sheep,
each of us had gone his own way;
but the Lord laid upon him
the guilt of us all.

1970

JOHN FOXE

(1516–1587)

John Foxe's career at Oxford University, where he had become a fellow of Magdalen College, was interrupted when his Puritan convictions led him to protest too energetically against some of the college rules and practices. For some years he then served as a tutor to the children of various great houses; but when Mary became queen in 1553, and the persecutions of Protestants began, he fled to the Continent. His great book was already under way, though it was in Latin and had not yet really focused on its main subject. In its first version (Strasbourg, 1554) it was a history of the persecutions suffered by the early Protestants, particularly Wycliffe and John Hus. But the book grew and grew under his hands, as he received from England accounts of the hideous tortures and persecutions being inflicted on the Protestants there. When Elizabeth came to the throne in 1558, Foxe returned at once to England, and there he translated his previous Latin volume, adding to it hundreds of stories (many true, some doubtful, some ridiculous) all tending to show the horrible malice of Catholic persecutors and the saintly sufferings of Protestant martyrs. The English edition was published in 1563; its title was Acts and Monuments of these latter and perilous days, touching matters of the church, wherein are comprehended and described the great persecution and horrible troubles that have been wrought and practices by the Romish prelates from the year of Our Lord a thousand to the time now present. It was immediately and enormously popular. Foxe saw life melodramatically, in terms of black and white; and he tended to believe without questioning it too closely any good story that confirmed his prejudices. As a result his book soon grew to enormous dimensions—in its final version, to over 6,000 folio pages, containing 4 million words. Apart from fanning the flames of anti-Catholic feeling, Foxe had an immense influence upon English nationalism; his stories tended to show that England was the land of the chosen people, and that, in passing through the fiery trials of Marian persecution, the Protestant martyrs were simply preparing the way for a glorious destiny in which England would lead the way toward the kingdom of God on earth. Foxe's second edition, in 1570, was so impressive that a copy of it was required to be placed, with the Bible, in every English church.

From Acts and Monuments

OF THESE LATTER AND PERILOUS DAYS, TOUCHING MATTERS OF THE CHURCH, WHEREIN ARE COMPREHENDED AND DESCRIBED THE GREAT PERSECUTION AND HORRIBLE TROUBLES THAT HAVE BEEN WROUGHT AND PRACTICES BY THE ROMISH PRELATES FROM THE YEAR OF OUR LORD A THOUSAND TO THE TIME NOW PRESENT

The Behavior of Dr. Ridley and Master Latimer,¹ at the Time of Their Death, which was the Sixteenth of October, an. 1555

Upon the north side of the town, in the ditch over against Balliol College, the place of execution was appointed; and for fear of any tumult that might arise, to let the burning of them, the Lord Williams was commanded by the queen's letters (and the householders of the city) to be there assistant, sufficiently appointed. And when everything was in a readiness, the prisoners were brought forth by the mayor and the bailiffs.

Master Ridley had a fair black gown furred, and faced with foins,² such as he was wont to wear being bishop, and a tippet of velvet furred likewise about his neck, a velvet nightcap upon his head, and a corner cap upon the same, going in a pair of slippers to the stake, and going between the mayor and an alderman, etc. After him came Master Latimer in a poor Bristol frieze frock all worn, with his buttoned cap, and a kerchief on his head all ready to the fire, a new long shroud hanging over his hose down to the feet; which at the first sight stirred men's hearts to rue upon them, beholding on the one side the honor they sometime had, and on the other, the calamity whereunto they were fallen.

Master Doctor Ridley, as he passed towards Bocardo,³ looking up where Master Cranmer did lie, hoping belike to have seen him at the glass window and to have spoken unto him. But then Master Cranmer was busy with Friar Soto and his fellows, disputing

1. Nicholas Ridley (1500?-55) Bishop of London; Hugh Latimer (1492?-1555) former Bishop of Worcester, preacher to Edward VI.

2. Fur trimmings.

3. The prison in Oxford.

together, so that he could not see him through that occasion. Then Master Ridley, looking back, espied Master Latimer coming after, unto whom he said, "Oh, be ye there?" "Yea," said Master Latimer, "have after as fast as I can follow." So he following a pretty way off, at length they came both to the stake, one after the other, where first Dr. Ridley entering the place, marvelous earnestly holding up both his hands, looked towards heaven. Then shortly after espying Master Latimer, with a wondrous cheerful look, ran to him, embraced, and kissed him; and, as they that stood near reported, comforted him saying, "Be of good heart, brother, for God will either assuage the fury of the flame, or else strengthen us to abide it." With that went he to the stake, kneeled down by it, kissed it, and most effectuously⁴ prayed, and behind him Master Latimer kneeled, as earnestly calling upon God as he. After they arose, the one talked with the other a little while, till they which were appointed to see the execution removed themselves out of the sun. What they said I can learn of no man.

Then Dr. Smith,⁵ of whose recantation in King Edward's time ye heard before, began his sermon to them upon this text of St. Paul in the 13 chap. of the first epistle to the Corinthians: "Si corpus meum tradam igni, charitatem autem non habeam, nihil inde utilitatis capio," that is, "If I yield my body to the fire to be burned and have not charity, I shall gain nothing thereby." Wherein he alleged that the goodness of the cause, and not the order of death, maketh the holiness of the person; which he confirmed by the examples of Judas, and of a woman in Oxford that of late hanged herself, for that they, and such like as he recited, might then be adjudged righteous, which desperately sundered their lives from their bodies, as he feared that those men that stood before him would do. But he cried still to the people to beware of them, for they were heretics, and died out of the church. And on the other side, he declared their diversities in opinions, as Lutherans, Oecolampadians, Zwinglians,⁶ of which sect they were, he said, and that was the worst; but the old church of Christ and the Catholic faith believed far otherwise. At which place they lifted up both their hands and eyes to heaven, as it were calling God to witness of the truth; the which countenance they made in many other places of his sermon, whereas they thought he spake amiss. He ended with a very short exhortation to them to recant, and come home again to the church, and save their lives and souls, which else were condemned. His sermon was scant in all a quarter of an hour.

Dr. Ridley said to Master Latimer, "Will you begin to answer

4. With great effect.

5. Richard Smith, D.D. (1500-63); he had recanted in 1547 but later repudiated his recantation.

6. Followers, respectively, of Martin Luther (1483-1546), founder of the reformation in Germany; Johann Oecolampadius (1482-1531), organizer of Protestantism at Basle; Ulrich Zwingli (1484-1531), organizer of Protestantism in Zürich.

appeared a withered and crooked silly³ old man, he now stood bolt upright, as comely a father as one might lightly behold.

Then Master Ridley, standing as yet in his truss,⁴ said to his brother: "It were best for me to go in my truss still." "No," quoth his brother, "it will put you to more pain; and the truss will do a poor man good." Whereunto Master Ridley said: "Be it, in the name of God"; and so unlaced himself. Then being in his shirt, he stood upon the foresaid stone, and held up his hand and said: "Oh heavenly Father, I give unto thee most hearty thanks, for that thou hast called me to be a professor of⁵ thee, even unto death. I beseech thee, Lord God, take mercy upon this realm of England, and deliver the same from all her enemies."

Then the smith took a chain of iron, and brought the same about both Dr. Ridley's and Master Latimer's middles; and as he was knocking in a staple, Dr. Ridley took the chain in his hand, and shook the same, for it did gird in his belly, and looking aside to the smith, said: "Good fellow, knock it in hard, for the flesh will have his course." Then his brother did bring him gunpowder in a bag, and would have tied the same about his neck. Master Ridley asked what it was. His brother said, "Gunpowder." "Then," said he, "I take it to be sent of God; therefore I will receive it as sent of him. And have you any," said he, "for my brother?" meaning Master Latimer. "Yea, sir, that I have," quoth his brother. "Then give it unto him," said he, "betime; lest ye come too late." So his brother went, and carried of the same gunpowder unto Master Latimer.

In the meantime Dr. Ridley spake unto my Lord Williams, and said: "My lord, I must be a suitor unto your lordship in the behalf of divers poor men, and specially in the cause of my poor sister; I have made a supplication to the Queen's Majesty in their behalfs. I beseech your lordship for Christ's sake, to be a mean to her Grace for them. My brother here hath the supplication, and will resort to your lordship to certify you hereof. There is nothing in all the world that troubleth my conscience, I praise God, this only excepted. Whiles I was in the sec of London divers poor men took leases of me, and agreed with me for the same. Now I hear say the bishop⁶ that now occupieth the same room will not allow my grants unto them made, but contrary unto all law and conscience hath taken from them their livings, and will not suffer them to enjoy the same. I beseech you, my lord, be a mean for them; you shall do a good deed, and God will reward you."

Then they brought a faggot, kindled with fire, and laid the same

³ Innocent, harmless.

⁴ A close-fitting body garment or ket.

⁵ Believer in, advocate of.

⁶ Edmund Bonner (ca. 1500-69); he had preceded Ridley as Bishop of London during the reign of Edward VI, and became Bishop again on Mary's accession.

down at Dr. Ridley's feet. To whom Master Latimer spake in this manner: "Be of good comfort, Master Ridley, and play the man. We shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out."

And so the fire being given unto them, when Dr. Ridley saw the fire flaming up toward him, he cried with a wonderful loud voice: "In manus tuas, Domine, commendo spiritum meum; Domine, recipe, spiritum meum." And after, repeated this latter part often in English, "Lord, Lord, receive my spirit"; Master Latimer crying as vehemently on the other side, "Oh Father of heaven, receive my soul!" who received the flame as it were embracing of it. After, as he had stroked his face with his hands, and as it were bathed them a little in the fire, he soon died (as it appeared) with very little pain or none. And thus much concerning the end of this old and blessed servant of God, Master Latimer, for whose laborious travails, fruitful life, and constant death the whole realm hath cause to give great thanks to almighty God.

But Master Ridley, by reason of the evil making of the fire unto him, because the wooden faggots were laid about the gosse⁷ and over-high built, the fire burned first beneath, being kept down by the wood; which when he felt, he desired them for Christ's sake to let the fire come unto him. Which when his brother-in-law heard, but not well understood, intending to rid him out of his pain (for the which cause he gave attendance), as one in such sorrow not well advised what he did, heaped faggots upon him, so that he clean covered him, which made the fire more vehement beneath, that it burned clean all his nether parts, before it once touched the upper; that that made him leap up and down under the faggots, and often desire them to let the fire come unto him, saying, "I cannot burn." Which indeed appeared well; for, after his legs were consumed by reason of his struggling through the pain (whereof he had no release, but only his contentation⁸ in God), he showed that side toward us clean, shirt and all untouched with flame. Yet in all this torment he forgot not to call upon God still, having in his mouth, "Lord have mercy upon me," intermingling this cry, "Let the fire come unto me, I cannot burn." In which pains he labored till one of the standers-by with his bill⁹ pulled off the faggots above, and where he saw the fire flame up, he wrested himself unto that side. And when the flame touched the gunpowder, he was seen stir no more, but burned on the other side, falling down at Master Latimer's feet. Which some said happened by reason that the chain loosed; other said that he fell over the chain by reason of the poise¹ of his body and the weakness of the nether limbs.

Some said that before he was like to fall from the stake, he

7. Gorse, used as kindling.

8. Satisfaction.

9. A long staff terminating in a hook-shaped blade.

1. Weight.

desired them to hold him to it with their bills. Howsoever it was, surely it moved hundreds to tears, in beholding the horrible sight; for I think there was none that had not clean exiled all humanity and mercy which would not have lamented to behold the fury of the fire so to rage upon their bodies. Signs there were of sorrow on every side. Some took it grievously to see their deaths, whose lives they held full dear; some pitied their persons, that thought their souls had no need thereof. His brother moved many men, seeing his miserable case, seeing (I say) him compelled to such infelicity, that he thought then to do him best service when he hastened his end. Some cried out of the luck, to see his endeavor (who most dearly loved him, and sought his release) turn to his greater vexation and increase of pain. But whoso considered their preferments in time past, the places of honor that they sometime occupied in this commonwealth, the favor they were in with their princes, and the opinion of learning they had, could not choose but sorrow with tears to see so great dignity, honor, and estimation, so necessary members sometime accounted, so many godly virtues, the study of so many years, such excellent learning, to be put into the fire and consumed in one moment. Well! dead they are, and the reward of this world they have already. What reward remaineth for them in heaven, the day of the Lord's glory, when he cometh with his saints, shall shortly, I trust, declare.

1563

SIR THOMAS HOBY

(1530-1566)

One of the great and influential books of the Renaissance was Il Cortegiano ("The Courtier") published in Italian by Count Baldassarre Castiglione (1478-1529) in 1528 and soon translated into all the other European languages. The English translation, by the humanist and diplomat Sir Thomas Hoby, was first published in 1561, but it was written earlier, probably during the reign of Queen Mary (1553-58) when Hoby lived abroad as a Protestant exile. The style of the translation makes it an important landmark in English prose; Hoby, like his master Sir John Cheke, prefers words from the native Anglo-Saxon element of the language, rather than borrowings from French or Italian.

The book attempts to present, in the form of dialogues between actual persons living at the court of the Duke of Urbino in the years 1504-8, a full description of the qualities and characteristics of the ideal courtier. Spenser's friend Gabriel Harvey, in his copy of Hoby's translation, summarized the contents of this great "courtesy book" as follows: "Above all things it importeth a courtier to be graceful and lovely in countenance and behavior; fine and discreet in discourse and entertainment; skillful and expert in letters and arms; active and gallant in every courtly exercise; nimble and speedy of body and mind; resolute, industrious and valorous in action; as profound and invincible in action as is possible; and withal ever generously bold, wittily pleasant; and full of life in his sayings and doings." Shakespeare's Hamlet was such an ideal courtier, as Ophelia testifies when she attributes to him

The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's eye, tongue, sword;
The expectancy and rose of the fair state,
The glass of fashion and the mold of form. (III.i.151-53)

The Elizabethans thought of Sir Philip Sidney as the example of an ideal courtier in real life.

Probably the most famous passage in The Courtier is Peter Bembo's discourse on love in Book IV. Its theme is essentially Platonic—that is, that love is not the mere gratification of the senses, but is the yearning of the soul after beauty. Furthermore, the beautiful is always ultimately identical with the good. Love properly understood is therefore a kind of ladder by which the soul progresses from lower to higher things. As he pursues his theme Bembo becomes more enraptured and ends with a prayer to Love as a god; although the dialogue form permits criticism of Bembo's doctrine, the eloquence of his speech carries the day.

From The Courtier

From Book I

[GRACE]

"Bound am I not," quoth the Count, "to teach you to have a good grace,¹ nor anything else, saving only to show you what a perfect Courtier ought to be. Neither will I take upon me to teach you this perfection, since a while ago I said that the Courtier ought to have the feat of wrestling and vaulting, and such other things, the which how I should be able to teach them, not having learned them myself? I am sure ye know it all. It sufficeth that as a good soldier can speak his mind to an armorer, of what fashion, of what temper and goodness he will have his harness,² and for all that cannot teach him to make it, nor to hammer or temper it, so perhaps I am able to tell you what a perfect Courtier ought to be, but not to teach you how ye should do to be one. Notwithstanding, to fulfill your request in what I am able, although it be (in manner) in a proverb that Grace is not to be learned, I say unto you, whoso mindeth to be gracious or to have a good grace in the exercises of the body (pre-supposing first that he be not of nature unapt) ought to begin betimes,³ and to learn his principles of cunning men. The which thing

1. "Grace" had a wide range of meanings for Elizabethans, and many puns were made on the word. Most simply, it refers to a natural, easy manner, especially in doing something that is difficult. The Italian word is sprezza- tura. The "Count" is Count Lodovico Canossa ("Count Lewis"), later Bishop of Bayeux.

2. Armor.

3. Early.

how necessary a matter Philip, king of Macedonia, thought it, a man may gather in that his will was that Aristotle, so famous a philosopher, and perhaps the greatest that ever hath been in the world, should be the man that should instruct Alexander, his son, in the first principles of letters. And of men whom we know nowadays, mark how well and with what a good grace Sir Galeazzo Sanseverino, master of the horse to the French king, doth all exercises of the body; and that because, beside the natural disposition of person that is in him, he hath applied all his study to learn of cunning men, and to have continually excellent men about him, and, of every one, to choose the best of that they have skill in. For as in wrestling, in vaulting, and in learning to handle sundry kind of weapons he hath taken for his guide our Master Peter Mount, who (as you know) is the true and only master of all artificial force and sleight, so in riding, in jousting, and in every other feat, he hath always had before his eyes the most perfectest that hath been known to be in those professions.

"He therefore that will be a good scholar, beside the practicing of good things, must evermore set all his diligence to be like his master, and, if it were possible, change himself into him. And when he hath had some entry, it profiteth him much to behold sundry men of that profession; and, governing himself with that good judgment that must always be his guide, go about to pick out, sometime of one and sometime of another, sundry matters. And even as the bee in the green meadows flieth always about the grass choosing out flowers, so shall our Courtier steal this grace from them that to his seeming⁴ have it, and from each one that parcel that shall be most worthy praise. And not do as a friend of ours whom you all know, that thought he resembled much King Ferdinand the younger, of Aragon, and regarded not to resemble him in any other point but in the often lifting up his head, wrying⁵ therewithal a part of his mouth, the which custom the king had gotten by infirmity. And many such there are that think they do much, so they resemble a great man in somewhat and take many times the thing in him that worst becometh him.

"But I, imagining with myself often times how this grace cometh, leaving apart such as have it from above, find one rule that is most general which in this part (methink) taketh place in all things belonging to a man in word or deed above all other. And that is to eschew as much as a man may, and as a sharp and dangerous rock, Affectation or curiosity,⁶ and, to speak a new word, to use in every thing a certain Recklessness,⁷ to cover art withal, and seem what-

4. Opinion.

5. Twisting awry.

6. Over-fastidiousness.

7. Hoby translates badly here. The Italian word is sprezzatura, which means a natural, easy grace. "Art": artifice.

soever he doth and sayeth to do it without pain, and, as it were, not minding it. And of this do I believe grace is much derived, for in rare matters and well brought to pass every man knoweth the hardness of them, so that a readiness therein maketh great wonder. And contrariwise to use force, and, as they say, to hale by the hair, giveth a great disgrace and maketh everything, how great soever it be, to be little esteemed. Therefore that may be said to be a very art that appeareth not to be art; neither ought a man to put more diligence in anything than in covering it, for in case it be open, it loseth credit clean, and maketh a man little set by. And I remember that I have read in my days that there were some most excellent orators which among other their cares enforced themselves to make every man believe that they had no sight⁸ in letters, and dissembling their cunning, made semblant their orations to be made very simply, and rather as nature and truth made them, than study and art, the which if it had been openly known would have put a doubt in the people's mind, for fear lest he beguiled them. You may see then how to show art and such bent study taketh away the grace of everything."

From Book IV

[LOVE]

Then the Lord Gaspar:⁹ "I remember," quoth he, "that these lords yesternight, reasoning of the Courtier's qualities, did allow him to be a lover; and in making rehearsal¹ of as much as hitherto hath been spoken, a man may pick out a conclusion that the Courtier which with his worthiness and credit must incline his prince to virtue must in manner of necessity be aged, for knowledge cometh very seldom time before years, and specially in matters that be learned with experience. I cannot see, when he is well drawn² in years, how it will stand well with him to be a lover, considering, as it hath been said the other night, love frameth not with old men, and the tricks that in young men be gallantness, courtesy, and preciseness³ so acceptable to women, in them are mere follies and fondness⁴ to be laughed at, and purchase him that useth them hatred of women and mocks of others. Therefore, in case this your Aristotle, an old Courtier, were a lover and practiced the feats that young lovers do, as some that we have seen in our days, I fear me he would forget to teach his prince; and peradventure boys would mock him behind his back, and women would have none other delight in him but to make him a jesting-stock."

8. Knowledge, insight.

9. Gasparo Pallavicino, whose attitude in the dialogue is usually that of the woman-hater.

1. Reviewing.

2. Advanced.

3. Excessive neatness.

4. Foolishness.

Then said the Lord Octavian:⁵ "Since all the other qualities appointed to the Courtier are meet for him, although he be old, methink we should not then bar him from this happiness to love."

"Nay rather," quoth the Lord Gaspar, "to take this love from him is a perfection over and above, and a making him to live happily out of misery and wretchedness."

M. Peter Bembo⁶ said: "Remember you not, my Lord Gaspar, that the Lord Octavian declared the other night in his device of pastimes, although he be not skillful in love, to know yet that there be some lovers which reckon the disdains, the angers, the debates and torments which they receive of their ladies, sweet? Whereupon he required to be taught the cause of this sweetness. Therefore, in case our Courtier, though he be old, were kindled with those loves that be sweet without any bitter smack, he should feel no misery nor wretchedness at all. And being wise, as we set case⁷ he is, he should not be deceived in thinking to be meet for him whatsoever were meet for young men, but in loving should perhaps love after a sort that might not only not bring him in slander, but to much praise and great happiness, without any loathsomeness at all, the which very seldom or in manner never happeneth to young men; and so should he neither lay aside the teaching of his prince, nor yet commit anything that should deserve the mocking of boys."

Then spake the Duchess:⁸ "I am glad, M. Peter, that you have not been much troubled in our reasonings this night, for now we may be the bolder to give you in charge to speak, and to teach the Courtier this so happy a love, which bringeth with it neither slander nor any inconvenience; for perhaps it shall be one of the necessariest and profitabest qualities that hitherto hath been given him; therefore speak, of good fellowship, as much as you know therein."

M. Peter laughed and said: "I would be loath, madam, where I say it is lawful for old men to love, it should be an occasion for these ladies to think me old; therefore hardly⁹ give ye this enterprise to another."

The Duchess answered: "You ought not to refuse to be counted old in knowledge, though ye be young in years. Therefore say on, and excuse yourself no more."

M. Peter said: "Surely, madam, if I must entreat upon this matter, I must first go ask counsel of my hermit¹ Lavinello."

The Lady Emilia² said then half in anger: "There is never a one

5. Ottaviano Fregoso, a soldier, later Doge of Genoa.

6. Poet, Platonist, grammarian, and historian; later a cardinal. He is here the philosopher of love. "M.": Master.

7. Assume.

8. Elizabetta Gonzaga, wife of the Duke of Urbino.

9. By all means.

1. I.e., spiritual advisor; cf. Friar Laurence in Romeo and Juliet.

2. Lady Emilia Pio, friend and confidante of the Duchess.

in all the company so disobedient as you be, M. Peter, therefore should the Duchess do well to chastise you somewhat for it."

M. Peter said smiling: "For love of God, madam, be not angry with me, for I will say whatever you will have me."

"Go to,³ say on then," answered the Lady Emilia.

Then M. Peter after a while's silence, somewhat settling himself as though he should entreat upon a weighty matter, said thus: "My Lords, to show that old men may love not only without slander, but otherwhile⁴ more happily than young men, I must be enforced to make a little discourse to declare what love is, and wherein consisteth the happiness that lovers may have. Therefore I beseech you give the hearing with heedfulness, for I hope to make you understand that it were not unfitting for any man here to be a lover, in case he were fifteen or twenty years elder than M. Morello."⁵

And here, after they had laughed awhile, M. Peter proceeded: "I say, therefore, that according as it is defined of the wise men of old time, love is nothing else but a certain coveting to enjoy beauty; and forsomuch as coveting longeth for nothing but for things known, it is requisite that knowledge go evermore before coveting, which of his own nature willethe the good, but of himself is blind and knoweth it not. Therefore hath nature so ordained that to every virtue of knowledge there is annexed a virtue of longing. And because in our soul there be three manner⁶ ways to know, namely, by sense, reason, and understanding: of sense ariseth appetite or longing, which is common to us with brute beasts; of reason ariseth election or choice, which is proper to man; of understanding, by the which man may be partner with angels, ariseth will. Even as therefore the sense knoweth not but sensible matters and that which may be felt, so the appetite or coveting only desireth the same; and even as the understanding is bent but to behold things that may be understood, so is that will only fed with spiritual goods. Man of nature endowed with reason, placed, as it were, in the middle between these two extremities, may, through his choice inclining to sense or reaching to understanding, come nigh to the coveting, sometime of the one, sometime of the other part. In these sorts therefore may beauty be coveted, the general name whereof may be applied to all things, either natural or artificial, that are framed in good proportion and due temper,⁷ as their nature beareth. But speaking of the beauty that we mean, which is only it that appeareth in bodies, and especially in the face of man, and moveth this fervent coveting which we call love, we will term it an influence of the heavenly

3. Very well.

4. Occasionally.

5. Morello da Ortona, a courtier and musician; later a speaker in the dialogue.

6. Kinds of.

7. The right mixture or combination of elements.

bountifulness, the which for all it stretcheth over all things that be created (like the light of the sun), yet when it findeth out a face well-proportioned, and framed with a certain lively agreement of several colors, and set forth with lights and shadows, and with an orderly distance and limits of lines, thereinto it distilleth itself and appareth most well favored, and decketh out and lighteneth the subject where it shineth with a marvelous grace and glistening, like the sunbeams that strike against beautiful plate of fine gold wrought and set with precious jewels, so that it draweth unto it men's eyes with pleasure, and piercing through them imprinteth himself in the soul, and with an unwonted sweetness all to-stirreth⁸ her and delighteth, and setting her on fire maketh her to covet him. When the soul then is taken with coveting to enjoy this beauty as a good thing, in case she suffer herself to be guided with the judgment of sense, she falleth into most deep errors, and judgeth the body in which beauty is discerned to be the principal cause thereof; whereupon to enjoy it she reckoneth it necessary to join as inwardly as she can with that body, which is false; and therefore whoso thinketh in possessing the body to enjoy beauty, he is far deceived, and is moved to it, not with true knowledge by the choice of reason, but with false opinion by the longing of sense. Whereupon the pleasure that followeth it is also false and of necessity full of errors. And therefore into one of the two vices run all those lovers that satisfy their dishonest lusts with the women whom they love; for either as soon as they come to the coveted end, they not only feel a fullness and loathsomeness, but also conceive a hatred against the right beloved, as though longing repented him of his offense and acknowledged the deceit wrought him by the false judgment of sense, that made him believe the ill to be good, or else they continue in the very same coveting and greediness, as though they were not indeed come to the end which they sought for. And albeit through the blind opinion that hath made them drunken (to their seeming) in that instant they feel a contentation,⁹ as the diseased otherwhile, that dream they drink of some clear spring, yet they are not satisfied, nor leave off so. And because of possessing coveted goodness there arises always quietness and satisfaction in the possessor's mind, in case this were the true and right end of their coveting, when they possess it they would be at quietness and thoroughly satisfied, which they be not: but rather deceived through that likeness, they forthwith return again to unbridled coveting, and with the very same trouble which they felt at the first, they fall again into the raging and most burning thirst of the thing, that they hope in vain to possess perfectly. These kind of lovers therefore love most unluckily for either they never come by their covetings, which is a great un-

8. Moves violently.

9. Satisfied condition.

luckiness, or else if they do come by them, they find they come by their hurt and end their misery with other greater miseries, for both in the beginning and middle of this love, there is never other thing felt but afflictions, torments, griefs, pining travail, so that to be wan, vexed with continual tears and sighs, to live with a discontented mind, to be always dumb, or to lament, to covet death, in conclusion to be most unlucky are the properties which, they say, belong to lovers. The cause therefore of this wretchedness in men's minds is principally sense, which in youthful age beareth most sway, because the lustiness of the flesh and of the blood in that season addeth unto him even so much force as it withdraweth from reason. Therefore doth it easily train¹ the soul to follow appetite or longing, for when she seeth herself drowned in the earthly prison, because she is set in the office to govern the body, she cannot of herself understand plainly at the first the truth of spiritual beholding. Wherefore to compass the understanding of things, she must go beg the beginning at the senses, and therefore she believeth them and giveth ear to them, and is contented to be led by them, especially when they have so much courage, that (in a manner) they enforce her, and because they are deceitful they fill her with errors and false opinions. Whereupon most commonly it happeneth that young men be wrapped in this sensual love, which is a very rebel against reason, and therefore they make themselves unworthy to enjoy the favors and benefits which love bestows upon his true subjects, neither in love feel they any other pleasures than what beasts without reason do, but much more grievous afflictions. Setting case therefore this to be so, which is most true, I say that the contrary chanceth to them of a more ripe age. For in case they, when the soul is not now so much weighted down with the bodily burden, and when the natural burning assuageth and draweth to a warmth, if they be inflamed with beauty, and to it bend their coveting guided by reasonable choice, they be not deceived, and possess beauty perfectly, and therefore through the possessing of it, always goodness ensueth to them. Because beauty is good and consequently the true love of it is most good and holy, and evermore bringeth forth good fruits in the souls of them that with the bridle of reason restrain the ill disposition of sense, the which old men can much sooner do than young. It is not therefore out of reason to say that old men may also love without slander and more happily than young men, taking notwithstanding this name old, not for the age at the pit's brink, nor when the canals of the body be so feeble, that the soul cannot through them work her feats, but when knowledge in us is in his right strength. And I will not also hide this from you: namely, that I suppose where sensual love in every age is naught, yet in young men it deserveth excuse, and perhaps in some case leeful;²for although it puts them in afflictions, dangers, travails, and the unfortunateness that is said, yet are there many that to win them the goodwill of their ladies practice virtuous things, which for all they be not bent to a good end, yet are they good of themselves; and so of that much bitterness they pick out a little sweetness, and through the adversities which they sustain, in the end they acknowledge their error. As I judge therefore those young men that bridle their appetites, and love with reason, to be godly; so do I hold excused such as yield to sensual love, whereunto they be so inclined through the weakness and frailty of man—so they show therein meekness, courtesy, and prowess, and the other worthy conditions that these Lords have spoken of; and when those youthful years be gone and past, leave it off clean, keeping aloof from this sensual coveting as from the lowermost step of the stairs, by which a man may ascend to true love. But in case after they draw in years once, they reserve in their cold heart the fire of appetites, and bring stout reason in subjection to feeble sense, it cannot be said how much they are to be blamed: for like men without sense they deserve with an everlasting shame to be put in the number of unreasonable living creatures, because the thoughts and ways of sensual love be far unfitting for ripe age.”

1. Entice.

Here Bembo paused awhile, and when all things were whist³ M. Morello of Ortona said: “And in case there were some old man more fresh and lusty and of a better complexion⁴ than many young men, why would you not have it lawful for him to love with the love that young men love?”

The Duchess laughed, and said: “If the love of young men be so unlucky, why would you, M. Morello, that old men should also love with this unluckiness? But in case you were old, as these men say you be, you would not thus procure the hurt of old men.”

M. Morello answered: “The hurt of old men, mescemeth, M. Peter Bembo procureth, who will have them to love after a sort that I for my part understand not; and, methink, the possessing of this beauty which he praiseth so much, without the body, is a dream.”

“Do you believe, M. Morello,” quoth then Count Lewis, “that beauty is always so good a thing as M. Peter Bembo speaketh of?”

“Not I, in good sooth,” answered M. Morello. “But I remember rather that I have seen many beautiful women of a most ill inclination, cruel and spiteful, and it seemeth that, in a manner, it happeneth always so, for beauty maketh them proud, and pride, cruel.”

2. Permissible.

3. Quiet.

4. Bodily vigor.

Count Lewis said, smiling: "To you perhaps they seem cruel, because they content you not with it that you would have. But cause M. Peter Bembo to teach you in what sort old men ought to covet beauty, and what to seek at their ladies' hands, and what to content themselves withal; and in not passing out of these bounds ye shall see that they shall be neither proud nor cruel, and will satisfy you with what you shall require."

M. Morello seemed then somewhat out of patience, and said: "I will not know the thing that toucheth⁵ me not. But cause you to be taught how the young men ought to covet this beauty that are not so fresh and lusty as old men be."

Here Sir Frederick,⁶ to pacify M. Morello and to break their talk, would not suffer Count Lewis to make answer, but interrupting him said: "Perhaps M. Morello is not altogether out of the way in saying that beauty is not always good, for the beauty of women is many times cause of infinite evils in the world—hatred, war, mortality, and destruction, whercof the razing of Troy can be a good witness; and beautiful women for the most part be either proud and cruel, as is said, or unchaste; but M. Morello would find no fault with that. There be also many wicked men that have the comeliness of a beautiful countenance, and it seemeth that nature hath so shaped them because they may be the readier to deceive, and that this amiable look were like a bait that covereth the hook."

Then M. Peter Bembo: "Believe not," quoth he, "but beauty is always good."

Here Count Lewis, because he would return again to his former purpose, interrupted him and said: "Since M. Morello passeth not to understand that which is so necessary for him, teach it me, and show me how old men may come by this happiness of love, for I will not care to be counted old, so it may profit me."

M. Peter Bembo laughed, and said: "First will I take the error out of these gentlemen's mind, and afterward will I satisfy you also." So beginning afresh: "My Lords," quoth he, "I would not that with speaking ill of beauty, which is a holy thing, any of us as profane and wicked should purchase him the wrath of God. Therefore, to give M. Morello and Sir Frederick warning, that they lose not their sight, as Stesichorus⁷ did—a pain most meet for whoso dispraiseth beauty—I say that beauty cometh of God and is like a circle, the goodness whereof is the center. And therefore, as there can be no circle without a center, no more can beauty be without goodness. Whereupon doth very seldom an ill soul dwell in a

5. Concerns.

6. Federico Fregoso, later Archbishop of Salerno.

7. "A notable poet which lost his sight for writing against Helena [Helen of Troy] and recanting had his sight restored him again" [Hoby's note].

beautiful body. And therefore is the outward beauty a true sign of the inward goodness, and in bodies this comeliness is imprinted, more and less, as it were, for a mark of the soul, whereby she is outwardly known; as in trees, in which the beauty of the buds giveth a testimony of the goodness of the fruit. And the very same happeneth in bodies, as it is seen that palmisters by the visage know many times the conditions and otherwhile the thoughts of men. And, which is more, in beasts also a man may discern by the face the quality of the courage, which in the body declareth itself as much as it can. Judge you how plainly in the face of a lion, a horse, and an eagle, a man shall discern anger, fierceness, and stoutness; in lambs and doves, simpleness and very innocency; the crafty subtlety in foxes and wolves; and the like, in a manner, in all other living creatures. The foul,⁸ therefore, for the most part be also evil, and the beautiful good. Therefore it may be said that beauty is a face pleasant, merry, comely, and to be desired for goodness; and foulness a face dark, ugly, unpleasant, and to be shunned for ill. And in case you will consider all things, you shall find that whatsoever is good and profitable hath also evermore the comeliness of beauty. Behold the state of this great engine of the world,⁹ which God created for the health and preservation of everything that was made: the heaven round beset with so many heavenly lights; and in the middle the earth environed with the elements and upheld with the very weight of itself; the sun, that compassing about giveth light to the whole, and in winter season draweth to the lowermost sign, afterward by little and little climbeth again to the other part; the moon, that of him taketh her light, according as she draweth nigh or goeth farther from him; and the other five stars that diversely keep the very same course. These things among themselves have such force by the knitting together of an order so necessarily framed that, with altering them any one jot, they should all be loosed and the world would decay. They have also such beauty and comeliness that all the wits men have cannot imagine a more beautiful matter.

"Think now of the shape of man, which may be called a little world, in whom every parcel of his body is seen to be necessarily framed by art and not by hap, and then the form altogether most beautiful, so that it were a hard matter to judge whether the members (as the eyes, the nose, the mouth, the ears, the arms, the breast, and in like manner the other parts) give either more profit to the countenance and the rest of the body, or comeliness. The

8. Ugly.

9. The following description is a summary of the Ptolemaic universe with the earth at the center; the elements of earth, water, air, fire surrounding the earth; the various crystalline spheres each containing sun, moon, or a planet; and the hard outer shell, the Primum Mobile (first mover).

like may be said of all other living creatures. Behold the feathers of fowls, the leaves and boughs of trees, which be given them of nature to keep them in their being, and yet have they withal a very great sightliness. Leave nature, and come to art. What thing is so necessary in sailing vessels as the forepart, the sides, the main yards, the mast, the sails, the stern, oars, anchors, and tacklings? All these things notwithstanding are so wellfavored in the eye that unto whoso beholdeth them they seem to have been found out as well for pleasure as for profit. Pillars and great beams uphold high buildings and palaces, and yet are they no less pleasurable unto the eyes of the beholders than profitable to the buildings. When men began first to build, in the middle of temples and houses they reared the ridge of the roof, not to make the works to have a better show, but because the water might the more commodiously avoid¹ on both sides; yet unto profit there was forthwith adjoined a fair sightliness, so that if, under the sky where there falleth neither hail nor rain, a man should build a temple without a reared ridge, it is to be thought that it could have neither a sightly show nor any beauty. Besides other things, therefore, it giveth a great praise to the world in saying that it is beautiful. It is praised in saying the beautiful heaven, beautiful earth, beautiful sea, beautiful rivers, beautiful woods, trees, gardens, beautiful cities, beautiful churches, houses, armies. In conclusion, this comely and holy beauty is a wondrous setting out of everything. And it may be said that good and beautiful be after a sort one self thing, especially in the bodies of men; of the beauty whereof the highest cause, I suppose, is the beauty of the soul; the which, as a partner of the right and heavenly beauty, maketh sightly and beautiful whatever she toucheth, and most of all, if the body, where she dwelleth, be not of so vile a matter that she cannot imprint in it her property.² Therefore beauty is the true monument and spoil of the victory of the soul, when she with heavenly influence beareth rule over material and gross nature, and with her light overcometh the darkness of the body. It is not, then, to be spoken that beauty maketh women proud or cruel, although it seem so to M. Morello. Neither yet ought beautiful women to bear the blame of that hatred, mortality, and destruction which the unbridled appetites of men are the cause of. I will not now deny but it is possible also to find in the world beautiful women unchaste; yet not because beauty inclineth them to unchaste living, for it rather plucketh them from it, and leadeth them into the way of virtuous conditions, through the affinity that beauty hath with goodness; but otherwhile³ ill bringing up, the continual provocations of lovers' tokens, poverty, hope, deceits, fear, and a thousand other matters,

1. Escape.

2. Attribute, quality.

3. Sometimes.

overcome the steadfastness, yea, of beautiful and good women; and for these and like causes may also beautiful men become wicked."

Then said the Lord Cesar:⁴ "In case the Lord Gaspar's saying be true of yesternight, there is no doubt but the fair women be more chaste than the foul."

"And what was my saying?" quoth the Lord Gaspar.

The Lord Cesar answered: "If I do well bear in mind, your saying was that the women that are sued to always refuse to satisfy him that sueth to them, but those that are not sued to, sue to others. There is no doubt but the beautiful women have always more suitors, and be more instantly laid at⁵ in love, than the foul. Therefore the beautiful always deny, and consequently be more chaste than the foul, which, not being sued to, sue unto others."

M. Peter Bembo laughed, and said: "This argument cannot be answered to."

Afterward he proceeded: "It chanceth also, oftentimes, that as the other senses, so the sight is deceived and judgeth a face beautiful which indeed is not beautiful. And because in the eyes and in the whole countenance of some woman a man beholdeth otherwhile a certain lavish wantonness painted, with dishonest flickerings, many, whom that manner delighteth because it promiseth them an easiness to come by the thing that they covet, call it beauty; but indeed it is a cloaked unshamefastness,⁶ unworthy of so honorable and holy a name."

M. Peter Bembo held his peace, but those lords still were earnest upon him to speak somewhat more of this love and of the way to enjoy beauty aright, and at the last: "Methink," quoth he, "I have showed plainly enough that old men may love more happily than young, which was my drift; therefore it belongeth not to me to enter any farther."

Count Lewis answered: "You have better declared the unluckiness of young men than the happiness of old men, whom you have not as yet taught what way they must follow in this love of theirs; only you have said that they must suffer themselves to be guided by reason, and the opinion of many is that it is impossible for love to stand with reason."

Bembo notwithstanding sought to make an end of reasoning, but the Duchess desired him to say on, and he began thus afresh: "Too unlucky were the nature of man, if our soul, in which this so fervent coveting may lightly arise, should be driven to nourish it with that only which is common to her with beasts, and could not turn it to the other noble part, which is proper to her? Therefore, since it is so your pleasure, I will not refuse to reason upon this noble matter.

4. Lord Cesar Gonzaga, cousin of Castiglione.

5. Pursued.

6. Immodesty.

7. "I.e., Reason" [Hoby's note].

And because I know myself unworthy to talk of the most holy mysteries of Love, I beseech him to lead my thought and my tongue so that I may show this excellent Courtier how to love contrary to the wonted manner of the common ignorant sort. And even as from my childhood I have dedicated all my whole life unto him, so also now that my words may be answerable to the same intent, and to the praise of him: I say, therefore, that since the nature of man in youthful age is so much inclined to sense, it may be granted the Courtier, while he is young, to love sensually; but in case afterward also, in his riper years, he chance to be set on fire with this coveting of love, he ought to be good and circumspect, and heedful that he beguile not himself to be led willfully into the wretchedness that in young men deserveth more to be pitied than blamed and contrariwise in old men, more to be blamed than pitied. Therefore when an amiable countenance of a beautiful woman cometh in his sight, that is accompanied with noble conditions and honest behaviors, so that, as one practiced in love, he wotteth well that his huc hath an agreement with hers, as soon as he is aware that his eyes snatch that image and carry it to the heart, and that the soul beginneth to behold it with pleasure, and feelth within herself the influence that stirreth her and by little and little setteth her in heat, and that those lively spirits that twinkle out through the eyes put continually fresh nourishment to the fire, he ought in this beginning to seek a speedy remedy and to raise up reason, and with her to fence the fortress of his heart, and to shut in such wise the passages against sense and appetites that they may enter neither with force nor subtle practice. Thus, if the flame be quenched, the jeopardy is also quenched. But in case it continue or increase, then must the Courtier determine, when he perceiveth he is taken, to shun thoroughly⁸ all filthiness of common love, and so enter into the holy way of love with the guide of reason, and first consider that the body where that beauty shineth is not the fountain from whence beauty springeth, but rather because beauty is bodiless and, as we have said, an heavenly shining beam, she loseth much of her honor when she is coupled with that vile subject⁹ and full of corruption, because the less she is partner thereof, the more perfect she is, and, clean sundered from it, is most perfect. And as a man heareth not with his mouth, nor smelleth with his ears, no more can he also in any manner wise enjoy beauty, nor satisfy the desire that she stirreth up in our minds, with feeling, but with the sense unto whom beauty is the very butt to level at,¹ namely, the virtue of seeing. Let him lay aside, therefore, the blind judgment of the sense, and enjoy with his eyes the brightness, the comeliness, the loving sparkles, laughters, gestures, and all the other pleasant furnitures of beauty, especially with hearing the sweetness

8. Completely.
9. I.e., the body.

1. Target to aim at.

of her voice, the tunableness² of her words, the melody of her singing and playing on instruments (in case the woman beloved be a musician), and so shall he with most dainty food feed the soul through the means of these two senses which have little bodily substance in them and be the ministers of reason, without entering farther toward the body with coveting unto any longing otherwise than honest. Afterward let him obey, please, and honor with all reverence his woman, and reckon her more dear to him than his own life, and prefer all her commodities³ and pleasures before his own, and love no less in her the beauty of the mind than of the body. Therefore let him have a care not to suffer her to run into any error, but with lessons and good exhortations seek always to frame her to modesty, to temperance, to true honesty, and so to work that there may never take place in her other than pure thoughts and far wide from all filthiness of vices. And thus in sowing of virtue in the garden of that mind, he shall also gather the fruits of most beautiful conditions, and savor them with a marvelous good relish. And this shall be the right engendering and imprinting of beauty in beauty, the which some hold opinion to be the end of love. In this manner shall our Courtier be most acceptable to his lady, and she will always show herself toward him tractable, lowly,⁴ and sweet in language, and as willing to please him as to be beloved of him; and the wills of them both shall be most honest and agreeable, and they consequently shall be most happy."

Here M. Morello: "The engendering," quoth he, "of beauty in beauty aright were the engendering of a beautiful child in a beautiful woman; and I would think it a more manifest token a great deal that she loved her lover, if she pleased him with this than with the sweetness of language that you speak of."

M. Peter Bembo laughed, and said: "You must not, M. Morello, pass your bounds. I may tell you it is not a small token that a woman loveth when she giveth unto her lover her beauty, which is so precious a matter; and by the ways that be a passage to the soul (that is to say, the sight and the hearing) sendeth the looks of her eyes, the image of her countenance, and the voice of her words, that pierce into the lover's heart and give a witness of her love."

M. Morello said: "Looks and words may be, and oftentimes are, false witnesses. Therefore whoso hath not a better pledge of love, in my judgment he is in an ill assurance. And surely I looked still that you would have made this woman of yours somewhat more courteous and free toward the Courtier than my Lord Julian⁵ hath made his; but meseemeth ye be both of the property of those judges

2. Musical quality.

3. Conveniences.

4. Modest.

5. Giuliano de Medici, youngest son of Lorenzo the Magnificent, commander-in-chief of the papal armies, and a speaker in the dialogue.

that, to appear wise, give sentence against their own.”

Bembo said: “I am well pleased to have this woman much more courteous toward my Courtier not young than the Lord Julian’s is to the young; and that with good reason, because mine coveteth but honest matters, and therefore may the woman grant him them all without blame. But my Lord Julian’s woman, that is not so assured of the modesty of the young man, ought to grant him the honest matters only, and deny him the dishonest. Therefore more happy is mine, that hath granted him whatsoever he requireth, than the other, that hath part granted and part denied. And because you may moreover the better understand that reasonable love is more happy than sensual, I say unto you that selfsame things in sensual ought to be denied otherwhile, and in reasonable granted; because in the one they be honest, and in the other dishonest. Therefore the woman, to please her good lover, besides the granting him merry countenances, familiar and secret talk, jesting, dallying, hand-in-hand, may also lawfully and without blame come to kissing, which in sensual love, according to the Lord Julian’s rules, is not lawful. For since a kiss is a knitting together both of body and soul, it is to be feared lest the sensual lover will be more inclined to the part of the body than of the soul; but the reasonable lover wotteth⁶ well that although the mouth be a parcel⁷ of the body, yet is it an issue for the words that be the interpreters of the soul, and for the inward breath, which is also called the soul; and therefore hath a delight to join his mouth with the woman’s beloved with a kiss—not to stir him to any dishonest desire, but because he feelth that that bond is the opening of an entry to the souls, which, drawn with a coveting the one of the other, pour themselves by turn the one into the other’s body, and be so mingled together that each of them hath two souls, and one alone so framed of them both ruleth, in a manner, two bodies. Whereupon a kiss may be said to be rather a coupling together of the soul than of the body, because it hath such force in her that it draweth her unto it, and, as it were, separateth her from the body. For this do all chaste lovers covet a kiss as a coupling of souls together. And therefore Plato, the divine lover, saith that in kissing his soul came as far as his lips to depart out of the body. And because the separating of the soul from the matters of the sense, and the thorough coupling of her with matters of understanding, may be betokened by a kiss, Solomon saith⁸ in his heavenly book of ballads, ‘Oh that he would kiss me with a kiss of his mouth,’ to express the desire he had that his soul might be ravished through heavenly love to the beholding of heavenly beauty in such manner that, coupling herself inwardly with it, she might forsake the body.”

* * *

6. Knows.

7. Part.

8. In Song of Solomon i.2.

When Bembo had hitherto spoken with such vehemency that a man would have thought him, as it were, ravished and beside himself, he stood still without once moving, holding his eyes toward heaven as astonished,⁹ when the Lady Emilia, which together with the rest gave most diligent ear to this talk, took him by the plait¹ of his garment and, plucking him a little, said, "Take heed, M. Peter, that these thoughts make not your soul also to forsake the body." "Madam," answered M. Peter, it should not be the first miracle that love hath wrought in me."

1561

9. Enraptured.

1. Hem.

RICHARD HOOKER

(1554-1600)

Out of the long and bitter controversy over the government of the church in 16th-century England emerged one literary masterpiece. It is a long work in eight books called Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (that is, the governmental system of the church). The author was Richard Hooker, a scholar and minister who accomplished the extraordinary feat of engaging in the bitterest dispute of his time and maintaining a calm, reasonable manner. In 1585 Hooker was Master of the Temple (in modern terms, a dean of a law school); one of his subordinates was a Puritan lecturer named Walter Travers. Between them a running debate developed on the burning question of how the church should be governed. The Puritan view was that no organization or authority in the church was valid unless it was based clearly and specifically upon the Bible; the whole hierarchical system of the English church, with its deacons, priests, bishops, and archbishops, was accordingly wrong. The position Hooker undertook to defend was that the Scriptures, or divine revelation, are not the only guide given to men for organizing and administering the Christian church. A more important guide is the law of nature, which is also divinely given; this law can be discovered by the use of human reason.

In his great book, which grew out of his controversy with Travers, Hooker therefore had to explain how the law of nature justified the existing organization of the English church. Book I of Ecclesiastical Polity deals with laws in general and their various kinds, picturing a universe operating under natural and divine law and founded upon reason. Book II deals with the nature, authority, and adequacy of Scripture. Book III concerns the scriptural bases for worship and government. Book IV defends the rites and ceremonies of the English church, and Book V, longer than the first four together, is a commentary on The Book of Common Prayer. Books VI, VII, and VIII deal with various embodiments of authority—elders, bishops, kings, and popes.

Hooker was a close and effective reasoner; he relied not upon the fiery invective or impassioned rhetoric which characterized most disputants of his time, but rather upon a calm, reasonable, tolerant approach. His defense of existing ecclesiastical practices went back to fundamental principles, to a philosophy of nature and of man's place in it, of his relation to God and to his fellow men. It is this world view which makes Hooker's book of interest when the controversy over church organization has long since died down. And the prose in which Hooker sets forth his world view is the finest prose of the Elizabethan age. King James I is quoted by Izaak Walton, Hooker's 17th-century biographer, as saying, "I observe there is in Mr. Hooker no affected language; but a grave, comprehensive, clear manifestation of reason, and that backed with the authority of the Scriptures, the fathers and schoolmen, and with all law both sacred and civil. And, though others may write well, yet in the next age they will be forgotten; but doubtless there is in every page of Mr. Hooker's book the picture of a divine soul, such pictures of truth and reason, and drawn in so sacred colors, that they shall never fade but give an immortal memory to the author."

From Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity

From The Preface

[ON MODERATION IN CONTROVERSY]

* * * Amongst ourselves, there was in King Edward's days some question moved by reason of a few men's scrupulosity touching certain things.¹ And beyond seas, of them which fled in the days of Queen Mary, some contenting themselves abroad with the use of their own service book at home authorized before their departure out of the realm, others liking better the common prayer book of the Church of Geneva translated, those smaller contentions before begun were by this mean somewhat increased. Under the happy reign of Her Majesty which now is, the greatest matter a while contended for was the wearing of the cap and surplice,² till there came Admonitions Directed unto the High Court of Parliament, by men who, concealing their names, thought it glory enough to discover their minds and affections, which were now universally bent even against all the orders and laws wherein this Church is found unconfordable to the platform of Geneva. Concerning the defender of which admonitions, all that I mean to say is this: "There will come a time when three words uttered with charity and meekness shall

1. During the short reign of the boy king, Edward VI (1547-53), the reformation begun under Henry VIII was carried further. Services were held in English, images were banished from the church, and the use of holy water was forbidden. During the following reign of Mary, a Catholic, many Protestant reformers fled abroad and there were influenced by the Calvinist doctrines and practices of the "Church of Geneva."

2. The extreme Protestants or "Puritans" were opposed to the daily wearing of cap and gown by the clergy and the wearing of the surplice in church. This "Vestiarian controversy" was at its height in the 1560's. The "Admonitions Directed unto the High Court of Parliament," by John Field and Thomas Wilcox (1572), attacked not only conventional clerical dress but the Prayer Book, episcopacy, and the whole structure of the Church of England.

receive a far more blessed reward than three thousand volumes written with disdainful sharpness of wit." But the manner of men's writing must not alienate our hearts from the truth if it appear they have the truth, as the followers of the same defender do think he hath, and in that persuasion they follow him no otherwise than himself doth Calvin, Beza³ and others, with the like persuasion that they in this cause had the truth. We being as fully persuaded otherwise, it resteth that some kind of trial be used to find out which part is in error.

The first mean whereby Nature teacheth men to judge good from evil, as well in laws as in other things, is the force of their own discretion. Hereunto therefore Saint Paul referreth oftentimes his own speech to be considered by them that heard him, "I speak as to them which have understanding; judge ye what I say."⁴ Again, afterward, "Judge in yourselves, is it comely that a woman pray uncovered?" The exercise of this kind of judgment our Saviour requireth in the Jews.⁵ In them of Berea the Scripture commendeth it. Finally, whatsoever we do, if our own secret judgment consent not unto it as fit and good to be done, the doing of it, to us, is sin, although the thing itself be allowable. Saint Paul's rule therefore generally is, "Let every man in his own mind be fully persuaded of that thing which he either alloweth or doth."⁶ Some things are so familiar and plain that truth from falsehood and good from evil is most easily discerned in them, even by men of no deep capacity. And of that nature, for the most part are things absolutely unto all men's salvation necessary, either to be held or denied, either to be done or avoided. For which cause Saint Augustine acknowledgeth that they are not only set down, but also plainly set down in scripture, so that he which heareth or readeth may, without any great difficulty, understand. Other things also there are belonging, though in a lower degree of importance, unto the offices of Christian men, which, because they are more obscure, more intricate and hard to be judged of, therefore God hath appointed some to spend their whole time principally in the study of things divine, to the end that in these more doubtful cases their understanding might be a light to direct others. "If the understanding power or faculty of the soul be," saith the Grand Physician,⁷ "like unto the bodily sight, not of equal sharpness in all, what can be more convenient than that, even as the dark-sighted man is directed by the clear about

3. John Calvin (1509-64) and Theodore Beza (1519-1605), two leading Protestant reformers on the Continent.

4. I Corinthians x.15. The next quotation is from I Corinthians xi.13.

5. See Luke xii.57. "Them of Berea": the inhabitants of the Macedonian city of Berea who "received the word with all readiness of mind" when Paul preached to them, according to Acts xiv.10-11.

6. See Romans xiv.5.

7. I.e., Galen, Greek physician of the 2d century A.D., whose works were long accepted as the highest medical authority.

things visible, so likewise in matters of deeper discourse the wise in heart do show the simple where his way lieth?" In the doubtful cases of law, what man is there who seeth not how requisite it is that professors of skill in that faculty be our directors? So is it in all other kinds of knowledge. And even in this kind likewise the Lord hath himself appointed that "the Priest's lips should preserve knowledge, and that other men should seek the truth at his mouth, because he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts."⁸ Gregory Nazianzen, offended at the people's too great presumption in controlling the judgment of them to whom in such cases they should rather have submitted their own, seeketh by earnest entreaty to stay them within their bounds: "Presume not, ye that are sheep, to make yourselves guides of them that should guide you; neither seek ye to overskip the fold which they about you have pitched. It sufficeth for your part, if ye can well frame yourselves to be ordered. Take not upon you to judge your judges, nor to make them subject to your laws who should be a law to you. For God is not a God of sedition and confusion but of order and of peace." But ye will say that if the guides of the people be blind, the common sort of men must not close up their own eyes and be led by the conduct of such; if the priest be partial in the law, the flock must not therefore depart from the ways of sincere truth, and in simplicity yield to be followers of him for his place' sake and office over them. Which thing, though in itself most true, is in your defense notwithstanding weak; because the matter wherein ye think that ye see and imagine that your ways are sincere is of far deeper consideration than any one amongst five hundred of you conceiveth. Let the vulgar sort amongst you know that there is not the least branch of the cause wherein they are so resolute but to the trial of it a great deal more appertaineth than their concept doth reach unto. I write not this in disgrace of the simplest that way given,⁹ but I would gladly they knew the nature of that cause wherein they think themselves thoroughly instructed and are not; by means whereof they daily run themselves, without feeling their own hazard, upon the dint of the Apostle's sentence against evil speakers as touching things wherein they are ignorant.¹ If it be granted a thing unlawful for private men, not called into public consultation, to dispute which is the best state of civil polity, with a desire of bringing in some other kind than that under which they already live, for of such disputes I take it his meaning was—if it be a thing confessed that of such questions they cannot determine without rashness, inasmuch as a great part of

8. See Malachi ii.7. "Gregory Nazianzen" is St. Gregory of Nazianzus, a 4th-century bishop.

9. I.e., I am not disparaging ordinary, uneducated people.

1. Ignorant people run the risk of the condemnation of the apostle Peter: "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption" (II Peter ii.12).

them consisteth in special circumstances, and for one kind as many reasons may be brought as for another—is there any reason in the world why they should better judge what kind of regiment² ecclesiastical is the fittest? For in the civil state more insight and, in those affairs, more experience a great deal needs be granted them, than in this they can possibly have. When they which write in defense of your discipline and commend it unto the highest³ not in the least cunning manner, are forced notwithstanding to acknowledge that with whom the truth is they know not, they are not certain—what certainty or knowledge can the multitude have thereof? Weigh what doth move the common sort so much to favor this innovation and it shall soon appear unto you that the force of particular reasons which for your several opinions are alleged is a thing whereof the multitude never did nor could consider as to be therewith wholly carried; but certain general inducements are used to make salable your cause in gross; and when once men have cast a fancy towards it, any slight declaration of specialties will serve to lead forward men's inclinable and prepared minds. The method of winning the people's affection unto a general liking of "the Cause," for so ye term it, hath been this: First, in the hearing of the multitude, the faults, especially of higher callings, are ripped up with marvelous exceeding severity and sharpness of reproof, which being oftentimes done, begetteth a great good opinion of integrity, zeal, and holiness to such constant reprovers of sin as by likelihood would never be so much offended at that which is evil, unless themselves were singularly good. The next thing hereunto is to impute all faults and corruptions wherewith the world aboundeth unto the kind of ecclesiastical government established. Wherein, as by reproving faults, they purchased unto themselves with the multitude a name to be virtuous; so by finding out this kind of cause they obtain to be judged wise above others, whereas in truth unto the form even of Jewish government, which the Lord himself, they all confess, did establish, with like show of reason they might impute those faults which the prophets condemn in the governors of that commonwealth as to the English kind of regiment ecclesiastical (whereof also God himself though in other sort is author), the stains and blemishes found in our state, which springing from the root of human frailty and corruption, not only are, but have always been more or less—yea, and for anything we know to the contrary will be till the world's end—complained of, what form of government soever take place. Having gotten thus much sway in the hearts of men, a third step is to propose their own form of church government as the only sovereign

2. Government.

3. I.e., Queen Elizabeth. The Humble Petition of the Commonalty (1588) said, "we are very babes and children, not knowing our right hand from our left in matters that concern the Kingdom of Heaven." "Cunning": learned.

remedy of all evils, and to adorn it with all the glorious titles that may be. And the nature, as of men that have sick bodies; so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present, is to imagine that anything the virtue whereof they hear commended would help them, but that most which they least have tried. The fourth degree of inducement is by fashioning the very notions and conceits⁴ of men's minds in such sort that when they read the Scriptures they may think that everything soundeth towards the advancement of that discipline and to the utter disgrace of the contrary. Pythagoras, by bringing up his scholars in the speculative knowledge of numbers, made their conceits therein so strong that when they came to the contemplation of things natural they imagined that in every particular thing they even beheld, as it were with their eyes, how the elements of number gave essence and being to the works of nature. A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned preconceit appeared unto them no less certain than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God. * * *

From Book I, Chapter 3

[THE LAW OF NATURE FOR NATURAL AGENTS]

* * * Now if Nature should intermit her course and leave altogether, though it were but for a while, the observation of her own laws; if those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which they now have; if the frame of that heavenly arch erected over our heads should loosen and dissolve itself; if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way as it might happen; if the prince of the lights of heaven which now as a giant doth run his unwearied course, should as it were through a languishing faintness begin to stand and to rest himself; if the moon should wander from her beaten way, the times and seasons of the year blend themselves by disordered and confused mixture, the winds breathe out their last gasp, the clouds yield no rain, the earth be defeated of heavenly influence, the fruits of the earth pine away as children at the withered breasts of their mother no longer able to yield them relief, what would become of man himself, whom these things now do all serve? See we not plainly that obedience of creatures unto the law of Nature is the stay of the whole world? Notwithstanding with Nature it cometh sometimes to pass as with art. Let Phidias⁵ have rude and obstinate stuff to carve, though his art do that it should, his work

4. Concepts.

5. The greatest of ancient Greek sculptors (5th century B.C.).

will lack that beauty which otherwise in fitter matter it might have had. He that striketh an instrument with skill may cause notwithstanding a very unpleasant sound if the string whereon he striketh chance to be incapable of harmony. In the matter whereof natural things consist, that of Theophrastus⁶ taketh place, "much of it is oftentimes such as will by no means yield to receive that impression which were best and most perfect." Which defect in the matter of things natural, they who gave themselves unto the contemplation of Nature among the heathen observed often; but the true original cause thereof divine malediction,⁷ laid for the sin of man upon those creatures which God had made for the use of man. This, being an article of that saving truth which God hath revealed unto his church, was above the reach of their merely natural capacity and understanding. But howsoever these swervings are now and then incident into the course of Nature, nevertheless so constantly the laws of Nature are by natural agents observed, that no man denieth but those things which Nature worketh are wrought either always or for the most part after one and the same manner. * * *

From Book I, Chapter 8

[THE LAW OF NATURE FOR VOLUNTARY AGENTS]

* * * The general and perpetual voice of men is as the sentence⁸ of God himself. For that which all men have at all times learned, Nature herself must needs have taught, and God being the author of Nature, her voice is but his instrument. By her from Him we receive whatsoever in such sort we learn. Infinite duties there are, the goodness whereof is by this rule sufficiently manifested, although we had no warrant besides to approve them. The apostle St. Paul having speech concerning the heathen saith of them "They are a law unto themselves."⁹ His meaning is, that by force of the light of reason wherewith God illuminateth everyone which cometh into the world, men being enabled to know truth from falsehood, and good from evil, do thereby learn in many things what the will of God is; which will himself not revealing by any extraordinary means unto them, but they by natural discourse attaining the knowledge thereof, seem the makers of those laws which indeed are his, and they but only the finders of them out. A law therefore generally taken is a directive rule unto goodness of operation. The rule of divine operations outward is the definite appointment of God's own wisdom set down within himself. The rule of natural agents that work by simple necessity is the determination of the wisdom

6. Greek writer of the 3rd century B.C., a follower of Aristotle and inventor of the type of essay called the "character," which in concise form delineated a type of person.

7. God's curse in Eden, which fell not only upon sinful man but upon the earth as well.

8. Wisdom.

9. Romans ii.14.

of God, known to God himself, the principal director of them, but not unto them that are directed to execute the same. The rule of natural agents which work after a sort of their own accord, as the beasts do, is the judgment of common sense or fancy concerning the sensible¹ goodness of those objects wherewith they are moved. The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which with unspeakable joy and delight doth set them on work. The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do. And the sentences which reason giveth are some more, some less general, before it come to define in particular actions what is good. The main principles of reason are in themselves apparent. For to make nothing evident of itself unto man's understanding were to take away all possibility of knowing anything. And herein that of Theophrastus is true, "They that seek a reason of all things do utterly overthrow reason." * * *

From Book I, Chapter 9

[NATURE, RIGHTEOUSNESS, AND SIN]

Now the due observation of this law which reason teacheth us cannot but be effectual unto their great good that observe the same. For we see the whole world and each part thereof so compacted² that as long as each thing performeth only that work which is natural unto it, it thereby preserveth both other things and also itself. Contrariwise, let any principal thing, as the sun or moon, or any one of the heavens or elements, but once cease or fail, or swerve, and who does not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would be ruin both to itself and whatsoever dependeth upon it? And is it possible that man, being not only the noblest creature in the world, but even a very world in himself, his transgressing the law of his nature should draw no manner of harm after it? Yes, tribulation and anguish unto every soul that doth evil. Good doth follow unto all things by observing the course of their nature, and on the contrary side, evil by not observing it, but not unto natural agents that good which we call reward, not that evil which we properly term punishment. The reason whereof is because amongst creatures in this world, only man's observation of the law of his nature is Righteousness, only man's transgression Sin. And the reason of this is his manner of observing or transgressing the law of his nature. He doth not otherwise than voluntarily the one or the other. What we do against our wills, or constrainedly, we are not properly said to do it, because the motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us, as if the

1. Perceptible by the senses.

2. Agreed.

wind should drive a feather in the air, we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven. In such cases therefore the evil which is done moveth compassion; men are pitied for it, as being rather miserable in such respect than culpable. * * *

From Book I, Chapter 10

[THE FOUNDATIONS OF SOCIETY]

That which hitherto we have set down is, I hope, sufficient to show their brutishness which imagine that religion and virtue are only as men will accompt of³ them, that we might make as much accompt, if we would, of the contrary, without any harm unto ourselves, and that in Nature they are as indifferent one as the other. We see then how Nature itself teacheth laws and statutes to live by. The laws which have been hitherto mentioned do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves what to do or not to do. But forasmuch as we are not by ourselves sufficient to furnish ourselves with competent store of things needful for such a life as our nature doth desire, a life fit for the dignity of man, therefore to supply those defects and imperfections which are in us living single and solely, by ourselves, we are naturally induced to seek communion and fellowship with others. This was the cause of men's uniting themselves at the first in politic societies, which societies could not be without government, nor government without a distinct kind of law from that which hath been already declared. Two foundations there are which bear up public societies, the one a natural inclination whereby all men desire a sociable life and fellowship, the other an order expressly or secretly agreed upon, touching the manner of their union in living together. The latter is that which we call the law of a commonweal,⁴ the very soul of a politic body, the parts whereof are by law animated, held together and set on work in such actions as the common good requireth. Laws politic, ordained for external order and regiment amongst men, are never framed as they should be, unless presuming the will of man to be inwardly obstinate, rebellious, and averse from all obedience unto the sacred laws of his nature—in a word, unless presuming man to be in regard of his depraved mind little better than a wild beast—they do accordingly provide notwithstanding so to frame his outward actions that they be no hindrance unto the common good for which societies are instituted; unless they do this, they are not perfect. It resteth therefore that we consider how Nature findeth out such laws of government as serve to direct even nature depraved to a right end. All men desired to lead in this world an happy life.

3. Value.

4. Commonwealth. Originally the "common good."

That life is led most happily, wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let. The Apostle⁵ in exhorting men to contentment, although they have in this world no more than very bare food and raiment, giveth us thereby to understand that those are even the lowest of things necessary; that if we should be stripped of all those things without which we might possibly be, yet these must be left, that destitution in these is such an impediment, as till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care. For this cause first God assigned Adam maintenance of life and then appointed him a law to observe. For this cause after men began to grow to a number, the first thing we read they gave themselves unto was the tilling of the earth and the feeding of cattle. Having by this mean whereon to live, the principal actions of their life afterward are noted by the exercise of their religion. True it is that the Kingdom of God must be the first thing in our purposes and desires. But inasmuch as righteous life presupposeth life, inasmuch as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live, therefore the first impediment which naturally we endeavor to remove is penury and want of things without which we cannot live. Unto life many implements are necessary; more,⁶ if we seek, as all men naturally do, such a life as hath in it joy, comfort, delight and pleasure. To this end we see how quickly sundry arts mechanical were found out in the very prime of the world. As things of greatest necessity are always first provided for, so things of greatest dignity are most accompted of by all such as judge rightly. Although therefore riches be a thing which every man wisheth, yet no man of judgment can esteem it better to be rich than wise, virtuous, and religious. If we be both or either of these, it is not because we are so born. For into the world we come as empty of the one as of the other, as naked in mind as we are in body. Both which necessities of man had at the first no other helps and supplies than only domestical, such as that which the prophet⁷ implieth, saying, "Can a mother forget her child?", such as that which the Apostle⁸ mentioneth, saying, "He that careth not for his own is worse than an infidel"; such as that concerning Abraham, "Abraham will command his sons and his household after him that they keep the way of the Lord."⁹ But neither that which we learn of ourselves, nor that which others teach us, can prevail where wickedness and malice have taken deep root. If therefore when there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction human or divine could prevent effusion of blood, how could it be chosen but that when families were multiplied and increased upon earth, after separation each providing for itself, envy, strife, contention, and violence must grow amongst them? For hath

5. Paul, in I Timothy vi.8.

6. More.

7. Isaiah (xlix.17).

8. Paul, in I Timothy v.8.

9. Genesis xviii.19.

not Nature furnished man with wit and valor, as it were with armor, which may be used as well unto extreme evil as good? Yea, were they not used by the rest of the world unto evil, unto the contrary only by Seth, Enoch, and those few the rest in that line?¹ We all make complaint of the iniquity of our times; not unjustly, for the days are evil. But compare them with those times wherein there were no civil societies, with those times wherein there was as yet no manner of public regiment established, with those times wherein there were not above eight persons righteous living upon the face of the earth, and we have surely good cause to think that God hath blessed us exceedingly and hath made us behold most happy days. To take away all such mutual grievances, injuries, and wrongs, there was no way but only by growing into composition and agreement amongst themselves by ordaining some kind of government public and by yielding themselves subject thereunto, that unto whom they granted authority to rule and govern, by them the peace, tranquility, and happy estate of the rest might be procured. * * *

From Book I, Chapter 12

[THE NEED FOR REVEALED LAW]

* * * The first principles of the law of nature are easy: hard it were to find men ignorant of them; but concerning the duty which Nature's law doth require at the hands of men in a number of things particular, so far hath the natural understanding even of sundry whole nations been darkened, that they have not discerned—no, not gross iniquity—to be sin. Again, being so prone as we are to fawn upon ourselves, and to be ignorant as much as may be of our own deformities, without the feeling sense whereof we are most wretched, even so much the more because not knowing them we cannot as much as desire to have them taken away, how should our festered sores be cured but that God hath delivered a law as sharp as the two-edged sword, piercing the very closest and most unsearchable corners of the heart which the law of nature can hardly, human laws by no means possible, reach unto? Hereby we know even secret concupiscence to be sin, and are made fearful to offend, though it be but in a wandering cogitation.² * * *

1593

1. The virtuous line of Seth is described in Genesis iv.25-26. It was in the time of Seth and his son Enos that "men began to call upon the name of the Lord."

2. A reference to Hebrews iv.12: "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

THOMAS HARIOT

(1560-1621)

Thomas Hariot, mathematician and scientist in the service of Sir Walter Raleigh, accompanied an expedition under Sir Richard Grenville, Raleigh's cousin, to Virginia in 1585, and wrote an account of it which was first published in 1588. Hariot was a careful observer and a competent "surveyor" or reporter. His account describes the geography, the climate, the vegetation, and the wild life of the country, but its main interest for us lies in his description of the natives. The English were very curious about the inhabitants of the new world: Shakespeare has one of his characters in The Tempest comment cynically on this trait of his countrymen: "When they will not give a doit [coin of small value] to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian" (II.ii.31-33). Hariot of course shares the interest of his master, Raleigh, in colonization, so he gives as favorable an account of the strange country as he can. His prose is workmanlike and straightforward, as one might expect of a man whose interests were more scientific than literary.

Hariot's account, and many others of English voyages of discovery, were collected and published in the decade 1589-99 by Richard Hakluyt in a huge collection called The Principal Navigations, Traffics, Voyages, and Discoveries of the English Nation. This work the 19th-century historian J. A. Froude called "the prose epic of the modern English nation."

From A Brief and True Report of the Newfound Land of Virginia

*Of the Commodities There Found, and to Be Raised, As Well
Merchantable as Others. Written by Thomas Hariot, Servant to Sir
Walter Raleigh, a Member of the Colony, and There Employed in Discovering a Full Twelve-Month*

OF THE NATURE AND MANNERS OF THE PEOPLE

It resteth I speak a word or two of the natural inhabitants, their natures and manners, leaving large discourse thereof until time more convenient hereafter. Now only so far forth, as that you may know how they in respect of troubling our inhabiting and planting, are not to be feared, but that they shall have cause both to fear and love us, that shall inhabit with them.

They are a people clothed with loose mantles made of deerskins, and aprons of the same round about their middles, all else naked, of such a difference of statures only as we in England, having no edge tools or weapons of iron or steel to offend us withal, neither know they how to make any. Those weapons that they have, are only bows made of witch hazel and arrows of reeds, flat-edged truncheons also of wood about a yard long, neither have they anything to defend themselves but targets¹ made of barks, and some armors made of sticks wickered together with thread.

Their towns are but small, and near the seacoast but few, some containing but ten or twelve houses, some twenty; the greatest that we have seen has been but of thirty houses. If they be walled, it is only done with barks of trees made fast to stakes, or else with poles only fixed upright and close one by another.

Their houses are made of small poles, made fast at the tops in round form after the manner as is used in many arbories in our gardens of England, in most towns covered with barks, and in some with artificial mats made of long rushes, from the tops of the houses down to the ground. The length of them is commonly double to the breadth; in some places they are but twelve and sixteen yards long, and in some other we have seen of four-and-twenty.

In some places of the country, one only town belongs to the government of a Wiróans or chief Lord, in other some two or three, in some six, eight, and more. The greatest Wiroans that yet we had dealing with had but eighteen towns in his government and able to make not above seven or eight hundred fighting men at the most. The language of every government is different from any other, and the further they are distant, the greater is the difference.

Their manner of wars amongst themselves is either by sudden surprising one another most commonly about the dawning of the day, or moonlight, or else by ambushes, or some subtle devices. Set battles are very rare, except it fall out where there are many trees, where either party may have some hope of defense, after the delivery of every arrow, in leaping behind some or other.

If there fall out any wars between us and them, what their fight is likely to be, we having advantages against them so many manner of ways, as by our discipline, our strange weapons and devices else, especially ordnance great and small, it may easily be imagined, by the experience we have had in some places, the turning up of their heels against us in running away was their best defense.

In respect of us they are a people poor, and for want of skill and judgment in the knowledge and use of our things, do esteem our trifles before things of greater value. Notwithstanding, in their proper manner (considering the want of such means as we have), they seem very ingenious. For although they have no such tools, nor any such crafts, sciences, and arts as we, yet in those things they do, they show excellency of wit.² And by how much they upon due consideration shall find our manner of knowledges and crafts to exceed theirs in perfection, and speed for doing or execution, by so much the more is it probable that they should desire our friendship and love, and have the greater respect for pleasing and obeying us. Whereby may be hoped, if means of good government be used, that they may in short time be brought to civility and the embracing of true religion.

1. Shields.

2. I.e., intelligence.

Some religion they have already, which although it be far from the truth, yet being as it is, there is hope it may be the easier and sooner reformed.

They believe that there are many gods, which they call Mantóac, but of different sorts and degrees, one only chief and great god, which hath been from all eternity. Who, as they affirm, when he purposed to make the world, made first other gods of a principal order to be as means and instruments to be used in the creation and government to follow, and after the sun, moon, and stars as petty gods, and the instruments of the other order more principal. First, they say, were made waters, out of which by the gods was made all diversity of creatures that are visible or invisible.

For mankind, they say a woman was made first which, by the working of one of the gods, conceived and brought forth children. And in such sort, they say, they had their beginning. But how many years or ages have passed since, they say they can make no relation, having no letters nor other such means as we to keep records of the particularities of times past, but only tradition from father to son.

They think that all the gods are of human shape, and therefore, they represent them by images in the forms of men, which they call Kewasówok, one alone is called Kewás. These they place in houses appropriate or temples, which they call Machicómuck, where they worship, pray, sing, and make many times offering unto them. In some Machicómuck, we have seen but one Kewas, in some two, and in other some three. The common sort think them to be also gods.

They believe also the immortality of the soul that, after this life as soon as the soul is departed from the body, according to the works it hath done, it is either carried to heaven, the habitacle of gods, there to enjoy perpetual bliss and happiness, or else to a great pit or hole, which they think to be in the furthest parts of their part of the world toward the sunset, there to burn continually. The place they call Popogusso.

For the confirmation of this opinion, they told me two stories of two men that had been lately dead and revived again. The one happened, but a few years before our coming into the country, of a wicked man, which having been dead and buried, the next day the earth of the grave being seen to move, was taken up again, who made declaration where his soul had been. That is to say, very near entering into Popogusso, had not one of the gods saved him and gave him leave to return again and teach his friends w^t should do to avoid that terrible place of torment. The other happened in the same year we were there, but in a town that was three-score miles from us, and it was told me for strange news, that one being dead, buried, and taken up again as the first, showed that although his body had lain dead in the grave, yet his soul was alive and had traveled far in a long broad way, on both sides whereof grew most delicate and pleasant trees, bearing more rare and excellent fruits, than ever he had seen before or was able to express, and at length came to most brave and fair houses, near which he met his father that had been dead before, who gave him great charge to go back again and show his friends what good they were to do to enjoy the pleasures of that place, which when he had done he should after come again.

What subtlety soever be in the Wiroances and priests, this opinion worketh so much in many of the common and simple sort of people, that it maketh them have great respect to their governors, and also great care what they do, to avoid torment after death, and to enjoy bliss, although notwithstanding there is punishment ordained for malefactors, as stealers, whoremongers, and other sort of wicked-doers, some punished with death, some with forfeitures,³ some with beating, according to the greatness of the facts.

And this is the sum of their religion, which I learned by having special familiarity with some of their priests. Wherein they were not so sure grounded, nor gave such credit to their traditions and stories, but through conversing with us they were brought into great doubts of their own, and no small admiration of ours, with earnest desire in many, to learn more than we had means for want of perfect utterance in their language to express.

Most things they saw with us, as mathematical instruments, sea compasses, the virtue of the lodestone in drawing iron, a perspective glass whereby was showed many strange sights,⁴ burning glasses, wild fireworks, gunn, books, writing and reading, spring-clocks that seem to go of themselves, and many other things that we had were so strange unto them, and so far exceeded their capacities to comprehend the reason and means how they should be made and done, that they thought they were rather the works of gods than of men, or at the leastwise, they had been given and taught us of the gods. Which made many of them to have such opinion of us, as that if they knew not the truth of God and religion already, it was rather to be had from us whom God so specially loved, than from a people that were so simple as they found themselves to be in comparison of us. Whereupon greater credit was given unto that we spoke of, concerning such matters.

3. Fines.

4. The "perspective glass" was a telescope; the "burning glass" a mirror used to concentrate the sun's rays.

Many times and in every town where I came, according as I was able, I made declaration of the contents of the Bible, that therein was set forth the true and only God, and his mighty works, that therein was contained the true doctrine of salvation through Christ, with many particulars of miracles and chief points of religion, as I was able then to utter, and thought fit for the time. And although I told them the book materially and of itself was not of any such virtue, as I thought they did conceive, but only the doctrine therein contained, yet would many be glad to touch it, to embrace it, to kiss it, to hold it to their breasts and heads, and stroke over all their body with it, to show their hungry desire of that knowledge which was spoken of.

The Wiroans with whom we dwelt, called Wingina, and many of his people would be glad many times to be with us at our prayers, and many times call upon us both in his own town, as also in others whither he sometimes accompanied us, to pray and sing psalms, hoping thereby to be partaker of the same effects which we by that means also expected.

Twice this Wiroans was so grievously sick that he was like to die, and as he lay languishing, doubting of any help by his own priests, and thinking he was in such danger for offending us and thereby our God, sent for some of us to pray and be a means to our God that it would please him either that he might live, or after death dwell with him in bliss, so likewise were the requests of many others in the like case.

On a time also when their corn began to wither by reason of a drought which happened extraordinarily, fearing that it had come to pass by reason that in something they had displeased us, many would come to us and desire us to pray to our God of England, that he would preserve their corn, promising that when it was ripe we also should be partakers of the fruit.

* * * Some people could not tell whether to think us gods or men, and the rather because that all the space of their sickness, there was no man of ours known to die, or that was specially sick. They noted also that we had no women amongst us, neither that we did care for any of theirs.

Some, therefore, were of opinion that we were not born of women, and therefore not mortal, but that we were men of an old generation many years past, then risen again to immortality.

Some would likewise seem to prophesy that there were more of our generation yet to come to kill theirs and take their places as some thought the purpose was, by that which was already done. Those that were immediately to come after us they imagined to be in the air, yet invisible and without bodies, and that they by our entreaty and for the love of us did make the people to die in that sort as they did, by shooting invisible bullets into them.

To confirm this opinion, their physicians (to excuse their ignorance in curing the disease) would not be ashamed to say, but earnestly make the simple people believe that the strings of blood that they sucked out of the sick bodies, were the strings wherewithal the invisible bullets were tied and cast. Some also thought that we shot them ourselves out of our pieces, from the place where we dwelt, and killed the people in any town that had offended us, as we listed, how far distant from us soever it were. And other some said that it was the special work of God for our sakes, as we ourselves have cause in some sort to think no less, whatsoever some do, or may imagine to the contrary, specially some astrologers, knowing of the eclipse of the sun which we saw the same year before in our voyage thitherward, which unto them appeared very terrible. And also of a comet which began to appear but a few days before the beginning of the said sickness. But to exclude them from being the special causes of so special an accident, there are further reasons than I think fit at this present to be alleged. These their opinions I have set down the more at large, that it may appear unto you that there is good hope they may be brought through discreet dealing and government to the embracing of the truth, and consequently to honor, obey, fear, and love us.

And although some of our company towards the end of the year showed themselves too fierce in slaying some of the people in some towns, upon causes that on our part might easily enough have been borne withal, yet notwithstanding, because it was on their part justly deserved, the alteration of their opinions generally and for the most part concerning us is the less to be doubted. And whatsoever else they may be, by carefulness of ourselves need nothing at all to be feared.

The Seventeenth Century

(1603-1660)

- (1588: The Spanish Armada.)
- 1603: Death of Elizabeth Tudor, accession of James Stuart.
- 1605: The Gunpowder Plot; last effort of English Catholic extremists.
- 1620: First emigration of Pilgrims to the New World.
- 1625: Death of James I, accession of Charles I.
- 1641: Outbreak of Civil War: theaters closed, 1642.
- 1649: Execution of Charles I, beginning of Commonwealth and Protectorate, known inclusively as the Interregnum (1649-60).
- 1660: End of the Protectorate, Restoration of Charles II.
- (1688: Abdication of James II, last Stuart king of England.)

In its narrowest definition, the "17th century" reaches from the accession of the first Stuart king (James I) in 1603 to the restoration of the third (Charles II) in 1660. But the events of those years are meaningful only if seen in a pattern extending from 1588 to 1688. Between these two outer dates occurred those massive social events which, in their cumulative effect, bridge the gap between the Tudor autocracy of the 16th century and the ill-defined but functioning constitutional monarchy of the 18th century. At the center of the period lies the Puritan Revolution of 1640-60. The quarrels and controversies which culminated in this upheaval began to make themselves felt shortly after 1588; its tremors and aftershocks largely subsided after 1688. In more senses than one, the Revolution was the central event of the century.

Armada year marked a decisive turning point in the reign of Elizabeth. Like most of her subjects, she had expected the nation's supreme triumph over a long-awaited, much-hated invader to release a tide of patriotic good feeling. Nothing of the sort happened; on the contrary. Social problems which had long lain suppressed in the interests of national unity suddenly surfaced when the nation was secure. They gave rise to bitter and divisive quarrels, fought out for the most part between the aging queen and her successive parliaments. There were disputes over the government of the church, disputes over foreign policy, disputes over monopolies and special forms of economic privilege, disputes over parliamentary rights and immunities.

These were conflicts too deep to be solved by the queen's traditional measures of cajolery and grandiose rhetoric; and they were not solved, nor even alleviated. Neither did the peaceful accession of James, the first English monarch of the Stuart family, serve to mollify these quarrels; they festered throughout his reign, and grew inflamed under the autocratic rule of his son, Charles I. By 1640 they were ready to flare into full-scale revolution, and flare they did. In the wars that followed, the forces of insurrection were successful in one of their aims (they rendered Charles powerless), but not in another (they failed to set up a stable government, free from the faults of the one they had destroyed). The military dictatorship (1649-60) established first by Oliver Cromwell under the name of Commonwealth and then maintained even after his death as a Protectorate was no more than a makeshift effort to contain a political instability that had got out of hand. When Charles II was recalled from exile (1660) and put back on his father's throne but without his father's powers, it became clear that England was bound to have, in religion and politics, some sort of organization looser than anyone had anticipated, looser than anyone really wanted. But its exact form was subject to constant pulling and hauling among the parties, and no solid settlement was reached till 1688, when Charles's brother and successor, James II, was ejected from the throne and sent into exile. After 1688, its social problems compromised if not solved, the country settled down to a long constitutional nap under a series of monarchs who made little trouble for their parliaments and therefore had little trouble with their thrones. The crisis was over.

Though infinitely complex in details, the main social problems which exercised the 17th century can be broadly stated, with their solutions, in two sentences. In the religious sphere, the basic issue was: How far should the reformation of the Protestant church be carried? and the solution accomplished in 1688 was, "As far as each individual self-defined religious group wants." In the sphere of constitutional politics, the basic issue was: How much authority should the monarch have independent of the parliament? and the solution accomplished in 1688 was, "Almost none."

BEFORE AND AFTER THE PURITAN REVOLT

To visualize the immense changes wrought by the crisis years of the Puritan Revolt, and their relation to the quality of English literature, it may be useful to anatomize very roughly the value-structure of English society before and after the event. Oversimplifications are inevitable, but necessary to point up a set of broad changes which actually took place; and definitions are possible because the Revolution was preceded and followed by periods of relative order and tranquillity. Under Elizabeth Tudor the court was the undisputed center of national authority, influence, power, reward, and intellectual inspiration. Careers were made and fortunes established through court connections. London was the center of the kingdom, and the court was the unchallenged center of London. Particularly was this true in matters of the intellect, of literature and the arts. The characteristic forms of literature under Elizabeth were courtly: Courtiers patronized the theater by attending plays (of which the middle class generally disapproved) and by lending the prestige of their names to different acting companies. The sonnet sequence, the pastoral romance (Sidney's Arcadia), the chivalric allegory (Spenser's Faerie Queene), the learned sermon, the erotic idyll (Hero and Leander or Venus and Adonis), the masque, the epic—all these were courtly forms, implying courtly readers. Patronage flowed, when it flowed at all, from courtly donors; and, apart from the precarious rewards of the theater, patronage was almost the only way for a man to live by his writing. The same pattern continued under the first two Stuarts, James I and Charles I. Whether in his sermons or in his poems, a man like Donne wrote primarily for courtiers. Versatile and various as he was, Ben Jonson channeled almost all his energies into writing for court and courtiers. Carew, Suckling, Lovelace, and a host of lesser writers were themselves courtiers, simply in the sense that they spent much of their time at court. A man like George Herbert was much remarked because he could have been a courtier and chose not to be. There were exceptions, of course; country doctors and rural parsons sometimes exercised themselves in literature. But the court influence was predominant, and so far as a literary society existed, it took its tone from the court. Because court circles were narrow, a poet did not have to wait for publication in order to be widely known among his fellow poets. Manuscript collections of poems by one author, or by several, circulated through the court; a poem could become popular, be set to music several times over, and yet never appear in print. The books that were printed generally appeared in small editions, and being destined for a particular audience, could take a good deal for granted in the way of special background and training. A court preacher like Lancelot Andrewes assumed in his hearers acquaintance with at least the rudiments of three ancient languages; Sir Philip Sidney in the Arcadia assumed familiarity with the traditions and conventions of courtly behavior. For court society had many characteristic and distinctive values. It implied a belief in hierarchical order within a strict framework of uniformity, involving obedience to the national church, loyalty to the national monarch. Within that framework, it tended to produce intricate, allusive, and highly decorative writing. Courtiers generally valued the heroic passions—love (but not necessarily marriage), warfare (largely free of a political context), and devotional piety (quite apart from practical morality). The controlling principle behind all these distinctions was an emphasis upon honor as the supreme principle in life; not to be estimated in any way by criteria of mere prudence. Literature written within this framework and primarily for readers who accepted it tended generally to reflect its arrangement of values.

After 1660, and even more strikingly after 1688, the pattern of values was quite different. For one thing, the court was no longer an unchallenged center of intellectual and literary influence. It did not have the power, social and financial, to be anything of the sort. For now money and influence no longer flowed exclusively from the court. London City (a network of banks and merchants, jobbers, financiers, brokers, tradesmen, and credit-managers) was one rival source of power and influence; Parliament itself, which in 1688 would assert decisive power over the throne by expelling James II and appointing a Dutchman to be his successor as William III, was another. Instead of standing above interest as the sole fountain of honor, the court thus became in effect one of several competing interests. The relatively conservative "landed interest" tended toward the court; as the more innovative "money interest" found its chief support in the City; and Parliament men, ranking themselves under the deliberately meaningless nicknames of "Tory" and "Whig," sided with either interest as they chose or with both as they found the occasion proper. One's connection with an interest was not through the inflexible principle of honor, but through the flexible one of . . . interest.

In precisely the same way, the established church, which had once claimed to be the sole guardian of men's spiritual welfare and therefore of their worldly behavior—the authoritative voice disciplining every Englishman's private interests—became after 1660 simply one of many possible religious communities. The Puritan sects, originally factions within the English church, had been freed to multiply and develop their independence during the Interregnum; after the Restoration, they could not be got back into the English (Anglican) church by force or persuasion. When several sects exist side by side in open competition, they are all voluntary. Each interprets Scripture after its own fashion, each follows its own moral code, each tries to attract proselytes, all agree in not trying to persecute one another. But that creates problems of discipline; if a member does not like the social code of his sect, he transfers to a more understanding sect, or out of them all. When neither monarch nor church could control social and economic behavior, most of it passed out of control altogether. For morality in a social or business sense applies mainly to people, considered as responsible economic agents; and the new forms of economic organization involved either artificial personalities or legal fictions to which moral laws do not apply. Corporations and joint-stock companies, cartels and syndicates, mutual-aid societies and credit unions, banks and bankers' combines (a whole gamut of anonymous voluntary associations) began to develop England piecemeal, amorphously, after the fashion of a modern capitalist nation. New money brought to the fore new men, enterprising and respectable, but with few pretensions to courtly manners or intellectual sophistication. The literature which appealed to them was less dogmatic and moralistic than the old hell-and-damnation puritanism; it was more serious than the frankly bawdy wit of the Restoration stage. Observing these and other divergencies of taste, enterprising publishers began to aim their products at a particular market, in which they specialized. Before long, they were hiring writers to turn out titles on order. The "booksellers," as they were called, thus replaced the older courtly patrons as makers of public taste. Authors who wrote to order at the bidding of publishers became known collectively, from the cheap lodgings where they congregated, as Grub Street authors. For them, at least, the change from a society organized around honor to one organized around interest was very palpable indeed.

Around the broad social changes sketched above there took place a set of intellectual and spiritual changes, no less striking and significant. The Elizabethan monarchy and church had been hierarchical in organization because that was thought to be the inevitable structure of things, the natural pattern of the world. Every creature had his place in the great order of divine appointments; and the different families of being were bound together by a chain of universal analogy. The king was to his subjects as Michael was to the other archangels, as the bishop was to his pastors, as the lion was to other beasts, as the eagle was to other birds, as the diamond was to other stones, as gold was to other metals. The head ruled the other parts of the body because, as the seat of reason, it was nobler. Reason, which ruled in man, made him natural head of the family because passion was thought to rule in woman. The king was head of the body politic; in him, reason ruled as it ought, over the passionate and tumultuous multitude. And all this ruling was necessary because of Adam's fall, as a result of which not only human psychology but the whole structure of the universe had been disordered. Though they differed over the form of the rule and the name of the ruler, almost all the contestants in the civil wars agreed that the people needed strict discipline of some sort, because in themselves they were radically imperfect. While the various leaders were disputing over details, the people, simply as a result of slow experience (by living under an "illegitimate" authority, without any sort of religious conformity), demonstrated that they were less imperfect, and needed less rigid discipline, than had been supposed.

One universal truth emerged from the Revolution and Civil Wars—that no one universal truth was to be had, whether by sword, by prayer, or by study. Nor was it really needed. Individuals, it seemed, could hold differing views about foreign policy, the nature of Christ's presence in the sacrament, or the lawfulness of infant baptism, without necessarily precipitating social chaos. A single true belief in these matters, and in many, many others, was evidently unnecessary. And thus the whole notion of human beings as radically fallen creatures, who needed a special saving truth and a dose of stiff discipline to redeem their faults began fading toward obsolescence. A reasonable person (one who behaved sensibly and didn't bother his or her neighbor) seemed to be almost as good as need be. In a long list of controversies, over which people had once been willing to slit throats, it turned out that nobody was right and nobody was wrong. And thus the English community changed from one founded on the concepts of hierarchy, uniformity, and personal relatedness, to one founded on the concepts of multiplicity, disparity, and toleration. In less than a hundred years, the nation had passed from enlightened, inept autocracy to a vigorous, materialistic pluralism.

LITERARY CROSS-CURRENTS

With the obvious and immensely important exception of Milton, hardly any of the high literature (belles lettres) of the 17th century was the work of Puritans or men sympathetic to the Puritan cause. This is hardly surprising. Many early Puritans looked with misgivings on the secular imagination. They mistrusted literature on the same principle that they mistrusted statues (graven idols), church music, and elaborate religious rituals. These were all allurements and enticings of the sensual world; they threatened to contaminate and diffuse the pure spiritual energy of divinely infused faith. Yet a sense of deep disquiet, of ancient traditions under challenge, is everywhere felt in the early 17th century; and it can hardly be accounted for except as a response to the growing challenge—social, political, and religious—which ultimately took form in the Revolt.

One may well think of the metaphysical poets who followed Donne (Herbert, Crashaw, Vaughan, Cowley, Cleveland) as trying to draw out the traditional lyric of love and devotion by stretching it, under deliberate mental pressure, to encompass new unities from which a sense of strain and violent effort was rarely absent. In the opposite direction, Jonson and his "sons" the Cavalier poets (Carew, Herrick, Suckling, Waller, Davenant) generally tried to compress and limit their poems, giving them a high finish and a strong sense of easy domination at the expense of their explicit intellectual content. Though these alternate "schools" do not by any means represent watertight compartments (Donne himself wrote some Jonsonian-style poems, Jonson some which sound quite like Donne), the broad contrast of "Cavalier" with "metaphysical" does describe two major poetic alternatives of the early century. Yet both styles were wholly inadequate containers for the sort of gigantic energy which Milton, for example, was seeking to express.

For Milton, with his deep sense of moral imperative, his heroic ambitions for poetry, his proud Englishness, all the fashionable verses of his contemporaries must have seemed unbearably constricting. Like any great poet, Milton was capable of profiting from the study of craftsmen whom he had no intention of imitating; and he did profit by a study of Donne and Jonson, we may be sure. But for his central inspiration he reached back beyond both metaphysicals and cavaliers, to the figure of Spenser. In his youth particularly his mind ran to Spenserian projects—chivalric romances based on Arthurian themes or sometimes on scriptural stories. Milton's style was thus fully formed by the period of the late 1630's—he found his voice, it is usual to say, in Lycidas (1637)—but what he defined as his "duty" kept him through the next twenty years at the uncongenial labor of producing topical prose pamphlets on public affairs. When he finally brought it forth in 1667, Paradise Lost appeared to be a poem written by a man formed in one civilization for an audience reared in another.

In fact, Milton's poem had some trouble finding even that "fit audience though few" which the poet hoped for it; the poem actually had to make its own audience, as it started to do toward the end of the century. (One of its strongest sponsors was Lord Somers, chief legal craftsman of the 1688 settlement.) Milton's gains were made partly at the expense, and partly with the help, of the Restoration's most representative poet, John Dryden. The heroic couplets which were Dryden's favored poetic vehicle had developed only gradually, in the hands of the Cavalier poets, from a rather jolting and irregular meter toward the poised and sinewy units out of which Dryden built his verse-paragraphs. These couplets were less choked with learning than Milton's blank verse; their sentence-units were shorter, and logical or pseudo-logical argumentation played a greater part in the structure. Dryden is more a poet of statement, Milton more a poet of suggestion. But both are architects in verse, though Milton builds a cathedral, Dryden an elegant townhouse. And it is pleasant to record that the lesser poet, who had received so much public acclaim, was generous in his appreciation of the greater poet, who knew so little of it.

During the twenty years of Puritan rule at mid-century, most of the theaters were closed and hardly anything was written for the stage; during this period, most of the old actors and playwrights died, and the revival of the English stage after 1660 depended very largely on the work of one man, Sir William Davenant, and on the example of the French stage, then at its height. Shakespeare's emulators and successors under the first two Stuarts were much influenced by the melancholy then so largely prevalent; the dark, oppressive mood is almost unbroken in the work of tragic writers such as Webster, Ford, Tourneur, and Middleton. But alongside this somber and sometimes morbid tragedy, almost serving as relief from it, flourished a great variety of tragicomic spectacles, romantic comedies, and pastoral fantasies. Very often these plays were influenced by the masques so popular at court —that is, they included a great deal in the way of spectacle, display, pageant, music, and sometimes fantasy. Though Shakespeare was long dead, though Jonson was in his dotage, and though none of the successors to these two men met their measure, the stage continued vigorously active right up to the Civil War. But then the theaters were shut, abruptly and apparently forever. When they reopened in 1660, they were forced at first to rely on a backlog of twenty-year-old plays. But gradually they built up a repertoire of comedies (generally bawdy) and tragedies in the rhetorical, declamatory manner which gave them, quite as much as the heroic couplets in which they were cast, the name of “heroic tragedies.” Both these fashions, like so much else in the Restoration were extreme and temporary. Dryden, who practiced both modes, lived to see them both at an end—the heroic tragedies under the weight of their own pomposity, the bawdy comedies under the attack of an infuriated clergyman, Jeremy Collier.

Beyond, perhaps outside, literature as such lies a change in the intellectual tone of the century which cannot be ignored, hard as it is to describe. The great minds of the early century were lawyers and theologians. Coke, Bacon, Selden, and Spelman among the lawyers, Laud, Andrewes, Cudworth, Ussher, and Chillingworth among the theologians were men famous in their generation. Among the lawyers, some are still consulted as authorities to this day—Coke is a name to conjure with in English law, and Selden’s treatise on Titles of Honor is obsolete only because the subject itself is. As for the theologians, their work too has ceased to be “relevant”; but a brief browsing expedition through the “Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology” cannot fail to convince the student that they were men who worked—in their chosen trade—to very high standards of precise and authoritative scholarship. And yet, as the century’s intellectual weather changed, these disciplines ceased to be at the center of things. There were great lawyers after 1660, but they were not the makers and shakers of society; there were famous clergymen, but they were not the builders of society’s central codes of belief. Starting about mid-century, the great names belong to other disciplines—they are scientists like the astronomers Hooke and Halley, the physicist Robert Boyle, Locke the physician-philosopher, John Wallis and Sir Isaac Newton the mathematicians, William Harvey the anatomist. Few of them set out consciously to reconstruct an entire view of the cosmos, and Sir Isaac, who did so most successfully, retained to the end streaks and patches of the old beliefs. (He wrote a commentary on the Book of Revelation which has rather baffled those who admire his scientific work.) But the coming of a secular, materialist world view was in the air; even before the Puritans were forced to give up their dream of a community of saints, the tide had set and was ebbing rapidly another way.

BIRTH AND DEATH OF LITERARY FORMS

The stress and strain of a revolutionary age can thus be read at large in the century’s literature, from the somber, sluggish melancholy of the early decades, through the hoarse, incoherent warfare of the middle years, to the slow firming up of new standards of decorum and correctness after 1660. Still another mark of violent change is provided by the number of literary forms which perished in the course of the century, even as others were being born.

Sonnets, for example, were all the rage in the last years of Elizabeth, the first years of James. Almost always they dealt with erotic themes, often they were linked together in sequences to suggest, if not to tell, a story. Donne turned the sonnet primarily to religious themes (of his Songs and Sonnets, only one, and it irregular, is actually a sonnet); Milton's sonnets are few, and none are erotic. And thereafter sonnets largely faded from the poetic repertory. Like epic poetry in our own day, sonnets just disappeared. Allegory suffered an even more curious fate. It was of course the essential method of Spenser's great poem, and a major ingredient in Milton's; the "highest" and most demanding poetry of the earlier age made use of it. But then again, in the last half of the century, it largely faded from view. Dryden did not accommodate his mind easily to allegory; when he did use it (as in The Hind and the Panther), there was a kind of grotesque comedy about it, as if the form were fundamentally a joke. Serious and explicit allegory had slid far down the social scale; it was now the natural mode for an inspired primitive like Bunyan.

Blighted by the killing frosts of Puritanism, the masque and madrigal both perished. The one was a courtly, the other a popular, form; but both were suspect as vain, sensual, and worldly. Madrigals, as a blend of folk- and art-songs deeply rooted in the indigenous culture, were particularly to be regretted. For many years they had been sung in the yeoman's home or merchant's parlor, to the accompaniment of a chest of viols, that is, a consort of stringed instruments. Many involved complex polyphonic harmonies; many had been composed by distinguished musicians. But because it was an art that tended to make men happy with their present state, instead of wretched and guilty as they should have been, the Puritans disapproved: they wanted, instead of a "nest of singing birds," a nation of psalm singers. So all the folk-arts and folk-customs faded—rounds and carols and madrigals, square-dancing, Maypoles, and rural games—to make way for the dreary, vacant English sabbath.

Despite the immense examples of Shakespeare and Milton, blank verse lost ground during the century to the rhymed couplet. Couplets had been written, in one form or another, since Chaucer's day, but only after mid-century did they take on the smooth, antithetical energy best exemplified in the opening lines of Absalom and Achitophel. They are a superb meter for argumentation—which was what Dryden did best. Alongside this regularizing of poetic surfaces went a vogue for extravagant and irregular odes after the manner of the Greek lyric poet Pindar. Jonson had known Pindar's work, and the Ode on Cary and Morison illustrates the rather severe conception he had of Pindaric form. Abraham Cowley in his Pindarique Odes (1656) set the example for greater irregularity in an effort to simulate greater violence of feeling, and his example was followed by Dryden, and later by Gray, not to speak of Wordsworth. Dryden's odes were sometimes set to music after a fashion imported from Italy and known by the Italian name of oratorio. He also wrote texts for operas, including one based on Milton's epic; opera too was an exotic form imported from Italy via France. After the indigenous madrigal and masque perished, their place was filled by imported oratorios and operas.

Satire, which had been a self-conscious novelty at the beginning of the century, was a well-established, almost a normal mode of poetry by the end; more explanation was called for when one didn't write satire than when one did. In the process, satire grew subtler and more various; the satirist recognized his responsibility to divert the reader as well as to insult his antagonist. Indeed, a whole new tone of gentlemanly discourse grew up after the Restoration; it went by the name of "raillery," or sometimes "banter"—and while silly things could be said in it, so too could serious and important truths, about which nonetheless a gentleman might not want to show himself too earnest. Below satire, burlesque was still another literary device to which the 17th century gave birth, with the aid of France. After the unrelieved earnestness of the Puritans, derision and buffoonery became the order of the day; and with the advent of burlesque, we find ourselves on the very threshold of the modern novel, which Henry Fielding was to define in memorable words as "a comic epic in prose." One reason why he felt that way was undoubtedly that he began his literary career as a writer of stage-burlesques.

Alongside dying forms, new ones naturally sprang up. The most striking of these were in the area of popular literature, and surely represented a response to the new freedom of the press. When the Puritans rose against the authoritarian government of Charles I in 1641, they broke the long-standing power of the Bishop of London to censor publications throughout the land. Immediately a flood of pamphlets, tracts, newsletters, satires, and propaganda of every description began pouring forth. In the nature of things, much of it was ephemeral, but it got people into the way of reading and disputing about public affairs. And once people were in the way of it, even though various efforts were made later in the century to reimpose censorship, none were really successful. For even when every faction wanted some form of censorship, they could not agree on who should exercise it, or how. As there were many religious sects after 1640, so there were many measures of truth, each individual being free to pursue truth as it might be individually defined, and to persuade others that this was, or that was not, true. The Restoration saw the portentous twin birth of periodical journalism and the two-party system, both reflecting in different ways the development of something like modern "public opinion." And though prose narrative had been practiced for a long time in the form of tales and romances, the Restoration saw the first growth of what was to become the novel. These developments were all predicated on a reading audience responsive to general ideas and nuances of social observation—not necessarily learned in the classical tongues or trained in courtly formalities, but able to follow a sustained discourse in plain, unrheterical, commonsense English. Such an audience, so tuned and prepared, not expecting too much from its reading, but responsive to acute arguments or vivid touches of the imagination, is a first premise of modern literature. We are apt to think it as normal and natural a phenomenon as the air we breathe, but it is not. In fact it had to be created slowly, hesitantly, without much conscious intent on anyone's part, by a process of gradual accretion and expansion. Its existence is the foundation of the new age.

Being diverse out of harsh necessity and tolerant only reluctantly, the late 17th century was often halting and unsteady in its taste. It was forging new standards, not accepting the guidance of old ones; its hallmark is a widening eclecticism. Conscious efforts are made to reform the language itself by rendering it more light, lucid, and informal. Early prose fiction gropes to speak the voice and articulate the interests of the hitherto silent 50% of the nation which is female. A poem like John Dryden's Annus Mirabilis is an unprecedented medley of contemporary history and political argumentation; the audacious Abraham Cowley tries to write Pindaric odes on scientific topics; Milton's epic pours so much new wine into a very old bottle that it practically changes the definition of "bottle." Even apart from these internal developments, the Restoration was a strikingly cosmopolitan and international age. Strongly rationalist and quasi-mechanical philosophers from France, like René Descartes (1596-1650) and his follower Nicolas Malebranche (1638-1715), were read, translated, and vigorously discussed; less spectacular but in the long range just as important in his influence was the Jewish pantheist of Amsterdam, Baruch de Spinoza (1632-77). Seeing God as everywhere present in the universe, he developed a unified theory of mechanics, of ethics, and of theology which enabled him to dispense with all special forms of revelation. Though differing among themselves in various ways, these Continental philosophers all contributed to the growth of English deism—which is simply a form of belief that affirms a Supreme Being as the source of the world but denies, rejects, or remains neutral toward revelation and the supernatural doctrines of Christianity.

French manners, French styles, French tastes all invaded England when Charles II, after twenty years of wandering on the Continent, returned to his throne. French influence from the dramatists Pierre Corneille (1606-84), Jean Racine (1639-99), and the famous Molière (1622-73) made itself felt on the English stage; plays by these authors were translated and adapted to the English stage, while detailed comparisons were pursued between their work and that of English writers. Meanwhile, baroque and neoclassical buildings, inspired by French palaces like Versailles or Italian villas like those of the 16th-century architect Palladio, arose on English fields. Visitors from the Continent became more frequent, and young Englishmen, accompanied by their tutors, started to make that circuit of the Continental sights and monuments that was later to be known as the Grand Tour. Art-collectors—a species almost unknown in England before the 17th century—began to import Renaissance paintings and classical marbles and prints and manuscripts and rarities in general into English homes. Finally, a new age of translation began, with John Dryden at its center, second only in importance to the first age of Elizabethan translation. As it became simpler and clearer stylistically, the English language seemed to become ever richer in its vocabulary, more assured in its confidence that just about any clear concept could be expressed in English—and that any concept not that clear was not worth expressing in the first place.

In all these manifold ways, the 17th century changed not only the tone of literature, but the very definition of what literature could be. Like all great cultural shifts, this one was too complex to be captured in a single phrase or attributed to a single cause. It had neither a fixed beginning nor a precise end. Yet in the seamless web of history we can hardly fail to notice new colors and textures which, over the course of the 17th century, enter into the warp and woof of the nation's literary as of its social life, to make it look and feel like a whole new piece of cloth.

JOHN DONNE

(1572-1631)

Late 1601 or early 1602: Secret marriage to Ann More.

1615: Sacred orders.

1633: First publication of Songs and Sonnets.

There are two distinct but related authors known as John Donne. First is the scandalous young spark, who wrote bawdy and cynical verses—Jack Donne, the rake. Then there is the gravely witty, passionately religious divine, who wrote verses to his God as ardent as those he had once addressed to his mistresses. This is Dr. John Donne, the Dean of St. Paul's. Yet the key to both men is the same; it is a kind of restless, searching energy, which scorns the easy platitude and the smooth, empty phrase; which is vivid, immediate, troubling; and which makes the reading of Donne's poetry an imaginative and intellectual struggle and an all-absorbing experience.

Donne was born into an old Roman Catholic family, at a time when anti-Catholic feeling in England was near its height. His faith barred him from many of the usual avenues of success, and his point of view was always that of an insecure outsider. Though he attended both Oxford and Cambridge Universities, as well as Lincoln's Inn (where barristers got their training), he never took any academic degrees and never practiced law. After quietly abandoning Catholicism some time during the 1590's, he had scruples about becoming an Anglican. He had no gift for commerce, and though he inherited money from his father (who died when Donne was only 4), it was far from enough to render him independent. Hence he had to make his way in the world indirectly—by wit, charm, learning, valor, and above all, favor. Partly from sheer intellectual curiosity, he read enormously in divinity, medicine, law, and the classics; he wrote to display his learning and wit. He traveled on the Continent, especially, it would seem, to Spain; even in later years, he did a good deal of moving around. With Raleigh and Essex he took part in two hit-and-run expeditions against Cadiz and the Azores. He put himself in the way of court employment, danced attendance on great court ladies, and generally lived the life of a brilliant young man hopeful of preferment.

When in 1598 Donne was appointed private secretary to Sir Thomas Egerton, the Lord Keeper, his prospects for worldly advancement seemed good. He sat in Elizabeth's last parliament and moved in court circles. But in 1601 he secretly married Lady Egerton's niece, 17-year-old Ann More, and thereby ruined his own worldly hopes. The marriage turned out happily, but Donne's imprudence was never forgiven. Sir George More had Donne imprisoned and dismissed from his post; and for the next dozen years, the poet had to struggle at a series of makeshift employments to support his growing family. As a man of 35, Donne was no longer the brilliant young gallant of the 1590's; sick, poor, and unhappy, he was composing, but not publishing, a treatise on the lawfulness of suicide (Biathanatos). As he approached 40, he may have helped Thomas Morton, Dean of Gloucester, in composing anti-Catholic polemics (Pseudo-Martyr, 1610; Ignatius his Conclave, 1611). In return for patronage from Sir Robert Drury, he wrote in 1611 and 1612 a pair of long poems, The Anniversaries, on the death of Sir Robert's daughter Elizabeth. None of these activities represent a full employment of Donne's volcanic intellectual energy. To be sure, Donne's social position need not be painted too blackly. He had friends among the courtiers, politicians, poets, and clergy—Mrs. Magdalen Herbert and her sons George and Edward, Ben Jonson, Sir Henry Goodyere, and Sir Henry Wotton among them. He was never quite without resources. Yet, broadly speaking, the middle years of Donne's life were a period of searching, uncertainty, and unhappiness.

Though Donne had flatly refused in 1607 to take Anglican orders, King James was certain that he would some day make a great Anglican preacher. Hence he declared that Donne could have no preferment or employment from him, except in the church. Finally, in 1615, Donne overcame his scruples, not the least of which was the fear of seeming ambitious, and entered the ministry. He was in due course appointed Reader in Divinity at Lincoln's Inn. In the 17th century, among court circles and at the Inns of Court where lawyers congregated, preaching was at once a form of spiritual devotion, an intellectual exercise, and a dramatic entertainment. Donne's metaphorical style, bold erudition, and dramatic wit at once established him as a great preacher in an age of great preachers. Fully 160 of his sermons survive. In 1621 he was made Dean of St. Paul's, where he preached to great congregations of "City" lawyers, courtiers, merchants, and tradesmen. In addition, his private devotions were published in 1624, and he continued to write sacred poetry till within a few years of his death. Obsessed with the idea of death, Donne preached what was called his own funeral sermon just a few weeks before he died. It is a terrifyingly personal meditation on dissolution, as befits a man who arranged for a final portrait of himself to be taken, dressed in his shroud.

The poetry of Donne represents a sharp break with that written by his predecessors and most of his contemporaries. Much Elizabethan verse is decorative and flowery in its quality. Its images adorn, its meter is mellifluous. Image harmonizes with image, and line swells almost predictably into line. Donne's poetry, on the other hand, is written very largely in conceits—concentrated images which involve an element of dramatic contrast, of strain, or of intellectual difficulty. Most of the traditional "flowers of rhetoric" disappear completely. For instance, in his love poetry one never encounters bleeding hearts, cheeks like roses, lips like cherries, teeth like pearls, or Cupid shooting the arrows of love. The tears which flow in A Valediction: of Weeping are different from, and more complex than, the ordinary saline fluid of unhappy lovers; they are ciphers, naughts, symbols of the world's emptiness without the beloved; or else, suddenly reflecting her image, they are globes, worlds, they contain the sum of things. The poet who plays with conceits not only displays his own ingenuity; he may see into the nature of the world as deeply as the philosopher. Donne's conceits in particular leap continually in a restless orbit from the personal to the cosmic and back again.

Donne's rhythms are colloquial and various. He likes to twist and distort not only ideas, but metrical patterns and grammar itself. In the satires, which Renaissance writers understood to be "harsh" and "crabbed" as a genre, Donne's distortions often threaten to choke off the stream of expression entirely. But in the lyrics (both those which are worldly and those which are religious in theme), as in the elegies and sonnets, the verse never fails of a complex and memorable melody. Donne had an unusual gift, rather like that of a modern poet, T. S. Eliot, for striking off phrases which ring in the mind like a silver coin. They are two masters of the colloquial style, removed alike from the dignified, weighty manner of Milton and the sugared sweetness of the Elizabethans.

Donne and his followers are known to literary history as the "metaphysical school" of poets. Strictly speaking, this is a misnomer; there was no organized group of poets who imitated Donne, and if there had been, they would not have called themselves "metaphysical" poets. That term was invented by Dryden and Dr. Johnson. But the influence of Donne's poetic style was widely felt, especially by men whose taste was formed before 1660. George Herbert, Richard Crashaw, Henry Vaughan, Andrew Marvell, and Abraham Cowley are only the best known of those on whom Donne's influence is recognizable. The great change of taste which took place in 1660 threw Donne and the "conceited" style out of fashion; during the 18th and 19th centuries both he and his followers were rarely read and still more rarely appreciated. Finally, in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, three new editions of Donne appeared, of which Sir H. J. C. Grierson's, published in 1912, was quickly accepted as standard. By clarifying and purifying the often-garbled text, Grierson did a great deal to make Donne's poetry more available to the modern reader. Almost at once it started to exert an influence on modern poetic practice, the modern poets being hungry for a "tough" style which would free them from the worn-out rhetoric of late 19th-century romanticism. And Donne's status among the English poets quickly climbed from that of a curiosity to that of an acknowledged master.

No more than a couple of the poems on which Donne's modern reputation is built were published during his lifetime, though most of them were widely circulated through court and literary circles in handwritten copies. There were practical reasons for this halfway state of affairs. Many of the poems would have constituted black marks on Donne's reputation as an earnest and godly divine; and because they were difficult and allusive, only a few people wanted to read them. Thus Donne was known, outside the relatively limited circles which had access to manuscript-collections, primarily as a preacher and devotional writer. But in these capacities he was tremendously productive and influential.

It has been said that there are two sorts of preachers—those who stand before us as representatives of God and explain His Word to us, and those who stand before God and explain our problems to Him. Certainly, John Donne belonged with the second group. He was a passionately human preacher, little interested in expounding dogma or laying down the rules of practical morality. What he presented to his hearers, in long, nervous periods, rich in poetic imagery and graphic detail, was a film in close-up of the Christian drama—sin, guilt, contrition, repentance, faith, death, and transfiguration—with John Donne cast in the leading role. No other preacher in English could speak like Donne of the personal experience of entering heaven, and convey the sense that he had actually experienced in his own person every last detail of what he described.

Donne's acting impulses were not satisfied in the pulpit, though he preached an enormous number of immensely popular sermons; his whole life became a performance, upon which he commented, for public edification. Thus, his private prayers and devotions, written on the occasion of a serious sickness in 1623, promptly became a book (Devotions upon Emergent Occasions) in 1624. Readers of all sorts hastened to enjoy the pleasing anxieties and spiritual adventures of a devout and witty Christian wavering on the brink of eternity. To call the book a kind of existential soap-opera is doubtless too harsh, but it suggests some of the flamboyance with which Donne exploited his personal situation for purposes of pathetic and passionate instruction.

The basic text which follows is that of Sir Herbert Grierson (1912), but it has been modified, wherever sensible improvement seemed possible; and sometimes supplemented, by that of Dame Helen Gardner (Divine Poems, 1952, and The Elegies and the Songs and Sonnets, 1964).

The Good-Morrow

I wonder, by my troth, what thou and I
Did, till we loved? Were we not weaned till then,
But sucked on country pleasures, childishly?
Or snorted we in the seven sleepers' den?¹
'Twas so; But this, all pleasures fancies be.
If ever any beauty I did see,
Which I desired, and got, 'twas but a dream of thee.

And now good morrow to our waking souls,
Which watch not one another out of fear;
For love all love of other sights controls,
And makes one little room an everywhere.
Let sea-discoverers to new worlds have gone,
Let maps to other,² worlds on worlds have shown,
Let us possess one world; each hath one, and is one.

My face in thine eye, thine in mine appears,³
And true plain hearts do in the faces rest;
Where can we find two better hemispheres
Without sharp North, without declining West?

1. Both Christian and Mohammedan authors recite the legend of seven youths of Ephesus, who hid in a cave from the persecutions of Decius, and slept there for 187 years. "Sucked" and "snorted" are words carefully chosen for their impact on the love poem. "But": except for.

2. I.e., let us concede that maps to other investigators have shown, etc. ("other" is an archaic plural form). In line 14 an alternative reading is "Let us possess our world" (from Dame Gardner).

3. Reflected in the pupils of one another's eyes, the lovers are, and possess, worlds of their own.

Whatever dies was not mixed equally;⁴
 If our two loves be one, or thou and I
 Love so alike that none do slacken, none can die.

20

1633

→ Song

Go and catch a falling star,
 Get with child a mandrake root,¹
 Tell me where all past years are,
 Or who cleft the Devil's foot,
 Teach me to hear mermaids² singing,
 Or to keep off envy's stinging,
 And find
 What wind
 Serves to advance an honest mind.

*iambic monometer*⁵

Synecdoche

If thou beest born to strange sights,
 Things invisible to see,
 Ride ten thousand days and nights,
 Till age snow white hairs on thee,
 Thou, when thou return'st, wilt tell me
 All strange wonders that befell thee,
 And swear
 No where Lives a woman true, and fair. beautiful

10

15

If thou find'st one, let me know,
 Such a pilgrimage were sweet;
 Yet do not, I would not go,
 Though at next door we might meet;
 Though she were true when you met her,
 And last till you write your letter,
 Yet she
 Will be False, ere I come, to two, or three.

20

25

1633

~ The Undertaking

I have done one braver thing
 Than all the Worthies¹ did,
 And yet a braver thence doth spring,
 Which is, to keep that hid.

4. Scholastic philosophy taught that when the elements were imperfectly ("not equally") mixed, matter was mortal and mutable; but when they were perfectly mixed, it was undying and unchanging. The dividing line between these two natures was the sphere of the moon.

1. The mandrake root, or mandragora, forked like the lower part of the male body; to get one with child is a supreme impossibility.

2. Identified with the sirens, whose song only the wily Odysseus survived.

1. According to medieval legend, the Nine Worthies, or supreme heroes of history, included three Jews (Joshua, David, Judas Maccabeus), three pagans (Hector, Alexander, Julius Caesar), and three Christians (Arthur, Charlemagne, Godfrey of Bouillon).

It were but madness now t' impart
 The skill of specular stone,²
 When he which can have learned the art
 To cut it, can find none. 5

So, if I now should utter this,
 Others (because no more Such stuff to work upon, there is)
 Would love but as before. 10

But he who loveliness within
 Hath found, all outward loathes,
 For he who color loves, and skin,
 Loves but their oldest clothes. 15

If, as I have, you also do
 Virtue attired in woman see,
 And dare love that, and say so too,
 And forget the He and She; 20

And if this love, though placéd so,
 From profane men you hide,
 Which will no faith on this bestow,
 Or, if they do, deride;

Then you have done a braver thing
 Than all the Worthies did;
 And a braver thence will spring,
 Which is, to keep that hid. 25

1633

The Indifferent

I can love both fair and brown,¹
 Her whom abundance melts, and her whom want betrays,
 Her who loves loneliness best, and her who masks and plays,
 Her whom the country formed, and whom the town,
 Her who believes, and her who tries,²
 Her who still weeps with spongy eyes,
 And her who is dry cork, and never cries;
 I can love her, and her, and you, and you,
 I can love any, so she be not true. 5

Will no other vice content you?
 Will it not serve your turn to do as did your mothers?
 Or have you all old vices spent, and now would find out others?
 Or doth a fear that men are true torment you?
 O we are not, be not you so; 10

2. A transparent or translucent material, reputed to have been used in antiquity for mirrors (in Latin, specula), but no longer known.

1. Both blonde and brunette.

2. "Attempts to believe" and "tries things out."

Let me, and do you, twenty know: 15
 Rob me, but bind me not, and let me go.
 Must I, who came to travail³ thorough you
 Grow your fixed subject, because you are true?

Venus heard me sigh this song,
 And by love's sweetest part, variety, she swore, 20
 She heard not this till now; and that it should be so no more.
 She went, examined, and returned ere long,
 And said, Alas, some two or three
 Poor heretics in love there be,
 Which think to 'stablish dangerous constancy. 25
 But I have told them, Since you will be true,
 You shall be true to them who are false to you.

1633

The Canonization

For God's sake hold your tongue, and let me love,
 Or chide my palsy, or my gout,
 My five gray hairs, or ruined fortune, flout,
 With wealth your state, your mind with arts improve, 5
 Take you a course, get you a place,¹
 Observe His Honor, or His Grace,
 Or the King's real, or his stamped face²
 Contemplate; what you will, approve,³
 So you will let me love.

Alas, alas, who's injured by my love? 10
 What merchant's ships have my sighs drowned?
 Who says my tears have overflowed his ground?
 When did my colds a forward spring remove?⁴
 When did the heats which my veins fill
 Add one man to the plaguy bill?⁵ 15
 Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find out still Litigious men, which quarrels move,
 Though she and I do love.

Call us what you will, we are made such by love;
 Call her one, me another fly, 20
 We're tapers too, and at our own cost die,⁶

3. "Grief, sorrow," but also "journey, travel."

1. "Take you a course": not necessarily of physic or instruction, but in the general sense of "settling yourself in life." A "place" is an appointment, at court or elsewhere.

2. On coins.

3. Put to proof, find by experience.

4. By freezing a fountain or blighting a season.

5. Deaths from the hot-weather plague were recorded, by parish, in weekly lists.

6. Like the "fly," a symbol of transitory life, we are burned up in "tapers," which consume themselves. There is a hint here of the old superstition that every act of intercourse subtracts a day from one's life. (To "die," in the punning terminology of the 17th century, was to consummate the act of sex.)

And we in us find the eagle and the dove.⁷

The phoenix riddle hath more wit

By us: we two being one, are it.

So, to one neutral thing both sexes fit.

We die and rise the same, and prove

Mysterious by this love.

25

We can die by it, if not live by love,

And if unfit for tombs and hearse

Our legend be, it will be fit for verse;

And if no piece of chronicle we prove,

We'll build in sonnets pretty rooms;

As well a well-wrought urn becomes

The greatest ashes, as half-acre tombs,

And by these hymns,⁸ all shall approve

Us canonized for love:

30

35

And thus invoke us: You whom reverend love

Made one another's hermitage;

You, to whom love was peace, that now is rage;

Who did the whole world's soul contract,⁹ and drove

Into the glasses of your eyes

(So made such mirrors, and such spies,

That they did all to you epitomize)

Countries, towns, courts: Beg from above

A pattern of your love!¹⁰

40

45

1633

→ A Nocturnal upon Saint Lucy's Day, Being the Shortest Day¹

'Tis the year's midnight and it is the day's,

Lucy's, who scarce seven hours herself unmasks;

7. The eagle and the dove are symbols of earthly wisdom (strength) and heavenly meekness (purity), the latter paradoxically more powerful than the former. The phoenix, in general mythology, was a fabulous Arabian bird, only one of which existed at any one time. After living a thousand years, it lit its own funeral pyre, jumped in, and sang its funeral song as it was consumed—then rose triumphantly from its ashes, a new bird. Thus it was a symbol of immortality, as well as of desire rising from its own exhaustion. "Eagle" and "dove" are also alchemical terms for processes leading to the rise of "phoenix," a stage in the transmutation of metals.

8. Donne's own poems, transformed into hymns to a new love religion. "All" (posterity) shall "approve" (accept) us as love's saints.

9. In line 40 Dame Helen Gardner reads "extract" for "contract."

10. The poet and his mistress, turned to saints, are implored by the rest of the population to get from heaven ("above") a pattern of their love for general distribution. "Countries, towns, courts" are objects of the verb "drove"; the notion that eyes both see and reflect the outside world, and so "contain" it doubly, was very delightful to Donne.

1. A "nocturnal" seems to suggest a dreamy, meditative poem about dark thoughts; but the more common 17th-century usage alluded to an astronomical instrument, used for finding one's position or setting one's course at night. Donne probably wanted both meanings. St. Lucy's day falls on December 13, which under the old calendar was very close to the winter solstice (December 21 under our modern calendar). At this time of year the sun rises after eight in the latitude of London, and sets well before four.

The sun is spent, and now his flasks
Send forth light squibs,² no constant rays.

The world's whole sap is sunk;
The general balm th' hydroptic earth hath drunk,³
Whither, as to the bed's feet, life is shrunk,
Dead and interred; yet all these seem to laugh,
Compared with me, who am their epitaph.

Study me, then, you who shall lovers be
At the next world, that is, at the next spring;
For I am every dead thing
In whom love wrought new alchemy.
For his art did express⁴

A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations and lean emptiness.
He ruined me, and I am re-begot
Of absence, darkness, death: things which are not.

All others from all things draw all that's good,
Life, soul, form, spirit, whence they being have;
I, by love's limbeck,⁵ am the grave
Of all, that's nothing. Oft a flood
Have we two wept, and so

Drowned the whole world, us two; oft did we grow
To be two chaoses when we did show
Care to aught else; and often absences
Withdrew our souls, and made us carcasses.

But I am by her⁶ death (which word wrongs her)
Of the first nothing the elixir grown;⁷
Were I a man, that I were one
I needs must know; I should prefer,
If I were any beast,

Some ends, some means; yea plants, yea stones detest
And love.⁸ All, all some properties invest.
If I an ordinary nothing were,
As shadow, a light and body must be here.

But I am none, nor will my sun renew.
You lovers, for whose sake the lesser sun
At this time to the Goat⁹ is run

2. The sun is compared to a gun shooting powder from powder flasks, but in small "squibs" like firecrackers.

3. The thirsty ("hydroptic") earth has drunk all the moisture in the world, as a dying person's vital heat was supposed to collect in one small part of the body.

4. Extract, draw forth.

5. Alembic, retort; a vessel used in distilling.

6. The fact that the mistress is now dead is very lightly touched on; Donne writes as from a great distance outside immediate experience. To speak of her death "wrong" her by implying that she is not now among the immortals, a saint.

7. He is now "grown" (become) the "elixir of the first nothing," i.e., the quintessence of that absolute nothingness that existed even before the creation.

8. Beasts have intentions, plants instincts, even stones (like lodestones) attractions and antipathies.

9. Capricorn, in the zodiac, begins with the winter solstice; the goat is an emblem of sexual vigor.

To fetch new lust and give it you,
 Enjoy your summer all.
 Since she enjoys her long night's festival,
 Let me prepare towards her, and let me call
 This hour her vigil and her eve, since this Both the year's and the day's deep midnight is.

40

45

1633

Love's Alchemy

Some that have deeper digged love's mine than I,
 Say where his centric happiness doth lie;

I have loved, and got, and told,
 But should I love, get, tell, till I were old,
 I should not find that hidden mystery;

5

O, 'tis imposture all:
 And as no chemic yet the elixir got,¹

But glorifies his pregnant pot,²

If by the way to him befall

Some odoniferous thing, or medicinal;

10

So lovers dream a rich and long delight,

But get a winter-seeming summer's night.³

Our case, our thrift, our honor, and our day,
 Shall we for this vain bubble's shadow pay?

Ends love in this, that my man

15

Can be as happy as I can if he can

Endure the short scorn of a bridegroom's play?

That loving wretch that swears,

'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,

Which he in her angelic finds,

20

Would swear as justly that he hears,

In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsy, the spheres.⁴

Hope not for mind in women; at their best

Sweetness and wit they are, but mummy, possessed.⁵

1633

→ The Flea

Mark but this flea, and mark in this,
 How little that which thou denicest me is;

1. "Chemic": alchemist; "the elixir": a magic medicine sought by alchemists and reputed to heal all ills.

2. Praises his fertile (and womb-shaped) retort.

3. A night cold as in winter and short as in summer.

4. The perfect harmony of the planets, moving in concentric crystalline spheres, is contrasted with the charivari, a boisterous serenade for pots, pans, and trumpets, performed on the wedding night.

5. Almost all punctuation for the last two lines represents conjectures by modern editors. There might equally well be commas after "best" and "wit." The last word, "possessed," may modify "mummy," meaning "mummy with a demon in it," or else "they," meaning "women who, when you have possessed them, are nothing but dried mummy."

Me it sucked first, and now sucks thee,
 And in this flea our two bloods mingled be;
 Thou know'st that this cannot be said 5
 A sin, or shame, or loss of maidenhead,
 Yet this enjoys before it woo,
 And pampered swells with one blood made of two,
 And this, alas, is more than we would do.¹

Oh stay, three lives in one flea spare, 10
 Where we almost, nay more than married, are.
 This flea is you and I, and this
 Our marriage bed and marriage temple is;
 Though parents grudge, and you, we are met,
 And cloistered in these living walls of jet, 15
 Though use² make you apt to kill me
 Let not to that, self-murder added be,
 And sacrilege, three sins in killing three.

Cruel and sudden, hast thou since
 Purpled thy nail, in blood of innocence?³ 20
 Wherein could this flea guilty be,
 Except in that drop which it sucked from thee?
 Yet thou triumph'st, and say'st that thou
 Find'st not thy self nor me the weaker now;
 'Tis true, then learn how false fears be; 25
 Just so much honor, when thou yield'st to me,
 Will waste, as this flea's death took life from thee.

1633

— *A Valediction: Forbidding Mourning*¹

As virtuous men pass mildly away,
 And whisper to their souls to go,
 Whilst some of their sad friends do say
 The breath goes now, and some say, No;

So let us melt, and make no noise, 5
 No tear-floods, nor sigh-tempests move,
 'Twere profanation of our joys
 To tell the laity our love.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
 Men reckon what it did and meant; 10

1. I.e., we, alas, don't dare hope for this consummation of our love, which the flea freely accepts. The idea of swelling suggests that of pregnancy.

2. Custom.

3. Like Herod, Donne's mistress has slaughtered the innocents, and is now clothed in imperial purple.

1. The particularly serious and steady tone of this poem may be due to the circumstances of its composition. Izaak Walton tells us it was addressed to Donne's wife on the occasion of his trip to the Continent in 1612. Donne had many forebodings of misfortune, which were verified when his wife gave birth to a stillborn child during his absence. Still, Walton's linkage of these events with this poem is only a speculation.

But trepidation of the spheres,
Though greater far, is innocent.²

Dull sublunary³ lovers' love
(Whose soul⁴ is sense) cannot admit
Absence, because it doth remove
Those things which elemented⁵ it.

15

But we by a love so much refined
That our selves know not what it is,
Inter-assuréd of the mind,
Care less, eyes, lips, and hands to miss.

20

Our two souls therefore, which are one,
Though I must go, endure not yet
A breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat.

If they be two, they are two so
As stiff twin compasses are two; drafting compass
Thy soul, the fixed foot, makes no show
To move, but doth, if th' other do.

25

And though it in the center sit,
Yet when the other far doth roam,
It leans and hearkens after it,
And grows erect, as that comes home.

30

Such wilt thou be to me, who must
Like th' other foot, obliquely run;
Thy firmness makes my circle just,
And makes me end where I begun.⁶

35

1633

→ The Ecstasy¹

Where, like a pillow on a bed,
A pregnant bank swelled up to rest
The violet's reclining head,
Sat we two, one another's best.

2. I.e., earthquakes are thought to threaten evil consequences, but the variations of the spheres from true circularity, though they involve greater motions, are not considered sinister. "Trepidation of the spheres" (literally, "shuddering") was an additional arbitrary motion of the eighth sphere, introduced into the Ptolemaic system about the year 950 to account for certain celestial phenomena which were really due to the wobbling of the earth on its axis.

3. Beneath the moon, therefore mundane and subject to change.

4. Essence.

5. Composed.

6. The circle is an emblem of perfection; cf. also the motto of Mary, Queen of Scots, "In my end is my beginning." An excitingly complex, if perhaps overly medieval, reading of the poem is offered by John Freccero in ELH, XXX (December, 1963), 335-376.

1. For Donne's reader the word implies, not wild delight as it commonly does nowadays, but a standing apart, a movement of the soul outside of the body.

Our hands were firmly cemented 5
 With a fast balm, which thence did spring.
 Our eye-beams twisted, and did thread
 Our eyes upon one double string;^{1a}
 So to intergraft our hands, as yet
 Was all our means to make us one; 10
 And pictures in our eyes to get
 Was all our propagation.
 As 'twixt two equal armies, Fate
 Suspends uncertain victory,
 Our souls (which to advance their state, 15
 Were gone out) hung 'twixt her and me.
 And whilst our souls negotiate there,
 We like sepulchral statues lay;
 All day the same our postures were,
 And we said nothing all the day. 20
 If any, so by love refined
 That he soul's language understood,
 And by good love were grown all mind,
 Within convenient distance stood,
 He (though he know not which soul spake, 25
 Because both meant, both spake the same)
 Might thence a new concoction² take,
 And part far purer than he came.
 This ecstasy doth unperplex,³
 We said, and tell us what we love; 30
 We see by this it was not sex;
 We see we saw not what did move;⁴
 But as all several souls contain
 Mixture of things, they know not what,
 Love these mixed souls doth mix again, 35
 And makes both one, each this and that.
 A single violet transplant,
 The strength, the colour, and the size
 (All which before was poor, and scant)
 Redoubles still, and multiplies. 40
 When love, with one another so
 Interinanimates two souls,
 That abler soul, which thence doth flow,
 Defects of loneliness controls.⁵
 We then, who are this new soul, know, 45
 Of what we are composed, and made,
 For, th' atomies⁶ of which we grow,

1a. Joining hands and eyes is the only intercourse of the two lovers: "eye-beams" are invisible shafts of light, thought of as going out of the eyes and so enabling one to see things.

2. Purified mixture.

3. I.e., separate and clarify.

4. I.e., we see that we did not understand before what motivated ("did move") us.

5. The "abler soul" which derives from the union of two lesser ones can eliminate the defects with which each in itself is afflicted.

6. Atoms.

Are souls, whom no change can invade.
 But O alas, so long, so far
 Our bodies why do we forbear? 50
 They are ours, though they are not we; we are
 The intelligences, they the sphere.⁷
 We owe them thanks because they thus,
 Did us to us at first convey,
 Yielded their forces, sense, to us, 55
 Nor are dross to us, but allay.⁸
 On man heaven's influence works not so
 But that it first imprints the air,⁹
 So soul into the soul may flow,
 Though it to body first repair. 60
 As our blood labors to beget
 Spirits as like souls as it can,¹
 Because such fingers need to knit
 That subtle knot which makes us man:
 So must pure lovers' souls descend 65
 T' affections, and to faculties
 Which sense may reach and apprehend;
 Else a great Prince in prison lies.
 To our bodies turn we then, that so
 Weak men on love revealed may look; 70
 Love's mysteries in souls do grow,
 But yet the body is his book.²
 And if some lover, such as we,
 Have heard this dialogue of one,³
 Let him still mark us; he shall see 75
 Small change when we are to bodies gone.

1633

Lovers' Infiniteness

If yet I have not all¹ thy love,
 Dear, I shall never have it all;
 I cannot breathe one other sigh to move,
 Nor can entreat one other tear to fall;
 All my treasure, which should purchase thee, 5

7. Medieval astronomers believed that the planets, set in crystalline spheres, were inhabited by "intelligences" which guided and controlled them. Similarly, Donne says, our bodies are guided and controlled by our souls.

8. "Dross" is an impurity which weakens metal, "allay" (alloy) an impurity which strengthens it. Our bodies contribute sensation ("sense") to the soul, and so reinforce it.

9. Astrological influences were thought to work on man through the surrounding air.

1. "Animal spirits" were thought to be begotten by the blood, to serve as intermediaries between body and soul.

2. I.e., love, a god within man, puts forth in the body a book where his mysteries may be read (as God the Creator put forth the book of Nature and the book of Scripture).

3. The characteristic Donne poem might be described as a "dialogue of one."

1. The influence of Donne's legal training is very clear here; the poem is a series of technical verbal quibbles on the word "all."

Sighs, tears, and oaths, and letters, I have spent.
 Yet no more can be due to me
 Than at the bargain made was meant;
 If then thy gift of love were partial,
 That some to me, some should to others fall,
 Dear, I shall never have thee all.

10

Or if then thou gavest me all,
 All was but all which thou hadst then;
 But if in thy heart since there be or shall
 New love created be by other men,
 Which have their stocks entire, and can in tears,
 In sighs, in oaths, and letters outbid me,
 This new love may beget new fears,
 For this love was not vowed by thee.
 And yet it was, thy gift being general;
 The ground, thy heart, is mine; whatever shall Grow there, dear, I should have it all.

15

20

Yet I would not have all yet.
 He that hath all can have no more;
 And since my love doth every day admit
 New growth, thou shouldst have new rewards in store.
 Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;
 If thou canst give it, then thou never gavest it.
 Love's riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
 It stays at home, and thou with losing savest it.
 But we will have a way more liberal
 Than changing hearts, to join them;² so we shall Be one, and one another's all.

25

30

1633

The Sun Rising

Busy old fool, unruly sun, personif
 Why dost thou thus, apostrophe
 Through windows and through curtains call on us?
 Must to thy motions lovers' seasons run?
 Saucy pedantic wretch, go chide
 Late school boys and sour prentices,
 Go tell court huntsmen that the King will ride,
 Call country ants to harvest offices;¹
 Love, all alike, no season knows nor clime,
 Nor hours, days, months, which are the rags of time.

5

10

Thy beams, so reverend and strong
 Why shouldst thou think?

2. To join hearts is more liberal than to "change" (exchange) them; "liberal" implies amorous generosity, also relief from legal hairsplitting.

 1. Harvest chores, duties.

I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink,
 But that I would not lose her sight so long;
 If her eyes have not blinded thine,
 Look, and tomorrow late, tell me,
 Whether both th' Indias of spice and mine²
 Be where thou leftst them, or lie here with me.
 Ask for those kings whom thou saw'st yesterday,
 And thou shalt hear, All here in one bed lay.

15

20

She is all states, and all princes, I,
 Nothing else is.
 Princes do but play us; compared to this,
 All honor's mimic, all wealth alchemy.³
 Thou, sun, art half as happy as we,
 In that the world's contracted thus;
 Thine age asks ease, and since thy duties be
 To warm the world, that's done in warming us.
 Shine here to us, and thou art everywhere;
 This bed thy center is,⁴ these walls, thy sphere.

25

30

1633

Air and Angels

Twice or thrice had I loved thee,
 Before I knew thy face or name;
 So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame,
 Angels affect us oft, and worshipped be;
 Still when, to where thou wert, I came,
 Some lovely glorious nothing I did see.
 But since my soul, whose child love is,
 Takes limbs of flesh, and else could nothing do,¹
 More subtle than the parent is Love must not be, but take a body too;
 And therefore what thou wert, and who,
 I bid love ask, and now
 That it assume thy body I allow,
 And fix itself in thy lip, eye, and brow.

5

10

Whilst thus to ballast love I thought,
 And so more steadily to have gone,
 With wares which would sink admiration,
 I saw I had love's pinnacle overfraught;²
 Every thy hair for love to work upon
 Is much too much, some fitter must be sought;
 For, nor in nothing, nor in things

15

20

2. The India of "spice" is East India, that of "mine" (gold), the West Indies.

3. I.e., fraudulent.

4. The "center" of the sun's orbit.

1. As my soul could not function unless it were in a body, so love, which is the soul's child, must also be corporeal.

2. Her physical beauty (his "wares") would sink admiration--i.e., overwhelm wonder itself. This is too much ballast for love's "pinnacle" (a small boat).

Extreme and scatt'ring³ bright, can love inhere.

Then as an angel, face and wings

Of air, not pure as it, yet pure doth wear,

So thy love may be my love's sphere.⁴

25

Just such disparity

As is 'twixt air and angels' purity,

'Twixt women's love and men's will ever be.

1633

Break of Day¹ aubade

'Tis true, 'tis day; what though it be?

O wilt thou therefore rise from me?

Why should we rise, because 'tis light?

Did we lie down, because 'twas night?

Love, which in spite of darkness brought us hither,

5

Should in despite of light keep us together.

Light hath no tongue, but is all eye;

If it could speak as well as spy,

This were the worst that it could say,

That being well, I fain would stay,

10

And that I loved my heart and honor so,

That I would not from him, that had them, go.

Must business thee from hence remove?

O, that's the worst disease of love.

The poor, the foul, the false, love can 15

Admit, but not the busied man.

He which hath business, and makes love, doth do

Such wrong, as when a married man doth woo.

1633

A Valediction: Of Weeping

Separated Lovers

Let me pour forth

My tears before thy face whilst I stay here,

For thy face coins them, and thy stamp they bear,

And by this mintage they are something worth,

For thus they be

5

Pregnant of thee;

Fruits of much grief they are, emblems of more—

3. Diffused, dazzling.

4. Some Scholastic philosophers held that angels, when they appeared to men, assumed a body of air. Such a body, though pure, was less so than the angel's spiritual being. Similarly, women's love, which Donne thinks less pure than that of men, may still serve as the receptacle ("sphere") for the love of men.

1. Modeled on the Provençal aubade, or song of the lovers' parting at dawn, this poem is a departure for Donne in that it assumes a feminine point of view. As a rule, he is among the most consistently masculine of poets.

When a tear falls, that Thou falls which it bore,
So thou and I are nothing then, when on a diverse shore.¹

On a round ball
A workman that hath copies by, can lay
An Europe, Afric, and an Asia,
And quickly make that, which was nothing, all;²
So doth each tear
Which thee doth wear,
A globe, yea world, by that impression grow,
Till thy tears mixed with mine do overflow
This world; by waters sent from thee, my heaven dissolved so.³

O more than moon,
Draw not up seas to drown me in thy sphere;
Weep me not dead, in thine arms, but forbear
To teach the sea what it may do too soon.

Let not the wind
Example find
To do me more harm than it purposeth;
Since thou and I sigh one another's breath,
Whoe'er sighs most is cruelest, and hastes the other's death.⁴

1633

The Funeral

Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm
Nor question much
That subtle wreath of hair which crowns my arm;
The mystery, the sign you must not touch,
For 'tis my outward soul,
Viceroy to that, which then to heaven being gone,
Will leave this to control,
And keep these limbs, her¹ provinces, from dissolution.

For if the sinewy thread² my brain lets fall
Through every part
Can tie those parts and make me one of all;
These hairs, which upward grew, and strength and art
Have from a better brain,
Can better do it; except she meant that I

1. The loss of the lovers in their separation is figured in the fall of a tear which contains the image of the mistress.

2. I.e., on a blank globe an artist can draw the world, and so convert a cipher, the image of nothingness, to the whole world.

3. In describing Creation, Genesis 1.6-7 makes mention of certain heavenly waters, some above and some below the firmament. Their existence and function has been much debated by Bible scholars.

4. The breath of life has been interchanged between the lovers.

1. The soul's, but also the mistress's; compare "she," below, line 14.

2. The spinal cord and nervous system.

By this should know my pain,
As prisoners then are manacled, when they're condemned to die. 15

Whate'er she meant by it, bury it with me,
For since I am
Love's martyr, it might breed idolatry,
If into others' hands these relics came: 20
As 'twas humility³
To afford to it all that a soul can do,
So 'tis some bravery,
That since you would save none of me, I bury some of you. 1633

The Relic

When my grave is broke up again
Some second guest to entertain
(For graves have learned that woman-head¹
To be to more than one a bed),
And he that digs it, spies 5
A bracelet of bright hair about the bone,
Will he not let us alone,
And think that there a loving couple lies,
Who thought that this device might be some way
To make their souls, at the last busy day, 10
Meet at this grave, and make a little stay?

If this fall in a time, or land,
Where mis-devotion² doth command,
Then he that digs us up, will bring
Us to the Bishop and the King, 15
To make us relics; then
Thou shalt be a Mary Magdalen, and I
A something else thereby;
All women shall adore us, and some men;
And since at such time, miracles are sought, 20
I would have that age by this paper taught
What miracles we harmless lovers wrought.

First, we loved well and faithfully,
Yet knew not what we loved, nor why,
Difference of sex no more we knew,
Than our guardian angels do; 25
Coming and going, we

3. It was humility to grant, in the first thirteen and a half lines of the poem, that her hair could act as a soul; it is also "bravery" (defiance) to bury a part of the mistress in revenge for her cruelty.

1. I.e., characteristic of women. On the re-use of graves, see Sir Thomas Browne's Urn-Burial and Hamlet V.i.

2. False devotion, superstition. Dor seems to have in mind Roman Ca' cism.

Perchance might kiss, but not between those meals;³

Our hands ne'er touched the seals,
Which nature, injured by late law, sets free:
These miracles we did; but now, alas,
All measure and all language I should pass,
Should I tell what a miracle she was.

30

1633

3. The kiss of salutation and parting was, in the 17th century, a peculiarly English custom; the passage that follows seems to suggest some greater intimacy, permitted by nature; but unjustly abridged by "late law." It is hard to imagine what Donne had in mind here; he was not opposed to the sacrament of matrimony, and the laws of marriage could not be called "late," i.e., recent.

An Anatomy of the World Donne composed this poem (later subtitled "The First Anniversary") to commemorate the death of a 14-year-old-girl, Elizabeth, younger daughter of his patron and friend Sir Robert Drury. Such formal elegies were much valued in Stuart society. The poet was expected not to dwell on the personal qualities of the deceased (and in fact Donne could not have done so because he had never seen the young lady) but to use the death of the individual as an occasion for religious and philosophical meditation on the meaning of life. Donne's Anatomy of the World is quite comparable in this respect to Milton's pastoral elegy, Lycidas. Both poems have been criticized for saying too little about their ostensible subject, and straying from it too far; whether this quality is a fault or a virtue, it must be recognized as a deliberate option of both poets.

The basic themes of Donne's poem are the decay and disintegration of the world (the word "anatomy" implies a post-mortem dissection) as a result of the breaking of those slender but precious lines of correspondent sympathy which used to hold it together (see above, the period introduction). An ancient harmony is gone, of which Elizabeth Drury is but one symbol; others, developed in the poem, are the story of the Garden of Eden and the Fall of Man, the myth of the Golden Age, and the disintegration (under the criticisms of Copernicus and Galileo) of the old geocentric cosmos, in which humanity and its moral life were the focus of universal attention.

The general view proposed by the poem, that the world used to be ideal and orderly but is rapidly getting worse, has a long history and has assumed many forms. It was particularly timely in the early 17th century when traditional patterns of belief and behavior were being so widely challenged, fractured, and discarded. As a man deeply rooted in Catholic traditions and scholastic philosophy, Donne was particularly sensitive to the challenges posed by science, by Puritanism, and by a money economy and the ethics implicit in it. Unity of being was Donne's lifelong obsession, no doubt because he directly experienced so little of it. This poem, lamenting loss of unity, is but the obverse of those witty and apparently perverse poems by Donne which tested unity by drawing out the bands of ingenious correspondence as far as possible. Though An Anatomy of the World is less compressed than those audacious, high-spirited stanzas, it rises quite gradually to a mournful magnificence which, like the very greatest elegiac poems, serves to depersonalize and universalize its subject.

An Anatomy of the World¹

The First Anniversary

The entry into the work.

When that rich soul which to her heaven is gone,
Whom all do celebrate who know they have one
(For who is sure he hath a soul, unless
It see, and judge, and follow worthiness,
And by deeds praise it? He who doth not this, 5
May lodge an inmate soul, but 'tis not his);
When that queen ended here her progress time,²
And, as to her standing house,³ to heaven did climb,
Where, loath to make the saints attend⁴ her long,
She's now a part both of the choir and song, 10
This world in that great earthquake languishéd;
For in a common bath of tears it bled,
Which drew the strongest vital spirits out:
But succored then with a perplexéd doubt,
Whether the world did lose or gain in this 15 (Because since now no other way there is
But goodness to see her, whom all would see,
All must endeavor to be good as she),
This great consumption to a fever turned,
And so the world had fits; it joyed, it mourned. 20
And as men think that agues physic are,⁵
And the ague being spent, give over care,
So thou, sick world, mistak'st thyself to be
Well, when, alas, thou art in a lethargy.
Her death did wound and tame thee then, and then
Thou might'st have better spared the sun, or man;⁶
That wound was deep, but 'tis more misery,
That thou hast lost thy sense and memory.
'Twas heavy⁶ then to hear thy voice of moan,
But this is worse, that thou art speechless grown. 30
Thou hast forgot the name thou hadst; thou wast
Nothing but she, and her thou hast o'erpast.
For as a child kept from the font, until
A prince, expected long, come to fulfill
The ceremonies, thou unnamed had'st laid, 35

1. The marginal glosses alongside the poem are by Donne.

2. "That queen" is Elizabeth Drury, but it would naturally recall Queen Elizabeth as well, because she was immensely fond of "progresses," or brief formal visitations to country houses. "Her time on earth" is understood.

3. I.e., a house that stands open and empty waiting for its owner.

4. Await.

5. "Agues" (two syllables): fevers; "Physic": medicine. When you've had a fever, you're bound to get better (some people think).

6. Mournful, depressing.

Had not her coming, thee her palace made:⁷
 Her name defined thee, gave thee form and frame,
 And thou forget'st to celebrate thy name.

Some months she hath been dead (but being dead, Measures of times are all determinéd⁸) 40

But long she hath been away, long, long, yet none
 Offers to tell us who it is that's gone.

But as in states doubtful of future heirs,
 When sickness without remedy impairs

The present prince, they're loath it should be said 45

The prince doth languish, or the prince is dead:

So mankind feeling now a general thaw,

A strong example gone, equal to law,

The cément which did faithfully compact

And glue all virtues, now resolved, and slacked, 50

Thought it some blasphemy to say she was dead,

Or that our weakness was discoveréd⁹

In that confession; therefore spoke no more

Than tongues, the soul being gone, the loss deplore.

But though it be too late to succor thee, 55

Sick world, yea, dead, yea, putrefied, since she,

Thy intrinsic balm and thy preservative,¹

Can never be renewed, thou never live,

I (since no man can make thee live) will try

What we may gain by thy anatomy.² 60

Her death hath taught us dearly that thou art
 Corrupt and mortal in thy purest part.

Let no man say, the world itself being dead,

'Tis labor lost to have discoveréd

The world's infirmities, since there is none 65

Alive to study this dissection;

For there's a kind of world remaining still,

Though she which did inanimate and fill

The world be gone, yet in this last long night,
 Her ghost doth walk; that is, a glimmering light, 70

A faint weak love of virtue and of good

Reflects from her on them which understood

Her worth; and though she have shut in all day,

The twilight of her memory doth stay;

Which, from the carcass of the old world free, 75

Creates a new world; and new creatures be Produced: the matter and the stuff of this,

Her virtue, and the form our practice is;

And though to be thus elemented,³ arm

These creatures, from home-born intrinsic harm 80

What life the world hath still.

7. The sick world is still being addressed; until it was made her palace, the world was nameless nothing.

8. I.e., since her death, time is at a stop.

9. Made evident.

1. I.e., a medicine that preserved one in perfect health forever.

2. I.e., by dissecting and analyzing the world's corpse, now its soul is gone.

3. I.e., lifted to her sphere.

(For all assumed⁴ unto this dignity
 So many weedless Paradises be,
 Which of themselves produce no venomous sin,
 Except some foreign serpent bring it in),
 Yet, because outward storms the strongest break, 85
 And strength itself by confidence grows weak,
 This new world may be safer, being told
 The dangers and diseases of the old:
 For with due temper⁵ men do then forgo
 Or covet things, when they their true worth know.⁹⁰

The sickness of the world. There is no health; physicians say that we
 At best enjoy but a neutrality.
 And can there be worse sickness than to know
 That we are never well, nor can be so?
 We are born ruinous;⁶ poor mothers cry 95
 That children come not right, nor orderly,
 Except they headlong come and fall upon
 An ominous precipitation.
 How witty's ruin! how importunate
 Upon mankind! It labored to frustrate 100
 Even God's purpose; and made women, sent
 For man's relief, cause of his languishment.
 They were to good ends, and they are so still,
 But accessory, and principal in ill.
 For that first marriage⁷ was our funeral: 105
 One woman at one blow then killed us all,
 And singly, one by one, they kill us now.
 We do delightfully ourselves allow
 To that consumption; and profusely blind,
 We kill ourselves to propagate our kind.⁸ 110

*Shortness
 of life.* And yet we do not that; we are not men:
 There is not now that mankind which was then
 When as the sun and man did seem to strive (Joint tenants of the world) who should survive;
 When stag, and raven,⁹ and the long-lived tree, 115
 Compared with man, died in minority;
 When, if a slow-paced star had stolen away
 From the observer's marking, he might stay
 Two or three hundred years to see it again,
 And then make up his observation plain; 120
 When, as the age was long, the size was great;
 Man's growth confessed and recompensed the meat;¹
 So spacious and large, that every soul

4. Raised.

5. Moderation.

6. Feeble, diseased; the Latin root, ruina, implies a falling down.

7. I.e., that of Adam and Eve.

8. Popular superstition had it that every act of sex shortened one's life by a day.

9. Stags and ravens were thought to live particularly long; but compared with early men, they, and even trees, died in their youth.

1. Early man was thought to have eaten better than modern man, lived longer, and grown to greater stature. Methuselah (below) is said to have lived 969 years (Genesis v.27).

Smallness of stature.

Did a fair kingdom and large realm control;
And when the very stature, thus erect, 125
Did that soul a good way towards Heaven direct.
Where is this mankind now? who lives to age,
Fit to be made Methuselah his page?
Alas, we scarce live long enough to try
Whether a new-made clock run right, or lie. 130
Old grandsires talk of yesterday with sorrow,
And for our children we reserve tomorrow.
So short is life that every peasant strives,
In a torn house; or field, to have three lives.²
And as in lasting, so in length is man 135
Contracted to an inch, who was a span;³
For had a man at first in forests strayed,
Or shipwrecked in the sea, one would have laid
A wager that an elephant or whale
That met him would not hastily assail 140
A thing so equal to him: now, alas,
The fairies and the pygmies well may pass
As credible; mankind decays so soon,
We're scarce our fathers' shadows cast at noon.
Only death adds to our length: nor are we grown 145
In stature to be men, till we are none.⁴
But this were light,⁵ did our less volume hold
All the old text, or had we changed to gold
Their silver; or disposed into less glass
Spirits of virtue,⁶ which then scattered was. 150
But 'tis not so: we're not retired, but damped;⁷
And as our bodies, so our minds are cramped:
'Tis shrinking, not close weaving, that hath thus
In mind and body both bedwarfed us.
We seem ambitious, God's whole work to undo; 155
Of nothing He made us, and we strive, too,
To bring ourselves to nothing back; and we Do what we can to do it so soon as He.
With new diseases on ourselves we war,
And with new physic,⁸ a worse engine far. 160
Thus man, this world's vice-emperor, in whom
All faculties, all graces are at home—

2. Leases of farmland were often made for "three lives," so the tenant would be encouraged to make improvements which his grandson at least might enjoy.

3. A "span" is the distance from tip of thumb to tip of little finger, about 9 inches.

4. Modern men are praised only after their death; they do not become proper men till they have ceased to be men at all.

5. I.e., this would be a trifle.

"Volume": the word puns on both "bulk" and "book."

6. I.e., the distilled powers of virtue, which fit into a smaller bottle than the natural product does. Here and throughout, "virtue" includes not only the sense of "goodness," but that of "power," "efficacy."

7. I.e., not compressed, but deadened.

8. Medication. Modern medicine is said to be the worst enemy of human health.

And if in other creatures they appear,
 They're but man's ministers, and legates there,
 To work on their rebellions, and reduce 165
 Them to civility, and to man's use—
 This man, whom God did woo, and loath to attend⁹
 Till man came up, did down to man descend,
 This man, so great, that all that is, is his,
 Oh what a trifle, and poor thing he is! 170
 If man were anything, he's nothing now:
 Help, or at least some time to waste, allow
 To his other wants, yet when he did depart¹
 With her whom we lament, he lost his heart.

She, of whom the ancients seemed to prophesy¹⁷⁵
 When they called virtues by the name of she,²
 She in whom virtue was so much refined
 That for alloy unto so pure a mind
 She took the weaker sex,³ she that could drive 180
 The poisonous tincture, and the stain of Eve,
 Out of her thoughts and deeds; and purify
 All, by a true religious alchemy,
 She, she is dead; she's dead: when thou knowest this,
 Thou knowest how poor a trifling thing man is.
 And learn'st thus much by our anatomy, 185
 The heart being perished, no part can be free.
 And that except thou feed (not banquet) on
 The supernatural food, religion,
 Thy better growth grows witheréd and scant;
 Be more than man, or thou'rt less than an ant. 190

Then, as mankind, so is the world's whole frame
 Quite out of joint, almost created lame:
 For, before God had made up all the rest,
 Corruption entered and depraved the best.
 It seized the angels, and then first of all 195
 The world did in her cradle take a fall,
 And turned her brains, and took a general maim.
 Wronging each joint of th' universal frame.
 The noblest part, man, felt it first; and then
 Both beasts and plants, cursed in the curse of man.^{4,200}
 So did the world from the first hour decay,
 That evening was beginning of the day,
 And now the springs and summers which we see
 Like sons of women after fifty be.⁵

*Decay of nature
 in other parts.*

9. Wait. God wooed man by freely descending to earth and flesh in order to redeem His fellow creatures.

1. Part with, surrender, lose.

2. Latin virtus is a feminine noun.

3. Her mind was so pure that to make it bearable, she mingled it with the corruption and frailty of "the weaker sex."

4. For a similar account of the way man's fall corrupted the physical universe, see Paradise Lost X.706 ff.

5. Women giving birth after 50 were supposed to produce feeble or defective children.

And new philosophy calls all in doubt, 205
 The element of fire is quite put out;⁶
 The sun is lost, and the earth, and no man's wit
 Can well direct him where to look for it.⁷
 And freely men confess that this world's spent, 210
 When in the planets and the firmament
 They seek so many new; they see that this Is crumbled out again to his atomies.⁸
 'Tis all in pieces, all coherence gone;
 All just supply, and all relation:
 Prince, subject, father, son, are things forgot, 215
 For every man alone thinks he hath got⁹
 To be a phoenix, and that there can be
 None of that kind, of which he is, but he.¹
 This is the world's condition now, and now
 She that should all parts to reunion bow, 220
 She that had all magnetic force alone,
 To draw and fasten sundered parts in one;
 She whom wise nature had invented then
 When she observed that every sort of men
 Did in their voyage in this world's sea stray, 225
 And needed a new compass for their way;
 She that was best, and first original
 Of all fair copies, and the general
 Steward to Fate;² she whose rich eyes and breast
 Gilt the West Indies, and perfumed the East;³ 230
 Whose having breathed in this world did bestow
 Spice on those isles, and bade them still smell so,
 And that rich Indie which doth gold inter,
 Is but as single money,⁴ coined from her;
 She to whom this world must itself refer, 235
 As suburbs,⁵ or the microcosm of her,
 She, she is dead; she's dead: when thou know'st this,
 Thou know'st how lame a cripple this world is.
 And learn'st thus much by our anatomy,

6. The Polish astronomer Copernicus (1473-1543) and the Italian Galileo (1564-1642) led the argument of the "new philosophy" to show that the sun, not the earth, is the center of our galaxy. When this fact was established, a lot of traditional lore and some Biblical passages had to be reinterpreted or discarded. Among these discarded notions was that which required a rim of fire at the outer edge of the universe. That fire was "quite put out."

7. The idea of infinite space was unsettling to many people, especially when another speculation was added to it, that our world might be only one of several, all of which would have to be subject to divine providence. Cf. line 211, "They seek so many new"—new worlds is understood.

8. Atoms, the first principles of matter.

9. Achieved, arrived.

1. The fabulous phoenix was supposed to be unique; i.e., there was only one phoenix on earth at any one time. The loss of "relation" leaves each man thinking he is unique of his "kind" (variety).

2. Fate or Providence disposes of the world, but "she" was chief officer ("steward") under Fate.

3. The West Indies (i.e., the Americas) were a source of gold, the East Indies a source of spices and perfumes.

4. I.e., a single coin.

5. She is the center of everything, the world a mere appendage or suburb.

Disformity of parts.

That this world's general sickness doth not lie 240
In any humor,⁶ or one certain part;
But, as thou sawest it rotten at the heart,
Thou seest a hectic fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance, not to be controlled,
And that thou hast but one way not to admit 245
The world's infection, to be none of it.⁷
For the world's subtlest immaterial parts
Feel this consuming wound, and age's darts.
For the world's beauty is decayed or gone;
Beauty, that's color and proportion. 250
We think the heavens enjoy their spherical,⁸
Their round proportion embracing all.
But yet their various and perplexed course,
Observed in divers ages, doth enforce
Men to find out so many eccentric parts,⁹ 255
Such divers downright lines, such overthwarts,
As disproportion that pure form. It tears
The firmament in eight and forty shares,
And in those constellations then arise
New stars,¹ and old do vanish from our eyes: 260
As though heav'n suffered earthquakes, peace, or war
When new towers rise, and old demolished are.
They have impaled² within a zodiac
The freeborn sun, and keep twelve signs awake
To watch his steps; the Goat and Crab control,³ 265
And fright him back, who else to either pole
(Did not these tropics fetter him) might run:
For his course is not round; nor can the sun
Perfect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct; but where he rose today 270
He comes no more, but with a cozening line,
Steals by that point, and so is serpentine:
And seeming weary with his reeling thus,
He means to sleep, being now fall'n nearer us.
So, of the stars which boast that they do run 275
In circle still, none ends where he begun.
All their proportion's lame, it sinks, it swells.
For of meridians and parallels

6. The four bodily "humors" or dispositions combined to make up a temperament; when they were out of balance, a person was sick.

7. I.e., the only way to escape the world's infection is to die.

8. "Shape" or "proportion" is understood.

9. Over the centuries, the old Ptolemaic (geocentric) image of the universe had been patched up with many special theories (cycles, epicycles, eccentrics, and trepidations) designed to account for astronomical observations that could not be otherwise reconciled with the theory itself. The result of these various ("divers") amendments was, as Donne says, "disproportion."

1. The old astronomy had divided the heavens into 48 constellations, but new observations, especially with the just-developed telescope, were adding new stars to the list, even as Donne wrote.

2. Set within a pale, a fence.

3. The Tropics of Capricorn and Cancer, limits of the sun's northern and southern motion.

Man hath weaved out a net and this net thrown Upon the heavens, and now they are his own. 280
 Loath to go up the hill, or labor thus
 To go to heaven, we make heaven come to us.
 We spur, we rein the stars, and in their race
 They're diversely content to obey our pace.
 But keeps the earth her round proportion still?⁴ 285
 Doth not a Tenerife,⁵ or higher hill
 Rise so high like a rock, that one might think
 The floating moon would shipwreck there and sink?
 Seas are so deep that whales being struck today
 Perchance tomorrow, scarce at middle way 290
 Of their wished journey's end, the bottom, die.
 And men, to sound depths, so much line untie,
 As one might justly think that there would rise
 At end thereof, one of the antipodes:⁶
 If under all, a vault infernal be⁷ 295
 (Which sure is spacious, except that we Invent another torment, that there must Millions into a strait⁸ hot room be thrust),
 Then solidness and roundness have no place.
 Are these but warts and pock-holes in the face 300
 Of the earth? Think so: but yet confess, in this
 The world's proportion disfigured is,
 That those two legs whereon it doth rely,
 Reward and punishment, are bent awry.
 And, Oh, it can no more be questioned, 305
 That beauty's best, proportion, is dead,
 Since even grief itself, which now alone
 Is left us, is without proportion.
 She by whose lines proportion should be Examined, measure of all symmetry, 310
 Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made
 Of harmony,⁹ he would at next have said
 That harmony was she, and thence infer
 That souls were but resultances¹ from her,
 And did from her into our bodies go, 315
 As to our eyes, the forms from objects flow;
 She, who if those great doctors truly said
 That the ark² to man's proportions was made,

Disorder in the world.

4. I.e., is the earth still perfectly round, as it was created?

5. The peak of Teneriffe, in the Canary Islands, rises more than 12,000 feet above sea level.

6. Mythical islands on the other side of the world.

7. Hell is commonly represented as an immense cave at the center of the earth.

8. Narrow.

9. Aristoxenus was one of several ancient philosophers who held that the soul was a harmony of several elements; "at next": instantly.

1. Secondary productions, consequences.

2. Saint Augustine says, in The City of God (xv.26), that Noah's ark was constructed in proportion to the human body: all the animals lived peacefully in it, as the various passions are supposed to dwell peacefully in man. "She" was a "type" of the ark (i.e., analogous to it) because she was made to the proportions of mankind, as the ark was analogous to her because all

Had been a type for that, as that might be
 A type of her in this, that contrary 320
 Both elements and passions lived at peace
 In her, who caused all civil war to cease;
 She, after whom, what form soe'er we see,
 Is discord, and rude incongruity,
 She, she is dead, she's dead; when thou know'st this,
 Thou know'st how ugly a monster this world is: 326
 And learn'st thus much by our anatomy,
 That here is nothing to enamor thee:
 And that not only faults in inward parts,
 Corruptions in our brains, or in our hearts, 330
 Poisoning the fountains, whence our actions spring;
 Endanger us: but that if everything
 Be not done fitly and in propoition,
 To satisfy wise and good lookers-on (Since most men be such as most think they be), 335
 They're loathsome too, by this deformity.³
 For good and well must in our actions meet;
 Wicked is not much worse than indiscreet.
 But beauty's other second element,
 Color and luster, now is as near spent. 340
 And had the world his just proportion.
 Were it a ring still, yet the stone is gone.
 As a compassionate turquoise which doth tell
 By looking pale the wearer is not well,
 As gold falls sick being stung with mercury, 345
 All the world's parts of such complexion be.⁴
 When nature was most busy, the first week,
 Swaddling the newborn earth, God seemed to like
 That she should sport herself sometimes and play,
 To mingle and vary colors every day. 350
 And then, as though she could not make enow,⁵ Himself His various rainbow did allow.
 Sight is the noblest sense of any one,
 Yet sight hath only color to feed on,
 And color is decayed: summer's robe grows 355
 Dusky, and like an oft dyed garment shows.
 Our blushing red, which used in cheeks to spread,
 Is inward sunk, and only our souls are red.⁶
 Perchance the world might have recovered,
 If she whom we lament had not been dead: 360
 But she, in whom all white, and red, and blue (Beauty's ingredients) voluntary grew,

the warring elements and contrary passions lived at peace within them both. This is an excellent example of the sort of "correspondence," or relation of one thing to another, the loss of which Donne is lamenting in the poem.

3. Most men behave as others expect them to behave; therefore when a man sins, not only he but all his "lookers-on" share in the blame.

4. I.e., evil has the power to contaminate good, especially now that the supreme good is gone, like a precious stone removed from a ring.

5. Enough.

6. Scarlet is the color of sin and shame.

Weakness in the want of correspondence of heaven and earth.

As in an unvexed Paradise; from whom
Did all things' verdure and their luster come,
Whose composition was miraculous, 365
Being all color, all diaphanous
(For air and fire but thick gross bodies were,
And liveliest stones but drowsy and pale to her),
She, she is dead; she's dead: when thou know'st this,
Thou know'st how wan a ghost this our world is: 370
And learn'st thus much by our anatomy,
That it should more affright than pleasure thee.
And that, since all fair color then did sink,
'Tis now but wicked vanity to think
To color vicious deeds with good pretense, 375
Or with bought colors to illude⁷ men's sense.
Nor in aught more this world's decay appears,
Than that her influence the heaven forbears,
Or that the elements do not feel this,
The father or the mother barren is.⁸ 380
The clouds conceive not rain, or do not pour,
In the due birth time, down the balmy shower;
The air doth not motherly sit on the earth,
To hatch her seasons and give all things birth;
Springtimes were common cradles, but are tombs;³⁸⁵
And false conceptions⁹ fill the general wombs.
The air shows such meteors¹ as none can see
Not only what they mean, but what they be;
Earth such new worms² as would have troubled much
The Egyptian Mages to have made more such. 390
What artist³ now dares boast that he can bring Heaven hither, or constellate anything,⁴
So as the influence of those stars may be Imprisoned in an herb, or charm, or tree,
And do by touch all which those stars could do? 395
The art is lost, and correspondence too.
For heaven gives little, and the earth takes less,
And man least knows their trade and purposes.
If this commerce 'twixt heaven and earth were not Embarred, and all this traffic quite forgot, 400
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us.
Since herbs and roots by dying lose not all,
But they, yea ashes too, are medicinal,
Death could not quench her virtue⁵ so, but that 405

7. Deceive.

8. I.e., if the elements do not feel something amiss in the universe, and voluntarily forbear procreation, then the father (heaven) must be sterile or the mother (earth) barren.

9. Misbirths or absurd ideas.

1. Falling stars were supposed to be omens of good or bad events.

2. Monsters ("worms") spontaneously generated from the earth, like those created by the Egyptian Mages (magicians) in Exodus vii, are also portents.

3. I.e., a learned man, a fortune-teller or astrologist.

4. I.e., figure out its occult relations to the stars.

5. Alchemists often held that the life of a plant, for example, remained in its ashes, and could be regenerated from them; so the virtue of Elizabeth remains—if not strongly enough to attract followers, at least sufficiently to rouse admiration.

It would be (if not followed) wondered at:
 And all the world would be one dying swan.
 To sing her funeral praise, and vanish then.⁶
 But as some serpents' poison hurteth not,
 Except it be from the live serpent shot, 410
 So doth her virtue need her here, to fit
 That unto us; she working more than it.⁷
 But she, in whom to such maturity
 Virtue was grown, past growth, that it must die;
 She, from whose influence all impressions came, 415
 But, by receivers' impotencies, lame,⁸
 Who, though she could not transubstantiate
 All states to gold, yet gilded every state,
 So that some princes have some temperance,
 Some counselors some purpose to advance 420
 The common profit, and some people have
 Some stay, no more than kings should give, to crave,
 Some women have some taciturnity,
 Some nunneries some grains of chastity;
 She that did thus much, and much more could do,
 But that our age was iron,⁹ and rusty too, 426
 She, she is dead; she's dead: when thou know'st this,
 Thou know'st how dry a cinder this world is.
 And learn'st thus much by our anatomy,
 That 'tis in vain to dew or mollify 430
 It with thy tears, or sweat, or blood: nothing
 Is worth our travail, grief, or perishing,
 But those rich joys, which did possess her heart,
 Of which she's now partaker and a part
 Conclusion. But as in cutting up a man that's dead, 435
 The body will not last out¹ to have read
 On every part, and therefore men direct
 Their speech to parts that are of most effect,
 So the world's carcass would not last if I
 Were punctual² in this anatomy. 440
 Nor smells it well to hearers,³ if one tell Them their disease, who fain would think they're well.
 Here therefore be the end: and, blessed maid,
 Of whom is meant whatever hath been said,
 Or shall be spoken well by any tongue, 445
 Whose name refines coarse lines, and makes prose
 song,

6. The dying swan, foreseeing her own demise, sings (according to legend) one last song, her swan song, before perishing.

7. The poison of some snakes, Donne argues, is operative only while the beasts themselves are alive; so Elizabeth's virtue loses most of its power when she is not alive to administer it.
 8. I.e., her influence is faulty ("lame") only because those on whom it is to work are impotent.

9. The ages of gold, silver, and bronze preceded (according to myth) the last and worst age, that of iron.

1. Endure.

2. Thorough, detailed.

3. I.e., it doesn't smell good, it's not fitting—Latinism (non bene olet), suggested by the metaphor of the world as a rotting corpse.

Accept this tribute, and his first year's rent,⁴
 Who till his dark short taper's end be spent,
 As oft as thy feast sees this widowed earth,
 Will yearly celebrate thy second birth, 450
 That is, thy death. For though the soul of man
 Be got⁵ when man is made, 'tis born but then
 When man doth die; our body's as the womb,
 And, as a midwife, death directs it home.
 And you, her creatures,⁶ whom she works upon, 455
 And have your last and best concoction⁷
 From her example and her virtue, if you
 In reverence to her, do think it due
 That no one should her praises thus rehearse,
 As matter fit for chronicle, not verse,⁸ 460
 Vouchsafe to call to mind that God did make
 A last, and lasting'st piece, a song. He spake
 To Moses to deliver unto all
 That song, because He knew they would let fall
 The law, the prophets, and the history, 465
 But keep the song still in their memory.⁹
 Such an opinion (in due measure) made
 Me this great office boldly to invade.
 Nor could incomprehensibleness¹⁰ deter
 Me from thus trying to imprison her, 470
 Which when I saw that a strict grave could do,
 I saw not why verse might not do so too.
 Verse hath a middle nature: heaven keeps souls,
 The grave keeps bodies, verse the fame enrolls.

1611

Elegy XI. The Bracelet

UPON THE LOSS OF HIS MISTRESS'S CHAIN, FOR WHICH HE MADE
 SATISFACTION¹

Not that in color it was like thy hair,
 For annlets of that thou may'st let me wear;
 Nor that thy hand it oft embraced and kissed,
 For so it had that good which oft I missed;
 Nor for that silly old morality²

5

4. I.e., annual payment. Donne had promised to write a poem every year on Elizabeth's death, and in fact wrote not only this first but a second "Anniversary."

5. Begotten.

6. Her creations.

7. Distillation. Readers of Donne's poem are rased to the ultimate purity of which they are capable by the force of Elizabeth Drury's virtue.

8. A chronicle is a prose history, commonly of the more pedestrian sort.

Donne may be implying that the story of Elizabeth belongs among the Saints' Lives.

9. The Song of Moses, delivered to the people just before his death, is in Deuteronomy xxxii.

10. I.e., the immense, incomprehensible quality of her virtue.

1. I.e., paid full value.

2. The jeer is at lovers' mottos of the "When this you see, remember me" variety.

That as these links were knit, our love should be—
 Mourn I that I thy sevenfold chain have lost,
 Nor for the luck's sake; but the bitter cost.
 O, shall twelve righteous Angels,³ which as yet
 No leaven of vile solder did admit, 10
 Nor yet by any way have strayed or gone
 From the first state of their creation—
 Angels which heaven commanded to provide
 All things to me, and be my faithful guide,
 To gain new friends, t' appease great enemies, 15
 To comfort my soul when I lie or rise—
 Shall these twelve innocents, by thy severe
 Sentence (great judge), my sins' great burden bear?
 Shall they be damned and in the furnace thrown
 And punished for offenses not their own? 20
 They save not me, they do not ease my pains,
 When in that hell they're burnt and tied in chains.
 Were they but Crowns of France, I caréd not,
 For most of these their natural country's rot⁴
 I think possessest, they come here to us 25
 So pale, so lame, so lean, so ruinous;
 And howsoe'er French kings most Christian be,
 Their Crowns are circumcised most Jewishly.⁵
 Or were they Spanish Stamps, still traveling,
 That are become as catholic as their king,⁶ 30
 Those unlicked bear-whelps, unfild pistolets
 That (more than cannon shot) avails or lets;⁷
 Which, negligently left unrounded, look
 Like many-angled figures in the book
 Of some great conjurer that would enforce 35
 Nature, as these do justice, from her course;
 Which, as the soul quickens head, feet, and heart,
 As streams, like veins, run through th' earth's every part,
 Visit all countries, and have slyly made
 Gorgeous France ruined, ragged, and decayed; 40
 Scotland, which knew no state, proud in one day;

3. These gold coins had on one side an image of St. Michael. "Vile solder" is lead, mixed with the original gold and recast as a form of counterfeiting.

3. The French louis had a crown on it, and was known by that name; syphilis was popularly known as "the French pox."

5. Since early times, kings of France have been known as "Most Christian" kings; their "circumcised" coins had little bits clipped off the edges.

6. The king of Spain is known as "the Most Catholic" king, but his money is catholic too, because it gets in everywhere. Donne is glancing throughout this passage at the fact that many English courtiers and officials were on the secret payroll of Spain.

7. Though crudely formed and apparently unfinished, Spanish coins are said to be very powerful, both positively ("avails," from the same root as "valiant") and negatively ("lets" in the sense of "releases"). The crude coins are compared to bear cubs unlicked by their mother (they were supposed to be born mere lumps and licked into shape by her.) "Pistolets" and pistoles are words applied indiscriminately to coins or handguns; however crudely made (many of the coins were minted in South America), their power is explosive.

And mangled seventeen-headed Belgia.⁸

Or were it such gold as that wherewithal
Almighty chemics from each mineral,
Having by subtle fire a soul out-pulled,
Are dirtily and desperately gulled.⁹

45

I would not spit to quench the fire they're in,
For they are guilty of much heinous sin.

But shall my harmless Angels perish? Shall
I lose my guard, my ease, my food, my all?

50

Much hope which they should nourish will be dead,
Much of my able youth and lustihead

Will vanish. If thou love, let them alone,

For thou wilt love me less when they are gone;

And be content that some loud squeaking crier,

55

Well-pleased with one lean, threadbare groat for hire,

May like a devil roar through every street¹

And gall the finder's conscience if they meet.

Or let me creep to some dread conjurer

That with fantastic schemes fills full much paper,

60

Which hath divided heaven in tenements,

And with whores, thieves, and murderers stuffed his rents²

So full, that though he pass them all in sin,

He leaves himself no room to enter in.

But if, when all his art and time is spent,

65

He say 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;

Receive from him that doom ungrudgingly,

Because he is the mouth of destiny.

Thou say'st (alas), the gold doth still remain

Though it be changed and put into a chain;

70

So in the first fall'n Angels³ resteth still

Wisdom and knowledge, but 'tis turned to ill—

As these should do good works, and should provide

Necessities, but now must nurse thy pride.

And they are still bad Angels: mine are none,

75

For form gives being, and their form is gone.

Pity these Angels; yet their dignities

Pass Virtues, Powers, and Principalities.⁴

8. The inflation brought about by Spanish importation of American gold turned Europe topsy-turvy; France went from riches to rags, and Scotland, which had always been poor, became "proud in one day" perhaps when the Armada was shipwrecked there. "Belgia" (the Low Countries) had long consisted of 17 provinces (four duchies, seven counties, five lordships, and the margraviate of Antwerp).

9. "Chemics" are alchemists, who believed that gold was the "soul" of every other metal; having striven to extract it, they were "gulled" (i.e., disappointed).

1. Lost items were often called through the streets by the town crier; his price for this service was a mere groat, a coin so small as to be proverbial: "not worth a groat."

2. The conjurer, who can be hired to find a lost object, usually devotes his time to clients who want to cheat their way into heaven. "Pass": surpass.

3. I.e., Satan and his crew; but also the lost gold.

4. The theological doctrine here is that a good angel, though of the lowest rank, surpasses a bad angel of the highest; but Donne is also saying that money in the form of bribes can prevail over people of any rank.

But thou art resolute: thy will be done! 80
 Yet with such anguish as her only son
 The mother in the hungry grave doth lay,
 Unto the fire these martyrs I betray.
 Good souls (for you give life to everything),
 Good Angels (for good messages you bring), 85
 Destined you might have been to such an one
 As would have loved and worshiped you alone,
 One that would suffer hunger, nakedness,
 Yea, death, ere he would make your number less.
 But I am guilty of your sad decay;
 May your few fellows longer with me stay. 90
 But, oh, thou wretched finder, whom I hate
 So that I almost pity thy estate;
 Gold being the heaviest metal amongst all,
 May my most heavy curse upon thee fall.
 Here fettered, manacled, and hanged in chains 95
 First may'st thou be; then chained to hellish pains;
 Or be with foreign gold bribed to betray
 Thy country, and fail both of that and thy pay.
 May the next thing thou stoop'st to reach contain
 Poison, whose nimble fume rot thy moist brain, 100
 Or libels or some interdicted thing
 Which, negligently kept, thy ruin bring.
 Lust-bred diseases rot thee: and dwell with thee
 Itching desire and no ability.
 May all the evils that gold ever wrought; 105
 All mischiefs that all devils ever thought;
 Want after plenty; poor and gouty age;
 The plagues of travelers; love; marriage
 Afflict thee, and at thy life's last moment
 May thy swoll'n sins themselves to thee present. 110
 But I forgive: repent thee, honest man;
 Gold is restorative,⁵ restore it then.
 But if from it thou beest loath to depart,
 Because 'tis cordial,⁶ would 'twere at thy heart.

1633

Elegy XIX. Going to Bed

Come, Madam, come, all rest my powers defy,
 Until I labor, I in labor lie.¹
 The foe oft-times, having the foe in sight,
 Is tired with standing though he never fight.
 Off with that girdle, like heaven's zone glittering, 5
 But a far fairer world encompassing:
 Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear

5. Healing, good to restore the health.
 6. Good for diseases of the heart.

1. "Labor" in the sense of "get to work" and in the sense of "distress."

That th' eyes of busy fools may be stopped there.

Unlace yourself, for that harmonious chime

Tells me from you that now it is bed-time.

10

Off with that happy busk,² which I envy,

That still can be and still can stand so nigh.

Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals

As when from flowery meads th' hill's shadow steals.

Off with that wiry coronet and show

15

The hairy diadem which on you doth grow:

Now off with those shoes, and then safely tread

In this love's hallowed temple, this soft bed.

In such white robes, heaven's angels used to be Received by men; thou, angel, bring'st with thee

20

A heaven like Mahomet's paradise;³ and though

All spirits walk in white, we easily know

By this these angels from an evil sprite,

Those set our hairs; but these our flesh upright.

License my roving hands, and let them go

25

Before, behind, between, above, below.

O my America! my new-found-land,

My kingdom, safest when with one man manned,

My mine of precious stones, my empery,

How blest am I in this discovering thee!

30

To enter in these bonds is to be free;

There where my hand is set, my seal shall be.⁴

Full nakedness! All joys are due to thee,

As souls unbodied, bodies unclothed must be,

To taste whole joys. Gems which you women use

35

Are like Atalanta's balls,⁵ cast in men's views,

That when a fool's eye lighteth on a gem,

His earthly soul may covet theirs, not them.

Like pictures, or like books' gay coverings, made

For laymen, are all women thus arrayed;

40

Themselves are mystic books, which only we

(Whom their imputed grace will dignify)

Must see revealed.⁶ Then since that I may know,

As liberally as to a midwife, show

Thyself: cast all, yea, this white linen hence,

45

There is no penance due to innocence.

To teach thee, I am naked first; why then

What need'st thou have more covering than a man?

1669

2. Corset.

3. Populated by seductive houris, for the delectation of the faithful.

4. The jokes mingle law with sex; having signed the document with his hand, he will now seal it, and in the bond of their relationship he will find freedom.

5. Atalanta, running a race against her suitor Hippomenes, was beaten when he dropped golden balls (apples) for her to pick up. Donne, for reasons of his own, reverses the story.

6. By granting favors to their lovers, women impute to them grace which they don't deserve, as God imputes grace to undeserving sinners. Laymen can only look at the covers of mystic books (women); but "we" who have saving grace can read them.

Satire III, Religion For the first time in English literary history, the mode of satire flourished in the last decade of Elizabeth's reign and under the first two Stuarts. Many social circumstances contributed to its popularity: a surplus of clever young men without jobs, bitter antipathies between social classes and groups, and a general spirit of disillusion and doubt which has been characterized as "Jacobean melancholy."

Out of this mood of prolonged doubt, search, and obstinate questioning came the five satires of John Donne. Satire III, Religion is not a satire in the customary sense of a mocking attack on some person or custom. It is a strenuous, inconclusive discussion of an acute theological problem: How may a man recognize the true church, to which all Christians claim to belong? The person to whom it is addressed is evidently a man without specific religious commitment, but with a great and anxious interest in religion, and a specially nervous feeling that the claims of Roman Catholicism may be justified. He has been a sailor, a soldier, a bit of a rake, a bit of a theologian; he has more than a smattering of law. In many small ways, he reminds us of young Jack Donne himself. But the most characteristic thing about this poem on the search for certainty is the toughness of mind which it evinces throughout. Donne's images have a raw, contemptuous force, his phrasing is clipped, his grammar and his meter are twisted by the energy of his argument. He has no easy answer for the question raised, and makes no effort to charm or lull the reader. His poem is sheer display of intellectual force, a pointed, inconclusive game of mind.

Satire III, Religion

Kind pity chokes my spleen; brave scorn forbids
Those tears to issue which swell my eyelids;
I must not laugh, nor weep sins, and be wise,
Can railing then cure these worn maladies?
Is not our mistress, fair Religion, 5
As worthy of all our souls' devotion,
As virtue was to the first blinded age?¹
Are not heaven's joys as valiant to assuage
Lusts, as earth's honor was to them?² Alas,
As we do them in means, shall they surpass 10
Us in the end, and shall thy father's spirit
Meet blind philosophers in heaven, whose merit
Of strict life may be imputed faith,³ and hear
Thee, whom he taught so easy ways and near
To follow, damned? O, if thou dar'st, fear this; 15
This fear great courage and high valor is.
Dar'st thou aid mutinous Dutch,⁴ and dar'st thou lay

1. The age of paganism, blind to the light of Christianity, but capable of following natural morality ("virtue").

2. I.e., hope of heaven should be as powerful ("valiant") an antidote to sin in us as earthly honor was to "them"—the pagans.

3. Even without Christian faith, pagan philosophers may achieve heaven (see

The Divine Comedy, Paradiso XX) by an extraordinary display of virtue which causes faith to be imputed to them.

4. The Dutch continually enlisted English volunteers in their rebellious wars against the Spaniards. Donne had never fought in Flanders, though he had sailed twice against the Spaniards, to Cadiz and the Azores.

Thee in ships, wooden sepulchers, a prey
 To leaders' rage, to storms, to shot, to dearth?
 Dar'st thou dive seas and dungeons of the earth? 20
 Hast thou courageous fire to thaw the ice
 Of frozen North discoveries? and thrice
 Colder than salamanders,⁵ like divine
 Children in the oven,⁶ fires of Spain, and the line,
 Whose countries limbecks to our bodies be, 25
 Canst thou for gain bear?⁷ And must every he
 Which cries not, "Goddess!" to thy mistress, draw,⁸
 Or eat thy poisonous words? Courage of straw!
 O desperate coward, wilt thou seem bold, and
 To thy foes and his⁹ (who made thee to stand 30
 Sentinel in his world's garrison) thus yield,
 And for forbidden wars, leave th' appointed field?
 Know thy foes: The foul Devil (whom thou Strivest to please) for hate, not love, would allow Thee fain his whole realm to be quit;¹ and as 35
 The world's all parts² wither away and pass,
 So the world's self, thy other loved foe, is
 In her decrepit wane, and thou, loving this,
 Dost love a withered and worn strumpet; last,
 Flesh (itself's death) and joys which flesh can taste, 40
 Thou lovest; and thy fair goodly soul, which doth
 Give this flesh power to taste joy, thou dost loathe.
 Seek true religion. O, where? Mirreus,³
 Thinking her unhoused here, and fled from us,
 Seeks her at Rome; there, because he doth know 45
 That she was there a thousand years ago.
 He loves her rags so, as we here obey
 The statecloth⁴ where the Prince sat yesterday.
 Crantz to such brave loves will not be enthralled,
 But loves her only, who at Geneva is called 50
 Religion—plain, simple, sullen, young,
 Contemptuous, yet unhandsome; as among
 Lecherous humors,⁵ there is one that judges
 No wenches wholesome but coarse country drudges.
 Graius stavs still at home here, and because 55

5. The salamander was traditionally so cold-blooded that it could live even in a fire.

6. The "divine children in the oven" are Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, rescued from the fiery furnace in Daniel iii.

7. The object of "bear" is "fires of Spain, and the line"—Inquisitorial and equatorial heats, which roast men as chemists heat materials in "limbecks" (alembics, or retorts for distilling).

8. I.e., fight a duel.

9. God's.

1. I.e., the Devil would gladly give you a free hand with his whole kingdom.

2. All parts of the world. It was a common belief in the 17th century that the world was getting old and decrepit.

3. The imaginary characters in this passage represent different creeds. "Mirreus" is a Roman Catholic, "Crantz" a Geneva Presbyterian, "Graius" an Erastian (i.e., believing in any religion sponsored by the state), "Phrygius" a skeptic, and "Graccus" a Universalist.

4. The royal canopy, a symbol of kingly power.

5. Tempers, temperaments.

Some preachers, vile ambitious bawds, and laws
 Still new, like fashions, bid him think that she Which dwells with us, is only perfect, he Embraceth her whom his Godfathers will Tender to him, being tender, as wards still 60
 Take such wives as their guardians offer, or Pay values.⁶ Careless Phrygius doth abhor
 All, because all cannot be good, as one
 Knowing some women whores, dares marry none.
 Graccus loves all as one, and thinks that so 65
 As women do in divers countries go
 In divers habits, yet are still one kind,
 So doth, so is religion; and this blindness too much light breeds; but unmoved thou
 Of force must one, and forced but one allow; 70
 And the right;⁷ ask thy father which is she,
 Let him ask his; though truth and falsehood be Near twins, yet truth a little elder is;
 Be busy to seek her, believe me this,
 He's not of none, nor worst, that seeks the best.⁸ 75
 To adore, or scorn an image, or protest,
 May all be bad; doubt wisely; in strange way
 To stand inquiring right, is not to stray;
 To sleep, or run wrong, is. On a huge hill,
 Cragged and steep, Truth stands, and he that will 80
 Reach her, about must, and about must go,
 And what the hill's suddenness resists, win so;
 Yet strive so, that before age, death's twilight,
 Thy soul rest, for none can work in that night.
 To will⁹ implies delay, therefore now do. 85
 Hard deeds, the body's pains; hard knowledge too
 The mind's endeavors reach,¹ and mysteries
 Are like the sun, dazzling, yet plain to all eyes.
 Keep the truth which thou hast found; men do not stand
 In so ill case here, that God hath with his hand 90
 Signed kings' blank charters to kill whom they hate,
 Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate.²
 Fool and wretch, wilt thou let thy soul be tied
 To man's laws, by which she shall not be tried
 At the last day? O, will it then boot thee 95

6. Young men (of "tender" years) might reject the wives offered ("tendered") them by their guardians; but, if they did so, had to pay "values," i.e. fines.

7. I.e., being blind to the differences between religions, Graccus has too much light to see anything (lines 68-69). But the poet insists that without being swayed by human pressures, we must find just one true religion, "the right" true religion.

8. The man who seeks the best church is neither an unbeliever nor the worst sort of believer.

9. To intend a future action.

1. I.e., the body's pains achieve ("reach") hard deeds; the mind's endeavors will reach hard knowledge.

2. Human authority does not represent divine justice on earth; men are not God's vicars on earth (the hit here is at both the Pope and the secular monarch), but his hangmen at best—agents through whom his justice is fulfilled without carte blanche ("blank charters") to use their own judgments.

To say a Philip, or a Gregory,
 A Harry, or a Martin taught thee this?³
 Is not this excuse for mere contraries
 Equally strong? Cannot both sides say so?
 That thou mayest rightly obey power, her bounds know;
 Those passed, her nature and name is changed; to be
 Then humble to her is idolatry.⁴
 As streams are, power is; those blest flowers that dwell
 At the rough stream's calm head, thrive and do well,
 But having left their roots, and themselves given
 To the stream's tyrannous rage, alas, are driven
 Through mills, and rocks, and woods, and at last, almost Consumed in going, in the sea are lost.
 So perish souls, which more choose men's unjust
 Power from God claimed, than God himself to trust.

100
105
110
1633

Good Friday, 1613. Riding Westward

Let man's soul be a sphere, and then, in this,
 The intelligence that moves, devotion is,¹
 And as the other spheres, by being grown
 Subject to foreign motions, lose their own,
 And being by others hurried every day,
 Scarce in a year their natural form obey;
 Pleasure or business, so, our souls admit
 For their first mover, and are whirled by it.²
 Hence is 't, that I am carried towards the West
 This day, when my soul's form bends towards the East.
 There I should see a Sun,³ by rising, set,
 And by that setting endless day beget:
 But that Christ on this cross did rise and fall,
 Sin had eternally benighted all.
 Yet dare I almost be glad I do not see
 That spectacle, of too much weight for me.
 Who sees God's face, that is self-life, must die;
 What a death were it then to see God die?
 It made his own lieutenant, Nature, shrink;
 It made his footstool crack, and the sun wink.⁴

5
10
15
20

3. "Philip" is Philip II of Spain, and "Gregory" any one of several Pope Gregories (VII, XIII, XIV); "Harry" is England's Henry VIII, and "Martin" is Martin Luther. Laymen and clergy, Protestants and Catholics, all are covered. "Boot": profit.

4. I.e., when the true limits of ecclesiastical power have been passed, obedience becomes idolatry.

1. As intelligences guide the visible planets, devotion is or should be the guiding principle of man's life.

2. I.e., spheres are deflected from their true orbits by outside influences; so our souls are deflected by business or pleasure.

3. The sun-Son pun was an ancient one. Christ, the Son of God, set when he rose on the Cross, and his setting (death) gave rise to the Christian era.

4. An earthquake and eclipse supposedly accompanied the Crucifixion.

Could I behold those hands which span the poles,
 And tune all spheres at once, pierced with those holes?
 Could I behold that endless height which is Zenith to us, and our antipodes,⁵
 Humbled below us? Or that blood which is 25
 The seat of all our souls, if not of His,
 Make dirt of dust, or that flesh which was worn
 By God, for his apparel, ragged and torn?
 If on these things I durst not look, durst I
 Upon his miserable mother cast mine eye, 30
 Who was God's partner here, and furnished thus
 Half of that sacrifice which ransomed us?
 Though these things, as I ride, be from mine eye,
 They are present yet unto my memory,
 For that looks towards them; and Thou look'st towards me, 35
 O Saviour, as Thou hang'st upon the tree.
 I turn my back to Thee but to receive
 Corrections, till Thy mercies bid Thee leave.
 O think me worth Thine anger; punish me;
 Burn off my rusts and my deformity; 40
 Restore Thine image so much, by Thy grace,
 That Thou may'st know me, and I'll turn my face.

1633

From Holy Sonnets¹

1

Thou hast made me, and shall Thy work decay?
 Repair me now, for now mine end doth haste;
 I run to death, and death meets me as fast,
 And all my pleasures are like yesterday.
 I dare not move my dim eyes any way, 5
 Despair behind, and death before doth cast
 Such terror, and my feeble flesh doth waste
 By sin in it, which it towards hell doth weigh.
 Only Thou art above, and when towards Thee
 By Thy leave I can look, I rise again; 10
 But our old subtle foe so tempteth me
 That not one hour myself I can sustain.

5. "Zenith" and "antipodes" are the highest and farthest reach of heaven.

1. Several of the Holy Sonnets contain specific indications of date; number 17 makes reference to the recent death of Donne's wife (August 15, 1617) and number 18 may have been inspired by the Elector Palatine's defeat (October 29, 1620). But most are considerably earlier (1609-10). They are nineteen in number, conventional in their rhyme scheme and broad metrical pattern, but rhythmically bold, powerful in their imagery, and marked by deep emotional coloring. Donne's religion was never a secure or comfortable experience; his Holy Sonnets are documents which mingle anguished despair with no less anguished hope. And in a sonnet like Holy Sonnet 14, his faith rises to a series of knotted paradoxes involving coercion and submission, which would be revolting were it not for the full and evident sincerity of the mind to which they were inevitable.

Thy grace may wing me to prevent his art,
And Thou like adamant draw mine iron heart.²

1633

5

I am a little world made cunningly
Of elements, and an angelic sprite;³
But black sin hath betrayed to endless night
My world's both parts, and O, both parts must die.
You which beyond that heaven which was most high
Have found new spherics, and of new lands can write,⁴
Pour new seas in mine eyes, that so I might Drown my world with my weeping earnestly,
Or wash it if it must be drowned no more.⁵
But O, it must be burnt! Alas, the fire
Of lust and envy have burnt it heretofore,
And made it fouler; let their flames retire,
And burn me, O Lord, with a fiery zeal
Of Thee and Thy house, which doth in eating heal.⁶

5

10

1635

7

At the round earth's imagined corners,⁷ blow
Your trumpets, angels; and arise, arise
From death, you numberless infinities
Of souls, and to your scattered bodics go;
All whom the flood did, and fire shall, o'erthrow,
All whom war, dearth, age, agues, tyrannies,
Despair, law, chance hath slain, and you whose eyes
Shall behold God, and never taste death's woe.⁸
But let them sleep, Lord, and me mourn a space;
For, if above all these, my sins abound,
'Tis late to ask abundance of Thy grace
When we are there. Here on this lowly ground,
Teach me how to repent; for that's as good
As if Thou hadst sealed my pardon with Thy blood.

5

17

1633

2. "Wing": give wings to; "prevent": forestall; "adamant": loadstone. Note throughout the sonnets a combination of imperious energies and protestations of abject helplessness which determines the tone of Donne's religious feeling.

3. Both body and soul—the former made of "elements," the latter "angelic sprite" (spirit).

4. Donne asks the astronomers and explorers to find new oceans for tears to weep or waters to wash away his sins.

5. God promised (Genesis ix.11) after Noah's experience that the earth would never again be flooded.

6. See Psalm lxi.9: "For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." The passage involves three sorts of flame—those of the Last Judgment; those of lust and envy; and those of zeal, which alone heal.

7. Donne may have been thinking of the angels on old maps, who blow their trumpets to the four points of the compass. See also Revelation vii.1.

8. See Matthew xvi.28, Mark ix.1, and Luke ix.27, where the worthies are described who ascended directly to heaven from this life.

9

If poisonous minerals, and if that tree
 Whose fruit threw death on else-immortal us,⁹
 If lecherous goats, if serpents envious
 Cannot be damned; alas! why should I be?
 Why should intent or reason, born in me,
 Make sins, else equal, in me more heinous?
 And, mercy being easy and glorious
 To God, in his stern wrath why threatens he?
 But who am I that dare dispute with thee
 O God? Oh, of thine only worthy blood
 And my tears, make a heavenly Lethean¹ flood,
 And drown in it my sin's black memory.
 That thou remember them some claim as debt;
 I think it mercy if thou wilt forget.

5

10

1633

10 Apostrophe + Personification

Death, be not proud, though some have called thee
 Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so;
 For those whom thou think'st thou dost overthrow
 Die not, poor Death, nor yet canst thou kill me.
 From rest and sleep, which but thy pictures be,
 Much pleasure; then from thee much more must flow,
 And soonest our best men with thee do go,
 Rest of their bones, and soul's delivery.²
 Thou art slave to fate, chance, kings, and desperate men,
 And dost with poison, war, and sickness dwell,
 And poppy³ or charms can make us sleep as well
 And better than thy stroke; why swell'st thou then?
 One short sleep past, we wake eternally
 And death shall be no more; Death, thou shalt die.

paradox
metaphor

Synecdoche

person
to person paradox

polypt

metaphor paradox
1633

14

Batter my heart, three-personed God; for You
 As yet but knock, breathe, shine, and seek to mend;
 That I may rise and stand, o'erthrow me, and bend
 Your force to break, blow, burn, and make me new.
 I, like an usurped town, to another due,
 Labor to admit You, but O, to no end;
 Reason, Your viceroy in me, me should defend,
 But is captived, and proves weak or untrue.
 Yet dearly I love You, and would be loved fain,
 But am betrothed unto Your enemy.

5

10

9. The tree on which grew the apple eaten by Eve in the garden of Eden.

1. In classical mythology, the waters of the river Lethe caused instant forgetfulness.

2. I.e., our best men go with you to find rest for their bones and freedom ("delivery") for their souls.

3. Opium. "Why swell'st thou then?": why do you puff with pride?

Divorce me, untie or break that knot again;
 Take me to You, imprison me, for I,
 Except You enthrall me, never shall be free,
 Nor ever chaste, except You ravish me.

pas adox
 1633

18

Show me, dear Christ, Thy spouse so bright and clear.⁴
 What! is it she which on the other shore
 Goes richly painted? or which, robbed and tore,
 Laments and mourns in Germany and here?⁵
 Sleeps she a thousand, then peeps up one year?
 Is she self-truth, and errs? now new, now outwore?
 Doth she, and did she, and shall she evermore
 On one, on seven, or on no hill appear?⁶
 Dwells she with us, or like adventuring knights
 First travel⁷ we to seek, and then make love?
 Betray, kind husband, Thy spouse to our sights,
 And let mine amorous soul court Thy mild dove,
 Who is most true and pleasing to Thee then
 When she is embraced and open to most men.

5

10

1899

A Hymn to Christ, at the Author's Last Going into Germany⁸

In what torn ship soever I embark,
 That ship shall be my emblem of Thy ark;
 What sea soever swallow me, that flood
 Shall be to me an emblem of Thy blood;
 Though Thou with clouds of anger do disguise
 Thy face, yet through that mask I know those eyes,
 Which, though they turn away sometimes,
 They never will despise.

5

I sacrifice this island unto Thee,
 And all whom I loved there, and who loved me;
 When I have put our seas twixt them and me,
 Put Thou Thy seas betwixt my sins and Thee.
 As the tree's sap doth seek the root below
 In winter, in my winter now I go

10

4. "What are the marks of a true church?" was a deeply fought field of interdenominational debate in the 17th century. Few Anglican clergymen would have expressed an indecision as universal as Donne's in this sonnet. Its skepticism, and a sense that versifying did not beseech a clergyman, kept the sonnet out of all 17th-century editions.
 5. The Church of Rome is "she which goes richly painted on the other shore";

she is contrasted with the reformed churches "in Germany and here."

6. The Mount of Olives, the seven hills of Rome, and (perhaps) by Lake Geneva or in the town of Canterbury.

7. The 17th-century spelling, travaile, includes the idea of labor.

8. Donne went to Germany as chaplain to the Earl of Doncaster in 1619; the mission was a diplomatic one, to the King and Queen of Bohemia.

Hymn to God My God, in My Sickness · 1103

Where none but Thee, th^e eternal root
Of true love, I may know. 15

Nor Thou nor Thy religion dost control
The amorousness of an harmonious soul,
But Thou would'st have that love Thyself; as Thou
Art jealous, Lord, so I am jealous now; 20
Thou lov'st not, till from loving more,⁹ Thou free
My soul; whoever gives, takes liberty;
Oh, if Thou car'st not whom I love,
Alas, Thou lov'st not me.

Seal then this bill of my divorce to all 25
On whom those fainter beams of love did fall;
Marry those loves, which in youth scattered be
On fame, wit, hopes (false mistresses), to Thee.
Churches are best for prayer that have least light:
To see God only, I go out of sight; 30
And to 'scape stormy days, I choose
An everlasting night.

1633

Hymn to God My God, in My Sickness¹

Since I am coming to that holy room
Where, with Thy choir of saints for evermore,
I shall be made Thy music; as I come
I tune the instrument here at the door,
And what I must do then, think here before. 5

Whilst my physicians by their love are grown
Cosmographers, and I their map, who lie
Flat on this bed, that by them may be shown
That this is my southwest discovery²
Per fretum febris,³ by these straits to die, 10

I joy, that in these straits, I see my West;⁴
For, though their currents yield return to none,
What shall my West hurt me? As West and East
In all flat maps (and I am one) are one,
So death doth touch the resurrection. 15

Is the Pacific Sea my home? Or are
The Eastern riches? Is Jerusalem?
Anyan,⁵ and Magellan, and Gibraltar,

9. From loving elsewhere. Donne is playing with the idea, "To give me true love you must take away my freedom to love elsewhere."

1. Though Izaak Walton, Donne's pious biographer, assigns this poem to the last days of his life, it was probably written in December, 1623.

2. The Straits of Magellan, or something spiritual which is analogous to them.

3. I.e., through the straits of fever.

4. Where the sun sets, hence where life ends.

5. The Bering Straits.

All straits, and none but straits, are ways to them,
Whether where Japhet dwelt, or Cham; or Shem.⁶

20

We think that Paradise and Calvary,
Christ's cross, and Adam's tree, stood in one place;
Look, Lord, and find both Adams met in me;
As the first Adam's sweat surrounds my face,
May the last Adam's blood my soul embrace.

25

So, in his purple wrapped,⁷ receive me, Lord;
By these his thorns give me his other crown;
And, as to others' souls I preached Thy word,
Be this my text, my sermon to mine own;
Therefore that he may raise the Lord throws down.

30

1635

A Hymn to God the Father¹

Wilt Thou forgive that sin where I begun,
Which is my sin, though it were done before?
Wilt Thou forgive that sin through which I run,
And do run still, though still I do deplore?
When Thou hast done, Thou hast not done,
For I have more.

puns

Wilt Thou forgive that sin by which I have won
Others to sin? and made my sin their door?
Wilt Thou forgive that sin which I did shun
A year or two, but wallowed in a score?
When Thou hast done, Thou hast not done,
For I have more.

10

I have a sin of fear, that when I have spun
My last thread, I shall perish on the shore;
Swear by Thy self, that at my death Thy Son
Shall shine as he shines now and heretofore;
And, having done that, Thou hast done,
I fear no more.

15

pun

1633

6. Japhet, Cham (Ham), and Shem were the three sons of Noah by whom the world was repopulated after the Flood (Genesis x). The descendants of Japhet were thought to inhabit Europe, those of Ham Africa, and those of Shem Asia.

7. The purple of Christ is his blood;

also a royal garment.

1. Even in poetry of unquestioned seriousness, Donne's mind expressed itself naturally in puns; there are several in this short hymn, which Walton tells us was written during Donne's illness of 1623.

From Devotions upon Emergent Occasions¹

Meditation IV

Medicusque vocatur.

The physician is sent for.

It is too little to call man a little world; except God, man is a diminutive to nothing.² Man consists of more pieces, more parts, than the world; than the world doth, nay, than the world is. And if these pieces were extended and stretched out in man as they are in the world, man would be the giant and the world the dwarf; the world but the map, and the man the world. If all the veins in our bodies were extended to rivers, and all the sinews to veins of mines, and all the muscles that lie upon one another to hills, and all the bones to quarries of stones, and all the other pieces to the proportion of those which correspond to them in the world, the air would be too little for this orb of man to move in, the firmament would be but enough for this star. For as the whole world hath nothing to which something in man doth not answer, so hath man many pieces of which the whole world hath no representation. Enlarge this meditation upon this great world, man, so far as to consider the immensity of the creatures this world produces. Our creatures are our thoughts, creatures that are born giants, that reach from east to west, from earth to heaven, that do not only bestride all the sea and land, but span the sun and firmament at once: my thoughts reach all, comprehend all.

Inexplicable mystery! I their creator am in a close prison, in a sick bed, anywhere, and any one of my creatures, my thoughts, is with the sun, and beyond the sun, overtakes the sun, and overgoes the sun in one pace, one step, everywhere. And then as the other world produces serpents and vipers, malignant and venomous creatures, and worms and caterpillars, that endeavor to devour that world which produces them, and monsters compiled and complicated of divers parents and kinds, so this world, our selves, produces all these in us, producing diseases and sicknesses of all those sorts;

1. Donne's private devotions were written during an attack of illness in the winter of 1623. They describe in detail the stages of Donne's disease and recovery; each stage comprises a meditation on the human condition, an expostulation and debate with God, and a prayer to Him. The book was published almost immediately it was written, and to great effect—the blend of private feeling and public moralizing rendering it particularly accessible to 17th-century readers. And its eloquent periods have provided a title for at least one major modern novel (see Meditation XVII).

"Emergent" occasions are those which arise casually or unexpectedly.

Donne's Latin epigraphs are followed by his English translations, some of them very free ones indeed.

2. Donne's meditation is built on the Renaissance notion that man is a microcosm, a little world, analogous in every respect to the macrocosm, or big world, outside. But in playing with this notion, Donne paradoxically reverses it, arguing for a moment that man is a giant and the world his diminished representation.

venomous and infectious diseases, feeding and consuming diseases, and manifold and entangled diseases made up of many several ones. And can the other world name so many venomous, so many consuming, so many monstrous creatures, as we can diseases, of all these kinds? O miserable abundance, O beggarly riches! How much do we lack of having remedies for every disease when as yet we have not names for them?

But we have a Hercules against these giants, these monsters: that is the physician. He musters up all the resources of the other world to succor this, all nature to relieve man. We have the physician but we are not the physician. Here we shrink in our proportion, sink in our dignity in respect of very mean creatures who are physicians to themselves. The hart that is pursued and wounded, they say, knows an herb which, being eaten, throws off the arrow: a strange kind of vomit.³ The dog that pursues it, though he be subject to sickness, even proverbially knows his grass that recovers him. And it may be true that the druggier is as near to man as to other creatures; it may be that obvious and present simples, easy to be had, would cure him; but the apothecary is not so near him, nor the physician so near him, as they two are to other creatures. Man hath not that innate instinct to apply these natural medicines to his present danger, as those inferior creatures have. He is not his own apothecary, his own physician, as they are. Call back therefore thy meditation again, and bring it down. What's become of man's great extent and proportion, when himself shrinks himself and consumes himself to a handful of dust? What's become of his soaring thoughts, his compassing thoughts, when himself brings himself to the ignorance, to the thoughtlessness of the grave? His diseases are his own, but the physician is not; he hath them at home, but he must send for the physician.

Meditation XIV

Idque notant criticis medici evenisse diebus.

The physicians observe these accidents to have fallen upon the critical days.

I would not make man worse than he is, nor his condition more miserable than it is. But could I though I would? As a man cannot flatter God nor overpraise him, so a man cannot injure man nor undervalue him. Thus much must necessarily be presented to his remembrance, that those false happinesses which he hath in this world have their times and their seasons and their critical days; and they are judged and denominated according to the times when they befall us. What poor elements are our happinesses made of

3. The deer who knows by instinct how to cure his poisoned wound by eating of an herb which is naturally antithetical to poison recurs frequently in Renaissance literature; a major source was Pliny's Natural History VIII.41. "Simples": herbs; "druggier": druggist.

if time, time which we can scarce consider to be anything, be an essential part of our happiness! All things are done in some place; but if we consider place to be no more but the next hollow superficies of the air, alas! how thin and fluid a thing is air, and how thin a film is a superficies, and a superficies of air! All things are done in time too; but if we consider time to be but the measure of motion, and howsoever it may seem to have three stations, past, present, and future, yet the first and last of these are not (one is not now, and the other is not yet) and that which you call present is not now the same that it was when you began to call it so in this line (before you sound that word present or that monosyllable now, the present and the now is past). If this imaginary half-nothing, time, be of the essence of our happinesses, how can they be thought durable? Time is not so; how can they be thought to be? Time is not so; not so considered in any of the parts thereof. If we consider eternity, into that time never entered; eternity is not an everlasting flux of time, but time is a short parenthesis in a long period; and eternity had been the same as it is, though time had never been. If we consider, not eternity, but perpetuity; not that which had no time to begin in, but which shall outlive time and be, when time shall be no more, what a minute is the life of the durablest creature compared to that! and what a minute is man's life in respect of the sun's or of a tree! and yet how little of our life is occasion, opportunity to receive good in; and how little of that occasion do we apprehend and lay hold of! How busy and perplexed a cobweb is the happiness of man here, that must be made up with a watchfulness to lay hold upon occasion, which is but a little piece of that which is nothing, time! And yet the best things are nothing without that. Honors, pleasures, possessions presented to us out of time, in our decrepit and distasted⁴ and unapprehensive age, lose their office and lose their name; they are not honors to us that shall never appear nor come abroad into the eyes of the people to receive honor from them who give it; nor pleasures to us who have lost our sense to taste them; nor possessions to us who are departing from the possession of them. Youth is their critical day; that judges them, that denominates them, that inanimates and informs them, and makes them honors and pleasures and possessions; and when they come in an unapprehensive age, they come as a cordial when the bell rings out,⁵ as a pardon when the head is off. We rejoice in the comfort of fire, but does any man cleave to it at midsummer? We are glad of the freshness and coolness of a vault, but does any man keep his Christmas there? or are the pleasures of the spring acceptable in autumn? If happiness be in the season or

4. Having lost the sense of taste.

5. A "cordial" (med'ine) which arrives

when the parish bell is already tolling is a bit too late.

in the climate, how much happier then are birds than men, who can change the climate and accompany and enjoy the same season ever.

Meditation XVII

Nunc lento sonitu dicunt, morieris.

Now this bell tolling softly for another, says to me, Thou must die.

Perchance he for whom this bell tolls may be so ill as that he knows not it tolls for him; and perchance I may think myself so much better than I am, as that they who are about me and see my state may have caused it to toll for me, and I know not that. The church is catholic, universal, so are all her actions; all that she does belongs to all. When she baptizes a child, that action concerns me; for that child is thereby connected to that body which is my head too,⁶ and ingrafted into that body whereof I am a member. And when she buries a man, that action concerns me: all mankind is of one author and is one volume; when one man dies, one chapter is not torn out of the book, but translated⁷ into a better language; and every chapter must be so translated. God employs several translators; some pieces are translated by age, some by sickness, some by war, some by justice; but God's hand is in every translation, and his hand shall bind up all our scattered leaves again for that library where every book shall lie open to one another. As therefore the bell that rings to a sermon calls not upon the preacher only, but upon the congregation to come, so this bell calls us all; but how much more me, who am brought so near the door by this sickness. There was a contention as far as a suit⁸ (in which piety and dignity, religion and estimation,⁹ were mingled) which of the religious orders should ring to prayers first in the morning; and it was determined that they should ring first that rose earliest. If we understand aright the dignity of this bell that tolls for our evening prayer, we would be glad to make it ours by rising early, in that application, that it might be ours as well as his whose indeed it is. The bell doth toll for him that thinks it doth; and though it intermit again, yet from that minute that that occasion wrought upon him, he is united to God. Who casts not up his eye to the sun when it rises? but who takes off his eye from a comet when that breaks out? Who bends not his ear to any bell which upon any occasion rings? but who can remove it from that bell which is passing a piece of himself out of this world? No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main.¹ If a clod be washed away

6. I.e., the Christian church is the head of all men, as well as a body composed of its members.

7. Literally, "carried across"; hence, on the spiritual level, exalted from one sphere to another.

8. Controversy which went as far as a lawsuit.

9. Self-esteem.

1. Mainland.

by the sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a promontory were, as well as if a manor of thy friend's or of thine own were. Any man's death diminishes me because I am involved in mankind, and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee. Neither can we call this a begging of misery or a borrowing of misery, as though we were not miserable enough of ourselves but must fetch in more from the next house, in taking upon us the misery of our neighbors. Truly it were an excusable covetousness if we did; for affliction is a treasure, and scarce any man hath enough of it. No man hath affliction enough that is not matured and ripened by it and made fit for God by that affliction. If a man carry treasure in bullion, or in a wedge of gold, and have none coined into current money, his treasure will not defray him as he travels. Tribulation is treasure in the nature of it, but it is not current money in the use of it, except we get nearer and nearer our home, heaven, by it. Another man may be sick too, and sick to death, and this affliction may lie in his bowels as gold in a mine and be of no use to him; but this bell that tells me of his affliction digs out and applies that gold to me, if by this consideration of another's danger I take mine own into contemplation and so secure myself by making my recourse to my God, who is our only security.

1623

1624

From Sermon LXVI

[On the Weight of Eternal Glory]

All our life is a continual burden, yet we must not groan; a continual squeezing, yet we must not pant; and as in the tenderness of our childhood, we suffer and yet are whipped if we cry, so we are complained of if we complain, and made delinquents if we call the times ill. And that which adds weight to weight and multiplies the sadness of this consideration is this: that still the best men have had most laid upon them. As soon as I hear God say that he hath found "an upright man, that fears God and eschews evil," in the next lines I find a commission to Satan to bring in Sabeans and Chaldeans upon his cattle and servants, and fire and tempest upon his children, and loathsome diseases upon himself.¹ As soon as I hear God say that he hath found "a man according to his own heart," I see his sons ravish his daughters and then murder one another, and then rebel against the father and put him into straits for his life.² As soon as I hear God testify of Christ at his baptism, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased" I find that Son of his "led up by the Spirit to be tempted of the devil."³ And

1. This is the story of the Book of Job.

2. The story of David.

3. The temptation on the mount, Matthew iv.1-11.

after I hear God ratify the same testimony again, at his transfiguration ("This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased,"), I find that beloved Son of his deserted, abandoned, and given over to scribes, and Pharisees, and publicans, and Herodians,⁴ and priests, and soldiers, and people, and judges, and witnesses, and executioners; and he that was called the beloved Son of God and made partaker of the glory of heaven, in this world, in his transfiguration, is made now the sewer of all the corruption, of all the sins of this world, as no Son of God but a mere man, as no man but a contemptible worm. As though the greatest weakness in this world were man, and the greatest fault in man were to be good, man is more miserable than other creatures, and good men more miserable than any other men.

But then there is Pondus Glorise, an exceeding weight of eternal glory, that turns the scale; for as it makes all worldly prosperity as dung, so it makes all worldly adversity as feathers. And so it had need, for in the scale against it there are not only put temporal afflictions, but spiritual too; and to these two kinds we may accommodate those words, "He that falls upon this stone" (upon temporal afflictions) may be bruised, broken, "but he upon whom that stone falls" (spiritual afflictions) "is in danger to be ground to powder."⁵ And then the great and yet ordinary danger is that these spiritual afflictions grow out of temporal: murmuring and diffidence in God and obduration, out of worldly calamities; and so against nature, the fruit is greater and heavier than the tree, spiritual heavier than temporal afflictions.

* * *

Let me wither and wear out mine age in a discomfortable, in an unwholesome, in a penurious prison, and so pay my debts with my bones and recompense the wastefulness of my youth with the beggary of mine age; let me wither in a spittle⁶ under sharp and foul and infamous diseases, and so recompense the wantonness of my youth with that loathsomeness in mine age; yet if God withdraw not his spiritual blessings, his grace, his patience, if I can call my suffering his doing, my passion his action, all this that is temporal is but a caterpillar got into one corner of my garden, but a mildew fallen upon one acre of my corn; the body of all, the substance of all is safe as long as the soul is safe. But when I shall trust to that which we call a good spirit, and God shall deject and impoverish and evacuate that spirit, when I shall rely upon a moral constancy, and God shall shake, and enfeeble, and enervate, destroy and demolish that constancy, when I shall think to refresh myself in the serenity and sweet air of a good conscience, and God shall call up

4. Followers of Herod, listed among the enemies of Christ.

5. Matthew xxi.44. "Diffidence": mistrust, loss of faith.

6. Hospital.

the damps and vapors of hell itself and spread a cloud of diffidence and an impenetrable crust of desperation upon my conscience; when health shall fly from me and I shall lay hold upon riches to succor me and comfort me in my sickness, and riches shall fly from me, and I shall snatch after favor and good opinion to comfort me in my poverty; when even this good opinion shall leave me and calumnies and misinformations shall prevail against me; when I shall need peace because there is none but thou, O Lord, that should stand for me, and then shall find that all the wounds that I have, come from thy hand, all the arrows that stick in me, from thy quiver; when I shall see that because I have given myself to my corrupt nature, thou hast changed thine; and because I am all evil towards thee, therefore thou hast given over being good towards me: when it comes to this height, that the fever is not in the humors but in the spirits,⁷ that mine enemy is not an imaginary enemy, fortune, nor a transitory enemy, malice in great persons, but a real and an irresistible and an inexorable and an everlasting enemy, The Lord of Hosts himself, The Almighty God himself, the Almighty God himself only knows the weight of this affliction, and except he put in that Pondus Glorise, that exceeding weight of an eternal glory, with his own hand, into the other scale, we are weighed down, we are swallowed up, irreparably, irrevocably, irrecoverably, irremediably.

* * *

If you look upon this world in a map, you find two hemispheres, two half worlds. If you crush heaven into a map, you may find two hemispheres too, two half heavens; half will be joy, and half will be glory, for in these two (the joy of heaven and the glory of heaven) is all heaven often represented unto us. And as of those two hemispheres of the world, the first hath been known long before, but the other (that of America, which is the richer in treasure), God reserved for later discoveries; so though he reserve that hemisphere of heaven which is the glory thereof, to the resurrection, yet the other hemisphere, the joy of heaven, God opens to our discovery and delivers for our habitation even whilst we dwell in this world.

* * * First think, that as a man must have some land or else he cannot be in wardship, so a man must have some of the love of God or else he could not fall under God's correction; God would not give him his physic, God would not study his cure, if he cared not for him. And then think also, that if God afford thee the shadow of his wings, that is, consolation, respiration, refreshing, though not a present and plenary deliverance in thy afflictions, not to thank God is a murmuring, and not to rejoice in God's ways is an unthankfulness. Howling is the noise of hell, singing the voice of heaven; sadness the damp of hell, rejoicing the serenity of heaven. And he that hath not this joy here, lacks one of the best pieces of his evidence for the joys of heaven, and hath neglected or refused that earnest by which God uses to bind his bargain, that true joy in this world shall flow into the joy of heaven as a river flows into the sea; this joy shall not be put out in death and a new joy kindled in me in heaven; but as my soul, as soon as it is out of my body, is in heaven and does not stay for the possession of heaven nor for the fruition of the sight of God till it be ascended through air, and fire, and moon, and sun, and planets, and firmament, to that place which we conceive to be heaven, but without the thousandth part of a minute's stop, as soon as it issues, is in a glorious light, which is heaven (for all the way to heaven is heaven; and as those angels which came from heaven hither, bring heaven with them and are in heaven here, so that soul that goes to heaven meets heaven here; and as those angels do not divest heaven by coming, so these souls invest heaven, in their going). As my soul shall not go towards heaven but go by heaven to heaven, to the heaven of heavens, so the true joy of a good soul in this world is the very joy of heaven. * * *

7. I.e., not superficial but in the root and marrow of my existence.

1625

1640

BEN JONSON

(1572-1637)

1598: Every Man in his Humor, Jonson's first published play.

1606: Volpone

1616: Jonson appointed poet laureate; publishes his Works.

1618: Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue.

1630: Quarrel with Inigo Jones.

Ben Jonson did so many different things in the literary world of the early 17th century, and made use of so many different styles to do them, that he is very hard to see as a whole person. Actor, playwright, poet and poet laureate, scholar, critic, translator, man of letters, and head, for the first time in English, of a literary "school," the so-called "sons of Ben," he was a giant of a man. Yet we cannot easily take a perspective of him.

Jonson's life was tough and turbulent. After his father's early death, Ben was adopted in infancy by a bricklayer and educated by the great classical scholar and antiquarian William Camden, before necessity drove him to enter the army. In Flanders, where the Dutch with English help were warring against the Spaniards, he fought singlehanded with one of the enemy before the massed armies, and killed his man. Returning to England about 1595, he began to work as an actor and playwright but was drawn from one storm center to another. He killed a fellow-actor in a duel, and escaped the gallows only by pleading "benefit of clergy" (i.e., by proving he could read and write, which entitled him to plead before a more lenient court). He was jailed for insulting the Scottish nation at a time when King James was newly arrived from Scotland. He took furious part in an intricate set of literary wars with his fellow-playwrights. Having converted to Catholicism, he was the object of deep suspicion after the Gunpowder Plot of Guy Fawkes (1605), when the phobia against his religion reached its height. Yet he rode out all these troubles, growing mellow as he grew older, and in his latter years became the unofficial literary dictator of London, the king's pensioned poet, a favorite around the court, and the good friend of men like Shakespeare, Donne, Francis Beaumont, John Selden, Francis Bacon, dukes, diplomats, and distinguished folk generally. In addition, he engaged the affection of younger men (poets like Robert Herrick, Thomas Carew, and Sir John Suckling, speculative thinkers like Lord Falkland and Sir Kenelm Digby), who delighted to christen themselves "sons of Ben." Sons of Ben provided the nucleus of the entire "Cavalier school" of English poets.

The first of Jonson's great plays was Every Man in His Humor, in which Shakespeare acted a leading role. It was also the first of the so-called "comedies of humors," in which the prevailing eccentricities and ruling passions of men (i.e., their "humors") were exposed to satiric deflation. Though Jonson's classical tragedy Sejanus (1603) has not been much liked (it is gloomy in mood, static in action, and weighty with antiquarian lore), Volpone (1606) and The Alchemist (1610) are two supreme satiric comedies of the English stage. Both have been repeatedly "adapted" and "modernized," but even now the original texts are likely to seem more lively and vital than the versions. Meanwhile, starting in 1605, Jonson began writing for the court a series of masques—elaborate semi-theatrical displays involving spectacle, allegory, and compliment to the king or queen. Thus he became closely involved with the life of the court, a connection which was formalized in 1616, when he was appointed poet laureate with a substantial pension. In the same year, he published in a splendid volume his collected Works, a body of poetry to which he kept adding in the years before his death. Though his later plays were not very successful, he turned out many occasional poems, verse letters, translations, complimentary verses before other men's volumes—finding in all these different forms a grave, incisive pattern of formal speech through which the reverberations of his immense classical learning make themselves heard.

The bulk of Jonson's poetry falls, without undue strain, into five groups, based mostly on stylistic qualities. He wrote a number of poems of festive ceremony, poems which celebrate those qualities of ordered richness and dignified delight which represent his image of the good life. A poem like To Penshurst turns a physical building and its surrounding countryside into an emblem of modest yet noble opulence; the poem On Inviting a Friend to Supper is an imitation of Horace, yet its tonality is thoroughly English, and the "modest little supper" to which he invites his friend would scandalize a modern weight-watcher. Quite a different side of Jonson's talent is represented by his elegies and epitaphs; they are brief, full, simple poems, such as one could imagine being carved on a marble slab—direct, impersonal, inevitable. Allied to these are his compliments and tributes; often prefixed to his friends' books, but sometimes simple tributes of friendship and admiration, they summarize warmly yet judiciously a man's character and achievement. Jonson the pure poet finds expression in his songs, sometimes from the plays and masques but sometimes standing alone, often intended for musical accompaniment, but generally beautifully melodic, even without it. Finally, Jonson wrote (in imitation of the Roman poet Martial) a great number of epigrams, sometimes lewd, sometimes nasty, occasionally funny. We have lost the taste for this sort of thing today, but epigrams were a vital Renaissance genre, and Jonson's profane epigrams can usefully be compared to Crashaw's sacred ones.

Jonson took his calling as a poet with the greatest seriousness, asserting the dignity of the profession with (sometimes) a kind of pedantry and emphasis that contrasts with Shakespeare's extraordinary anonymity. When Jonson published his collected works—The Works of Benjamin Jonson—in 1616, it was the first time an English author had been so presumptuous. Yet he succeeded in making the fact of professional authorship somehow respectable; an author like Dryden, who owed so much to Jonson on stylistic grounds, owed him a social debt as well. His career stood on foundations which Ben, with his pedantry and his pugnacity, was the first to lay down.

Volpone Though Jonson was reputed a slow composer, Volpone was created in little more than a month, and performed by the King's Men in the spring of 1606. It was a great success, and despite occasional lapses has held the stage ever since. (A recent Broadway adaptation, under the title of Sly Fox, transferred the action to San Francisco in the 1890's, but retained most of the original play's outlines; an adaptation for the French cinema, made by Stefan Zweig and featuring Harry Baur and Louis Jouvet, is by now technically old-fashioned but still dramatically superb.) The text was printed separately in a quarto of 1607 and reprinted with a few minor changes with the rest of Jonson's Works in the Folio of 1616 as well as the posthumous Folio of 1640. Our modernized text includes a number of stage directions first introduced by William Gifford in his edition of 1816, and a few more added by the present editor for the better understanding of the action.

Jonson's central topic—sordid greed deluded by ruthless guile—dictated the tonality of his play, which is cruelly funny. Classical satire, in the form of isolated passages in Horace, Juvenal, and Lucian, provided him with hints toward the basic action of legacy-chasing, and the reputation of Venice as a worldly, commercial, cosmopolitan center served to darken his comedy. But his own fondness for unscrupulous rascals, combined with deep indignation at the spreading prostitution of life to commercial interest, provided the real dynamic of the play. Because they prey on loathsome forms of life, Jonson's sharks are admired quite as much as they are despised; the murky social waters through which they cruise are not so ambiguous.

The play makes use of many traditional elements. Surely the medieval legend of Reynard the Fox contributed to the pervasive animal imagery; and figures like Mosca the wily parasite, old Corbaccio the miser, Voltore the shyster lawyer, and voluble Lady Would-Be all have definite analogues in Greek and Latin comedy. Volpone's mode of cloaking serious moral points in voluminous comic exaggeration was practiced by many previous Renaissance authors, such as Erasmus (The Praise of Folly) and Rabelais (Gargantua and Pantagruel). Yet nowhere does the author triumph more splendidly over his materials than in Volpone: the play is instinct with a spirit of mischief and fun, a delight in the con game for its own sake, that renders all talk of sources and traditions very secondary indeed.

"The love of money is the root of all evil"—it had been the steady theme of preachers and teachers for thousands of years. But for Jonson, as for Shakespeare and Donne and for Thomas More before them all, the commercializing of life that began with the rise of a money economy and the development of an ethic dominated by self-interest, was particularly disturbing. Like his fellows, Jonson protested in Volpone the inhumanity, not just of greedy men, but of greedy laws—laws made by the greedy to protect the acquisitions of the greedy. In many ways the state of Venice is shown, in Volpone, to be a worse criminal than the criminals it prosecutes; and Jonson's vigorous social morality would not have rejected the implication that what Venice is in the play, England is about to become, in the city of London, the year of our lord 1606.

Volpone

OR THE FOX

*The Persons of the Play*¹

VOLPONE, a magnifico	fox
MOSCA, his parasite	fly
VOLTORE, an advocate	vulture
CORBACCIO, an old gentleman	raven
CORVINO, a merchant	crow
BONARIO, son to Corbaccio	good-natured
SIR POLITIC WOULD-BE, a knight
PEREGRINE, a gentleman traveller	falcon/pilgrim
NANO, a dwarf	dwarf
CASTRONE, an eunuch	gelding

1. Most of the names are Italian, and in that language many of them signify animals. Volpone: "fox." "Magnifico" is not a formal title; it simply means "gentleman." Mosca: "fly." The figure of the parasite implies scavenging, as well as fawning dependence. The client-patron relationship in Rome fostered parasitical dependents, and Jonson saw something similar, not only around the English court, but around the big money-men of London city. Voltore: "vulture." Corbaccio: "raven." Corvino: "crow." Bonario: "good-natured." Sir Politic Would-be: in the 17th century the word "politic" carried overtones of devious and subtle calculation. His name spells out, almost too explicitly, Sir Politic's character; and in its abbreviation ("Pol") suggests further the parrot he is. Peregrine: in English, "a falcon," but the world also associates with "pilgrim," i.e., "traveller." Nano: "dwarf." Castrone: "gelding." Androgyno: from the Greek, "man-woman," i.e., "hermaphrodite." Grege: from the Latin, "mob" or "crowd." Commendatori: a not very distinguished title of honor: Jonson assigns them a function akin to sergeants or marshals of a court. Mercatori: "merchants." Avocatori: properly, in Italian, "prosecutors"; Jonson makes them judges. Notario: "recorder." Celia: literally, "heavenly."

ANDROGYNO, an hermaphrodite

GREGE (or Mob)

COMMENDATORI, *officers of justice*MERCATORI, *three merchants*AVOCATORI, *four magistrates*NOTARIO, the register

LADY WOULD-BE, SIR POLITIC'S Wife

CELIA, CORVINO'S Wife *heavenly*SERVITORI, *Servants, two WAITING-WOMEN, &c.*THE SCENE, *VeniceThe Argument*²

Volpone, childless, rich, feigns sick, despairs,
Offers his state to hopes of several heirs,
Lies languishing; his parasite receives
Presents of all, assures, deludes; then weaves
Other cross plots, which ope themselves, are told.
New tricks for safety are sought; they thrive: when bold,
*Each tempts the other again, and all are sold.*³

Prologue

Now, luck yet send us, and a little wit
 Will serve to make our play hit;
 According to the palates of the season
 Here is rhyme, not empty of reason.
 This we were bid to credit from our poet,
 Whose true scope, if you would know it,
 In all his poems still hath been this measure,
 To mix profit with your pleasure;⁴
 And not as some, whose throats their envy failing,
 Cry hoarsely, All he writes is railing;⁵
 And when his plays come forth, think they can flout them,
 With saying, he was a year about them.
 To these there needs no lie,⁶ but this his creature,
 Which was two months since no feature;
 And though he dares give them five lives to mend it,
 'Tis known, five weeks fully penned it,
 From his own hand, without a co-adjutor,
 Novice, journey-man,⁷ or tutor.
 Yet thus much I can give you as a token
 Of his play's worth, no eggs are broken,

2. A capsule summary of the plot.

3. Deceived.

4. That the task of the poet is to mix profit with pleasure was an idea dating back to Horace's Art of Poetry, lines 343-44.

5. Abuse, invective.

6. "To give the lie" was to deny flatly; we would use here the word "denial."

7. Piece-worker, apprentice, or assistant.

Nor quaking custards with fierce teeth affrighted,⁸
 Wherewith your rout⁹ are so delighted;
 Nor haies he in a gull,¹ old ends reciting,
 To stop gaps in his loose writing;
 With such a deal of monstrous and forced action, 25
 As might make Bedlam² a faction:
 Nor made he his play for jests stolen from each table,
 But makes jests to fit his fable;
 And so presents quick comedy refined,
 As best critics have designed; 30
 The laws of time, place, persons he observeth,³
 From no needful rule he swerveth.
 All gall and copperas from his ink he draineth,
 Only a little salt remaineth,⁴
 Wherewith he'll rub your cheeks, till, red with laughter, 35
 They shall look fresh a week after.

Act I

SCENE 1. A Room in VOLPONE'S House.

[Enter VOLPONE and MOSCA.]

VOLPONE. Good morning to the day; and next, my gold!
 Open the shrine,¹ that I may see my saint.

[MOSCA withdraws the curtain, and discovers piles of gold, plate, jewels, &c.]

Hail the world's soul, and mine! more glad than is
 The teeming earth to see the longed-for sun
 Peep through the horns of the celestial ram,² 5
 Am I, to view thy splendor darkening his;
 That lying here, amongst my other hoards,
 Show'st like a flame by night, or like the day
 Struck out of chaos, when all darkness fled

8. Comic routines—thrown eggs or custard pies—which had popular success on the low Elizabethan stage. A giant custard pie was also served at city feasts inaugurating the Lord Mayor; sometimes an attendant fool jumped into it.

9. Mob, common herd.

1. Buffoon. Elizabethans were fond of wise saws and ancient adages, and often put characters into plays who recited them.

2. Bethlehem Hospital, the madhouse.

3. The so-called Aristotelian unities, actually imposed as prescripts by the Renaissance critics Castelvetro and Scaliger, placed limits of time and place on a dramatic action; the limitation on persons was less strict.

4. Gall and copperas (i.e., green vitriol) are traditional ingredients of ink: both are corrosive and bitter to the taste. Salt, though not an ingredient of ink, is a classical metaphor for wit, that which gives flavor to speech or writing.

1. Though there was no proscenium curtain in the Elizabethan theater, such as rises on a modern play, there was a small curtained inner area, and that is what Mosca unveils. By "the world's soul and mine" Volpone means the soul of the universe and his own immortal essence, both identified with gold.

2. The sun peeps through the horns of the constellation "Ram" in the zodiac about the middle of April; cf. Chaucer, at the opening of the Canterbury Tales (lines 5-8): "When Zephyrus eek with his sweete breeth / Inspired hath in every holt and heeth / The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne / Hath in the Ram his halve cours yronne."

- Unto the center. O thou son of Sol,³ 10
 But brighter than thy father, let me kiss,
 With adoration, thee, and every relic
 Of sacred treasure in this blessed room.
 Well did wise poets, by thy glorious name,
 Title that age which they would have the best;⁴ 15
 Thou being the best of things, and far transcending
 All style of joy, in children, parents, friends,
 Or any other waking dream on earth.
 Thy looks when they to Venus did ascribe,
 They should have given her twenty thousand Cupids;⁵ 20
 Such are thy beauties and our loves! Dear saint,
 Riches, the dumb god, that givest all men tongues,
 That canst do nought, and yet mak'st men do all things;
 The price of souls; even hell, with thee to boot,
 Is made worth heaven. Thou art virtue, fame, 25
 Honor and all things else. Who can get thee,
 He shall be noble, valiant, honest, wise—
 MOSCA. And what he will, sir. Riches are in fortune
 A greater good than wisdom is in nature.
 VOLPONE. True, my beloved Mosca. Yet I glory 30
 More in the cunning purchase⁶ of my wealth
 Than in the glad possession, since I gain
 No common way; I use no trade, no venture;
 I wound no earth with plough-shares, fat no beasts
 To feed the shambles; have no mills for iron, 35
 Oil, corn, or men, to grind them into powder;⁷
 I blow no subtle glass, expose no ships
 To threat'nings of the furrow-facéd sea;
 I turn no moneys⁸ in the public bank,
 Nor usure private. 40
 MOSCA. No, sir, nor devour
 Soft prodigals. You shall have some will swallow
 A melting heir as glibly as your Dutch
 Will pills of butter, and ne'er purge⁹ for it;

3. The circle of a gold coin is compared to the created cosmos, i.e., the world with sun, moon, and stars, created by God in Genesis i. When the sun illumined the outer universe, darkness "fled to the center," i.e., to hell, underground. Gold is said to be "the son of Sol" (the sun) because in Renaissance lore, the fertilizing rays of the sun, penetrating the ground, were supposed responsible for developing the "seeds of gold" naturally found there.
 4. The "age of gold."

5. Lines 16–20 are translated from a fragment of Euripides; Seneca tells us that when they were pronounced on-stage, the audience was so indignant that it would allow the play to continue only after Euripides provided assurance that the speakers would be badly punished in the course of the play. A traditional epithet of Venus is

"golden"; but Volpone is not satisfied with her minting a single golden boy; he wants a lot of them.

6. I.e., acquisition.

7. As Jonson wrote, household industries were just starting to be converted, in a few places, to factory industries run by water power. Glass was a Venetian specialty, in Jonson's day as now, but in England it was just starting to be used for glazing.

8. I.e., take no interest. Banking and money-lending were more important in Venice, where long voyages were common mercantile practice, than in England.

9. Suffer indigestion. Many jokes were made in the 17th century on the Dutch appetite for butter. Loan-sharks swallowed up heirs by lending them money at exorbitant rates against their future inheritance.

Tear forth the fathers of poor families
 Out of their beds, and coffin them alive 45
 In some kind clasping prison, where their bones
 May be forth-coming, when the flesh is rotten.
 But your sweet nature doth abhor these courses;
 You loathe the widow's or the orphan's tears
 Should wash your pavements, or their piteous cries 50
 Ring in your roofs, and beat the air for vengeance.

VOLPONE. Right, Mosca; I do loathe it.

MOSCA. And besides, sir,
 You are not like the thresher that doth stand
 With a huge flail, watching a heap of corn,
 And, hungry, dares not taste the smallest grain, 55
 But feeds on mallows, and such bitter herbs;
 Nor like the merchant, who hath filled his vaults
 With Romagnia, and rich Candian wines,
 Yet drinks the lees of Lombard's vinegar.¹
 You will lie not in straw, whilst moths and worms 60
 Feed on your sumptuous hangings and soft beds.
 You know the use of riches, and dare give now
 From that bright heap, to me, your poor observer,
 Or to your dwarf, or your hermaphrodite,
 Your eunuch, or what other household trifle 65
 Your pleasure allows maintenance.

VOLPONE. Hold thee, Mosca, [Gives him money.]
 Take of my hand; thou strik'st on truth in all,
 And they are envious term thee parasite.
 Call forth my dwarf, my eunuch, and my fool,
 And let them make me sport. [Exit MOSCA.] What should I 70
 do,

But cocker up² my genius, and live free
 To all delights my fortune calls me to?
 I have no wife, no parent, child, ally,
 To give my substance to, but whom I make
 Must be my heir; and this makes men observe me. 75
 This draws new clients daily to my house,
 Women and men of every sex and age,
 That bring me presents, send me plate, coin, jewels,
 With hope that when I die (which they expect
 Each greedy minute) it shall then return 80
 Ten-fold upon them; whilst some, covetous
 Above the rest, seek to engross me whole,³
 And counter-work the one unto the other,
 Contend in gifts, as they would seem in love.
 All which I suffer, playing with their hopes, 85

1. Romagnia was a sweet wine from Greece; Candian is wine from Crete (Candia). During the Renaissance good wine was thought to come from the eastern Mediterranean, or else from Spain (sack and canary). French and Italian wines ("Lombard's vinegar") were not much appreciated, and the "lees" (dregs) were of course the worst part of any bottle.

2. Pamper, indulge.

3. An engrosser bought up an entire crop of grain, held it for hard times, then sold it at exorbitant prices.

And am content to coin them into profit,
 And look upon their kindness, and take more,
 And look on that; still bearing them in hand,
 Letting the cherry knock against their lips,
 And draw it by their mouths, and back again.⁴—How now! 90

SCENE 2

[Enter MOSCA with NANO, ANDROGYNO, and CASTRONE.]

NANO. Now, room for fresh gamesters, who do will you to know,
 They do bring you neither play nor university show;
 And therefore do entreat you, that whatsoever they rehearse,
 May not fare a whit the worse, for the false pace of the verse.⁵

If you wonder at this, you will wonder more ere we pass, 5
 For know, here⁶ is enclosed the soul of Pythagoras,
 That juggler divine, as hereafter shall follow;

Which soul, fast and loose, sir, came first from Apollo,
 And was breathed into Æthalides,⁷ Mercurius his son,
 Where it had the gift to remember all that ever was done. 10

From thence it fled forth, and made quick transmigration
 To goldy-locked Euphorbus,⁸ who was killed in good fashion,
 At the siege of old Troy, by the cuckold of Sparta.

Hermotimus was next (I find it in my charta)⁹
 To whom it did pass, where no sooner it was missing, 15
 But with one Pyrrhus of Delos it learned to go a fishing;
 And thence did it enter the sophist of Greece.

From Pythagore, she went into a beautiful piece,
 Hight Aspasia, the meretrix;¹ and the next toss of her
 Was again of a whore, she became a philosopher, 20

Crates the cynic,² as itself doth relate it:
 Since kings, knights, and beggars, knaves, lords, and fools gat
 it,

Besides ox and ass, camel, mule, goat, and brock,³
 In all which it hath spoke, as in the cobbler's cock.
 But I come not here to discourse of that matter, 25

4. "Chop-cherry" is a country game in which a cherry hung from a string is dangled before a player who tries to catch it with his teeth.

5. This little interlude tells us something about the tastes of the man for whom it is performed. The loose, jog-trot meter that the characters recite is reminiscent of the vices in the old morality plays.

6. He points at Androgynio. The Greek philosopher Pythagoras put forward the doctrine of transmigration of souls, and fantastic lineages were a frequent comic exercise in the Renaissance. Nano's comic story is copied from the life of Pythagoras, by Diogenes Laertius.

7. Herald of the Argonauts.

8. Trojan hero, killed by Menelaus, "the cuckold of Sparta"; Pythagoras specifically claimed to have been Euphorbus, and to recall the event.

9. Hermotimus is indeed mentioned in Nano's "charta," i.e., the text of Diogenes Laertius, but hardly anywhere else. Pyrrhus of Delos is an equally obscure figure, a fisherman mentioned only in Diogenes. The "sophist of Greece" is Pythagoras himself.

1. Whore; but Aspasia was simply the mistress of Pericles.

2. Crates was a philosopher of the Cynic school, a follower of Diogenes who professed a particularly bitter brand of scepticism.

3. Badger. Lucian's comic dialogue, "Gallus, or the Cock," which reproduces much of this material about Pythagoras, is a dialogue between a cobbler and a chicken.

Or his one, two, or three, or his great oath, BY QUATER!
His musics, his trigon, his golden thigh,⁴

Or his telling how elements shift; but I
Would ask, how of late thou hast suffered translation,
And shifted thy coat in these days of reformation. 30

ANDROGYNO. Like one of the reformed, a fool, as you see,
Counting all old doctrine heresy.

NANO. But not on thine own forbid meats hast thou ventured?

AND. On fish, when first a Carthusian I entered.⁵

NANO. Why, then thy dogmatical silence hath left thee? 35

AND. Of that an obstreperous lawyer bereft me.⁶

NANO. O wonderful change, when sir lawyer forsook thee!

For Pythagore's sake, what body then took thee?

ANDROGYNO. A good dull mule.

NANO. And how! by that means

Thou wert brought to allow of the eating of beans?⁷ 40

ANDROGYNO. Yes.

NANO. But from the mule into whom didst thou pass?

ANDROGYNO. Into a very strange beast, by some writers called an ass;

By others, a precise, pure, illuminate brother,⁸

Of those devour flesh, and sometimes one another;
And will drop you forth a libel, or a sanctified lie, 45

Betwixt every spoonful of a nativity-pie.⁹

NANO. Now quit thee, for heaven, of that profanation,

And gently report thy next transmigration.

ANDROGYNO. To the same that I am.

NANO. A creature of delight,

And, what is more than a fool, an hermaphrodite! 50

Now, prithee, sweet soul, in all thy variation,

Which body wouldst thou choose, to keep up thy station?

ANDROGYNO. Troth, this I am in, even here would I tarry.

NANO. Cause here the delight of each sex thou canst vary?

ANDROGYNO. Alas, those pleasures be stale and forsaken; 55

No, 'tis your fool wherewith I am so taken,

The only one creature that I can call blessed;¹

For all other form I have proved most distressed.

4. Pythagorean theories about music and numerology, the Pythagorean theorem about right triangles, and the myth that Pythagoras had a golden thigh are glanced at here. A trigon is a triangle; the oath "by Quater" (four) is reported in Plutarch, On the Sayings of the Philosophers.

5. As a Carthusian monk (of a particularly strict sect), he learned to eat fish, which as a Pythagorean was forbidden to him.

6. Having taken a vow of silence as a Carthusian, he became a lawyer and learned to blabber.

7. Pythagoras forbade the eating of beans. All these prohibitions and special observances were supposed to have occult or mystical meaning.

8. All these adjectives would be understood as pointing at the Puritans, for whom Jonson had a standing aversion.

9. The Puritans did not like the old word "Christmas" because it included the "idolatrous" word "mass," so they began using the neutral word "Nativity," which Jonson here derides.

1. Jonson is drawing here on one of the wellsprings of Renaissance thought, Erasmus's mock-oration, The Praise of Folly.

NANO. Spoke true, as thou wert in Pythagoras still.

This learned opinion we celebrate will,
Fellow eunuch, as behooves us, with all our wit and art,
To dignify that whereof ourselves are so great and special a part. 60

VOLPONE. Now, very, very pretty! Mosca, this Was thy invention?

MOSCA. If it please my patron,

Not else. 65

VOLPONE. It doth, good Mosca.

MOSCA. Then it was, sir.

[NANO and CASTRONE sing.²]

Fools, they are the only nation
Worth men's envy or admiration;
Free from care or sorrow-taking,
Selves and others merry making,
All they speak or do is sterling. 70
Your fool he is your great man's darling,
And your ladies' sport and pleasure;
Tongue and bauble are his treasure.
E'en his face begetteth laughter,
And he speaks truth free from slaughter; 75
He's the grace of every feast,
And sometimes the chiefest guest;
Hath his trencher³ and his stool.
When wit waits upon the fool,
O, who would not be 80

He, he, he? [Knocking without.]

VOLPONE. Who's that? Away! [Exeunt NANO and CASTRONE.]

Look, Mosca.

MOSCA. Fool, begone! [Exit ANDROGYNO.] 'Tis signor Voltore, the advocate;

I know him by his knock.

VOLPONE. Fetch me my gown,
 My furs, and night-caps; say, my couch is changing, 85
 And let him entertain himself awhile
 Without i' the gallery. [Exit MOSCA.] Now, now my clients
 Begin their visitation! Vulture, kite,
 Raven, and gor-crow, all my birds of prey,⁴
 That think me turning carcass, now they come; 90
 I am not for them yet.

[Re-enter MOSCA, with the gown, &c.]

How now? The news?

MOSCA. A piece of plate,⁵ sir.

VOLPONE. Of what bigness?

2. The song is a patchwork of passages from Erasmus.

3. Dish.

4. Volpone foresees his visitors precisely in the order they come: Lady Politic is the kite, Corvino the gor-crow ("gor": filth). They are not, however, birds of prey, but all carrion-eaters.

5. A solid silver platter. In those days, when banks were uncertain and display important, families often put much of their wealth in massive silver dinner-ware.

- MOSCA. Huge,
Massy, and antique, with your name inscribed,
And arms engraven.
- VOLPONE. Good! and not a fox
Stretched on the earth, with fine delusive sleights 95
Mocking a gaping crow?⁶ ha, Mosca!
- MOSCA. Sharp, sir.
- VOLPONE. Give me my furs. [Puts on his sick dress.]
Why dost thou laugh so, man?
- MOSCA. I cannot choose, sir, when I apprehend
What thoughts he has without now, as he walks:—
That this might be the last gift he should give; 100
That this would fetch you; if you died to-day,
And gave him all, what he should be to morrow;
What large return would come of all his ventures;
How he should worshipped be, and revered;
Ride with his furs and foot-cloths;⁷ waited on 105
By herds of fools and clients; have clear way
Made for his mule, as lettered as himself;
Be called the great and learned advocate:
And then concludes, there's nought impossible.
- VOLPONE. Yes, to be learned, Mosca. 110
- MOSCA. O, no; rich
Implies it. Hood an ass with revered purple,
So you can hide his two ambitious ears,
And he shall pass for a cathedral doctor.⁸
- VOLPONE. My caps, my caps, good Mosca. Fetch him in.
- MOSCA. Stay, sir; your ointment for your eyes. 115
- VOLPONE. That's true;
Dispatch, dispatch.⁹ I long to have possession
Of my new present.
- MOSCA. That, and thousands more,
I hope to see you lord of.
- VOLPONE. Thanks, kind Mosca.
- MOSCA. And that, when I am lost in blended dust,
And hundred such as I am, in succession— 120
- VOLPONE. Nay, that were too much, Mosca.
- MOSCA. You shall live,
Still, to delude these harpies.
- VOLPONE. Loving Mosca!
'Tis well. My pillow now, and let him enter. [Exit MOSCA.]

6. Volpone imagines an allegorical device, taken from one of Aesop's fables, engraved on the piece of plate. In essence, the story tells how the fox flattered the crow, sitting safely in a treetop with a piece of cheese, into trying to sing. When the foolish bird opened its mouth, the cheese fell to the ground for the fox to devour.

7. Ornate tapestries, laid upon the beast, not his rider; the furs would be for the lawyer.

8. The power of money to make the stupid wise, the ugly beautiful, and, in general, black white had been a satiric commonplace since antiquity. "Cathedral doctor": a doctor of theology (with the implication that he's not only the most pompous but the most stupid of the lot).

9. Hurry.

Now, my feigned cough, my phthisic, and my gout,
 My apoplexy, palsy, and catarrhs,
 Help, with your forced functions, this my posture,
 Wherein, this three year, I have milked their hopes.
 He comes; I hear him—Uh! [coughing] uh! uh! uh! O—

125

SCENE 3

[Enter MOSCA, introducing VOLTORE with a piece of plate.]

MOSCA. You still are what you were, sir. Only you,
 Of all the rest, are he commands his love,
 And you do wisely to preserve it thus,
 With early visitation, and kind notes
 Of your good meaning to him, which, I know,
 Cannot but come most grateful. Patron! sir!
 Here's signor Voltore is come—

5

VOLPONE. [faintly] What say you?

MOSCA. Sir, signor Voltore is come this morning
 To visit you.

VOLPONE. I thank him.

MOSCA. And hath brought
 A piece of antique plate, bought of St. Mark,¹
 With which he here presents you.

10

VOLPONE. He is welcome.

Pray him to come more often.

MOSCA. Yes.

VOLTORE. What says he?

MOSCA. He thanks you, and desires you see him often.

VOLPONE. Mosca.

MOSCA. My patron!

VOLPONE. Bring him near, where is he?

I long to feel his hand.

15

MOSCA. The plate is here, sir.

VOLTORE. How fare you, sir?

VOLPONE. I thank you, signor Voltore;

Where is the plate? mine eyes are bad.

VOLTORE. [putting it into his hands] I'm sorry,

To see you still thus weak.

MOSCA. [aside] That he's not weaker.

VOLPONE. You are too munificent.

VOLTORE. No, sir; would to heaven,

I could as well give health to you, as that plate!

20

VOLPONE. You give, sir, what you can; I thank you. Your love

Hath taste in this, and shall not be unanswered;

I pray you see me often.

VOLTORE. Yes, I shall, sir.

VOLPONE. Be not far from me.

MOSCA. Do you observe that, sir?

1. I.e., bought in Saint Mark's square.

VOLPONE. Hearken unto me still; it will concern you. 25
 MOSCA. You are a happy man, sir; know your good.
 VOLPONE. I cannot now last long—
 MOSCA. You are his heir, sir.
 VOLTRE. Am I?
 VOLPONE. I feel me going; Uh! uh! uh! uh!
 I'm sailing to my port, Uh! uh! uh! uh!
 And I am glad I am so near my haven. 30
 MOSCA. Alas, kind gentleman! Well, we must all go—
 VOLTRE. But, Mosca—
 MOSCA. Age will conquer.
 VOLTRE. 'Pray thee, hear me:
 Am I inscribed his heir for certain?
 MOSCA. Are you?
 I do beseech you, sir, you will vouchsafe
 To write me in your family.² All my hopes 35
 Depend upon your worship. I am lost,
 Except the rising sun do shine on me.
 VOLTRE. It shall both shine, and warm thee, Mosca.
 MOSCA. Sir,
 I am a man, that hath not done your love
 All the worst offices.³ Here I wear your keys, 40
 See all your coffers and your caskets locked,
 Keep the poor inventory of your jewels,
 Your plate and moneys; am your steward, sir,
 Husband⁴ your goods here.
 VOLTRE. But am I sole heir?
 MOSCA. Without a partner, sir; confirmed this morning. 45
 The wax is warm yet, and the ink scarce dry
 Upon the parchment.
 VOLTRE. Happy, happy, me!
 By what good chance, sweet Mosca?
 MOSCA. Your desert, sir;
 I know no second cause.
 VOLTRE. Thy modesty
 Is loath to know it; well, we shall requite it. 50
 MOSCA. He ever liked your course, sir; that first took him.
 I oft have heard him say, how he admired
 Men of your large profession, that could speak
 To every cause, and things mere contraries,
 Till they were hoarse again, yet all be law; 55
 That, with most quick agility, could turn,
 And return; make knots, and undo them;
 Give forked counsel;⁵ take provoking gold
 On either hand, and put it up. These men,

2. I.e., inscribe me on the list of your servants.

3. Services.

4. Safeguard.

5. Ambiguous, ambivalent advice. This ironic praise of lawyers is probably from Cornelius Agrippa's book influential On the uncertainty and vanity of the sciences and arts (1531).

He knew, would thrive with their humility. 60
 And, for his part, he thought he should be blessed
 To have his heir of such a suffering spirit,
 So wise, so grave, of so perplexed a tongue,
 And loud withal, that would not wag, nor scarce
 Lie still, without a fee; when every word 65
 Your worship but lets fall, is a sequin!—⁶

[Knocking without.]

Who's that? one knocks; I would not have you seen, sir.
 And yet—pretend you came, and went in haste;
 I'll fashion an excuse—and, gentle sir,
 When you do come to swim in golden lard, 70
 Up to the arms in honey, that your chin
 Is born up stiff, with fatness of the flood,
 Think on your vassal; but remember me:
 I have not been your worst of clients.

VOLTRE.

Mosca—

MOSCA. When will you have your inventory brought, sir? 75

Or see a copy of the will? [Knocking again.] Anon!⁷

I'll bring them to you, sir. Away, be gone;

Put business in your face. [Exit VOLTRE.]

VOLPONE. [springing up] Excellent Mosca!

Come hither, let me kiss thee.

MOSCA.

Keep you still, sir.

Here is Corbaccio.

80

VOLPONE.

Set the plate away.

The vulture's gone, and the old raven's come.

SCENE 4

MOSCA. Betake you to your silence and your sleep.

[Puts the plate away.] Stand there and multiply. Now shall we see

A wretch who is indeed more impotent

Than this can feign to be; yet hopes to hop

Over his grave. [Enter CORBACCIO.] Signor Corbaccio! 5

You're very welcome, sir.

CORBACCIO.

How does your patron?

MOSCA. Troth, as he did, sir; no amends.

CORBACCIO.

What! mends he?

MOSCA. No, sir, he's rather worse.

CORBACCIO.

That's well. Where is he?

MOSCA. Upon his couch, sir, newly fallen asleep.

CORBACCIO. Does he sleep well? 10

MOSCA.

No wink, sir, all this night.

Nor yesterday; but slumbers.⁸

6. Zecchino, a gold coin.

7. Said in response to a sharp rap at the door; a modern Mosca would say, "Coming!" See the game played by Prince Hal and Poins with a waiter who says nothing but "Anon!" in 1 Henry IV II.iv.

8. Cat-naps.

CORBACCIO. Good! he should take
Some counsel of physicians. I have brought him
An opiate here, from mine own doctor.

MOSCA. He will not hear of drugs.

CORBACCIO. Why? I myself
Stood by while it was made, saw all the ingredients,
And know it cannot but most gently work.
My life for his, 'tis but to make him sleep.

15

VOLPONE. [aside] Ay, his last sleep, if he would take it.

MOSCA.

Sir,

He has no faith in physic.

CORBACCIO.

Say you, say you?

MOSCA. He has no faith in physic. He does think 20

Most of your doctors are the greater danger,
And worse disease, t'escape. I often have Heard him protest, that your physician
Should never be his heir.

CORBACCIO.

Not I his heir?

MOSCA. Not your physician, sir.

25

CORBACCIO.

O, no, no, no,

I do not mean it.

MOSCA.

No, sir, nor their fees

He cannot brook; he says, they flay a man,
Before they kill him.

CORBACCIO.

Right, I do conceive you.

MOSCA. And then they do it by experiment;

30

For which the law not only doth absolve them,
But gives them great reward; and he is loath
To hire his death, so.

CORBACCIO.

It is true, they kill

With as much license as a judge.

MOSCA.

Nay, more;

For he but kills, sir, where the law condemns,
And these can kill him too.

35

CORBACCIO.

Ay, or me,

Or any man. How does his apoplex?

Is that strong on him still?

MOSCA.

Most violent.

His speech is broken, and his eyes are set,
His face drawn longer than 'twas wont—

CORBACCIO.

How! how!

Stronger than he was wont?

40

MOSCA.

No, sir: his face

Drawn longer than 'twas wont.

CORBACCIO.

O, good!

MOSCA.

His mouth

Is ever gaping, and his eyelids hang.

CORBACCIO.

Good.

MOSCA. A freezing numbness stiffens all his joints,

And makes the color of his flesh like lead.

- CORBACCIO. 'Tis good. 45
- MOSCA. His pulse beats slow and dull.
- CORBACCIO. Good symptoms still.
- MOSCA. And from his brain—
- CORBACCIO. Ha? how? not from his brain?
- MOSCA. Yes, sir, and from his brain—
- CORBACCIO. I conceive you; good.
- MOSCA. Flows a cold sweat, with a continual rheum,
Forth the resolvéd corners of his eyes.
- CORBACCIO. Is't possible? Yet I am better, ha! 50
- How does he, with the swimming of his head?
- MOSCA. O, sir, 'tis past the scotomy;⁹ he now
Hath lost his feeling, and hath left to snort.
You hardly can perceive him, that he breathes.
- CORBACCIO. Excellent, excellent! sure I shall outlast him! 55
- This makes me young again, a score of years.
- MOSCA. I was a coming for you, sir.
- CORBACCIO. Has he made his will?
- What has he given me?
- MOSCA. No, sir.
- CORBACCIO. Nothing? ha!
- MOSCA. He has not made his will, sir.
- CORBACCIO. Oh, oh, oh! 60
- What then did Voltore, the lawyer, here?
- MOSCA. He smelt a carcass, sir, when he but heard
My master was about his testament;
As I did urge him to it for your good.
- CORBACCIO. He came unto him, did he? I thought so.
- MOSCA. Yes, and presented him this piece of plate. 65
- CORBACCIO. To be his heir?
- MOSCA. I do not know, sir.
- CORBACCIO. True,
I know it too.
- MOSCA. [aside] By your own scale, sir.¹
- CORBACCIO. Well,
I shall prevent him, yet. See, Mosca, look,
Here, I have brought a bag of bright sequins,
Will quite weigh down his plate. 70
- MOSCA. [taking the bag] Yea, marry, sir.
This is true physic, this your sacred medicine;
No talk of opiates, to this great elixir!²
- CORBACCIO. 'Tis aurum palpabile,³ if not potabile.
- MOSCA. It shall be ministered to him, in his bowl.
- CORBACCIO. Ay, do, do, do. 75

9. Dizziness, with dimness of sight.

1. The phrase seems to imply, "You think so because that's the sort of creature you are yourself."

2. No comparison of sedatives ("opiates") to this great medicine is possible. The elixir was supposed to be the supreme, universal medicine, capable of prolonging life indefinitely as well as of transforming baser metals to gold.

3. I.e., palpable, material gold; aurum potabile, or drinkable gold, was the elixir.

MOSCA. Most blessed cordial!
 This will recover him.
 CORBACCIO. Yes, do, do, do.
 MOSCA. I think it were not best, sir.
 CORBACCIO. What?
 MOSCA. To recover him.
 CORBACCIO. O, no, no, no; by no means.
 MOSCA. Why, sir, this
 Will work some strange effect, if he but feel it.
 CORBACCIO. 'Tis true, therefore forbear; I'll take my venture. 80
 Give me it again.
 MOSCA. At no hand; pardon me.
 You shall not do yourself that wrong sir. I
 Will so advise you, you shall have it all.
 CORBACCIO. How?
 MOSCA. All, sir, 'tis your right, your own; no man
 Can claim a part; 'tis yours without a rival, 85
 Decreed by destiny.
 CORBACCIO. How, how, good Mosca?
 MOSCA. I'll tell you, sir. This fit he shall recover—
 CORBACCIO. I do conceive you.
 MOSCA. And, on first advantage
 Of his gained sense, will I re-importune him
 Unto the making of his testament. 90
 And show him this. [Pointing to the money.]
 CORBACCIO. Good, good.
 MOSCA. 'Tis better yet,
 If you will hear, sir.
 CORBACCIO. Yes, with all my heart.
 MOSCA. Now, would I counsel you, make home with speed;
 There, frame a will, whereto you shall inscribe
 My master your sole heir. 95
 CORBACCIO. And disinherit
 My son?
 MOSCA. Oh, sir, the better: for that color
 Shall make it much more taking.⁴
 CORBACCIO. O, but color?
 MOSCA. This will, sir, you shall send it unto me.
 Now, when I come to enforce, as I will do,
 Your cares, your watchings, and your many prayers, 100
 Your more than many gifts, your this day's present,
 And last, produce your will; where, without thought,
 Or least regard unto your proper issue,
 A son so brave and highly meriting,
 The stream of your diverted love hath thrown you 105
 Upon my master, and made him your heir:
 He cannot be so stupid, or stone-dead,

4. That circumstance or appearance ("color") will make the trick more effective.

But out of conscience, and mere gratitude—

CORBACCIO. He must pronounce me his?

MOSCA.

'Tis true.

CORBACCIO.

This plot

110

Did I think on before.

MOSCA.

I do believe it.

CORBACCIO. Do you not believe it?

MOSCA.

Yes, sir.

CORBACCIO.

Mine own project.

MOSCA. Which, when he hath done, sir—

CORBACCIO.

Published me his heir?

MOSCA. And you so certain to survive him—

CORBACCIO.

Ay.

MOSCA. Being so lusty a man—

CORBACCIO.

'Tis true.

MOSCA.

Yes, sir—

CORBACCIO. I thought on that too. See, how he should be 115

The very organ to express my thoughts!

MOSCA. You have not only done yourself a good—

CORBACCIO. But multiplied it on my son?

MOSCA.

'Tis right, sir.

CORBACCIO. Still, my invention.

MOSCA.

'Las, sir! heaven knows,

It hath been all my study, all my care

120

(I e'en grow gray withal), how to work things—

CORBACCIO. I do conceive, sweet Mosca.

MOSCA.

You are he,

For whom I labor, here.

CORBACCIO.

Ay, do, do, do:

I'll straight about it.

[Going.]

MOSCA.

Rook go with you, raven!⁵

CORBACCIO. I know thee honest.

125

MOSCA. [aside]

You do lie, sir!

CORBACCIO.

And—

MOSCA. Your knowledge is no better than your ears, sir.

CORBACCIO. I do not doubt, to be a father to thee.

MOSCA. Nor I to gull my brother of his blessing.⁶

CORBACCIO. I may have my youth restored to me, why not?

MOSCA. Your worship is a precious ass!

130

CORBACCIO.

What sayest thou?

MOSCA. I do desire your worship to make haste, sir.

CORBACCIO. 'Tis done, 'tis done; I go.

[Exit.]

VOLPONE. [leaping from his couch] O, I shall burst!

Let out my sides, let out my sides—

MOSCA.

Contain

Your flux of laughter, sir; you know this hope

5. The rook is a common crowlike bird, raucous and thievish; but Mosca is playing on a secondary meaning—cheat or deception: "May you be deceived, you raven!"

6. Jacob robbed Esau of his blessing by impersonating him before blind old Isaac (Genesis xxvii).

- Is such a bait, it covers any hook. 135
- VOLPONE. O, but thy working, and thy placing it!
I cannot hold; good rascal, let me kiss thee:
I never knew thee in so rare a humor.
- MOSCA. Alas, sir, I but do as I am taught;
Follow your grave instructions; give them words; 140
Pour oil into their ears, and send them hence.
- VOLPONE. 'Tis true, 'tis true. What a rare punishment
Is avarice to itself? 145
- MOSCA. Ay, with our help, sir.
- VOLPONE. So many cares, so many maladies,
So many fears attending an old age, 150
Yea, death so often called on, as no wish
Can be more frequent with them, their limbs faint,
Their senses dull, their seeing, hearing, going,
All dead before them; yea, their very teeth,
Their instruments of eating, failing them: 155
Yet this is reckoned life! nay, here was one,
Is now gone home, that wishes to live longer!
Feels not his gout, nor palsy; feigns himself
Younger by scores of years, flatters his age
With confident belying it, hopes he may, 160
With charms, like Æson,⁸ have his youth restored;
And with these thoughts so battens, as if fate
Would be as easily cheated on, as he,
And all turns air! [Knocking within.] Who's that there,
now? a third!
- MOSCA. Close, to your couch again; I hear his voice: 165
It is Corvino, our spruce merchant.
- VOLPONE. [lies down as before] Dead.⁹
- MOSCA. Another bout, sir, with your eyes. [Anointing them.]
—Who's there?

SCENE 5

[Enter CORVINO.]

- Signor Corvino! come most wished for! O,
How happy were you, if you knew it, now!
- CORVINO. Why? what? wherein?
- MOSCA. The tardy hour is come, sir.
- CORVINO. He is not dead?
- MOSCA. Not dead, sir, but as good; 5
- He knows no man.
- CORVINO. How shall I do then?
- MOSCA. Why, sir?
- CORVINO. I have brought him here a pearl.

7. Seneca, Epistle 115, par. 16. Volpone is liberated, at least intellectually, from the vices on which he plays.

8. Æson, Jason's father, was restored to life by the charms of Medea the witch.

9. I.e., "Pretend that I'm dead." The "bout . . . with your eyes" is a dose of gummy medicine.

MOSCA.

Perhaps he has

So much remembrance left, as to know you, sir.

He still calls on you; nothing but your name

Is in his mouth. Is your pearl orient,¹ sir?

CORVINO. Venice was never owner of the like. 10

VOLPONE. [faintly] Signor Corvino!

MOSCA.

Hark.

VOLPONE.

Signor Corvino!

MOSCA. He calls you; step and give it him.—He's here, sir,

And he has brought you a rich pearl.

CORVINO.

How do you, sir?

Tell him, it doubles the twelfth carat.²

MOSCA.

Sir,

He cannot understand, his hearing's gone; 15

And yet it comforts him to see you—

CORVINO.

Say,

I have a diamond for him, too.

MOSCA.

Best show it, sir;

Put it into his hand; 'tis only there

He apprehends;³ he has his feeling, yet.

See how he grasps it! 20

CORVINO.

'Las, good gentleman!

How pitiful the sight is!

MOSCA.

Tut! forget, sir.

The weeping of an heir should still be laughter

Under a visor.⁴

CORVINO.

Why, am I his heir?

MOSCA. Sir, I am sworn, I may not show the will

Till he be dead; but here has been Corbaccio, 25

Here has been Voltore, here were others too,

I cannot number 'em, they were so many,

All gaping here for legacies; but I,

Taking the vantage of his naming you,

Signor Corvino, Signor Corvino, took 30

Paper, and pen, and ink, and there I asked him,

Whom he would have his heir? Corvino. WhoShould be executor? Corvino. And,

To any question he was silent to,

I still interpreted the nods he made, 35

Through weakness, for consent; and sent home th' others,

Nothing bequeathed them, but to cry and curse.

CORVINO. O, my dear Mosca! [They embrace.] Does he not perceive us?MOSCA. No more than a blind harper.⁵ He knows no man,

1. Lustrous.

2. I.e., weighs 24 carats, or more than a third of an ounce—a huge pearl. "24-carat" has other overtones, as a measure of perfect purity in gold.

3. In English "apprehends" means "to understand intellectually," but the root Latin sense is "to grasp physically."

4. An heir should look sad by way of concealing his jubilation.

5. Playing the harp and singing ballads to it were traditional devices of blind beggars; but blindness in poets is sometimes accompanied by second sight, and Mosca knows that Volpone sees the situation clearly.

No face of friend, nor name of any servant,
Who 'twas that fed him last, or gave him drink;
Not those he hath begotten, or brought up,
Can he remember. 40

CORVINO. Has he children?

MOSCA. Bastards,
Some dozen, or more, that he begot on beggars,
Gypsies, and Jews, and black-moors, when he was drunk. 45
Knew you not that, sir? 'tis the common fable,
The dwarf, the fool, the eunuch, are all his;⁶
He's the true father of his family,
In all save me; but he has given them nothing.

CORVINO. That's well, that's well! Art sure he does not hear us? 50

MOSCA. Sure, sir! why, look you, credit your own sense.
[Shouts in VOLPONE's ear.]

The pox approach, and add to your diseases,
If it would send you hence the sooner, sir.
For your incontinence, it hath deserved it
Thoroughly and thoroughly, and the plague to boot!— 55
You may come near, sir—Would you would once close
Those filthy eyes of yours, that flow with slime,
Like two frog-pits; and those same hanging cheeks,
Covered with hide instead of skin—Nay, help, sir—
That look like frozen dish-clouts set on end! 60

CORVINO. Or like an old smoked wall, on which the rain
Ran down in streaks!

MOSCA. Excellent, sir! speak out.

You may be louder yet; a culverin⁷

Dischargéd in his ear would hardly bore it.

CORVINO. His nose is like a common sewer, still running. 65

MOSCA. 'Tis good! And what his mouth?

CORVINO. A very draught.⁸

MOSCA. O, stop it up—

CORVINO. By no means.

MOSCA. 'Pray you, let me:

Faith I could stifle him rarely with a pillow,

As well as any woman that should keep him.⁹

CORVINO. Do as you will; but I'll be gone. 70

MOSCA. Be so;

It is your presence makes him last so long.

CORVINO. I pray you, use no violence.

MOSCA. No, sir! why?

Why should you be thus scrupulous, pray you, sir?

CORVINO. Nay, at your discretion.

MOSCA. Well, good sir, be gone.

CORVINO. I will not trouble him now, to take my pearl? 75

6. The suggestion that Volpone's play-mates are his own children is never really contradicted.

7. Horse-pistol.

8. Cesspool.

9. I.e., "I could smother him as well as a nurse."

MOSCA. Puh! nor your diamond. What a needless care
Is this afflicts you? Is not all here yours?
Am not I here? whom you have made your creature?
That owe my being to you?

CORVINO. Grateful Mosca!

Thou art my friend, my fellow, my companion,

80

My partner, and shalt share in all my fortunes.

MOSCA. Excepting one.

CORVINO. What's that?

MOSCA. Your gallant wife, sir.—

[Exit CORVINO.]

Now is he gone: we had no other means

To shoot him hence, but this.

VOLPONE. My divine Mosca!

Thou hast today outgone thyself. [Knocking within.]—

Who's there?

85

I will be troubled with no more. Prepare

Me music, dances, banquets, all delights;

The Turk is not more sensual in his pleasures,

Than will Volpone. [Exit MOSCA.] Let me see; a pearl!

A diamond! plate! sequins! Good morning's purchase.

90

Why, this is better than rob churches,¹ yet;

Or fat, by eating, once a month, a man—[Enter MOSCA.]

Who is't?

MOSCA. The beauteous Lady Would-be, sir,

Wife to the English knight, Sir Politic Would-be

(This is the style, sir, is directed me),²

95

Hath sent to know how you have slept tonight,

And if you would be visited?

VOLPONE. Not now:

Some three hours hence—

MOSCA. I told the squire so much.

VOLPONE. When I am high with mirth and wine, then, then.

'Fore heaven, I wonder at the desperate valor

100

Of the bold English, that they dare let loose

Their wives to all encounters!

MOSCA. Sir, this knight

Had not his name for nothing, he is politic,³

And knows, howe'er his wife affect strange airs,

She hath not yet the face to be dishonest:⁴

105

But had she Signor Corvino's wife's face—

VOLPONE. Has she so rare a face?

MOSCA. O, sir, the wonder,

The blazing star of Italy! a wench

Of the first year! a beauty ripe as harvest!⁵

1. I.e., easy money.

2. I.e., "this is the way I've been told to announce her."

3. Devious, subtle.

4. I.e., "she's not beautiful enough to be unchaste."

5. A blazing star is literally a comet, hence a heavenly object of special attention. "A wench of the first year" seems to be a metaphor from wine-making, implying that the first crop of grapes makes the best wine.

Whose skin is whiter than a swan all over,
 Than silver, snow, or lilies! a soft lip,
 Would tempt you to eternity of kissing!
 And flesh that melteth in the touch to blood!
 Bright as your gold, and lovely as your gold!
 VOLPONE. Why had not I known this before?
 MOSCA. Alas, sir,
 Myself but yesterday discovered it.
 VOLPONE. How might I see her?
 MOSCA. O, not possible;
 She's kept as warily as is your gold;
 Never does come abroad, never takes air,
 But at a window. All her looks are sweet,
 As the first grapes or cherries, and are watched
 As near as they are.
 VOLPONE. I must see her.
 MOSCA. Sir,
 There is a guard of ten spies thick upon her,
 All his whole household; each of which is set
 Upon his fellow, and have all their charge,
 When he goes out, when he comes in, examined.
 VOLPONE. I will go see her, though but at her window.
 MOSCA. In some disguise, then.
 VOLPONE. That is true; I must Maintain mine own shape still the same; we'll think.
 [Exeunt.]

Act II

SCENE 1. St. Mark's Place, before CORVINO's House.

[Enter SIR POLITIC WOULD-BE, and PEREGRINE.]

SIR POLITIC. Sir, to a wise man, all the world's his soil.
 It is not Italy, nor France, nor Europe,
 That must bound me, if my fates call me forth.
 Yet, I protest, it is no salt⁶ desire
 Of seeing countries, shifting a religion,
 Nor any disaffection to the state
 Where I was bred, and unto which I owe
 My dearest plots,⁷ hath brought me out; much less,
 That idle, antique, stale, gray-headed project
 Of knowing men's minds and manners, with Ulysses!⁸
 But a peculiar humor of my wife's,
 Laid for this height of Venice, to observe,
 To quote, to learn the language, and so forth.—
 I hope you travel, sir, with license?⁹
 PEREGRINE. Yes.

6. Wanton, frivolous.

7. Projects, notions.

8. Ulysses (Homer says) knew the minds of many men and saw many cities. The "humor" of Sir Politic's wife was exactly calculated, he thinks, to bring her to Venice.

9. I.e., special permission to travel abroad.

SIR POLITIC. I dare the safelier converse—How long, sir,
Since you left England? 15

PEREGRINE. Seven weeks.

SIR POLITIC. So lately!
You have not been with my lord ambassador?

PEREGRINE. Not yet, sir.

SIR POLITIC. Pray you, what news, sir, vents our climate?¹

I heard last night a most strange thing reported
By some of my lord's followers, and I long
To hear how 'twill be seconded. 20

PEREGRINE. What was't, sir?

SIR POLITIC. Marry, sir, of a raven that should build
In a ship royal of the king's.²

PEREGRINE. This fellow,

Does he gull me,³ trow? or is gulled?—Your name, sir?

SIR POLITIC. My name is Politic Would-be. 25

PEREGRINE. [aside] O, that speaks him.—

A knight, sir?

SIR POLITIC. A poor knight, sir.

PEREGRINE. Your lady

Lies here in Venice, for intelligence
Of tires and fashions, and behavior,
Among the courtesans?⁴ the fine Lady Would-be?

SIR POLITIC. Yes, sir; the spider and the bee, oft-times
Suck from one flower. 30

PEREGRINE. Good Sir Politic,
I cry you mercy; I have heard much of you.
'Tis true, sir, of your raven.

SIR POLITIC. On your knowledge?

PEREGRINE. Yes, and your lion's whelping in the Tower.⁵

SIR POLITIC. Another whelp!

PEREGRINE. Another, sir.

SIR POLITIC. Now, heaven!

What prodigies be these? The fires at Berwick!⁶
And the new star! these things concurring, strange
And full of omen! Saw you those meteors?

PEREGRINE. I did, sir.

SIR POLITIC. Fearful! Pray you, sir, confirm me,
Were there three porpoises seen above the bridge,
As they give out?⁷ 40

1. I.e., "What news does our climate give off?"

2. A raven is a bird of ill omen.

3. To "gull" is constantly used in the sense of to fool or deceive; "trow?": do you think?

4. Attires, costumes. Venetian prostitutes were for hundreds of years reputed to be the most desirable in Europe, perhaps because Pietro Aretino advertised them so flatteringly in his pornographic poems.

5. Lions were in fact kept caged in the Tower of London, and cubs were whelped from time to time. Most of the events to which Sir Politic alludes had in fact occurred shortly before the time of the play's first production, and would have been familiar to the audience.

6. A new star appeared in October, 1604, and the aurora borealis over Berwick in January, 1605, was said to resemble armies of men fighting in the sky.

7. It was unusual for deep-sea creatures to venture up the Thames, past London Bridge.

- PEREGRINE. Six, and a sturgeon, sir.
 SIR POLITIC. I am astonished.
 PEREGRINE. Nay, sir, be not so;
 I'll tell you a greater prodigy than these.
 SIR POLITIC. What should these things portend?
 PEREGRINE. The very day
 (Let me be sure) that I put forth from London,
 There was a whale discovered in the river,
 As high as Woolwich, that had waited there,
 Few know how many months, for the subversion
 Of the Stade fleet.⁸ 45
- SIR POLITIC. Is't possible? believe it,
 'Twas either sent from Spain, or the Archduke's:
 Spinola's whale, upon my life, my credit!⁹ 50
 Will they not leave these projects? Worthy sir,
 Some other news.
- PEREGRINE. Faith, Stone the fool is dead,
 And they do lack a tavern fool extremely. 55
 SIR POLITIC. Is Mas' Stone dead?¹
 PEREGRINE. He's dead, sir; why, I hope
 You thought him not immortal?—O, this knight,
 Were he well known, would be a precious thing
 To fit our English stage. He that should write
 But such a fellow, should be thought to feign
 Extremely, if not maliciously. 60
- SIR POLITIC. Stone dead!
 PEREGRINE. Dead. Lord! how deeply, sir, you apprehend it!
 He was no kinsman to you?
 SIR POLITIC. That I know of.
 Well! that same fellow was an unknown fool.
 PEREGRINE. And yet you knew him, it seems?
 SIR POLITIC. I did so. Sir, 65
 I knew him one of the most dangerous heads
 Living within the state, and so I held him.
- PEREGRINE. Indeed, sir?
 SIR POLITIC. While he lived, in action.
 He has received weekly intelligence,
 Upon my knowledge, out of the Low Countries,
 For all parts of the world, in cabbages;² 70
 And those dispensed again to ambassadors,
 In oranges, musk-melons, apricots,
 Lemons, pome-citrons, and such-like; sometimes
 In Colchester oysters, and your Selsey cockles.³

8. The Stade fleet was the Danish fleet at the mouth of the Elbe river. How a whale in the Thames could subvert it is not very clear.
 9. Sir Politic's suggestions about the origin of the whale all involve Spain. It comes either from Spain itself, or from the Archduke Albert, ruler of the Spanish Netherlands in the name of Philip II, or from Ambrosio Spinola, general of the Spanish armies in Holland.

1. Stone the fool was an actual figure, about whom various anecdotes survive. "Mas'": short for Master, the common denomination of fools and boys.
 2. Cabbages were a recent importation from Holland.
 3. "Pomecitrons" we would call simply "citrons." The oysters and cockles specified were the best shellfish to be had in England, and were often served to royalty.

- PEREGRINE. You make me wonder. 75
- SIR POLITIC. Sir, upon my knowledge.
 Nay, I've observed him, at your public ordinary,⁴
 Take his advertisement from a traveler
 (A concealed statesman) in a trencher of meat;
 And instantly, before the meal was done,
 Convey an answer in a tooth-pick. 80
- PEREGRINE. Strange!
- How could this be, sir?
- SIR POLITIC. Why, the meat was cut
 So like his character, and so laid, as he Must easily read the cipher.
- PEREGRINE. I have heard,
 He could not read, sir.
- SIR POLITIC. So 'twas given out,
 In polity,⁵ by those that did employ him: 85
 But he could read, and had your languages,
 And to't,⁶ as sound a noddle—
- PEREGRINE. I have heard, sir,
 That your baboons were spies, and that they were
 A kind of subtle nation near to China.
- SIR POLITIC. Ay, ay, your Mamaluchi.⁷ Faith, they had 90
 Their hand in a French plot or two; but they Were so extremely given to women, as
 They made discovery of all; yet I
 Had my advices here, on Wednesday last,
 From one of their own coat, they were returned, 95
 Made their relations, as the fashion is,
 And now stand fair for fresh employment.
- PEREGRINE. [aside] 'Heart!
 This Sir Politic will be ignorant of nothing.
 —It seems, sir, you know all.
- SIR POLITIC. Not all, sir; but
 I have some general notions. I do love 100
 To note and to observe; though I live out,
 Free from the active torrent, yet I'd mark
 The currents and the passages of things,
 For mine own private use; and know the ebbs
 And flows of state, 105
- PEREGRINE. Believe it, sir, I hold
 Myself in no small tie unto my fortunes,
 For casting me thus luckily upon you,
 Whose knowledge, if your bounty equal it,
 May do me great assistance, in instruction
 For my behavior, and my bearing, which 110

4. Common tavern. Advertisement: secret message, tip.

5. For political reasons, as part of his cover story.

6. In addition.

7. Mameluchi is the Italian form of mamelukes, a group of slaves and warriors originally from Circassia, in Asia Minor, who held or controlled the throne of Egypt for many years.

Is yet so rude and raw.

SIR POLITIC. Why? came you forth
Empty of rules for travel?

PEREGRINE. Faith, I had
Some common ones, from out that vulgar grammar,
Which he that cried Italian to me, taught me.⁸

SIR POLITIC. Why this it is that spoils all our brave bloods, 115
Trusting our hopeful gentry unto pedants,
Fellows of outside, and mere bark.⁹ You seem
To be a gentleman, of ingenuous race:
I not profess it, but my fate hath been
To be, where I have been consulted with, 120
In this high kind, touching some great men's sons,
Persons of blood and honor.—

PEREGRINE. [seeing people approach] Who be these, sir?

SCENE II

[Enter MOSCA and NANO disguised, followed by persons with materials for erecting a stage.]

MOSCA. Under that window, there 't must be. The same.

SIR POLITIC. Fellows, to mount a bank. Did your instructor
In the dear tongues, never discourse to you
Of the Italian mountebanks?¹

PEREGRINE. Yes, sir.

SIR POLITIC. Why,
Here you shall see one. 5

PEREGRINE. They are quacksalvers,
Fellows that live by venting² oils and drugs?

SIR POLITIC. Was that the character he gave you of them?

PEREGRINE. As I remember.

SIR POLITIC. Pity his ignorance.

They are the only knowing men of Europe!
Great general scholars, excellent physicians, 10
Most admired statesmen, professed favorites,
And cabinet counselors to the greatest princes;
The only languaged men of all the world!³

PEREGRINE. And, I have heard, they are most lewd impostors;
Made all of terms and shreds; no less beliers 15
Of great men's favors, than their own vile medicines;
Which they will utter upon monstrous oaths,
Selling that drug for two-pence, ere they part,
Which they have valued at twelve crowns before.

SIR POLITIC. Sir, calumnies are answered best with silence. 20
Yourself shall judge—Who is it mounts, my friends?

8. Trained me in the pronunciation of Italian.

9. Superficial and ignorant teachers.

1. The word "mountebank" comes from the Italian montambanco, meaning "to mount the bench": other terms for the same fellow are saltimbanco and char- latan. They were a mixture of public entertainer and patent-medicine salesman who gave a very considerable semi-dramatic, improvised performance before delivering their pitch.

2. Vending.

3. The best talkers.

MOSCA. Scoto of Mantua, sir.⁴

SIR POLITIC. Is't he? Nay, then

I'll proudly promise, sir, you shall behold
Another man than has been phant'sied⁵ to you.

I wonder yet, that he should mount his bank,
Here in this nook, that has been wont t'appear

25

In face of the Piazza!—Here he comes.

[Enter VOLPONE disguised as a mountebank and followed by a crowd of people.]

VOLPONE. [to NANO] Mount, zany.⁶

MOB.

Follow, follow, follow, follow, follow!

SIR POLITIC. See how the people follow him! he's a man

May write ten thousand crowns in bank here. Note,
[VOLPONE mounts the stage.]

Mark but his gesture: I do use to observe

30

The state he keeps in getting up.

PEREGRINE.

'Tis worth it, sir.

VOLPONE. Most noble gentlemen, and my worthy patrons! It may seem strange, that I, your Scoto Mantuano, who was ever wont to fix my bank in face of the public Piazza, near the shelter of the Portico to the Procuratia,⁷ should now, after eight months' absence from this illustrious city of Venice, humbly retire myself into an obscure nook of the Piazza.

SIR POLITIC. Did not I now object the same?

PEREGRINE.

Peace, sir.

VOLPONE. Let me tell you: I am not, as your Lombard proverb saith, cold on my feet;⁸ or content to part with my commodities at a cheaper rate, than I accustomed: look not for it. Nor that the calumnious reports of that impudent detractor, and shame to our profession (Alessandro Buttone, I mean), who gave out, in public, I was condemned a sforzato to the galleys, for poisoning the cardinal Bembo's—⁹ cook, hath at all attached, much less dejected me. No, no, worthy gentlemen; to tell you true, I cannot endure to see the rabble of these ground ciarlatani,¹ that spread their cloaks on the pavement, as if they meant to do feats of activity, and then come in

4. Scoto of Mantua was a real person, a juggler, magician, and performer at legerdemain; he actually visited England and performed before Queen Elizabeth, about a quarter of a century before Volpone had its first performance.

5. Described to you.

6. Zany: from the Italian name Giovanni; a generic term for a fool, clown, performer. The speech of the crowd is intended to mimic a confused hubbub.

7. The arcade along the north side of Piazza San Marco, where the Procurators resided. Jonson takes great pains to make his Venetian details specific and accurate.

8. There is in fact an Italian proverb, "Haver freddo a' piedi," meaning "to be so hard up that one has to sell one's goods at a loss."

9. Alessandro Buttone is an imaginary rival who has dreamed up a slander against Scoto—but the tale is most unlikely since Cardinal Bembo died in 1547, more than 50 years before the play is supposed to be taking place. A sforzato is a galley-slave; the dash before "cook" is supposed to indicate that the title of "cook" is just a euphemism.

1. Ground ciarlatani or charlatans put on their acts and sold their nostrums at street level.

lamely, with their moldy tales out of Boccaccio,² like stale Tabarin, the fabulist: some of them discoursing their travels, and of their tedious captivity in the Turks' galley, when, indeed, were the truth known, they were the Christians' galleys, where very temperately they ate bread, and drunk water, as a wholesome penance, enjoined them by their confessors, for base pilferies.³

SIR POLITIC. Note but his bearing, and contempt of these.

VOLPONE. These turdy-facy-nasty-paty-lousy-fartical rogues, with one poor groat's-worth of unprepared antimony, finely wrapped up in several scartoccios,⁴ are able, very well, to kill their twenty a week, and play; yet, these meager, starved spirits, who have half stopped the organs of their minds with earthy oppilations,⁵ want not their favorers among your shrivelled salad-eating artisans, who are overjoyed that they may have their half-p'orth of physic; though it purge them into another world, it makes no matter.

SIR POLITIC. Excellent! have you heard better language, sir?

VOLPONE. Well, let them go. And, gentlemen, honorable gentlemen, know, that for this time, our bank, being thus removed from the clamors of the canaglia,⁶ shall be the scene of pleasure and delight; for I have nothing to sell, little or nothing to sell.

SIR POLITIC. I told you, sir, his end.

PEREGRINE.

You did so, sir.

VOLPONE. I protest, I, and my six servants, are not able to make of this precious liquor, so fast as it is fetched away from my lodging by gentlemen of your city; strangers of the Terra firma;⁷ worshipful merchants; ay, and senators too: who, ever since my arrival, have detained me to their uses, by their splendidous liberalities. And worthily; for, what avails your rich man to have his magazines stuffed with moscadelli,⁸ or of the purest grape, when his physicians prescribe him, on pain of death, to drink nothing but water cocted⁹ with aniseeds? O, health! health! the blessing of the rich! the riches of the poor! who can buy thee at too dear a rate, since there is no enjoying this world without thee? Be not then so sparing of your purses, honorable gentlemen, as to abridge the natural course of life—

2. Boccaccio told in the Decameron a great many popular stories; as he lived in the 14th century, the tales were "moldy" by the 17th. Like Scoto, Tabarine was an actual Italian comedian of the time who performed in France (not, so far as we know, in England) during the 1570's.

3. Venetian galleys required many oars, often operated by captive Turks or condemned criminals, chained to the bench, fed miserable food, and whipped mercilessly.

4. Antimony was the basis of most common emetics; scartoccios were little paper envelopes in which drugs were placed.

5. Obstructions.

6. The common mob.

7. Terra firma is still the Venetian term for land across the lagoon, the mainland.

8. Muscadel or muscatel is wine made from certain grapes, in Italian moscatini, which seem to have the perfume of musk.

9. Flavored.

PEREGRINE. You see his end.

SIR POLITIC.

Ay, is't not good?

VOLPONE. For, when a humid flux, or catarrh, by the mutability of air, falls from your head into an arm or shoulder, or any other part; take you a ducat, or your sequin of gold, and apply to the place affected: see what good effect it can work.¹ No, no, 'tis this blessed unguento, this rare extraction, that hath only power to disperse all malignant humours, that proceed either of hot, cold, moist, or windy causes—

PEREGRINE. I would he had put in dry too.²

SIR POLITIC.

'Pray you, observe.

VOLPONE. To fortify the most indigest and crude stomach, ay, were it of one that, through extreme weakness, vomited blood, applying only a warm napkin to the place, after the unction and fricace;³—for the vertigine in the head, putting but a drop into your nostrils, likewise behind the ears; a most sovereign and approved remedy: the Mal Caduco, cramps, convulsions, paralyses, epilepsies, Tremor-Cordia, retired nerves, ill vapors of the spleen, stoppings of the liver, the stone, the strangury, Hernia Ventosa, Iliaca Passio; stops a dysenteria immediately; easeth the torsion of the small guts, and cures Melancholia Hypochondriaca,⁴ being taken and applied, according to my printed receipt. [Pointing to his bill and his vial.] For, this is the physician, this the medicine; this counsels, this cures; this gives the direction, this works the effect; and, in sum, both together may be termed an abstract of the theoric and practic⁵ in the Æsculapian art. 'Twill cost you eight crowns. And, Zan Fritada,⁶ prithee sing a verse extempore in honor of it.

SIR POLITIC. How do you like him, sir?

PEREGRINE.

Most strangely, II

SIR POLITIC. Is not his language rare?

PEREGRINE.

But alchemy,⁷

I never heard the like; or Broughton's books.

[NANO sings.]

Had old Hippocrates, or Galen,⁸
That to their books put med'cines all in,
But known this secret, they had never
(Of which they will be guilty ever)

1. I.e., money won't cure your cold when you catch it (but my "blessed unguent" will).

2. Of the four "humours" or ingredients of a balanced human complexion, "Scoto" has left out one, as Peregrine drily observes.

3. Anointing and massage.

4. "Melancholia Hypochondriaca" is black depression. The other ailments are: Mal Caduco, falling sickness, epilepsy; Tremor Cordia, palpitations of the heart; strangury, painful urination;

Hernia Ventosa, gassy hernia; Iliaca Passio, cramps of the small intestine.

5. Theory and practice. The Æsculapian art: medicine (from Æsculapius, Greek god of medicine).

6. Literally, "Johnny Omelet," obviously one of the mountebank's stooges.

7. Except for alchemy. Johnson had no use for the books of Hugh Broughton, a Puritan divine and rabbinical scholar.

8. Famous doctors of the Classical world.

Been murderers of so much paper,
 Or wasted many a hurtless taper;
 No Indian drug had e'er been famed,
 Tobacco, sassafras not named;
 Ne yet, of guacum⁹ one small stick, sir,
 Nor Raymond Lully's great elixir.
 Ne had been known the Danish Gonswart,
 Or Paracelsus, with his long sword.¹

PEREGRINE. All this, yet, will not do; eight crowns is high.

VOLPONE. No more. Gentlemen, if I had but time to discourse to you the miraculous effects of this my oil, surnamed oglio del Scoto;² with the countless catalogue of those I have cured of the aforesaid, and many more diseases; the patents and privileges of all the princes and commonwealths of Christendom; or but the depositions of those that appeared on my part, before the signory of the Sanita³ and most learned College of Physicians; where I was authorized, upon notice taken of the admirable virtues of my medicaments, and mine own excellency in matter of rare and unknown secrets, not only to disperse them publicly in this famous city, but in all the territories, that happily joy under the government of the most pious and magnificent states of Italy. But may some other gallant fellow say, 'O, there be divers that make profession to have as good, and as experimented receipts as yours.' Indeed, very many have essayed, like apes, in imitation of that which is really and essentially in me, to make of this oil; bestowed great cost in furnaces, stills, alembics,⁴ continual fires, and preparation of the ingredients, (as indeed there goes to it six hundred several simples,⁵ besides some quantity of human fat, for the conglutination, which we buy of the anatomists) but, when these practitioners come to the last decoction, blow, blow, puff, puff, and all flies in fumo:⁶ ha, ha, ha! Poor wretches, I rather pity their folly and indiscretion, than their loss of time and money; for those may be recovered by industry: but to be a fool born, is a disease incurable.

For myself, I always from my youth have endeavored to get the rarest secrets, and book them, either in exchange, or for money: I spared nor cost nor labor, where anything was worthy to be learned. And, gentlemen, honorable gentlemen; I will undertake, by virtue of chemical art, out of the honorable hat that covers your head, to extract the four elements; that is to

9. Modern guaiacum, obtained from the bark of a South American tree.

1. Raymond Lully or Lull was a Spanish mystic philosopher of the 13th century who claimed to have discovered the elixir. "The Danish Gonswart": unidentifiable. Paracelsus, the famous German doctor of the 16th century, had a famous sword in the handle of which he kept, according to legend, familiar spirits, and according to history, medications and herbs.

2. Scoto's oil.

3. The Board of Medical Examiners in Venice.

4. Distilleries, retorts.

5. Herbs.

6. In smoke; "decoction": boiling down.

say, the fire, air, water, and earth, and return you your felt without burn or stain. For, whilst others have been at the balloo,⁷ I have been at my book; and am now past the craggy paths of study, and come to the flowery plains of honor and reputation.

SIR POLITIC. I do assure you, sir, that is his aim.

VOLPONE. But to our price—

PEREGRINE.

And that withal, sir Pol.

VOLPONE. You all know, honorable gentlemen, I never valued this ampulla, or vial, at less than eight crowns; but for this time, I am content to be deprived of it for six: six crowns is the price, and less in courtesy I know you cannot offer me; take it or leave it, howsoever, both it and I am at your service. I ask you not as the value of the thing, for then I should demand of you a thousand crowns; so the cardinals Montalto, Farnese, the great duke of Tuscany, my gossip,⁸ with divers other princes, have given me; but I despise money. Only to show my affection to you, honorable gentlemen, and your illustrious state here, I have neglected the messages of these princes, mine own offices, framed my journey hither, only to present you with the fruits of my travels. [TO NANO.]—Tune your voices once more to the touch of your instruments, and give the honorable assembly some delightful recreation.

PEREGRINE. What monstrous and most painful circumstance

Is here, to get some three or four gazettes,⁹

Some three-pence in the whole! for that 'twill come to.

[NANO sings.]

You that would last long, list to my song,

Make no more coil,¹ but buy of this oil.

Would you be ever fair and young?

Stout of teeth, and strong of tongue?

Tart of palate? quick of ear?

Sharp of sight? of nostril clear?

Moist of hand and light of foot?

Or, I will come nearer to't,

Would you live free from all diseases?

Do the act your mistress pleases,

Yet fright all aches from your bones?

Here's a medicine for the nones.²

VOLPONE. Well, I am in a humor at this time to make a present of the small quantity my coffer contains; to the rich in courtesy, and to the poor for God's sake. Wherefore, now mark: I asked you six crowns; and six crowns, at other times, you have

7. Balloon, ball; i.e., while others have been diverting themselves with ball games.

8. My good friend. Cardinal Montalto became Pope as Sixtus the Fifth in 1585; Alessandro Farnese had been Pope as Paul III in 1534; "the great duke of Tuscany" was Cosimo de Medici.

9. The smallest Venetian coins, worth less than an English penny.

1. Stir, fuss.

2. For the occasion.

paid me; you shall not give me six crowns, nor five, nor four, nor three, nor two, nor one; nor half a ducat; no, nor a mocenigo.³ Sixpence it will cost you, or six hundred pound—expect no lower price, for, by the banner of my front, I will not bate a bagatine,⁴—that I will have, only, a pledge of your loves, to carry something from amongst you, to show I am not contemned by you. Therefore, now, toss your handkerchiefs, cheerfully, cheerfully;⁵ and be advertised, that the first heroic spirit that deigns to grace me with a handkerchief, I will give it a little remembrance of something, beside, shall please it better, than if I had presented it with a double pistolet.⁶

PEREGRINE. Will you be that heroic spark, sir Pol?

[CELIA at a window above, throws down her handkerchief.]

O, see! the window has prevented⁷ you.

VOLPONE. Lady, I kiss your bounty; and for this timely grace you have done your poor Scoto of Mantua, I will return you, over and above my oil, a secret of that high and inestimable nature, shall make you for ever enamored on that minute, wherein your eye first descended on so mean, yet not altogether to be despised, an object. Here is a powder concealed in this paper, of which, if I should speak to the worth, nine thousand volumes were but as one page, that page as a line, that line as a word; so short is this pilgrimage of man (which some call life) to the expressing of it. Would I reflect on the price? why, the whole world were but as an empire, that empire as a province, that province as a bank, that bank as a private purse to the purchase of it. I will only tell you; it is the powder that made Venus a goddess, (given her by Apollo,) that kept her perpetually young, cleared her wrinkles, firmed her gums, filled her skin, colored her hair; from her derived to Helen, and at the sack of Troy unfortunately lost; till now, in this our age, it was as happily recovered, by a studious antiquary, out of some ruins of Asia, who sent a moiety⁸ of it to the court of France, (but much sophisticated,) wherewith the ladies there now color their hair. The rest, at this present, remains with me; extracted to a quintessence, so that, wherever it but touches, in youth it perpetually preserves, in age restores the complexion; seats your teeth, did they dance like virginal jacks,⁹ firm as a wall; makes them white as ivory, that were black as——

3. A Venetian coin, worth about nine English pennies.

4. A tiny coin.

5. When business was brisk at the mountebank's stand, customers sometimes knotted their money in a handkerchief or glove and tossed it on stage; the money was taken out, replaced with the medicine, and the handkerchief tossed back to the purchaser.

6. A double pistolet was a Spanish coin of some value, worth not much less than an English pound.

7. Forestalled, anticipated.

8. Fraction; "sophisticated": refined, purified.

9. The quills that pluck the strings of a harpsichord ("virginal").

SCENE 3

[Enter CORVINO.]

CORVINO. Spite o' the devil, and my shame! come down, here;
Come down; [To VOLTONE.]—No house but mine to make your scene?

Signor Flaminio,¹ will you down, sir? down?

What, is my wife your Franciscina, sir?

No windows on the whole Piazza, here,

To make your properties, but mine? but mine? [Beats away
VOLTONE, NANO, &c.]

Heart! ere to-morrow I shall be new-christened,

And called the Pantalone di Bisognosi,²

About the town.

PEREGRINE. What should this mean, sir Pol?

SIR POLITIC. Some trick of state, believe it; I will home.

PEREGRINE. It may be some design on you.

SIR POLITIC.

I know not.

I'll stand upon my guard.

PEREGRINE.

It is your best, sir.

SIR POLITIC. This three weeks, all my advices, all my letters,

They have been intercepted.

PEREGRINE.

Indeed, sir!

Best have a care.

SIR POLITIC.

Nay, so I will.

PEREGRINE.

This knight,

I may not lose him, for my mirth, till night.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 4. A Room in VOLTONE's House.

[Enter VOLTONE and MOSCA.]

VOLTONE. O, I am wounded!

MOSCA.

Where, sir?

VOLTONE.

Not without;

Those blows were nothing; I could bear them ever.

But angry Cupid, bolting from her eyes,

Hath shot himself into me like a flame,

Where, now, he flings about his burning heat,

As in a furnace an ambitious³ fire,

Whose vent is stopped. The fight is all within me.

I cannot live, except thou help me, Mosca;

My liver melts, and I, without the hope

Of some soft air, from her refreshing breath,

Am but a heap of cinders.

MOSCA.

'Las, good sir,

1. Signor Flaminio was Flaminio Scala, a Venetian comic actor of the day; Franciscina is an always-available serving girl in popular Italian comedy (commedia dell'arte).

2. Pantaloon of the Paupers. Pantaloon, in the tradition of commedia dell'arte, is a doddering old fool in perpetual terror of being cuckolded.

3. Aspiring, growing. Most of Voltone's erotic torments are of the sort popularized 300 years before by Francesco Petrarca.

- Would you had never seen her!
 VOLPONE. Nay, would thou
 Hadst never told me of her!
- MOSCA. Sir, 'tis true;
 I do confess I was unfortunate,
 And you unhappy: but I'm bound in conscience, 15
 No less than duty, to effect my best
 To your release of torment, and I will, sir.
- VOLPONE. Dear Mosca, shall I hope?
- MOSCA. Sir, more than dear,
 I will not bid you to despair of aught
 Within a human compass. 20
- VOLPONE. O, there spoke
 My better angel. Mosca, take my keys,
 Gold, plate, and jewels, all's at thy devotion;⁴
 Employ them how thou wilt; nay, coin me too,
 So thou, in this, but crown my longings. Mosca?
- MOSCA. Use but your patience. 25
- VOLPONE. So I have.
- MOSCA. I doubt not
 To bring success to your desires.
- VOLPONE. Nay, then,
 I not repent me of my late disguise.
- MOSCA. If you can horn⁵ him, sir, you need not.
- VOLPONE. True:
 Besides, I never meant him for my heir.—
 Is not the color of my beard and eyebrows 30
 To make me known?
- MOSCA. No jot.
- VOLPONE. I did it well.
- MOSCA. So well, would I could follow you in mine,
 With half the happiness!—and yet I would Escape your epilogue.⁶
- VOLPONE. But were they gulled
 With a belief that I was Scoto? 35
- MOSCA. Sir,
 Scoto himself could hardly have distinguished!
 I have not time to flatter you now, we'll part:
 And as I prosper, so applaud my art. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 5. A Room in CORVINO's House.

[Enter CORVINO, sword in his hand, dragging in CELIA.]

- CORVINO. Death of mine honor, with the city's fool!
 A juggling, tooth-drawing, prating mountebank!
 And at a public window! where, whilst he,
 With his strained action, and his dole⁷ of faces,
 To his drug-lecture draws your itching ears, 5

4. At your service.

5. Cuckold.

6. Avoid the beating you got.

7. Guile, trickery; the suggestion is of false faces or masks.

A crew of old, unmarried, noted lechers,
 Stood leering up like satyrs: and you smile
 Most graciously, and fan your favors forth,
 To give your hot spectators satisfaction!
 What, was your mountebank their call?⁸ their whistle? 10
 Or were you enamored on his copper rings,
 His saffron jewel, with the toad-stone in't?
 Or his embroidered suit, with the cope-stitch,
 Made of a hearse cloth?⁹ or his old tilt-feather?
 Or his starched beard? Well! you shall have him, yes! 15
 He shall come home, and minister unto you
 The fricace for the mother.¹ Or, let me see,
 I think you'd rather mount;² would you not mount?
 Why, if you'll mount, you may; yes, truly, you may:
 And so you may be seen, down to the foot. 20
 Get you a cittern,³ lady Vanity,
 And be a dealer with the virtuous man;
 Make one: I'll but protest myself a cuckold,
 And save your dowry.⁴ I'm a Dutchman, I!
 For, if you thought me an Italian, 25
 You would be damned, ere you did this, you whore!
 Thou'dst tremble, to imagine, that the murder
 Of father, mother, brother, all thy race,
 Should follow, as the subject of my justice.
 CELIA. Good sir, have patience. 30

CORVINO. What couldst thou propose

Less to thyself, than in this heat of wrath,
 And stung with my dishonor, I should strike
 This steel into thee, with as many stabs,
 As thou wert gazed upon with goatish eyes?
 CELIA. Alas, sir, be appeased! I could not think 35
 My being at the window should more now
 Move your impatience, than at other times.
 CORVINO. No? not to seek and entertain a parley.
 With a known knave, before a multitude?
 You were an actor with your handkerchief, 40
 Which he most sweetly kissed in the receipt,
 And might, no doubt, return it with a letter,
 And 'point the place where you might meet; your sister's,
 Your mother's, or your aunt's might serve the turn.

8. I.e., did you arrange the appearance of Scoto deliberately to draw a crowd?

9. Copper rings and toad-stone jewelry are Corvino's sneers at the cheap and flashy dress of the mountebank, whose suit (he imagines) is made of coarse brown burlap ("hearse-cloth") prettied up with embroidery.

1. Massage for the womb.

2. I.e., both on the man and on the stage.

3. A kind of guitar, with which she could set up with the mountebank as whore and pimp ("dealer"). "Lady Vanity" is a stock figure out of the old morality plays.

4. In the event of her infidelity, Celia's dowry would be forfeited to her husband. "I'm a Dutchman": the stolidity, not to say complacency, of Dutch men was a common theme of satire—Italians, on the other hand, were reputed to be fiercely jealous.

CELIA. Why, dear sir, when do I make these excuses,
Or ever stir abroad, but to the church?
And that so seldom—

CORVINO. Well, it shall be less;
And thy restraint before was liberty
To what I now decree: and therefore mark me.
First, I will have this bawdy light dammed up;⁵
And till't be done, some two or three yards off,
I'll chalk a line, o'er which if thou but chance
To set thy desperate foot, more hell, more horror,
More wild remorseless rage shall seize on thee,
Than on a conjuror, that had heedless left
His circle's safety ere his devil was laid.⁶
Then here's a lock which I will hang upon thee,
And, now I think on't, I will keep thee backwards;
Thy lodging shall be backwards; thy walks backwards;
Thy prospect, all be backwards; and no pleasure,
That thou shalt know but backwards. Nay, since you force
My honest nature, know, it is your own,
Being too open, makes me use you thus.
Since you will not contain your subtle nostrils
In a sweet room, but they must snuff the air
Of rank and sweaty passengers. [Knocking within.]—One knocks.

Away, and be not seen, pain of thy life;
Nor look toward the window: if thou dost—
Nay, stay, hear this: let me not prosper, whore,
But I will make thee an anatomy,⁷
Dissect thee mine own self, and read a lecture
Upon thee to the city, and in public.

Away!—[Exit CELIA.] Who's there? [Enter SERVANT.]
SERVANT. 'Tis signor Mosca, sir.

SCENE 6

CORVINO. Let him come in. [Exit SERVANT.] His master's dead:
there's yet

Some good to help the bad. [Enter MOSCA.] My Mosca, welcome!

I guess your news.

MOSCA. I fear you cannot, sir.

CORVINO. Is't not his death?

MOSCA. Rather the contrary.

CORVINO. Not his recovery?

MOSCA. Yes, sir.

CORVINO. I am cursed,

I am bewitched, my crosses meet to vex me.

5. I.e., brick up the window.

6. When a warlock raised the devil, he was well advised to draw around himself a magic circle, over which the devil could not step.

7. A skeleton hung up in a medical laboratory for demonstration purposes.

How? how? how? how?

MOSCA.

Why, sir, with Scoto's oil!

Corbaccio and Voltore brought of it,
Whilst I was busy in an inner room——

CORVINO. Death! that damned mountebank! but for the law 10

Now, I could kill the rascal: it cannot be,
His oil should have that virtue.⁸ Have not I Known him a common rogue, come fiddling in
To the osteria,⁹ with a tumbling whore,
And, when he has done all his forced tricks, been glad 15
Of a poor spoonful of dead wine, with flies in't?
It cannot be. All his ingredients

Are a sheep's gall, a roasted bitch's marrow,
Some few sod¹ earwigs, pounded caterpillars,
A little capon's grease, and fasting spittle: 20
I know them to a dram.

MOSCA.

I know not, sir;

But some on't, there, they poured into his ears,
Some in his nostrils, and recovered him;
Applying but the fricace.²

CORVINO.

Pox o' that fricace!

MOSCA. And since, to seem the more officious 25

And flattering of his health, there, they have had,
At extreme fees, the college of physicians
Consulting on him, how they might restore him;
Where one would have a cataplasm³ of spices,
Another a flayed ape clapped to his breast, 30

A third would have it a dog, a fourth an oil,
With wild cats' skins; at last, they all resolved
That, to preserve him, was no other means,
But some young woman must be straight sought out,
Lusty, and full of juice, to sleep by him; 35

And to this service, most unhappily,
And most unwillingly, am I now employed,
Which here I thought to pre-acquaint you with,
For your advice, since it concerns you most,
Because I would not do that thing might cross 40
Your ends, on whom I have my whole dependence, sir.
Yet, if I do it not, they may delate⁴

My slackness to my patron, work me out
Of his opinion; and there all your hopes,
Ventures, or whatsoever, are all frustrate! 45

I do but tell you, sir. Besides, they are all
Now striving, who shall first present him; therefore—
I could entreat you, briefly conclude somewhat;
Prevent⁵ them if you can.

8. Efficacy.

9. The Italian word for "tavern."

1. Boiled; fasting spittle: as it implies, spit taken from a hungry man.

2. I.e., all they had to do was rub it in.

3. Poultice.

4. Denounce, complain of.

5. Forestall.

CORVINO. Death to my hopes,
This is my villainous fortune! Best to hire
Some common courtesan. 50

MOSCA. Ay, I thought on that, sir;
But they are all so subtle, full of art,
And age again doting and flexible,
So as—I cannot tell—we may, perchance,
Light on a quean⁶ may cheat us all. 55

CORVINO. 'Tis true.

MOSCA. No, no: it must be one that has no tricks, sir,
Some simple thing, a creature made unto it;
Some wench you may command. Have you no kinswoman?
God's so—Think, think, think, think, think, think, sir.
One o' the doctors offered there his daughter. 60

CORVINO. How!

MOSCA. Yes, signor Lupo,⁷ the physician.

CORVINO. His daughter!

MOSCA. And a virgin, sir. Why, alas,
He knows the state of's body, what it is;
That nought can warm his blood, sir, but a fever;
Nor any incantation raise his spirit: 65
A long forgetfulness hath seized that part.
Besides, sir, who shall know it? some one or two—

CORVINO. I pray thee give me leave. [Walks aside.] If any man
But I had had this luck—The thing in itself,
I know, is nothing—Wherefore should not I 70
As well command my blood and my affections,
As this dull doctor? In the point of honor,
The cases are all one of wife and daughter.

MOSCA. [aside] I hear him coming.

CORVINO. She shall do't: 'tis done.
Slight! if this doctor, who is not engaged,
Unless 't be for his counsel, which is nothing, 75
Offer his daughter, what should I, that am
So deeply in? I will prevent him: Wretch!
Covetous wretch!⁸—Mosca, I have determined.

MOSCA. How, sir? 80

CORVINO. We'll make all sure. The party you wot of⁹
Shall be mine own wife, Mosca.

MOSCA. Sir, the thing,
But that I would not seem to counsel you,
I should have motioned¹ to you, at the first:
And, make your count, you have cut all their throats.
Why, 'tis directly taking a possession! 85
And in his next fit, we may let him go.
'Tis but to pull the pillow from his head,
And he is throttled: it had been done before,
But for your scrupulous doubts.

6. Trollop.

7. Doctor Wolf.

8. The words are spoken by Corvino to himself about himself.

9. Know about.

1. Suggested.

- CORVINO. Ay, a plague on't,
 My conscience fools my wit! Well, I'll be brief, 90
 And so be thou, lest they should be before us:
 Go home, prepare him, tell him with what zeal
 And willingness I do it; swear it was
 On the first hearing, as thou mayst do truly,
 Mine own free motion. 95
- MOSCA. Sir, I warrant you,
 I'll so possess him with it, that the rest
 Of his starved clients shall be banished all,
 And only you received. But come not, sir,
 Until I send, for I have something else
 To ripen for your good, you must not know it. 100
- CORVINO. But do not you forget to send now.
- MOSCA. Fear not. [Exit MOSCA.]

SCENE 7

- CORVINO. Where are you, wife? my Celia! wife!
 [Enter CELIA, weeping.]
- What, blubbering?
 Come, dry those tears. I think thou thought'st me in earnest?
 Ha! by this light I talked so but to try thee.
 Methinks, the lightness of the occasion
 Should have confirmed thee.² Come, I am not jealous. 5
- CELIA. No?
- CORVINO. Faith I am not, I, nor never was;
 It is a poor unprofitable humor.
 Do not I know, if women have a will,
 They'll do 'gainst all the watches of the world,
 And that the fiercest spies are tamed with gold?³ 10
 Tut, I am confident in thee, thou shalt see't;
 And see, I'll give thee cause too, to believe it.
 Come, kiss me. Go, and make thee ready straight,
 In all thy best attire, thy choicest jewels,
 Put them all on, and, with them, thy best looks: 15
 We are invited to a solemn feast,
 At old Volpone's, where it shall appear
 How far I am free from jealousy or fear. [Exeunt.]

Act III

SCENE 1. A Street.

- [Enter MOSCA.]
- MOSCA. I fear, I shall begin to grow in love
 With my dear self, and my most prosperous parts,
 They do so spring and burgeon; I can feel
 A whimsy in my blood: I know not how,
 Success hath made me wanton. I could skip 5

2. You should have seen I was joking because the occasion was so trivial.

3. Immemorial commonplaces on the lust and treachery of women.

Out of my skin, now, like a subtle snake,
 I am so limber. O! your parasite⁴
 Is a most precious thing, dropped from above,
 Not bred 'mongst clods and clodpoles, here on earth.
 I muse the mystery⁵ was not made a science, 10
 It is so liberally professed! almost
 All the wise world is little else, in nature,
 But parasites or sub-parasites. And, yet,
 I mean not those that have your bare town-art,
 To know who's fit to feed them; have no house, 15
 No family, no care, and therefore mold
 Tales for men's ears, to bait⁶ that sense; or get Kitchen-invention, and some stale receipts
 To please the belly, and the groin; nor those, 20
 With their court dog-tricks, that can fawn and flee,
 Make their revénue out of legs and faces,⁷
 Echo my lord, and lick away a moth:
 But your fine elegant rascal, that can rise,
 And stoop, almost together, like an arrow;
 Shoot through the air as nimbly as a star; 25
 Turn short as doth a swallow; and be here,
 And there, and here, and yonder, all at once;
 Present to any humor, all occasion;
 And change a visor,⁸ swifter than a thought!
 This is the creature had the art born with him; 30
 Toils not to learn it, but doth practice it
 Out of most excellent nature: and such sparks
 Are the true parasites, others but their zanies.

SCENE 2

[Enter BONARIO.]

MOSCA. Who's this? Bonario, old Corbaccio's son?
 The person I was bound to seek.—Fair sir,
 You are happily met.

BONARIO. That cannot be by thee.

MOSCA. Why, sir?

BONARIO. Nay, pray thee know thy way, and leave me:

I would be loath to interchange discourse 5
 With such a mate as thou art.

MOSCA. Courteous sir,

Scorn not my poverty.

BONARIO. Not I, by heaven;

But thou shalt give me leave to hate thy baseness.

4. The comedies of Terence and Plautus, with which Jonson was thoroughly familiar, swarm with parasites; the very idea of the relationship was repugnant to his sturdy, Stoic independence of spirit.
 5. Craft. Mosca is playing on the idea of the liberal arts and sciences.

6. The parasite who talks for a living "baits" (teases, gratifies) the sense of hearing; others gratify the bellies and groins of their patrons.

7. Scrapings and looks of admiration.

8. I.e., the mask of his expression.

MOSCA. Baseness!

BONARIO. Ay; answer me, is not thy sloth
Sufficient argument? thy flattery?
Thy means of feeding?

10

MOSCA. Heaven be good to me!

These imputations are too common, sir,
And easily stuck on virtue when she's poor.
You are unequal to me, and howe'er
Your sentence may be righteous, yet you are not,
That, ere you know me, thus proceed in censure:
St. Mark bear witness 'gainst you, 'tis inhuman. [Weeps.]

15

BONARIO. [aside] What! does he weep! the sign is soft and good;
I do repent me that I was so harsh.

MOSCA. 'Tis true, that, swayed by a strong necessity

20

I am enforced to eat my careful bread
With too much obsequy;⁹ 'tis true, beside,
That I am fain to spin mine own poor raiment
Out of my mere observance,¹ being not born
To a free fortune: but that I have done
Base offices, in rending friends asunder,
Dividing families, betraying counsels,
Whispering false lies, or mining men with praises,
Trained their credulity with perjuries,
Corrupted chastity, or am in love
With mine own tender ease, but would not rather Prove the most rugged, and laborious course,
That might redeem my present estimation,
Let me here perish, in all hope of goodness.

25

30

BONARIO. [Aside.] This cannot be a personated passion.—

35

I was to blame, so to mistake thy nature;
Prithee forgive me and speak out thy business.

MOSCA. Sir, it concerns you; and though I may seem,

At first to make a main offense in manners,
And in my gratitude unto my master;
Yet, for the pure love, which I bear all right,
And hatred of the wrong, I must reveal it.
This very hour your father is in purpose
To disinherit you—

40

BONARIO. How!

MOSCA. And thrust you forth,

As a mere stranger to his blood; 'tis true, sir.

45

The work no way engageth me, but, as
I claim an interest in the general state
Of goodness and true virtue, which I hear
T'abound in you; and, for which mere respect,
Without a second aim, sir, I have done it.

50

BONARIO. This tale hath lost thee much of the late trust
Thou hadst with me; it is impossible.

9. Flattery, obsequiousness.

1. Service.

I know not how to lend it any thought,
 My father should be so unnatural.

MOSCA. It is a confidence that well becomes 55
 Your piety; and formed, no doubt, it is
 From your own simple innocence: which makes
 Your wrong more monstrous and abhorred. But, sir,
 I now will tell you more. This very minute,
 It is, or will be doing; and, if you 60
 Shall be but pleased to go with me, I'll bring you,
 I dare not say where you shall see, but where
 Your ear shall be a witness of the deed;
 Hear yourself written bastard, and professed
 The common issue of the earth.² 65

BONARIO. I'm 'mazed.

MOSCA. Sir, if I do it not, draw your just sword,
 And score your vengeance on my front and face;
 Mark me your villain: you have too much wrong,
 And I do suffer for you, sir. My heart
 Weeps blood in anguish— 70

BONARIO. Lead; I follow thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 3. A Room in VOLPONE'S House.

[Enter VOLPONE.]

VOLPONE. Mosca stays long, methinks. Bring forth your sports,
 And help to make the wretched time more sweet.

[Enter NANO, ANDROGYNO, and CASTRONE.]

NANO. Dwarf, fool, and eunuch, well met here we be.
 A question it were now, whether of us three,
 Being all the known delicatess³ of a rich man, 5
 In pleasing him, claim the precedency can?

CASTRONE. I claim for myself.

ANDROGYNO. And so doth the fool.

NANO. 'Tis foolish indeed: let me set you both to school.
 First for your dwarf, he's little and witty,
 And every thing, as it is little, is pretty; 10
 Else why do men say to a creature of my shape,
 So soon as they see him, 'It's a pretty little ape?'
 And why a pretty ape, but for pleasing imitation
 Of greater men's actions, in a ridiculous fashion?
 Beside, this feat⁴ body of mine doth not crave 15
 Half the meat, drink, and cloth, one of your bulks will have.
 Admit your fool's face be the mother of laughter,
 Yet, for his brain, it must always come after:
 And though that do feed him, it's a pitiful case,
 His body is beholding to such a bad face. [Knocking with-
 in.] 20

VOLPONE. Who's there? my couch; away! look, Nano, see:

2. A man without recognized father was known to the Romans as a filius terrae, "son of earth."

3. Favorites.
 4. Trim.

[Exeunt ANDROGYNO and CASTRONE.]Give me my caps, first—go, enquire. [Exit NANO.] Now,

Cupid

Send it be Mosca, and with fair return!

NANO. [within] It is the beauteous madam—

VOLPONE.

Would-be—is it?

25

NANO. The same.

VOLPONE.

Now torment on me! Squire her in;

For she will enter, or dwell here forever:

Nay quickly. [Retires to his couch.]—That my fit were past!

I fear

A second hell too, that my loathing this

Will quite expel my appetite to the other.⁵

Would she were taking now her tedious leave.

30

Lord, how it threatens me what I am to suffer!

SCENE 4

[Enter NANO with LADY POLITIC WOULD-BE.]

LADY POLITIC. I thank you, good sir. 'Pray you signify

Unto your patron, I am here. This band

Shows not my neck enough. I trouble you, sir.

Let me request you, bid one of my women

Come hither to me. In good faith, I am dressed

5

Most favorably to-day. It is no matter;

'Tis well enough.⁶[Enter 1st WAITING-WOMAN.]Look, see, these petulant⁷ things,

How they have done this!

VOLPONE. [aside]

I do feel the fever

Entering in at mine ears; O, for a charm,

To fright it hence!

10

LADY POLITIC.

Come nearer: is this curl

In his right place? or this? Why is this higher

Than all the rest? You have not washed your eyes, yet!

Or do they not stand even in your head?

Where is your fellow? call her. [Exit 1st WOMAN.]NANO. [aside]

Now, St. Mark

Deliver us! anon, she'll beat her women,

15

Because her nose is red.

[Re-enter 1st with 2nd WOMAN.]

LADY POLITIC.

I pray you, view

This tire,⁸ forsooth: are all things apt, or no?

1 WOMAN. One hair a little, here, sticks out, forsooth.

LADY POLITIC. Doesn't so, forsooth! and where was your dear sight,

When it did so, forsooth!⁹ What now! bird-eyed?

20

5. I.e., his loathing for Lady Politic may destroy his appetite for Celia.

6. The theme of talkative women was ancient and traditional; Jonson got a lot of Lady Politic's chatter from a Syrian sophist of the 4th century A.D., Libanius, who wrote a talkative book all about talkative women.

7. Troublesome.

8. Headdress, arrangement of hair.

9. She strikes at them both, and jeers at their flinching. "Bird-eyed": sharp of sight.

And you, too? Pray you, both approach and mend it.
 Now, by that light, I muse you're not ashamed!
 I, that have preached these things so oft unto you,
 Read you the principles, argued all the grounds,
 Disputed every fitness, every grace,

25

Called you to counsel of so frequent dressings—

NANO. [aside] More carefully than of your fame or honor.

LADY POLITIC. Made you acquainted, what an ample dowry
 The knowledge of these things would be unto you,
 Able, alone, to get you noble husbands
 At your return; and you thus to neglect it!

30

Besides, you seeing what a curious¹ nation
 The Italians are, what will they say of me?
The English lady cannot dress herself.—

Here's a fine imputation to our country!

35

Well, go your ways, and stay in the next room.

This fucus² was too coarse too; it's no matter.

Good sir, you'll give them entertainment?

[Exeunt NANO and WAITING-WOMEN.]

VOLPONE. The storm comes toward me.

LADY POLITIC. [goes to the couch] How does my Volpone?

VOLPONE. Troubled with noise; I cannot sleep; I dreamt

40

That a strange fury entered, now, my house,
 And, with the dreadful tempest of her breath,
 Did cleave my roof asunder.

LADY POLITIC. Believe me, and I

Had the most fearful dream, could I remember't—

VOLPONE. [aside] Out on my fate! I have given her the occasion

45

How to torment me: she will tell me hers.

LADY POLITIC. Methought, the golden mediocrity,³

Polite, and delicate—

VOLPONE O, if you do love me,

No more; I sweat, and suffer, at the mention

Of any dream: feel how I tremble yet.

50

LADY POLITIC. Alas, good soul! the passion of the heart.⁴

Seed-pearl were good now, boiled with syrup of apples,

Tincture of gold, and coral, citron-pills,

Your elecampane root, myrobalanes⁵—

VOLPONE. [aside] Ay me, I have ta'en a grass-hopper by the wing!

55

LADY POLITIC. Burnt silk, and amber; you have muscadell

Good in the house—

VOLPONE.

You will not drink, and part?

LADY POLITIC. No, fear not that. I doubt we shall not get

Some English saffron, half a dram would serve;

Your sixteen cloves, a little musk, dried mints,

60

1. Fastidious, particular.

2. Makeup. The last sentence is spoken to Nano.

3. I.e., the golden rule or the golden mean.

4. Heartburn.

5. An Oriental drug used for diarrhea. "Elecampane": a stimulant.

Bugloss,⁶ and barley-meal—

VOLPONE. [aside] She's in again!

Before I feigned diseases, now I have one.

LADY POLITIC. And these applied with a right scarlet cloth.

VOLPONE. [aside] Another flood of words! a very torrent!

LADY POLITIC. Shall I, sir, make you a poultice?

VOLPONE. No, no, no;

I'm very well, you need prescribe no more.

LADY POLITIC. I have a little studied physic; but now,

I'm all for music, save, in the forenoons,

An hour or two for painting. I would have

A lady, indeed, to have all letters and arts,

Be able to discourse, to write, to paint,

But principal, as Plato holds, your music

(And so does wise Pythagoras, I take it)

Is your true rapture; when there is consent⁷

In face, in voice, and clothes: and is, indeed,

Our sex's chiefest ornament.

VOLPONE. The poet

As old in time as Plato, and as knowing,

Says, that your highest female grace is silence.⁸

LADY POLITIC. Which of your poets? Petrarch, or Tasso, or Dante?

Guarini? Ariosto? Aretine?

Cieco di Hadria?⁹ I have read them all.

VOLPONE. [aside] Is everything a cause to my destruction?

LADY POLITIC. I think I have two or three of them about me.

VOLPONE. [aside] The sun, the sea, will sooner both stand still

Than her eternal tongue! nothing can 'scape it.

LADY POLITIC. Here's Pastor Fido—¹

VOLPONE. [aside] Profess obstinate silence;

That's now my safest.

LADY POLITIC. All our English writers,

I mean such as are happy in th' Italian,

Will deign to steal out of this author, mainly;

Almost as much as from Montagnié:²

He has so modern and facile a vein,

Fitting the time, and catching the court-earl

Your Petrarch is more passionate, yet he,

In days of sonneting, trusted them with much:

Dante is hard, and few can understand him.

But, for a desperate wit, there's Aretine;³

6. A common herb used as a mild stimulant.

7. Harmony, concord.

8. The poet as old as Plato is Sophocles (Ajax, line 293).

9. All Lady Politic's poets are well known today except Cieco di Hadria ("the blind man of Adria"), Luigi Groto; he was an actor as well as a poet, and made a tremendous impression by playing Oedipus (in Giustiniani's version of Sophocles' play) at the opening of Palladio's Teatro Olimpico at Vicenza (1585).

1. A pastoral by G. B. Guarini (1590), internationally popular.

2. Montaigne's name tended to be given three syllables by English tongues; his Essays, first published in 1580, were translated into English by Jonson's friend John Florio (1603).

3. Aretino's dirty poems, illustrated by Giulio Romano and engraved by M. Raimondi, were internationally notorious.

Only, his pictures are a little obscene—

You mark me not?

VOLPONE. Alas, my mind's perturbed.

LADY POLITIC. Why, in such cases, we must cure ourselves,
Make use of our philosophy— 100

VOLPONE. Oh me!

LADY POLITIC. And as we find our passions do rebel,
Encounter them with reason, or divert them,
By giving scope unto some other humor
Of lesser danger; as in politic bodies,
There's nothing more doth overwhelm the judgment, 105
And cloud the understanding, than too much
Settling and fixing, and, as 'twere, subsiding
Upon one object. For the incorporating
Of these same outward things, into that part,
Which we call mental, leaves some certain *faces*⁴ 110
That stop the organs, and, as Plato says,
Assassinate our knowledge.

VOLPONE. [aside] Now, the spirit
Of patience help me!

LADY POLITIC. Come, in faith, I must Visit you more a days, and make you well;
Laugh and be lusty. 115

VOLPONE. [aside] My good angel save me!

LADY POLITIC. There was but one sole man in all the world,
With whom I e'er could sympathize; and he Would lie you, often,⁵ three, four hours together
To hear me speak; and be sometime so rapt,
As he would answer me quite from the purpose, 120
Like you, and you are like him, just. I'll discourse,
An't be but only, sir, to bring you asleep,
How we did spend our time and loves together,
For some six years.

VOLPONE. Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!

LADY POLITIC. For we were coetanei,⁶ and brought up— 125

VOLPONE. Some power, some fate, some fortune rescue me!

SCENE 5

[Enter MOSCA.]

MOSCA. God save you, madam!

LADY POLITIC. Good sir.

VOLPONE. Mosca! welcome,

Welcome to my redemption!

MOSCA. Why, sir?

VOLPONE. Oh,

Rid me of this my torture, quickly, there;

My madam, with the everlasting voice:

The bells, in time of pestilence, ne'er made

Like noise, or were in that perpetual motion! 5

4. Traces. Lady Politic is into orthodox, but very verbose, psychology.

5. Would often lie (if you please).

6. Of an age.

The cock-pit comes not near it.⁷ All my house,
 But now, steamed like a bath with her thick breath.
 A lawyer could not have been heard; nor scarce
 Another woman, such a hail of words
 She has let fall. For hell's sake, rid her hence.

10

MOSCA. Has she presented?

VOLPONE. O, I do not care;
 I'll take her absence, upon any price,
 With any loss.

MOSCA. Madam—

LADY POLITIC. I have brought your patron
 A toy, a cap here, of mine own work.

15

MOSCA. 'Tis well.

I had forgot to tell you, I saw your knight,
 Where you would little think it—

LADY POLITIC. Where?

MOSCA. Marry,
 Where yet, if you make haste, you may apprehend him,
 Rowing upon the water in a gondola,
 With the most cunning courtesan of Venice.

20

LADY POLITIC. Is't true?

MOSCA. Pursue them, and believe your eyes:
 Leave me to make your gift. [Exit LADY POLITIC hastily.]—I knew 'twould take:
 For, lightly,⁸ they that use themselves most license,
 Are still most jealous.

VOLPONE. Mosca, hearty thanks,
 For thy quick fiction, and delivery of me.
 Now to my hopes, what sayest thou?
 [Re-enter LADY POLITIC.]

25

LADY POLITIC. But do you hear, sir?—

VOLPONE. Again! I fear a paroxysm.

LADY POLITIC. Which way
 Rowed they together?

MOSCA. Toward the Rialto.

LADY POLITIC. I pray you lend me your dwarf.

MOSCA. I pray you take him—
 [Exit LADY POLITIC.]

30

Your hopes, sir, are like happy blossoms, fair,
 And promise timely fruit, if you will stay
 But the maturing; keep you at your couch,
 Corbaccio will arrive straight, with the will;
 When he is gone, I'll tell you more.

[Exit.]

VOLPONE. My blood,
 My spirits are returned; I am alive:
 And, like your wanton gamester at primero,⁹

35

7. When the plague struck, church bells were constantly tolling; at the cockpit spectators constantly shouted bets and encouragement to the birds.
 8. Commonly (an old sense of the word).

9. An early form of the Spanish card game later known as ombre (the game played in Pope's Rape of the Lock). The phrases "go less," "draw," and "encounter" are all used in primero.

Whose thought had whispered to him, not go less,
Methinks I lie, and draw—for an encounter.

[The bed-curtains close upon VOLPONE.]

SCENE 6. The Passage Leading to VOLPONE'S Chamber.

[Enter MOSCA and BONARIO.]

MOSCA. Sir, here concealed, [shows him a closet] you may hear all. But, pray you,

Have patience, sir. [Knocking within.]—The same's your father knocks:

I am compelled to leave you. [Exit.]

BONARIO. Do so. Yet

Cannot my thought imagine this a truth. [Goes into the closet.]

SCENE 7. Another Part of the Same.

[Enter MOSCA and CORVINO, CELIA following.]

MOSCA. Death on me! you are come too soon, what meant you?
Did not I say, I would send?

CORVINO. Yes, but I feared

You might forget it, and then they prevent us.

MOSCA. [aside] Prevent! did e'er man haste so, for his horns?

A courtier would not ply it so, for a place.

—Well, now there is no helping it, stay here;

I'll presently return.

[Crosses stage to BONARIO.]

CORVINO. Where are you, Celia?

You know not wherefore I have brought you hither?

CELIA. Not well, except you told me.

CORVINO. Now, I will: [He leads her apart, and whispers to her.]

Hark hither.

MOSCA. [to BONARIO] Sir your father hath sent word,

It will be half an hour ere he come;

And therefore, if you please to walk the while

Into that gallery—at the upper end,

There are some books to entertain the time;

And I'll take care no man shall come unto you, sir.

BONARIO. Yes, I will stay there. [aside]—I do doubt this fellow. [Exit BONARIO.]

MOSCA. [Looking after him] There; he is far enough; he can hear nothing:

And, for his father, I can keep him off. [Exit.]

CORVINO. [to CELIA] Nay, now, there is no starting back, and therefore.

Resolve upon it: I have so decreed.

It must be done. Nor would I move't afore,

Because I would avoid all shifts and tricks,

That might deny me.

CELIA. Sir, let me beseech you,

Affect not these strange trials;¹ if you doubt
 My chastity, why, lock me up forever; 25
 Make me the heir of darkness. Let me live,
 Where I may please your fears, if not your trust.
 CORVINO. Believe it, I have no such humor, I.
 All that I speak I mean; yet I'm not mad;
 Not horn-mad, see you? Go to, show yourself 30
 Obedient, and a wife.

CELIA. O heaven!
 CORVINO. I say it,
 Do so.

CELIA. Was this the train?²

CORVINO. I've told you reasons;
 What the physicians have set down; how much
 It may concern me; what my engagements are;
 My means; and the necessity of those means, 35
 For my recovery:³ wherefore, if you be Loyal, and mine, be won, respect my venture.⁴

CELIA. Before your honor?

CORVINO. Honor! tut, a breath;⁵
 There's no such thing in nature. A mere term
 Invented to awe fools. What is my gold 40
 The worse for touching, clothes for being looked on?
 Why, this's no more. An old decrepit wretch,
 That has no sense, no sinew; takes his meat
 With others' fingers; only knows to gape,
 When you do scald his gums;⁶ a voice; a shadow; 45
 And what can this man hurt you?

CELIA. [aside] Lord! what spirit
 Is this hath entered him?

CORVINO. And for your fame,
 That's such a jig;⁷ as if I would go tell it,
 Cry it on the Piazza! who shall know it,
 But he that cannot speak it, and this fellow,⁸ 50
 Whose lips are in my pocket? save yourself
 (If you'll proclaim't, you may), I know no other
 Should come to know it.

CELIA. Are heaven and saints then nothing?
 Will they be blind or stupid?

CORVINO. How!

CELIA. Good sir,
 Be jealous still, emulate them;⁹ and think 55
 What hate they burn with toward every sin.

1. Don't tempt me so.

2. Is this what you had in mind all the time?

3. Corvino is evidently in financial straits.

4. In the sense of a commercial venture.

5. Like Falstaff (1 Henry IV V.i), Corvino disposes easily of honor.

6. I.e., the old man has to be fed by others, and doesn't even know enough to open his own mouth for food.

7. Farce, joke.

8. "He that cannot speak it": Volpone; "this fellow": Mosca.

9. I.e., God and the saints, who hate sin.

- CORVINO. I grant you; if I thought it were a sin,
I would not urge you. Should I offer this
To some young Frenchman, or hot Tuscan blood
That had read Aretine,¹ conned all his prints, 60
Knew every quirk within lust's labyrinth,
And were professed critic in lechery;
And I would look upon him, and applaud him,
This were a sin: but here, 'tis contrary,
A pious work, mere charity, for physic, 65
And honest polity, to assure mine own.²
- CELIA. O heaven! canst thou suffer such a change?
- VOLPONE. Thou art mine honor, Mosca, and my pride,
My joy, my tickling, my delight! Go bring them.
- MOSCA. [advancing] Please you draw near, sir. 70
- CORVINO. Come on, what—
You will not be rebellious? by that light—
- MOSCA. Sir,
Signor Corvino, here, is come to see you—
- VOLPONE. Oh!
Mosca. And hearing of the consultation had,
So lately, for your health, is come to offer,
Or rather, sir, to prostitute— 75
- CORVINO. Thanks, sweet Mosca.
- MOSCA. Freely, unasked, or unentreated—
- CORVINO. Well.
- MOSCA. As the true fervent instance of his love,
His own most fair and proper wife, the beauty
Only of price in Venice—
- CORVINO. 'Tis well urged.
- MOSCA. To be your comfortress, and to preserve you. 80
- VOLPONE. Alas, I'm past, already! Pray you, thank him
For his good care and promptness; but for that,
'Tis a vain labor e'en to fight 'gainst heaven;
Applying fire to stone—uh, uh, uh, uh! [Coughing.]
Making a dead leaf grow again. I take 85
His wishes gently, though; and you may tell him,
What I have done for him: marry, my state is hopeless.
Will him to pray for me; and to use his fortune
With reverence, when he comes to't.
- MOSCA. Do you hear, sir?
Go to him with your wife. 90
- CORVINO. Heart of my father!
Wilt thou persist thus? come, I pray thee, come.
Thou seest 'tis nothing. Celia! By this hand,
I shall grow violent. Come, do't, I say.

1 Aretino was a notorious pornographer.

2. "Pious work" means it's good for your soul, "mere charity" says it's kindness to the neighbor, "for physic" says it's for the benefit of his health, "honest policy" means it's prudent self-interest, and "to assure mine own" gets down to the basic motivation—greed.

CELIA. Sir, kill me, rather: I will take down poison,
Eat burning coals, do anything.

95

CORVINO. Be damned!
Heart, I will drag thee hence, home, by the hair;
Cry thee a strumpet through the streets; rip up
Thy mouth unto thine ears; and slit thy nose,
Like a raw rochet!³—Do not tempt me; come,
Yield, I am loath—Death! I will buy some slave
Whom I will kill, and bind thee to him, alive;
And at my window hang you forth, devising
Some monstrous crime which I, in capital letters,
Will eat into thy flesh with aquafortis,
And burning corsives,⁴ on this stubborn breast.
Now, by the blood thou hast incensed, I'll do it!

100

105

CELIA. Sir, what you please you may, I am your martyr.

CORVINO. Be not thus obstinate, I have not deserved it:

Think who it is entreats you. 'Prithee, sweet;

Good faith, thou shalt have jewels, gowns, attires,

110

What thou wilt think, and ask. Do but go kiss him.

Or touch him, but. For my sake. At my suit.

This once. No? not! I shall remember this.

Will you disgrace me thus? Do you thirst my undoing?

MOSCA. Nay, gentle lady, be advised.

115

CORVINO.

No, no.

She has watched her time. Ods precious, this is scurvy,⁵

'Tis very scurvy; and you are—

MOSCA.

Nay, good sir.

CORVINO. An arrant locust, by heaven, a locust!⁶

Crocodile, that hast thy tears prepared,

Expecting, how thou'lt bid them flow—

120

MOSCA.

Nay, pray you, sir!

She will consider.

CELIA.

Would my life would serve

To satisfy.

CORVINO. S'death! if she would but speak to him,

And save my reputation, it were somewhat;

But spitefully to effect my utter ruin!

MOSCA. Ay, now you have put your fortune in her hands.

125

Why, i'faith, it is her modesty; I must quit⁷ her.

If you were absent, she would be more coming;

I know it, and dare undertake for her.

What woman can before her husband? Pray you,

Let us depart, and leave her here.

130

CORVINO.

Sweet Celia,

Thou mayst redeem all, yet; I'll say no more:

If not, esteem yourself as lost. Nay, stay there.

3. Like a fish.

4. With acids and corrosives.

5. I.e., by God's precious blood, this is villainous.

6. I.e., a destructive plague. The lore of the crocodile says it sheds deceitful tears.

7. Acquit; coming: forthcoming.

[Shuts the door, and exit with MOSCA.]

CELIA. O God, and his good angels! whither, whither,
Is shame fled human breasts? that with such ease,
Men dare put off your honors, and their own? 135
Is that, which ever was a cause of life,
Now placed beneath the basest circumstance,
And modesty an exile made, for money?

VOLPONE. Ay, in Corvino, and such earth-fed minds, [leaping from his couch]

That never tasted the true heaven of love. 140
Assure thee, Celia, he that would sell thee,
Only for hope of gain, and that uncertain,
He would have sold his part of Paradise
For ready money, had he met a cope-man.⁸
Why are thou 'mazed to see me thus revived? 145
Rather applaud thy beauty's miracle;
'Tis thy great work:⁹ that hath, not now alone,
But sundry times raised me, in several shapes,
And, but this morning, like a mountebank,
To see thee at thy window. Ay, before 150
I would have left my practice for thy love,
In varying figures I would have contended
With the blue Proteus, or the hornéd flood.¹
Now art thou welcome.

CELIA. Sir!

VOLPONE. Nay, fly me not.

Nor let thy false imagination 155
That I was bed-rid, make thee think I am so:
Thou shalt not find it. I am now as fresh,
As hot, as high, and in as jovial plight,
As when, in that so celebrated scene,
At recitation of our comedy, 160
For entertainment of the great Valois,²
I acted young Antinous; and attracted
The eyes and ears of all the ladies present,
To admire each graceful gesture, note, and footing.

Song³ 165

*Come, my Celia, let us prove,
While we can, the sports of love,
Time will not be ours for ever,*

8. Buyer.

9. "The great work" is always the philosopher's stone, which converts base metals to gold.

1. Proteus was a sea god who could take any shape at will; Virgil calls him "blue Proteus." Achelous was a river god with whom Hercules fought for possession of Deianira; he fought first as a river, then as a snake, and finally as a bull (hence "the hornéd flood"), but was beaten in all three shapes

(Ovid, Metamorphoses IX).

2. Henry of Valois, Duke of Anjou, visited Venice in 1574, and was entertained with splendid festivities. Antinous was the favorite (catamite) of Emperor Hadrian, in Roman antiquity.
3. The opening lines are adapted from Catullus, boldest and bawdiest of Latin lyricists, and the whole song emphasises the theme of "carpe diem" (clutch the fleeting moment), which is a common erotic incitement.

He, at length, our good will sever;
Spend not then his gifts in vain: 170
Suns that set may rise again;
But if once we lose this light,
'Tis with us perpetual night.
Why should we defer our joys?
Fame and rumor are but toys. 175
Cannot we delude the eyes
Of a few poor household spies?
Or his easier ears beguile,
Thus removed by our wife?—
'Tis no sin love's fruits to steal; 180
But the sweet thefts to reveal,
To be taken, to be seen,
These have crimes accounted been.

CELIA. Some serene⁴ blast me, or dire lightning strike
 This my offending face! 185

VOLPONE. Why droops my Celia?
 Thou hast, in place of a base husband, found
 A worthy lover: use thy fortune well,
 With secrecy and pleasure. See, behold,
 What thou art queen of; not in expectation,
 As I feed others: but possessed and crowned. 190
 See here a rope of pearl; and each, more orient
 Than that the brave Egyptian queen caroused:⁵
 Dissolve and drink them. See, a carbuncle⁶
 May put out both the eyes of our St. Mark;
 A diamond, would have bought Lollia Paulina, 195
 When she came in like star-light, hid with jewels,
 That were the spoils of provinces;⁷ take these,
 And wear, and lose them: yet remains an earring
 To purchase them again, and this whole state.
 A gem but worth a private patrimony, 200
 Is nothing: we will eat such at a meal.
 The heads of parrots, tongues of nightingales,
 The brains of peacocks, and of ostriches,
 Shall be our food: and, could we get the phoenix,⁸
 Though nature lost her kind, she were our dish. 205

CELIA. Good sir, these things might move a mind affected
 With such delights; but I, whose innocence
 Is all I can think wealthy, or worth th'enjoying,
 And which, once lost, I have nought to lose beyond it,
 Cannot be taken with these sensual baits: 210

4. Mist from heaven, malignant influence.

5. According to a common story, Cleopatra dissolved a precious pearl in wine and during a banquet with Antony drank it up.

6. Ruby.

7. Lollia Paulina, wife of a Roman governor, is said by Pliny (Natural History IX.117) to have worn in her hair jewels enough to represent the loot of several provinces.

8. Only one phoenix is said to be alive at any one time; eating him would eradicate the species.

If you have conscience—

VOLPONE.

'Tis the beggar's virtue;

If thou hast wisdom, hear me, Celia.

Thy baths shall be the juice of gilly-flowers,⁹

Spirit of roses, and of violets,

The milk of unicorns, and panthers' breath

215

Gathered in bags, and mixed with Cretan wines.¹

Our drink shall be preparéd gold and amber;

Which we will take, until my roof whirl round

With the vertigo: and my dwarf shall dance,

220

My eunuch sing, my fool make up the antic,

Whilst we, in changéd shapes, act Ovid's tales,²

Thou, like Europa now, and I like Jove,

Then I like Mars, and thou like Erycine:

So, of the rest, till we have quite run through,

And wearied all the fables of the gods.

225

Then will I have thee in more modern forms,

Attiréd like some sprightly dame of France,

Brave Tuscan lady, or proud Spanish beauty;

Sometimes, unto the Persian Sophy's wife,³

Or the Grand Signor's mistress; and, for change,

230

To one of our most artful courtesans,

Or some quick Negro, or cold Russian;

And I will meet thee in as many shapes:

Where we may so transfuse our wandering souls

Out at our lips, and score up sums of pleasures, [sings]

235

That the curious shall not know

How to tell them as they flow;

And the envious, when they find

What their number is, be pined.⁴

CELIA. If you have ears that will be pierced; or eyes

240

That can be opened; a heart may be touched;

Or any part that yet sounds man about you;

If you have touch of holy saints, or heaven,

Do me the grace to let me 'scape. If not,

Be bountiful and kill me. You do know,

245

I am a creature, hither ill betrayed,

By one, whose shame I would forget it were.

If you will deign me neither of these graces,

Yet feed your wrath, sir, rather than your lust

(It is a vice comes nearer manliness),

250

And punish that unhappy crime of nature,

9. Clove-scented flowers used to flavor drinks and as a light perfume.

1. The most expensive known to Jonson's age.

2. I.e., to enact all the fables in the Metamorphoses. "Erycine" is one of the epithets of Venus.

3. The "Sophy" is the Shah of Persia, the "Grand Signor" the Sultan of Turkey.

4. Envious, depressed. The verses, once again, are adapted from Catullus.

Which you miscall my beauty; flay my face,
 Or poison it with ointments, for seducing
 Your blood to this rebellion. Rub these hands,
 With what may cause an eating leprosy, 255
 E'en to my bones and marrow: any thing,
 That may disfavor⁵ me, save in my honor—
 And I will kneel to you, pray for you, pay down
 A thousand hourly vows, sir, for your health;
 Report, and think you virtuous— 260

VOLPONE. Think me cold,
 Frozen and impotent, and so report me?
 That I had Nestor's hernia,⁶ thou wouldst think.
 I do degenerate, and abuse my nation,
 To play with opportunity thus long;
 I should have done the act, and then have parleyed. 265
 Yield, or I'll force thee. [Seizes her.]

CELIA. O! just God!

VOLPONE. In vain—

BONARIO. [rushing in] Forbear, foul ravisher! libidinous swine!
 Free the forced lady, or thou diest, impostor!
 But that I'm loath to snatch thy punishment
 Out of the hand of justice, thou shouldst yet 270
 Be made the timely sacrifice of vengeance
 Before this altar, and this dross, thy idol.
 Lady, let's quit the place, it is the den
 Of villainy; fear nought, you have a guard:
 And he, ere long, shall meet his just reward. [Exeunt BONA-
 RIO and CELIA.] 275

VOLPONE. Fall on me, roof, and bury me in ruin!
 Become my grave, that wert my shelter! O!
 I am unmasked, unspirited, undone,
 Betrayed to beggary, to infamy—

SCENE 8

[Enter MOSCA, wounded, and bleeding.]

MOSCA. Where shall I run, most wretched shame of men,
 To beat out my unlucky brains?

VOLPONE. Here, here.

What! dost thou bleed?

MOSCA. O that his well-driven sword
 Had been so courteous to have cleft me down
 Unto the navel, ere I lived to see 5
 My life, my hopes, my spirits, my patron, all
 Thus desperately engagéd, by my error!

VOLPONE. Woe on thy fortune!

MOSCA. And my follies, sir.

VOLPONE. Thou hast made me miserable.

5. Disfigure.

6. Senile impotence; the phrase is from Juvenal's sixth satire.

MOSCA. And myself, sir.
 Who would have thought he would have hearkened so? 10
 VOLPONE. What shall we do?
 MOSCA. I know not; if my heart
 Could expiate the mischance, I'd pluck it out.
 Will you be pleased to hang me? or cut my throat?
 And I'll requite you, sir. Let's die like Romans,
 Since we have lived like Grecians.⁷ [Knocking within.] 15
 VOLPONE. Hark! who's there?
 I hear some footing; officers, the Saffi,⁸
 Come to apprehend us! I do feel the brand
 Hissing already at my forehead; now
 Mine ears are boring.⁹
 MOSCA. To your couch, sir, you,
 Make that place good, however. [VOLPONE lies down, as before.]—Guilty men 20
 Suspect what they deserve still. Signor Corbaccio!

SCENE 9

[Enter CORBACCIO.]

CORBACCIO. Why, how now, Mosca?
 MOSCA. O, undone, amazed, sir.
 Your son, I know not by what accident,
 Acquainted with your purpose to my patron,
 Touching your will, and making him your heir,
 Entered our house with violence, his sword drawn, 5
 Sought for you, called you wretch, unnatural,
 Vowed he would kill you.
 CORBACCIO. Me!
 MOSCA. Yes, and my patron.
 CORBACCIO. This act shall disinherit him indeed:
 Here is the will.
 MOSCA. 'Tis well, sir.
 CORBACCIO. Right and well; 10
 Be you as careful now for me. [Enter VOLTRE behind.]
 MOSCA. My life, sir,
 Is not more tendered; I am only yours.
 CORBACCIO. How does he? will he die shortly, think'st thou?
 MOSCA. I fear
 He'll outlast May.
 CORBACCIO. Today?
 MOSCA. No, last out May, sir.
 CORBACCIO. Couldst thou not give him a dram?
 MOSCA. O, by no means, sir.

7. Greeks, especially Corinthians, were famous for living in luxury; Romans for committing suicide with dignity when life no longer appeared worthy of them.

8. Police officers, investigators.
 9. Branding on the face and boring holes in the ears were common criminal punishments.

- CORBACCIO. Nay, I'll not bid you. 15
- VOLTORE. [coming forward] This is a knave, I see.
- MOSCA. [seeing VOLTORE, aside] How! signor Voltore! did he hear me?
- VOLTORE. Parasite!
- MOSCA. Who's that? O, sir, most timely welcome—
- VOLTORE. Scarce,
To the discovery of your tricks, I fear.
- You are his, only? and mine also, are you not?
- MOSCA. Who? I, sir! 20
- VOLTORE. You, sir. What device is this
About a will?
- MOSCA. A plot for you, sir.
- VOLTORE. Come,
Put not your foists¹ upon me; I shall scent them.
- MOSCA. Did you not hear it?
- VOLTORE. Yes, I hear Corbaccio
Hath made your patron there his heir.
- MOSCA. 'Tis true,
By my device, drawn to it by my plot, 25
With hope—
- VOLTORE. Your patron should reciprocate?
And you have promised?
- MOSCA. For your good, I did, sir.
Nay more, I told his son, brought, hid him here,
Where he might hear his father pass the deed;
Being persuaded to it by this thought, sir, 30
That the unnaturalness, first, of the act,
And then his father's oft disclaiming in him,
(Which I did mean t'help on), would sure enrage him
To do some violence upon his parent,
On which the law should take sufficient hold, 35
And you be stated² in a double hope:
Truth be my comfort, and my conscience,
My only aim was to dig you a fortune
Out of these two old rotten sepulchres—
- VOLTORE. I cry thee mercy, Mosca. 40
- MOSCA. Worth your patience,
And your great merit, sir. And see the change!
- VOLTORE. Why, what success?³
- MOSCA. Most hapless! you must help, sir.
Whilst we expected the old raven, in comes Corvino's wife, sent hither by her husband—
- VOLTORE. What, with a present? 45
- MOSCA. No, sir, on visitation
(I'll tell you how anon); and staying long,
The youth he grows impatient, rushes forth,
Seizeth the lady, wounds inc, makes her swear

1. Tricks, but also bad smells.

3. Result, outcome.

2. Installed.

(Or he would murder her, that was his vow)
To affirm my patron to have done her rape:
Which how unlike it is, you see! and hence,
With that pretext he's gone to accuse his father,
Defame my patron, defeat you—

50

VOLTORE. Where is her husband?

Let him be sent for straight.

MOSCA. Sir, I'll go fetch him.

VOLTORE. Bring him to the Scrutineo.⁴

55

MOSCA. Sir, I will.

VOLTORE. This must be stopped.

MOSCA. O, you do nobly, sir.

Alas, 'twas labored all, sir, for your good;

Nor was there want of counsel in the plot:

But fortune can, at any time, o'erthrow

The projects of a hundred learned clerks,⁵ sir.

60

CORBACCIO. [listening] What's that?

VOLTORE. Will't please you, sir, to go along? [Exit CORBACCIO followed by VOLTORE.]

MOSCA. Patron, go in, and pray for our success.

VOLPONE. [rising from his couch] Need makes devotion:
heaven your labor bless! [Exeunt.]

Act IV

SCENE 1. A Street.

[Enter SIR POLITIC WOULD-BE and PEREGRINE.]

SIR POLITIC. I told you, sir, it was a plot; you see

What observation is! You mentioned⁶ me

For some instructions: I will tell you, sir

(Since we are met here in this height⁷ of Venice),

5

Some few particulars I have set down,

Only for this meridian, fit to be known

Of your crude traveler; and they are these.

I will not touch, sir, at your phrase, or clothes,

For they are old.

PEREGRINE. Sir, I have better.

SIR POLITIC. Pardon,

I meant, as they are themes.

10

PEREGRINE. O, sir, proceed:

I'll slander you no more of wit, good sir.

SIR POLITIC. First, for your garb, it must be grave and serious,

Very reserved and locked; not tell a secret

On any terms, not to your father; scarce

A fable, but with caution; make sure choice

15

Both of your company, and discourse; beware

You never speak a truth—

4. The court of law. Jonson's court, like courts on the Continent generally, has power to look into abuses and investigate possible violations of the law, before any particular suit is filed.

5. Scholars.

6. Asked.

7. Climate, constitution.

PEREGRINE.

How!

SIR POLITIC.

Not to strangers,

For those be they you must converse with most;

Others I would not know, sir, but at distance,

So as I still might be a saver in them:⁸

20

You shall have tricks, else, passed upon you hourly.

And then, for your religion, profess none,

But wonder at the diversity of all;

And, for your part, protest, were there no other

But simply the laws o' th' land, you could content you.

25

Nick Machiavel, and Monsieur Bodin, both

Were of this mind.⁹ Then must you learn the useAnd handling of your silver fork at meals,¹

The metal of your glass (these are main matters

With your Italian), and to know the hour

30

When you must eat your melons, and your figs.

PEREGRINE. Is that a point of state too?

SIR POLITIC.

Here it is;

For your Venetian, if he see a man

Preposterous² in the least, he has him straight;

He has; he strips him. I'll acquaint you, sir.

35

I now have lived here, 'tis some fourteen months;

Within the first week of my landing here,

All took me for a citizen of Venice,

I knew the forms so well—

PEREGRINE. [aside]

And nothing else.

SIR POLITIC.—I had read Contarine,³ took me a house,

40

Dealt with my Jews to furnish it with movables—

Well, if I could but find one man, one man

To mine own heart, whom I durst trust, I would—

PEREGRINE. What, what, sir?

SIR POLITIC.

Make him rich; make him a fortune;

He should not think again. I would command it.

45

PEREGRINE. As how?

SIR POLITIC.

With certain projects⁴ that I have

Which I may not discover.

PEREGRINE. [aside]

If I had

But one to wager with, I would lay odds now,

8. The implication is clear: Don't lend anybody money.

9. The abbreviation "Nick Machiavel" implies casual familiarity; the sentiment attributed to Machiavelli shows complete ignorance of him. Sir Politic would-be is more nearly right in his estimate of Jean Bodin, the French political philosopher, who did advocate religious toleration.

1. Handling a fork was a new experience for Englishmen who traveled abroad in Jonson's time; back home, fingers were still the preferred instruments. "The metal of your glass": literally, the composition of your glass (perhaps to know what could or couldn't be put in it).

2. In its literal Latin sense, getting things back to front.

3. Contarini wrote a book on Venetian government, which Sir Politic would be quick to know. "My Jews": in the indefinite sense—the usual Jews that everybody goes to for furniture to set up a Venetian apartment.

4. Schemes for social improvement or making money (or preferably both) were favorite targets of 17th-century satire. "Discover": disclose.

He tells me instantly.

SIR POLITIC. One is (and that I care not greatly who knows) to serve the state 50
Of Venice with red herrings for three years,
And at a certain rate, from Rotterdam,⁵
Where I have correspondence. There's a letter,
Sent me from one o' the States,⁶ and to that purpose;
He cannot write his name, but that's his mark. 55

PEREGRINE. He is a chandler?

SIR POLITIC. No, a cheese monger.
There are some others too with whom I treat
About the same negotiation;
And I will undertake it: for, 'tis thus.
I'll do't with ease, I've cast it all. Your hoy⁷ 60
Carries but three men in her, and a boy;
And she shall make me three returns a year.
So, if there come but one of three, I save;
If two, I can defalc⁸:—but this is now,
If my main project fail. 65

PEREGRINE. Then you have others?

SIR POLITIC. I should be loath to draw the subtle air
Of such a place, without my thousand aims.
I'll not dissemble, sir; where'er I come,
I love to be considerative; and 'tis true,
I have at my free hours thought upon 70
Some certain goods unto the state of Venice,
Which I do call my Cautions; and, sir, which
I mean, in hope of pension, to propound
To the Great Council, then unto the Forty,
So to the Ten.⁹ My means are made already— 75

PEREGRINE. By whom?

SIR POLITIC. Sir, one that, though his place be obscure,
Yet he can sway, and they will hear him. He's
A commendatore.

PEREGRINE. What! a common sergeant?

SIR POLITIC. Sir, such as they are, put it in their mouths,
What they should say, sometimes, as well as greater. 80
I think I have my notes to show you—[Searching his pockets.]

PEREGRINE. Good, sir.

SIR POLITIC. But you shall swear unto me, on your gentry,¹
Not to anticipate—

PEREGRINE. I, sir!

5. The Venetians have plenty of fresh fish in the Adriatic, and would not like salt herring in any case.

6. I.e., from one of the States-General in Holland.

7. A small North Sea fishing vessel; such a boat would have great trouble making a trip to Venice, let alone carrying a worthwhile cargo.

8. Reduce the amount, cut back, maybe even go into bankruptcy.

9. Representative legislative bodies, increasingly narrow and increasingly lofty, of the Venetian government. "My means": my approaches to these eminent bodies.

1. As you are a gentleman.

A circumstance—My paper is not with me.

PEREGRINE. O, but you can remember, sir.

85

SIR POLITIC.

My first is

Concerning tinder-boxes.² You must know,

No family is here without its box.

Now, sir, it being so portable a thing,

Put case, that you or I were ill affected

Unto the state, sir; with it in our pockets,

90

Might not I go into the Arsenal,³

Or you? come out again? and none the wiser?

PEREGRINE. Except yourself, sir.

SIR POLITIC.

Go to, then. I therefore

Advise to the state, how fit it were,

That none but such as were known patriots,

95

Sound lovers of their country, should be suffered

To enjoy them in their houses; and even those

Sealed at some office, and at such a bigness

As might not lurk in pockets.

PEREGRINE.

Admirable!

SIR POLITIC. My next is, how to inquire, and be resolved

100

By present demonstration, whether a ship,

Newly arrived from Syria, or from Any suspected part of all the Levant,⁴

Be guilty of the plague; and where they use

To lie out forty, fifty days, sometimes,

105

About the Lazaretto,⁵ for their trial,

I'll save that charge and loss unto the merchant,

And in an hour clear the doubt.

PEREGRINE.

Indeed, sir!

SIR POLITIC. Or—I will lose my labor.

PEREGRINE.

My faith, that's much.

SIR POLITIC. Nay, sir, conceive me. 'Twill cost me in onions, ¹¹⁰

Some thirty livres⁶—

PEREGRINE.

Which is one pound sterling.

SIR POLITIC. Besides my water-works; for this I do, sir.

First, I bring in your ship 'twixt two brick-walls;

But those the state shall venture. On the one

I strain⁷ me a fair tarpaulin, and in that

115

I stick my onions, cut in halves; the other

Is full of loop-holes, out at which I thrust

The noses of my bellows; and those bellows

2. As we would say, matchboxes or cigarette lighters.

3. Venice being largely a maritime power, the Arsenal where ships were built and repaired was (and still is) an important part of the city.

4. The Middle East.

5. Quarantine. Bubonic plague, carried by lice living on shipboard rats, was a constant peril in Venice, where trade with the Middle East was particularly busy. Ships had to wait several months in port before debarking crew, passengers, or cargo.

6. A French coin of small value. Onions were reputed to be good against the plague; cut open, they supposedly absorbed the plague germs from the air.

7. Stretch.

I keep, with water-works,⁸ in perpetual motion,
Which is the easiest matter of a hundred. 120
Now, sir, your onion, which doth naturally
Attract the infection, and your bellows blowing
The air upon him, will show instantly,
By his changed color, if there be contagion,
Or else remain as fair as at the first. 125
—Now it is known, 'tis nothing.

PEREGRINE. You are right, sir.

SIR POLITIC. I would I had my note.

PEREGRINE. Faith, so would I:

But you have done well for once, sir.

SIR POLITIC. Were I false,

Or would be made so, I could show you reasons

How I could sell this state now to the Turk,⁹ 130

Spite of their galleys, or their—[Examining his papers.]

PEREGRINE.

Pray you, sir Pol.

SIR POLITIC. I have them not about me.

PEREGRINE.

That I feared.

They are there, sir?

SIR POLITIC. No, this is my diary,

Wherein I note my actions of the day.

PEREGRINE. Pray you let's see, sir. What is here?

*Notandum,*¹

135

[Reads.]

A rat had gnawn my spur-leathers; notwithstanding,

I put on new, and did go forth; but first

I threw three beans over the threshold. Item,

I went and bought two tooth-picks, whereof one

I burst immediately, in a discourse 140

With a Dutch merchant, 'bout ragion del stato.²

From him I went and paid a mocenigo

For piecing my silk stockings; by the way

I cheapened sprats;³ and at St. Mark's I urined.

Faith, these are politic notes! 145

SIR POLITIC.

Sir, I do slip

No action of my life, thus, but I quote it.

PEREGRINE. Believe me, it is wise!

SIR POLITIC.

Nay, sir, read forth.

8. Sir Politic's waterworks are apparently a water wheel arranged to operate a bellows. Of course there is no spot in the flat country around Venice where streams have enough impetus to turn a wheel.

9. Here Sir Politic is verging on real subversion, and Peregrine quickly shuts him off.

1. Take special note.

2. Literally, "reason of state," but also the title of a famous book by Giovanni Botero, presenting a diluted version of Machiavelli's thought.

3. Bargained over some trifling fish; "piecing": mending.

SCENE 2

[Enter, at a distance, LADY POLITIC WOULD-BE, NANO, and two WAITING-WOMEN.]

LADY POLITIC. Where should this loose knight be, trow? sure he's housed.⁴

NANO. Why, then he's fast.

LADY POLITIC. Ay, he plays both with me.⁵

I pray you stay. This heat will do more harm

To my complexion, than his heart is worth.

(I do not care to hinder, but to take him.)

How it⁶ comes off! [Rubbing her cheeks.]⁵

1 WOMAN. My master's yonder.

LADY POLITIC. Where?

2 WOMAN. With a young gentleman.

LADY POLITIC. That same's the party,

In man's apparel! Pray you, sir, jog my knight;

I will be tender to his reputation,

However he demerit.

SIR POLITIC. [seeing her] My lady!

PEREGRINE. Where?

SIR POLITIC. 'Tis she indeed, sir; you shall know her. She is,

Were she not mine, a lady of that merit,

For fashion and behavior; and for beauty

I durst compare—

PEREGRINE. It seems you are not jealous,

That dare commend her.

SIR POLITIC. Nay, and for discourse—

PEREGRINE. Being your wife, she cannot miss that.

SIR POLITIC. [introducing Peregrine] Madam,

Here is a gentleman, pray you, use him fairly;

He seems a youth, but he is—

LADY POLITIC. None.

SIR POLITIC. Yes, one

Has put his face as soon into the world—

LADY POLITIC. You mean, as early? but today?

SIR POLITIC. How's this?

LADY POLITIC. Why, in this habit, sir; you apprehend me.

Well, Master Would-be, this doth not become you;

I had thought the odor, sir, of your good name

Had been more precious to you; that you would not

Have done this dire massacre on your honor;

One of your gravity, and rank besides!

But knights, I see, care little for the oath

They make to ladies, chiefly, their own ladies.

SIR POLITIC. Now, by my spurs, the symbol of my knighthood⁷—

4. Gone into somebody's house. "He's fast" implies that he's securely fastened and in fast company.

5. Both fast and loose.

6. I.e., her complexion.

7. Because King James created knights indiscriminately at his accession, knight-hood was a broad joke in early 17th-century England.

PEREGRINE [aside] Lord, how his brain is humbled for an oath! 30

SIR POLITIC. I reach you not.

LADY POLITIC. Right, sir, your polity May bear it through thus. [To PEREGRINE.]—Sir, a word with you.

I would be loath to contest publicly
With any gentlewoman, or to seem
Froward, or violent, as the courtier says;⁸ 35
It comes too near rusticity in a lady,
Which I would shun by all means; and however
I may deserve from Master Would-be, yet
T'have one fair gentlewoman thus be made
The unkind instrument to wrong another, 40
And one she knows not, ay, and to perséver;
In my poor judgment, is not warranted
From being a solecism in our sex,
If not in manners.

PEREGRINE. How is this!

SIR POLITIC. Sweet madam,
Come nearer to your aim. 45

LADY POLITIC. Marry, and will, sir.
Since you provoke me with your impudence,
And laughter of your light land-siren here,
Your Sporus,⁹ your hermaphrodite—

PEREGRINE. What's here?
Poetic fury, and historic¹ storms!

SIR POLITIC. The gentleman, believe it, is of worth, 50
And of our nation.

LADY POLITIC. Ay, your Whitefriars² nation!
Come, I blush for you, Master Would-be, ay;
And am ashamed you should have no more forehead,³
Than thus to be the patron, or St. George,
To a lewd harlot, a base fricatrice,⁴ 55
A female devil, in a male outside.

SIR POLITIC. Nay,
An you be such a one, I must bid adieu
To your delights. The case appears too liquid. [Exit.]

LADY POLITIC. Ay, you may carry't clear, with your state-face!⁵ 60
But for your carnival concupiscence,
Who here is fled for liberty of conscience,
From furious persecution of the marshal,
Her will I dis'ple.⁶

8. I.e., Castiglione.

9. Sporus was a favorite catamite of Nero, who dressed him in drag and married him.

1. With reference to the historical allusion (Sporus), but "hysteric" is not far away.

2. Disreputable quarter of London, inhabited by whores.

3. Sense of shame.

4. Prostitute.

5. A solemn expression.

6. Discipline; specifically, whip. In England at least (though not in Venice) the marshal was directly charged with catching and punishing prostitutes.

PEREGRINE. This is fine, i'faith,
And do you use this often? Is this part
Of your wit's exercise, 'gainst you have occasion?
Madam——

65

LADY POLITIC. Go to, sir.

PEREGRINE. Do you hear me, lady?
Why, if your knight have set you to beg shirts,
Or to invite me home, you might have done it
A nearer way, by far.⁷

LADY POLITIC. This cannot work you
Out of my snare.

70

PEREGRINE. Why, am I in it, then?
Indeed your husband told me you were fair,
And so you are; only your nose inclines,
That side that's next the sun, to the queen-apple.⁸
LADY POLITIC. This cannot be endured, by any patience.

SCENE 3

[Enter MOSCA.]

MOSCA. What is the matter, madam?

LADY POLITIC. If the Senate
Right not my quest in this,⁹ I will protest them
To all the world, no aristocracy.

MOSCA. What is the injury, lady?

LADY POLITIC. Why, the callet¹
You told me of, here I have ta'en disguised.

5

MOSCA. Who? this! what means your ladyship? the creature
I mentioned to you is apprehended now,
Before the Senate; you shall see her—

LADY POLITIC. Where?

MOSCA. I'll bring you to her. This young gentleman,
I saw him land this morning at the port.

10

LADY POLITIC. Is't possible! how has my judgment wandered?
Sir, I must, blushing, say to you, I have erred;
And plead your pardon.

PEREGRINE. What, more changes yet!

LADY POLITIC. I hope you have not the malice to remember
A gentlewoman's passion. If you stay
In Venice here, please you to use me, sir—

15

MOSCA. Will you go, madam?

LADY POLITIC. 'Pray you, sir, use me; in faith,
The more you see me, the more I shall conceive
You have forgot our quarrel.

[Exeunt LADY WOULD-BE, MOSCA, NANO, and WAITING-WOMEN.]

PEREGRINE. This is rare!

7. Peregrine implies that the whole situation is a setup, the knight pimping for his wife.

8. Lady Politic has a fiery red nose.

9. Don't do me justice.

1. Slut.

Sir Politic Would-be? no; Sir Politic Bawd!
To bring me thus acquainted with his wife!
Well, wise Sir Pol, since you have practiced thus
Upon my freshman-ship,² I'll try your salt-head,
What proof it is against a counterplot. [Exit.]

20

SCENE 4. The Scrutineo.

[Enter VOLTORE, CORBACCIO, CORVINO, and MOSCA.]

VOLTORE. Well, now you know the carriage of the business,
Your constancy is all that is required
Unto the safety of it.

MOSCA. Is the lie³
Safely conveyed amongst us? is that sure?
Knows every man his burden?⁴

5

CORVINO. Yes.

MOSCA. Then shrink not.

CORVINO. [aside to MOSCA] But knows the advocate the truth?

MOSCA. O, sir,

By no means; I devised a formal tale
That salved your reputation. But be valiant, sir.

CORVINO. I fear no one but him, that this his pleading
Should make him stand for a co-heir—

10

MOSCA. Co-halter!

Hang him; we will but use his tongue, his noise,
As we do Croaker's⁵ here.

CORVINO. Ay, what shall he do?

MOSCA. When we have done, you mean?

CORVINO. Yes.

MOSCA. Why, we'll think:

Sell him for mummia;⁶ he's half dust already.

[To VOLTORE.] Do you not smile to see this buffalo,⁷
How he doth sport it with his head? [aside]—I should,
If all were well and past. [To CORBACCIO.] Sir, only you
Are he that shall enjoy the crop of all,
And these know not for whom they toil.

15

CORBACCIO. Ay, peace.

MOSCA. [turning to CORVINO] But you shall eat it. [aside]

20

Much!⁸ [To VOLTORE] Worshipful sir,
Mercury sit upon your thundering tongue,
Or the French Hercules,⁹ and make your language
As conquering as his club, to beat along,

2. Innocence, as of a freshman, but in opposition to Sir Politic's "salt-head": salacity.

3. Untruth, but also the shape of things, as in the lie or lay of the land.

4. "Part," as in part-singing. Mosca must be sure everyone has his story straight.

5. I.e., Corbaccio's.

6. Allegedly the powdered remains of the Pharaohs, popularly sold as medicine.

7. An allusion to the cuckold's horns worn by Corvino.

8. I.e., "fat chance!"

9. Both Mercury, god of thieves, and the French Hercules were patrons of eloquence; the latter is specifically discussed by the classical burlesque-writer, Lucian.

As with a tempest, flat, our adversaries;
But much more yours, sir.

25

VOLTORE. Here they come, have done.

MOSCA. I have another witness, if you need, sir,

I can produce.

VOLTORE. Who is it?

MOSCA. Sir, I have her.

SCENE 5

[Enter AVOCATORI and take their seats; BONARIO, CELIA, NOTARIO, COMMENDATORI, SAFFI, and other OFFICERS OF JUSTICE.]

1 AVOCATORE. The like of this the Senate never heard of.

2 AVOCATORE. 'Twill come most strange to them when we report it.

4 AVOCATORE. The gentlewoman¹ has been ever held
Of unreprieved name,

3 AVOCATORE. So has the youth.²

4 AVOCATORE. The more unnatural part that of his father.

5

2 AVOCATORE. More of the husband.³

1 AVOCATORE. I not know to give His act a name, it is so monstrous!

4 AVOCATORE. But the impostor,⁴ he's a thing created
To exceed example!

1 AVOCATORE. And all after-times!

2 AVOCATORE. I never heard a true voluptuary
Described, but him.

10

3 AVOCATORE. Appear yet those were cited?

NOTARIO. All but the old magnifico, Volpone.

1 AVOCATORE. Why is not he here?

MOSCA. Please your fatherhoods,
Here is his advocate: himself's so weak,
So feeble—

15

4 AVOCATORE. What are you?

BONARIO. His parasite,

His knave, his pander: I beseech the court,
He may be forced to come, that your grave eyes
May bear strong witness of his strange impostures.

VOLTORE. Upon my faith and credit with your virtues,
He is not able to endure the air.

20

2 AVOCATORE. Bring him, however.

3 AVOCATORE. We will see him.

4 AVOCATORE. Fetch him.

VOLTORE. Your fatherhoods' fit pleasures be obeyed; [Exeunt OFFICERS.]

But sure, the sight will rather move your pities
Than indignation. May it please the court,

1. I.e., Celia.

2. I.e., Bonario.

3. I.e., Corvino.

4. I.e., Volpone.

In the meantime, he may be heard in me. 25
 I know this place most void of prejudice,
 And therefore crave it, since we have no reason
 To fear our truth should hurt our cause.

3 AVOCATORE.

Speak free.

VOLTORE. Then know, most honored fathers, I must now

Discover to your strangely abuséd ears, 30

The most prodigious and most frontless⁵ piece

Of solid impudence and treachery,

That ever vicious nature yet brought forth

To shame the state of Venice. This lewd woman, 35

That wants⁶ no artificial looks or tears

To help the visor she has now put on,

Hath long been known a close adulteress

To that lascivious youth there; not suspected,

I say, but known, and taken in the act

With him; and by this man, the easy husband, 40

Pardoned; whose timeless⁷ bounty makes him now

Stand here, the most unhappy, innocent person,

That ever man's own goodness made accused.

For these not knowing how to owe a gift

Of that dear grace, but with their shame; being placed 45

So above all powers of their gratitude,

Began to hate the benefit; and, in place

Of thanks, devise to extirp⁸ the memory

Of such an act. Wherein, I pray your fatherhoods

To observe the malice, yea, the rage of creatures 50

Discovered in their evils; and what heart

Such take, even from their crimes. But that anon

Will more appear. This gentleman, the father,

Hearing of this foul fact, with many others,

Which daily struck at his too tender ears, 55

And grieved in nothing more than that he could not Preserve himself a parent (his son's ills

Growing to that strange flood), at last decreed

To disinherit him.

1 AVOCATORE. These be strange turns!

2 AVOCATORE. The young man's fame was ever fair and honest. 60

VOLTORE. So much more full of danger is his vice,

That can beguile so under shade of virtue.

But, as I said, my honored sires, his father

Having this settled purpose, by what means

To him betrayed, we know not, and this day 65

Appointed for the deed; that parricide,

I cannot style him better, by confederacy⁹

Preparing this his paramour to be there,

Entered Volpone's house (who was the man,

5. Shameless.

6. Lacks; "visor": artificial features, outward appearance.

7. Ill-timed.

8. Wipe out, extirpate.

9. Conspiracy.

Your fatherhoods must understand, designed 70
 For the inheritance), there sought his father;
 But with what purpose sought he him, my lords?
 I tremble to pronounce it, that a son
 Unto a father, and to such a father,
 Should have so foul, felonious intent! 75
 It was to murder him; when, being prevented
 By his more happy absence, what then did he?
 Not check his wicked thoughts; no, now new deeds
 (Mischief doth never¹ end where it begins);
 An act of horror, fathers! he dragged forth 80
 The aged gentleman that had there lain bed-ridden
 Three years and more, out of his innocent couch,
 Naked upon the floor, there left him; wounded
 His servant in the face; and, with this strumpet,
 The stale² to his forged practice, who was glad 85
 To be so active (I shall here desire
 Your fatherhoods to note but my collections,³
 As most remarkable), thought at once to stop
 His father's ends, discredit his free choice
 In the old gentleman, redeem themselves, 90
 By laying infamy upon this man,⁴
 To whom, with blushing, they should owe their lives.

1 AVOCATORE. What proofs have you of this?

BONARIO. Most honored fathers,
 I humbly crave there be no credit given
 To this man's mercenary tongue. 95

2 AVOCATORE. Forbear.

BONARIO. His soul moves in his fee.

3 AVOCATORE. O, sir.

BONARIO. This fellow,
 For six sols more,⁵ would plead against his maker.

1 AVOCATORE. You do forget yourself.

VOLTORE. Nay, nay, grave fathers,
 Let him have scope; can any man imagine
 That he will spare his accuser, that would not 100
 Have spared his parent?

1 AVOCATORE. Well, produce your proofs.

CELIA. I would I could forget I were a creature,

VOLTORE. Signor Corbaccio! [CORBACCIO comes forward.]

4 AVOCATORE. What is he?

VOLTORE. The father.

2 AVOCATORE. Has he had an oath?

NOTARIO. Yes.

CORBACCIO. What must I do now?

NOTARIO. Your testimony's craved. 105

1. Jonson's text reads "ever," and the sense is defensible, but the stronger meaning comes from "never."
 2. Pretext.

3. Deductions.
 4. I.e., Corvino.
 5. Three pence.

CORBACCIO.

Speak to the knave?

I'll have my mouth first stopped with earth; my heart
Abhors his knowledge:⁶ I disclaim in him.

1 AVOCATORE. But for what cause?

CORBACCIO.

The mere portent of nature!

He is an utter stranger to my loins.

BONARIO. Have they made you to this?

110

CORBACCIO.

I will not hear thee,

Monster of men, swine, goat, wolf, parricide!

Speak not, thou viper.⁷

BONARIO.

Sir, I will sit down,

And rather wish my innocence should suffer,

Than I resist the authority of a father.

VOLTORE. Signor Corvino! [CORVINO comes forward.]

115

2 AVOCATORE.

This is strange.

1 AVOCATORE.

Who's this?

NOTARIO. The husband.

4 AVOCATORE.

Is he sworn?

NOTARIO.

He is.

3 AVOCATORE.

Speak, then.

CORVINO. This woman, please your fatherhoods, is a whore

Of most hot exercise, more than a partridge,⁸

Upon record—

1 AVOCATORE.

No more.

CORVINO.

Neighs like a jennet.⁹

NOTARIO. Preserve the honor of the court.

120

CORVINO.

I shall,

And modesty of your most reverend ears.

And yet I hope that I may say, these eyes

Have seen her glued unto that piece of cedar,

That fine well-timbered gallant; and that here¹

The letters may be read, through the horn,

125

That make the story perfect.

MOSCA.

Excellent! sir.

CORVINO. [aside to MOSCA] There is no shame in this now, is there?

MOSCA.

None.

CORVINO. Or if I said, I hoped that she were onward

To her damnation, if there be a hell

Greater than whore and woman; a good catholic

130

May make the doubt.²

6. Shudders to recognize him.

7. The parricide, as a creature wholly unnatural, was punished among the Romans by being whipped, sewed up in a sack with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and thrown into the sea.

8. The partridge vied with the sparrow as the most lustful of birds.

9. Mare.

1. Corvino holds two fingers over his head to make the horned sign of the cuckold.

2. If there's any hell worse than being a woman and a whore, Corvino thinks of saying Celia may be headed for it; because he doesn't say flatly that she is so headed, he can claim the virtue of charity, and remain a good Catholic. The 1607 quarto reads "Christian" instead of "catholic."

- 3 AVOCATORE. His grief hath made him frantic.
 1 AVOCATORE. Remove him hence. [CELIA swoons.]
 2 AVOCATORE. Look to the woman.
 CORVINO. Rare!
 Prettily feigned, again!
 4 AVOCATORE. Stand from about her.
 1 AVOCATORE. Give her the air.
 3 AVOCATORE. [to MOSCA] What can you say?
 MOSCA. My wound,
 May it please your wisdoms, speaks for me, received 135
 In aid of my good patron, when he missed
 His sought-for father,³ when that well-taught dame
 Had her cue given her, to cry out, A rape!
 BONARIO. O most laid impudence! Fathers—
 3 AVOCATORE. Sir, be silent;
 You had your hearing free, so must they theirs. 140
 2 AVOCATORE. I do begin to doubt the imposture here.
 4 AVOCATORE. This woman has too many moods.
 VOLTORE. Grave fathers,
 She is a creature of a most professed
 And prostituted lewdness.
 CORVINO. Most impetuous,
 Unsatisfied, grave fathers! 145
 VOLTORE. May her feignings
 Not take your wisdoms: but this day she baited
 A stranger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes,
 And more lascivious kisses. This man saw them
 Together on the water, in a gondola.
 MOSCA. Here is the lady herself, that saw them too, 150
 Without; who then had in the open streets
 Pursued them, but for saving her knight's honor.
 1 AVOCATORE. Produce that lady.
 2 AVOCATORE. Let her come. [Exit MOSCA.]
 4 AVOCATORE. These things,
 They strike with wonder.
 3 AVOCATORE. I am turned a stone.

SCENE 6

[Enter MOSCA with LADY WOULD-BE.]

MOSCA. Be resolute, madam.

- LADY POLITIC. Ay, this same is she. [Pointing to CELIA.]
 Out, thou chameleon⁴ harlot! now thine eyes
 Vie tears with the hyena. Dar'st thou look Upon my wronged face?—I cry your pardons,
 I fear I have forgettingly transgressed 5
 Against the dignity of the court—
 2 AVOCATORE. No, madam.

3. I.e., Corbaccio.

4. An animal that changes colors. The hyena is emblematic of treachery and an eater of carrion.

- LADY POLITIC. And been exorbitant⁵—
 2 AVOCATORE. You have not, lady.
 4 AVOCATORE. These proofs are strong.
 LADY POLITIC. Surely, I had no purpose
 To scandalize your honors, or my sex's.
 3 AVOCATORE. We do believe it. 10
 LADY POLITIC. Surely, you may believe it.
 2 AVOCATORE. Madam, we do.
 LADY POLITIC. Indeed you may; my breeding
 Is not so coarse——
 4 AVOCATORE. We know it.
 LADY POLITIC. To offend
 With pertinacy——
 3 AVOCATORE. Lady—
 LADY POLITIC. Such a presence!
 No, surely.
 1 AVOCATORE. We well think it.
 LADY POLITIC. You may think it.
 1 AVOCATORE. Let her o'ercome. [To BONARIO.] What witnesses have you, 15
 To make good your report?
 BONARIO. Our consciences.
 CELIA. And heaven, that never fails the innocent.
 4 AVOCATORE. These are no testimonies.
 BONARIO. Not in your courts,
 Where multitude, and clamor overcomes.
 1 AVOCATORE. Nay, then you do wax insolent. 20
 [Re-enter OFFICERS, bearing VOLPONE on a couch.]
 VOLTRE. Here, here,
 The testimony comes, that will convince,
 And put to utter dumbness their bold tongues!
 See here, grave fathers, here's the ravisher,
 The rider on men's wives, the great impostor,
 The grand voluptuary! Do you not think 25
 These limbs should affect venery?⁶ or these eyes
 Covet a concubine? pray you mark these hands;
 Are they not fit to stroke a lady's breasts?
 Perhaps he doth dissemble!
 BONARIO. So he does.
 VOLTRE. Would you have him tortured? 30
 BONARIO. I would have him proved.
 VOLTRE. Best try him then with goads, or burning irons;
 Put him to the strappado.⁷ I have heard
 The rack hath cured the gout; 'faith, give it him,
 And help him of a malady; be courteous.
 I'll undertake, before these honored fathers, 35

5. Lady Politic doubtless means "excessive."

6. Be disposed to lust.

7. A common torture of the time: a man's hands were tied behind his back, and he was hoisted by his wrists on a gallows, to the common effect of dislocating his shoulders.

He shall have yet as many left diseases,
 As she has known adulterers, or thou strumpets.
 O, my most equal hearers, if these deeds,
 Acts of this bold and most exorbitant strain,
 May pass with sufferance, what one citizen 40
 But owes the forfeit of his life, yea, fame,
 To him that dares traduce him? which of you
 Are safe, my honored fathers? I would ask,
 With leave of your grave fatherhoods, if their plot
 Have any face or color like to truth? 45
 Or if, unto the dullest nostril here,
 It smell not rank, and most abhorred slander?
 I crave your care of this good gentleman,
 Whose life is much endangered by their fable;
 And as for them, I will conclude with this, 50
 That vicious persons, when they're hot, and fleshed
 In impious acts, their constancy abounds:
 Damned deeds are done with greatest confidence.

1 AVOCATORE. Take them to custody, and sever them. [CELIA and BONARIO are taken out.]

2 AVOCATORE. 'Tis pity two such prodigies should live. 55

1 AVOCATORE. Let the old gentleman be returned with care:
 [Exeunt OFFICERS with VOLPONE.]

I'm sorry our credulity hath wronged him.

4 AVOCATORE. These are two creatures!

3 AVOCATORE. I've an earthquake in me.⁸

2 AVOCATORE. Their shame, even in their cradles, fled their faces.

4 AVOCATORE. [To VOLTORE] You have done a worthy service to the state, sir, 60

In their discovery.

1 AVOCATORE. You shall hear, ere night,
 What punishment the court decrees upon them.

VOLTORE. We thank your fatherhoods. [Exeunt AVOCATORI,
 NOTARIO, and OFFICERS.] [To MOSCA.]—How like you it?

MOSCA. Rare. 65

I'd have your tongue, sir, tipped with gold for this;

I'd have you be the heir to the whole city;

The earth I'd have want men, ere you want living:

They're bound to erect your statue in St. Mark's.

Signor Corvino, I would have you go

And show yourself, that you have conquered.

CORVINO. Yes. 70

MOSCA. It was much better that you should profess

Yourself a cuckold thus, than that the other

Should have been proved.

CORVINO. Nay, I considered that;

Now it is her fault.

MOSCA. Then it had been yours.

CORVINO. True; I do doubt this advocate still.

MOSCA. I'faith,

You need not, I dare ease you of that care.

75

CORVINO. I trust thee, Mosca.

[Exit.]

MOSCA. As your own soul, sir.

CORBACCIO.

Mosca!

MOSCA. Now for your business, sir.

CORBACCIO.

How! have you business?

MOSCA. Yes, yours sir.

CORBACCIO.

O, none else?

MOSCA.

None else, not I.

CORBACCIO. Be careful then.

MOSCA.

Rest you with both your eyes, sir.

CORBACCIO. Dispatch it.⁹

80

MOSCA.

Instantly.

CORBACCIO.

And look that all,

Whatever, be put in, jewels, plate, moneys,

Household stuff, bedding, curtains.

MOSCA.

Curtain-rings, sir:

Only the advocate's fee must be deducted.

CORBACCIO. I'll pay him now; you'll be too prodigal.

MOSCA. Sir, I must tender it.

85

CORBACCIO.

Two sequins is well.

MOSCA. No, six, sir.

CORBACCIO.

'Tis too much.

MOSCA.

He talked a great while;

You must consider that, sir.

CORBACCIO.

Well, there's three—

MOSCA. I'll give it him.

CORBACCIO.

Do so, and there's for thee.

[Exit.]

MOSCA. Bountiful bones! What horrid strange offense

Did he commit 'gainst nature, in his youth,

90

Worthy this age? [To VOLTORE.]—You see, sir, how I work

Unto your ends; take you no notice.

VOLTORE.

No,

I'll leave you.

[Exit.]

MOSCA. All is yours, the devil and all,

Good advocate!—Madam, I'll bring you home.

LADY POLITIC. No, I'll go see your patron.

95

MOSCA.

That you shall not.

I'll tell you why. My purpose is to urge

My patron to reform his will;¹ and for

The zeal you have shown today, whereas before

You were but third or fourth, you shall be now

Put in the first; which would appear as begged,

100

If you were present. Therefore—

LADY POLITIC.

You shall sway me. [Exeunt.]

9. I.e., get the will made, with me in it.

1. Rewrite his testament, though always with the other connotation of improving his disposition.

Act V

SCENE 1. A Room in VOLPONE's House.

[Enter VOLPONE.]

VOLPONE. Well, I am here, and all this brunt² is past.
 I ne'er was in dislike with my disguise
 Till this fled moment:³ here 'twas good, in private,
 But in your public—*cave*⁴ whilst I breathe.
 'Fore God, my left leg 'gan to have the cramp, 5
 And I apprehended⁵ straight some power had struck me
 With a dead palsy. Well! I must be merry,
 And shake it off. A many of these fears
 Would put me into some villainous disease,
 Should they come thick upon me: I'll prevent 'em. 10
 Give me a bowl of lusty wine, to fright
 This humour from my heart. [Drinks.—Hum, hum, hum!
 'Tis almost gone already, I shall conquer.
 Any device, now, of rare ingenious knavery,
 That would possess me with a violent laughter, 15
 Would make me up again. [Drinks again.—So, so, so, so!
 This heat is life; 'tis blood by this time! Mosca!

SCENE 2

[Enter MOSCA.]

MOSCA. How now, sir? does the day look clear again?
 Are we recovered? and wrought out of error,
 Into our way, to see our path before us?
 Is our trade free once more?

VOLPONE. Exquisite Mosca!

MOSCA. Was it not carried learnedly? 5

VOLPONE. And stoutly.

Good wits are greatest in extremities.

MOSCA. It were a folly beyond thought, to trust
 Any grand act unto a cowardly spirit.

You are not taken with it⁶ enough, methinks.

VOLPONE. O, more than if I had enjoyed the wench; 10
 The pleasure of all womankind's not like it.

MOSCA. Why now you speak, sir. We must here be fixed;
 Here we must rest. This is our masterpiece;
 We cannot think to go beyond this.

VOLPONE. True, 15
 Thou'st played thy prize, my precious Mosca.

MOSCA. Nay, sir,
 To gull the court—

VOLPONE. And quite divert the torrent
 Upon the innocent.

2. Trouble.

3. Moment just past.

4. Beware, watch out.

5. The word is printed and pronounced
 "apprehended."

6. Pleased, satisfied with it.

- MOSCA. Yes, and to make
 So rare a music out of discords—
- VOLPONE. Right.
 That yet to me's the strangest! how thou'st borne it
 That these, being so divided 'mongst themselves, 20
 Should not scent somewhat, or in me or thee,
 Or doubt their own side.
- MOSCA. True, they will not see't.
 Too much light blinds them, I think.⁷ Each of them
 Is so possessed and stuffed with his own hopes,
 That anything unto the contrary, 25
 Never so true, or never so apparent,
 Never so palpable, they will resist it—
- VOLPONE. Like a temptation of the devil.
- MOSCA. Right, sir.
 Merchants may talk of trade, and your great signors
 Of land that yields well; but if Italy 30
 Have any glebe⁸ more fruitful than these fellows,
 I am deceived. Did not your advocate rare?⁹
- VOLPONE. O—*My most honored fathers, my grave fathers,
 Under correction of your fatherhoods,
 What face of truth is here? If these strange deeds 35
 May pass, most honored fathers—I had much ado
 To forbear laughing.*
- MOSCA. It seemed to me, you sweat, sir.
- VOLPONE. In troth, I did a little.
- MOSCA. But confess, sir,
 Were you not daunted?
- VOLPONE. In good faith, I was
 A little in a mist, but not dejected; 40
 Never; but still myself.
- MOSCA. I think it, sir.
 Now, so truth help me, I must needs say this, sir,
 And out of conscience for your advocate,
 He has taken pains, in faith, sir, and deserved,
 In my poor judgment, I speak it under favor, 45
 Not to contrary you, sir, very richly—
 Well—to be cozened.
- VOLPONE. Troth, and I think so too,
 By that I heard him, in the latter end.
- MOSCA. O, but before, sir: had you heard him first
 Draw it to certain heads, then aggravate, 50
 Then use his vehement figures¹—I looked still
 When he would shift a shirt;² and, doing this
 Out of pure love, no hope of gain—
- VOLPONE. 'Tis right.

7. An ancient adage.

8. Soil.

9. Did not your advocate (perform) rare(ly)?

1. Terms of legal oratory.

2. I.e., he sweated so much over his speech, it seemed he might have to change his linen.

I cannot answer him Mosca, as I would,
 Not yet; but for thy sake, at thy entreaty,
 I will begin e'en now to vex them all,
 This very instant.

55

MOSCA. Good, sir.

VOLPONE. Call the dwarf

And eunuch forth.

MOSCA. Castrone, Nano!

[Enter CASTRONE and NANO.]

NANO. Here.

VOLPONE. Shall we have a jig now?

MOSCA. What you please, sir.

VOLPONE. Go, 60

Straight give out about the streets, you two,

That I am dead; do it with constancy,

Sadly, do you hear? impute it to the grief

Of this late slander. [Exeunt CASTRONE and NANO.]

MOSCA. What do you mean, sir?

VOLPONE. O,

I shall have instantly my vulture, crow,

Raven, come flying hither, on the news, 65

To peck for carrion, my she-wolf, and all,

Greedy, and full of expectation—

MOSCA. And then to have it ravished from their mouths!

VOLPONE. 'Tis true. I will have thee put on a gown,

And take upon thee, as thou wert mine heir; 70

Show them a will. Open that chest, and reach

Forth one of those that has the blanks; I'll straight

Put in thy name.

MOSCA. It will be rare, sir. [Gives him a paper.]

VOLPONE. Ay,

When they e'en gape, and find themselves deluded—

MOSCA. Yes. 75

VOLPONE. And thou use them scurvily! Dispatch,

Get on thy gown.

MOSCA. But what, sir, if they ask

After the body?

VOLPONE. Say, it was corrupted.

MOSCA. I'll say it stunk, sir; and was fain to have it

Coffined up instantly, and sent away.

VOLPONE. Anything, what thou wilt. Hold, here's my will. 80

Get thee a cap, a count-book,³ pen and ink,

Papers afore thee; sit as thou wert taking

An inventory of parcels. I'll get up

Behind the curtain, on a stool, and hearken;

Sometime peep over, see how they do look, 85

With what degrees their blood doth leave their faces.

O, 'twill afford me a rare meal of laughter!

MOSCA. [putting on a cap, and setting out the table, &c.] Your advocate will turn stark dull upon it.

VOLPONE. It will take off his oratory's edge.

MOSCA. But your clarissimo, old round-back,⁴ he 90

Will crump you like a hog-louse, with the touch.

VOLPONE. And what Corvino?

MOSCA. O, sir, look for him,

Tomorrow morning, with a rope and dagger,

To visit all the streets;⁵ he must run mad.

My lady too, that came into the court 95

To bear false witness for your worship—

VOLPONE. Yes,

And kissed me 'fore the fathers, when my face

Flowed all with oils.

MOSCA. And sweat, sir. Why, your gold

Is such another medicine, it dries up

All those offensive savors; it transforms 100

The most deformed, and restores them lovely,

As 'twere the strange poetical girdle.⁶ Jove

Could not invent t' himself a shroud more subtle

To pass Acrisius' guards.⁷ It is the thing 105

Makes all the world her grace, her youth her beauty.

VOLPONE. I think she loves me.

MOSCA. Who? the lady, sir?

She's jealous of you.

VOLPONE. Dost thou say so? [Knocking within.]

MOSCA. Hark,

There's some already.

VOLPONE. Look.

MOSCA. It is the vulture;

He has the quickest scent.

VOLPONE. I'll to my place,

Thou to thy posture. [Goes behind the curtain.] 110

MOSCA. I am set.

VOLPONE. But, Mosca,

Play the artificer now, torture them rarely.

SCENE 3

[Enter VOLTORE.]

VOLTORE. How now, my Mosca?

MOSCA. [writing] Turkey carpets, nine⁸—

VOLTORE. Taking an inventory? that is well.

4. Corbaccio is a clarissimo, a distinguished man in Venice. "Crump you": curl up on you; there is a species of wood louse or hog louse (the names are interchangeable) which curls up in a ball when touched.

5. I.e., looking for a place to commit suicide.

6. The girdle of Venus (cestus) made any wearer irresistibly beautiful.

7. Acrisius was the father of Danae; he locked her up in a tower till Jove managed to get to her in the form of a shower of gold.

8. Turkey carpets (not necessarily from Turkey) were particularly thick and luxurious; cloth described as tissue often had threads of gold or silver interwoven.

MOSCA. Two suits of bedding, tissue—

VOLTORE.

Where's the will?

Let me read that the while.

[Enter SERVANTS with CORBACCIO in a chair.]

CORBACCIO.

So, set me down,

And get you home.

[Exeunt servants.]

5

VOLTORE.

Is he come now to trouble us?

MOSCA. Of cloth of gold, two more—

CORBACCIO.

Is it done, Mosca?

MOSCA. Of several velvets, eight—

VOLTORE.

I like his care.

CORBACCIO. Dost thou not hear?

[Enter CORVINO.]

CORVINO.

Ha! is the hour come, Mosca?

VOLPONE. [peeping over the curtain] Ay, now they muster.

CORVINO. What does the advocate here,

Or this Corbaccio?

CORBACCIO.

What do these here?

[Enter LADY POLITIC WOULD-BE.]

10

LADY POLITIC.

Mosca!

Is his thread spun?

MOSCA.

Eight chests of linen—

VOLPONE.

O,

My fine dame Would-be, too!

CORVINO.

Mosca, the will,

That I may show it these, and rid them hence.

MOSCA. *Six chests of diaper,⁹ four of damask.—*There. [Gives them the will carelessly, over his shoulder.]

CORBACCIO. Is that the will?

15

MOSCA.

Down-beds, and bolsters—

VOLPONE.

Rare!

Be busy still. Now they begin to flutter:

They never think of me. Look, see, see, see!

How their swift eyes run over the long deed,

Unto the name, and to the legacies,

What is bequeathed them there—

20

MOSCA.

Ten suits of hangings¹—

VOLPONE. Ay, in their garters, Mosca. Now their hopes

Are at the gasp.

VOLTORE.

Mosca the heir!

CORBACCIO.

What's that?

VOLPONE. My advocate is dumb; look to my merchant,

He has heard of some strange storm, a ship is lost,

He faints; my lady will swoon. Old glazen-eyes,²

25

He hath not reached his despair yet.

CORBACCIO.

All these

9. Fine linen cloth; "damask" (from Damascus): a silk fabric woven with many figures.

1. Sets of tapestries on the walls. But Volpone suggests garters, traditional means of suicide.

2. I.e., Corbaccio.

Are out of hope; I am, sure, the man. [Takes the will.]

CORVINO.

But, Mosca—

MOSCA. Two cabinets—

CORVINO. Is this in earnest?

MOSCA.

One

Of ebony—

CORVINO. Or do you but delude me?

MOSCA. *The other, mother of pearl—*I am very busy. 30

Good faith, it is a fortune thrown upon me—

*Item, one salt³ of agate—*not my seeking.

LADY POLITIC. Do you hear, sir?

MOSCA. A perfumed box—'Pray you forbear,

You see I'm troubled—made of an onyx—

LADY POLITIC.

How!

MOSCA. To-morrow or next day, I shall be at leisure 35

To talk with you all.

CORVINO. Is this my large hope's issue?

LADY POLITIC. Sir, I must have a fairer answer.

MOSCA.

Madam!

Marry, and shall: pray you, fairly⁴ quit my house.

Nay, raise no tempest with your looks; but hark you:

Remember what your ladyship offered me 40

To put you in an heir;⁵ go to, think on it:

And what you said e'en your best madams did

For maintenance;⁶ and why not you? Enough.

Go home, and use the poor Sir Pol, your knight, well,

For fear I tell some riddles; go, be melancholic. [Exit LADY 45

POLITIC.]

VOLPONE. O, my fine devil!

CORVINO.

Mosca, 'pray you a word.

MOSCA. Lord! will not you take your dispatch hence yet?

Methinks, of all, you should have been the example.

Why should you stay here? with what thought, what promise? 50

Hear you; do not you know, I know you an ass,

And that you would most fain have been a wittol,⁷

If fortune would have let you? that you are

A declared cuckold, on good terms? This pearl,

You'll say, was yours? Right. This diamond?

I'll not deny't, but thank you. Much here else? 55

It may be so. Why, think that these good works

May help to hide your bad. I'll not betray you;

Although you be but extraordinary,⁸

And have it only in title, it sufficeth;

Go home, be melancholic too, or mad. [Exit CORVINO.] 60

VOLPONE. Rare Mosca! how his villainy becomes him!

3. Salt-cellar.

4. Once and for all.

5. This aspect of Lady Politic Jonson has saved for the present moment.

6. Lady Politic would never say "for money."

7. A pimp for your own wife.

8. I.e., not a full-fledged pimp or cuckold, just one who did his best to be such.

VOLTORE. Certain he doth delude all these for me.

CORBACCIO. Mosca the heir!

VOLPONE. O, his four eyes have found it.⁹

CORBACCIO. I am cozened, cheated, by a parasite slave;

Harlot,¹ thou hast gulled me.

65

MOSCA. Yes, sir. Stop your mouth,

Or I shall draw the only tooth is left.

Are not you he, that filthy covetous wretch,

With the three legs,² that here, in hope of prey,

Have, any time this three years, snuffed about

With your most groveling nose, and would have hired

70

Me to the poisoning of my patron, sir?

Are not you he that have today in court

Professed the disinheriting of your son?

Perjured yourself? Go home, and die, and stink;

If you but croak a syllable, all comes out:

75

Away, and call your porters!

[Exit CORBACCIO.]—

Go, go, stink.

VOLPONE. Excellent varlet!

VOLTORE. Now, my faithful Mosca,

I find thy constancy—

MOSCA. Sir?

VOLTORE.

Sincere.

MOSCA. [writing]

A table

Of porphyry—I mar'l you'll be thus troublesome.

VOLTORE. Nay, leave off now, they are gone.

80

MOSCA. Why, who are you?

What! Who did send for you? O, cry you mercy,

Reverend sir! Good faith, I am grieved for you,

That any chance of mine should thus defeat

Your (I must needs say) most deserving travails:

But I protest, sir, it was cast upon me,

85

And I could almost wish to be without it,

But that the will o' the dead must be observed.

Marry, my joy is that you need it not;

You have a gift, sir (thank your education),

Will never let you want, while there are men,

90

And malice, to breed causes. Would I had

But half the like, for all my fortune, sir!

If I have any suits (as I do hope,

Things being so easy and direct, I shall not)

I will make bold with your obstreperous aid—

95

Conceive me—for your fee, sir. In meantime,

You that have so much law, I know have the conscience

Not to be covetous of what is mine.

Good sir, I thank you for my plate; 'twill help

9. Corbaccio wears spectacles.

1. Frequently used of men, in the sense of "scoundrel."

2. I.e., two plus a cane or crutch.

To set up a young man.³ Good faith, you look
As you were costive;⁴ best go home and purge, sir. [Exit
VOLTORE.] 100

VOLPONE. [comes from behind the curtain] Bid him eat lettuce
well.⁵ My witty mischief,
Let me embrace thee. O that I could now
Transform thee to a Venus!—Mosca, go,
Straight take my habit of clarissimo,⁶ 105
And walk the streets; be seen, torment them more.
We must pursue, as well as plot. Who would Have lost this feast?

MOSCA. I doubt it will lose them.

VOLPONE. O, my recovery shall recover all.
That I could now but think on some disguise 110
To meet them in, and ask them questions;
How I would vex them still at every turn!

MOSCA. Sir, I can fit you.

VOLPONE. Canst thou?

MOSCA. Yes, I know

One o' the commendatori, sir, so like you;

Him will I straight make drunk, and bring you his habit.⁷ 115

VOLPONE. A rare disguise, and answering thy brain!

O, I will be a sharp disease unto them.

MOSCA. Sir, you must look for curses—

VOLPONE. Till they burst;

The fox fares ever best when he is cursed. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 4. A Hall in SIR POLITIC'S House.

[Enter PEREGRINE disguised, and three MERCHANTS.]

PEREGRINE. Am I enough disguised?

1 MERCHANT. I warrant you.

PEREGRINE. All my ambition is to fright him only.

2 MERCHANT. If you could ship him away, 'twere excellent.

3 MERCHANT. To Zant, or to Aleppo?⁸

PEREGRINE. Yes, and have his

Adventures put i' the Book of Voyages, 5

And his gulled story⁹ registered for truth.

Well, gentlemen, when I am in a while,

And that you think us warm in our discourse,

Know your approaches.

1 MERCHANT. Trust it to our care. [Exeunt MERCHANTS.]

[Enter WAITING WOMAN.]

3. I.e., himself.

4. Constipated; "purge": take a laxative.

5. In classical days, lettuce was thought to have mild purgative powers.

6. Mosca, in putting on the distinctive dress of a nobleman (clarissimo) is running a big risk—laws about wearing the costume of one's rank were strict and severe.

7. Volpone now assumes a common sergeant's uniform, and over it a loose black robe, with a red cap and two brass buttons.

8. Zant is Byzantium, Constantinople, or (now) Istanbul; Aleppo, in Syria, still carries its old name.

9. The story of his gulling.

- PEREGRINE. Save you, fair lady! Is Sir Pol within? 10
 WOMAN. I do not know, sir.
- PEREGRINE. Pray you say unto him,
 Here is a merchant, upon earnest business,
 Desires to speak with him.
- WOMAN. I will see, sir. [Exit]
 PEREGRINE. Pray you.—
 I see the family is all female here.
 [Re-enter WAITING WOMAN.]
- WOMAN. He says, sir, he has weighty affairs of state, 15
 That now require him whole; some other time
 You may possess him.
- PEREGRINE. Pray you say again.
 If those require him whole, these will exact him,
 Whereof I bring him tidings. [Exit WOMAN.]—What might be 20
 His grave affair of state now? How to make Bolognian sausages¹ here in Venice, sparing
 One o' the ingredients?
 [Re-enter WAITING WOMAN.]
- WOMAN. Sir, he says, he knows
 By your word tidings, that you are no statesman,²
 And therefore wills you stay.
- PEREGRINE. Sweet, pray you return him;
 I have not read so many proclamations, 25
 And studied them for words, as he has done—
 But—here he deigns to come. [Exit WOMAN.]
 [Enter SIR POLITIC.]
- SIR POLITIC. Sir, I must crave
 Your courteous pardon. There hath chanced today
 Unkind disaster 'twixt my lady and me;
 And I was penning my apology, 30
 To give her satisfaction, as you came now.
- PEREGRINE. Sir, I am grieved I bring you worse disaster:
 The gentleman you met at the port today,
 That told you, he was newly arrived—
- SIR POLITIC. Ay, was
 A fugitive punk?³ 35
- PEREGRINE. No, sir, a spy set on you;
 And he has made relation to the senate,
 That you professed to him to have a plot
 To sell the state of Venice to the Turk.⁴
- SIR POLITIC. O me!
- PEREGRINE. For which, warrants are signed by this time,
 To apprehend you, and to search your study 40
 For papers—

1. Sausages of Bologna were so famous that baloney is still a word in general use.
 2. "Tidings" were what normal people received; a secret-service operative would get "intelligence."

 3. A runaway pimp (the "gentleman" was, of course, Peregrine himself).
 4. See above, IV.1.

SIR POLITIC. Alas, sir, I have none but notes

Drawn out of play-books⁵—

PEREGRINE. All the better, sir.

SIR POLITIC. And some essays. What shall I do?

PEREGRINE. Sir, best

Convey yourself into a sugar-chest;

Or, if you could lie round, a frail⁶ were rare,

45

And I could send you aboard.

SIR POLITIC. Sir, I but talked so,

For discourse' sake merely. [Knocking within.]

PEREGRINE. Hark! they are there.

SIR POLITIC. I am a wretch, a wretch!

PEREGRINE. What will you do, sir?

Have you ne'er a currant-butt⁷ to leap into?

They'll put you to the rack; you must be sudden.

SIR POLITIC. Sir, I have an engine—

50

3 MERCHANT. [within] Sir Politic Would-be!

2 MERCHANT. [within] Where is he?

SIR POLITIC. That I have thought upon before time.

PEREGRINE. What is it?

SIR POLITIC. I shall ne'er endure the torture.

Marry, it is, sir, of a tortoise-shell,

Fitted for these extremities: pray you, sir, help me.

55

Here I've a place, sir, to put back my legs,

Please you to lay it on, sir, [Lies down while PEREGRINE places the shell upon him.]

—With this cap,

And my black gloves, I'll lie, sir, like a tortoise,

Till they are gone.

PEREGRINE. And call you this an engine?

SIR POLITIC. Mine own device—Good sir, bid my wife's women

60

To burn my papers.

[Exit PEREGRINE.]

[The MERCHANTS rush in.]

1 MERCHANT. Where is he hid?

3 MERCHANT. We must,

And will sure find him.

2 MERCHANT. Which is his study?

[Re-enter PEREGRINE.]

1 MERCHANT. What

Are you, sir?

PEREGRINE. I am a merchant, that came here

To look upon this tortoise.

3 MERCHANT. How!

1 MERCHANT. St. Mark!

What beast is this?

65

PEREGRINE. It is a fish.

2 MERCHANT. Come out here!

5. Sir Pol's exotic information turns out to be very common stuff. Play-books in particular had then about the reputation of comic books now.

6. Flimsy fruit-basket.

7. Cask for holding currants.

PEREGRINE. Nay, you may strike him, sir, and tread upon him:
He'll bear a cart.

1 MERCHANT. What, to run over him?

PEREGRINE. Yes.

3 MERCHANT. Let's jump upon him.

2 MERCHANT. Can he not go?

PEREGRINE. He creeps, sir.

1 MERCHANT. Let's see him creep. [Pokes him.]

PEREGRINE. No, good sir, you will hurt him.

2 MERCHANT. Heart, I will see him creep, or prick his guts. 70

3 MERCHANT. Come out here!

PEREGRINE. Pray you, sir! [Aside to SIR POLITIC.]

—Creep a little.

1 MERCHANT.

Forth.

2 MERCHANT. Yet farther.

Good sir! [Aside to SIR POLITIC.]

—Creep.

2 MERCHANT.

We'll see his legs.

[They pull off the shell and discover him.]

3 MERCHANT. Gods' so, he has garters!

1 MERCHANT.

Ay, and gloves!

2 MERCHANT.

Is this

Your fearful tortoise?

PEREGRINE. [discovering himself] Now, Sir Pol, we are even;

For your next project I shall be prepared. 75

I am sorry for the funeral of your notes, sir.

1 MERCHANT. 'Twere a rare motion⁸ to be seen in Fleet Street.

2 MERCHANT. Ay, in the Term.

1 MERCHANT.

Or Smithfield, in the fair.

3 MERCHANT. Methinks 'tis but a melancholic sight.

PEREGRINE. Farewell, most politic tortoise! [Exeunt PEREGRINE and MERCHANTS.] 80

[Re-enter WAITING-WOMAN.]

SIR POLITIC.

Where's my lady?

Knows she of this?

WOMAN.

I know not, sir.

SIR POLITIC.

Inquire.

O, I shall be the fable of all feasts,

The freight of the gazetti,⁹ ship-boys' tale;

And, which is worst, even talk for ordinaries.

WOMAN. My lady's come most melancholic home, 85

And says, sir, she will straight to sea, for physic.¹

SIR POLITIC. And I, to shun this place and clime forever,

Creeping with house on back, and think it well

To shrink my poor head in my politic shell. [Exeunt.]

8. Puppet show. "Fleet Street": then as now a busy street in central London. "Smithfield": where Bartholomew Fair was held. All fairs were especially busy in Term, when lawyers, and their clients, were in residence. These Venetian mercatori are remarkably conversant with London manners.

9. Subject of the newsletters; "talk for the ordinaries": tavern gossip.

1. For her health.

SCENE 5. A Room in VOLPONE's House.

[Enter MOSCA in the habit of a clarissimo, and VOLPONE in that of a commendatore.]

VOLPONE. Am I then like him?

MOSCA. O, sir, you are he.

No man can sever² you.

VOLPONE. Good.

MOSCA. But what am I?

VOLPONE. 'Fore heaven, a brave clarissimo; thou becom'st it!
Pity thou wert not born one.

MOSCA. If I hold

My made one, 'twill be well.

VOLPONE. I'll go and see

What news first at the court. [Exit.]

MOSCA. Do so. My fox

Is out of his hole,³ and ere he shall re-enter,

I'll make him languish in his borrowed case,

Except he come to composition with me.—

Androgyno, Castrone, Nano!

[Enter ANDROGYNO, CASTRONE, and NANO.]

ALL. Here.

MOSCA. Go, recreate yourselves abroad; go, sport.— [Exeunt.]

So, now I have the keys, and am possessed.

Since he will needs be dead afore his time,

I'll bury him, or gain by him. I am his heir,

And so will keep me, till he share at least.

To cozen him of all, were but a cheat

Well placed; no man would construe it a sin:

Let his sport pay for't. This is called the fox-trap. [Exit.]

SCENE 6. A Street.

[Enter CORBACCIO and CORVINO.]

CORBACCIO. They say the court is set.

CORVINO. We must maintain

Our first tale good, for both our reputations.

CORBACCIO. Why? mine's no tale; my son would there have killed me.

CORVINO. That's true, I had forgot. [Aside.]—Mine is, I'm sure.

But for your will, sir.

CORBACCIO. Ay, I'll come upon him

For that hereafter, now his patron's dead.

[Enter VOLPONE in disguise.]

VOLPONE. Signor Corvino! and Corbaccio! sir,

Much joy unto you.

CORVINO. Of what?

VOLPONE. The sudden good

2. Distinguish.

3. Children play a game called Fox-in-the-Hole. "His borrowed case": his false costume.

- Dropped down upon you—
 CORBACCIO. Where?
 VOLPONE. And none knows how, 10
 From old Volpone, sir.
 CORBACCIO. Out, arrant knave!
 VOLPONE. Let not your too much wealth, sir, make you furious.
 CORBACCIO. Away, thou varlet.
 VOLPONE. Why, sir?
 CORBACCIO. Dost thou mock me?
 VOLPONE. You mock the world, sir; did you not change⁴ wills?
 CORBACCIO. Out, harlot!
 VOLPONE. O! belike you are the man,
 Signor Corvino? Faith, you carry it well; 15
 You grow not mad withal; I love your spirit.
 You are not over-leavened⁵ with your fortune.
 You should have some would swell now, like a wine-vat.
 With such an autumn—Did he give you all, sir?
 CORVINO. Avoid, you rascal!
 VOLPONE. Troth, your wife has shown 20
 Herself a very woman;⁶ but you are well,
 You need not care, you have a good estate,
 To bear it out, sir; better by this chance.
 Except Corbaccio have a share.
 CORBACCIO. Hence, varlet.
 VOLPONE. You will not be a'known, sir; why, 'tis wise. 25
 Thus do all gamesters, at all games, dissemble,
 No man will seem to win. [Exeunt CORVINO and CORBACCIO.]
 —Here comes my vulture,
 Heaving his beak up in the air, and snuffing.

SCENE 7

[Enter VOLTORE.]

- VOLTORE. Outstripped thus, by a parasite! a slave,
 Would run on errands, and make legs⁷ for crumbs!
 Well, what I'll do—
 VOLPONE. The court stays for your worship.
 I' c'en rejoice, sir, at your worship's happiness,
 And that it fell into so learned hands, 5
 That understand the fingering—
 VOLTORE. What do you mean?
 VOLPONE. I mean to be a suitor to your worship
 For the small tenement, out of reparations⁸—
 That at the end of your long row of houses,
 By the Pescheria⁹; it was, in Volpone's time, 10
 Your predecessor, ere he grew diseased,

4. Exchange.

5. Too puffed up (like a loaf of bread).

6. I.e., promiscuous.

7. Bow and scrape.

8. Repair.

9. The fish market on the Grand Canal.

A handsome, pretty, customed¹ bawdy-house
As any was in Venice, none dispraised;
But fell with him. His body and that house
Decayed together.

15

VOLTORE. Come, sir, leave your prating.

VOLPONE. Why, if your worship give me but your hand

That I may have the refusal, I have done.

'Tis a mere toy to you, sir; candle-rents;²

As your learned worship knows—

VOLPONE.

What do I know?

VOLPONE. Marry, no end of your wealth, sir; God decrease it! ²⁰

VOLTORE. Mistaking knave! what, mock'st thou my misfortune?

VOLPONE. His blessing on your heart, sir; would 'twere more!—

[Exit VOLTORE.]

—Now to my first again, at the next corner. [Exit.]

SCENE 8. [Another part of the street.]

[Enter CORBACCIO and CORVINO;—MOSCA passes over the stage, before them.]

CORBACCIO. See, in our habit!³ see the impudent varlet!

CORVINO. That I could shoot mine eyes at him, like gun-stones!

[Enter VOLPONE.]

VOLPONE. But is this true, sir, of the parasite?

CORBACCIO. Again, to afflict us! monster!

VOLPONE.

In good faith, sir,

I'm heartily grieved, a beard of your grave length ⁵

Should be so over-reached. I never brooked⁴

That parasite's hair; methought his nose should cozen.

There still was somewhat in his look, did promise

The bane of a clarissimo.⁵

CORBACCIO.

Knave—

VOLPONE.

Methinks

Yet you, that are so traded in the world, ¹⁰

A witty merchant, the fine bird, Corvino,

That have such moral emblems on your name,

Should not have sung your shame, and dropped your cheese,

To let the fox laugh at your emptiness.⁶

CORVINO. Sirrah, you think the privilege of the place, ¹⁵

And your red saucy cap, that seems to me

Nailed to your jolt-head⁷ with those two sequins,

Can warrant your abuses. Come you hither;

You shall perceive, sir, I dare beat you; approach.

VOLPONE. No haste, sir, I do know your valor well, ²⁰

Since you durst publish what you are, sir.⁸

1. Well patronized; "none dispraised": without prejudice to any of the other splendid bawdy houses in Venice.

2. I.e., mere drippings and leftovers, enough to buy candles with.

3. I.e., in the clothes we aristocrats are accustomed to wear.

4. Could stand.

5. I.e., trouble for an aristocrat.

6. The recurrent refrain from Aesop's fable.

7. Blockhead.

8. A cuckold, liable to run "horn-mad."

CORVINO.

I'd speak with you.

Tarry,

VOLPONE.

Sir, sir, another time—

CORVINO. Nay, now.

VOLPONE.

O lord, sir! I were a wise man,
Would stand the fury of a distracted cuckold. [As he is running off, re-enter MOSCA.]

CORBACCIO. What, come again!

25

VOLPONE.

Upon 'em, Mosca; save me.

CORBACCIO. The air's infected where he breathes.

CORVINO.

Let's fly him.

[Exeunt CORVINO and CORBACCIO.]VOLPONE. Excellent basilisk!⁹ turn upon the vulture.

SCENE 9

[Enter VOLTORE.]

VOLTORE. Well, flesh-fly, it is summer with you now;

Your winter will come on.

MOSCA.

Good advocate,

Prithee not rail, nor threaten out of place thus;

Thou'lt make a solecism, as madam says.¹Get you a biggen² more; your brain breaks loose. [Exit.]

5

VOLTORE. Well sir.

VOLPONE.

Would you have me beat the insolent slave,

Throw dirt upon his first good clothes?

VOLTORE.

This same

Is doubtless some familiar.

VOLPONE.

Sir, the court,

In troth, stays for you. I am mad, a mule

That never read Justinian,³ should get up,

10

And ride an advocate. Had you no quirk

To avoid gullage,⁴ sir, by such a creature?

I hope you do but jest; he has not done it;

This's but confederacy,⁵ to blind the rest.

You are the heir?

15

VOLTORE.

A strange, officious,

Troublesome knave! thou dost torment me.

VOLPONE.

I know—

It cannot be, sir, that you should be cozened;

'Tis not within the wit of man to do it;

You are so wise, so prudent; and 'tis fit

That wealth and wisdom still should go together.

[Exeunt.]

20

9. A mythical creature that kills with its glance.

1. The "solecism" of Lady Politic is above, IV 2.

2. A little skullcap worn by lawyers.

3. I.e., Mosca, wholly ignorant of the legal codes compiled by the Emperor Justinian.

4. Deceit.

5. Conspiracy, trickery.

SCENE 10. The Scrutineo.

[Enter AVOCATORI, NOTARIO, BONARIO, CELIA, CORBACCIO, CORVINO, COMMENDATORI, SAFFI, &c.]

1 AVOCATORE. Are all the parties here?

NOTARIO.

All but the advocate.

2 AVOCATORE. And here he comes.

[Enter VOLTORE and VOLPONE.]

1 AVOCATORE.

Then bring them forth to sentence.

VOLTORE. O, my most honored fathers, let your mercy

Once win upon your justice, to forgive—

I am distracted—

5

VOLPONE.

[Aside.] What will he do now?

VOLTORE.

O,

I know not which to address myself to first;

Whether your fatherhoods, or these innocents—

CORVINO. [aside] Will he betray himself?

VOLTORE.

Whom equally

I have abused, out of most covetous ends—

CORVINO. The man is mad!

10

CORBACCIO.

What's that?

CORVINO.

He is possessed

VOLTORE. For which, now struck in conscience, here I prostrate Myself at your offended feet, for pardon.

1, 2 AVOCATORI.

Arise.

CELIA. O heaven, how just thou art!

VOLPONE.

[Aside.] I am caught

In mine own noose—

CORVINO. [To CORBACCIO] Be constant, sir; naught now

Can help, but impudence.

15

1 AVOCATORE.

Speak forward.

COMMENDATORE.

Silence!

VOLTORE. It is not passion in me, reverend fathers,

But only conscience, conscience, my good sires,

That makes me now tell truth. That parasite,

That knave, hath been the instrument of all.

1 AVOCATORE. Where is that knave? fetch him.

20

VOLPONE.

I go.

[Exit.]

CORVINO.

Grave fathers,

This man's distracted; he confessed it now;

For, hoping to be old Volpone's heir,

Who now is dead—

3 AVOCATORE.

How!

2 AVOCATORE.

Is Volpone dead?

CORVINO. Dead since, grave fathers.

BONARIO.

O sure vengeance!

1 AVOCATORE.

Stay,

Then he was no deceiver.

25

VOLTORE.

O no, none;

The parasite, grave fathers.

CORVINO.

He does speak

Out of mere envy, 'cause the servant's made
The thing he gaped for. Please your fatherhoods,
This is the truth, though I'll not justify
The other,⁶ but he may be some-deal faulty.

30

VOLTRE. Ay, to your hopes, as well as mine, Corvino.

But I'll use modesty. Pleaseth your wisdoms,
To view these certain notes, and but confer them;
As I hope favor, they shall speak clear truth.

CORVINO. The devil has entered him!

35

BONARIO.

Or bides in you.

4 AVOCATORE. We have done ill, by a public officer

To send for him, if he be heir.

2 AVOCATORE.

For whom?

4 AVOCATORE. Him that they call the parasite.

3 AVOCATORE.

'Tis true,

He is a man of great estate, now left.⁷

4 AVOCATORE. Go you, and learn his name, and say, the court 40

Entreats his presence here, but to the clearing

Of some few doubts. [Exit NOTARIO.]

2 AVOCATORE.

This same's a labyrinth!

1 AVOCATORE. Stand you unto your first report?

CORVINO.

My state,

My life, my fame—

BONARIO.

Where is it?

CORVINO.

Are at the stake.

1 AVOCATORE. Is yours so too?

45

CORBACCIO.

The advocate's a knave,

And has a forkéd tongue—

2 AVOCATORE.

Speak to the point.

CORBACCIO. So is the parasite too.

1 AVOCATORE.

This is confusion.

VOLTRE. I do beseech your fatherhoods, read but those—

[giving them papers.]

CORVINO. And credit nothing the false spirit hath writ;

It cannot be, but he's possessed,⁸ grave fathers.

50

SCENE 11. A Street.

[Enter VOLTRE.]

VOLTRE. To make a snare for mine own neck! and run

My head into it, wilfully! with laughter!

When I had newly 'scaped, was free, and clear!

Out of mere wantonness! O, the dull devil

Was in this brain of mine, when I devised it,

5

And Mosca gave it second; he must now

6. I.e., Mosca.

7. As an aristocrat (which he automatically is if he has a lot of money), Mosca is not to be summoned by a common official.

8. I.e., demonically possessed by a devil inside him (not wholly incredible in those days, when witchcraft was an accepted fact).

Help to sear up this vein,⁹ or we bleed dead.

[Enter NANO, ANDROGYNO, and CASTRONE.]

How now! who let you loose? whither go you now?

What? to buy gingerbread, or to drown kitlings?

NANO. Sir, Master Mosca called us out of doors,

And bid us all go play, and took the keys.

ANDROGYNO.

Yes.

VOLPONE. Did Master Mosca take the keys? why, so!

I'm farther in. These are my fine conceits!

I must be merry, with a mischief to me!

What a vile wretch was I, that could not bear

My fortune soberly! I must have my crotchets,

And my conundrums! Well, go you, and seek him.

His meaning may be truer than my fear.

Bid him, he straight come to me to the court;

Thither will I, and, if't be possible,

Unscrew my advocate, upon new hopes.

When I provoked him, then I lost myself. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 12. The Scrutineo.

[AVOCATORI, BONARIO, CELIA, CORBACCIO, CORVINO, COMMENDATORI, SAFFI, &c. as before.]

1 AVOCATORE. [showing the papers] These things can ne'er be reconciled. He here

Professeth that the gentleman was wronged,

And that the gentlewoman was brought thither,

Forced by her husband, and there left.

VOLTORE.

Most true.

CELIA. How ready is heaven to those that pray!

1 AVOCATORE.

But that

Volpone would have ravished her, he holds

Utterly false, knowing his impotence.

CORVINO. Grave fathers, he's possessed; again, I say,

Possessed; nay, if there be possession and Obsession, he has both.¹

3 AVOCATORE.

Here comes our officer.

[Enter VOLPONE, still in disguise.]

VOLPONE. The parasite will straight be here, grave fathers.

4 AVOCATORE. You might invent some other name, sir varlet.

3 AVOCATORE. Did not the notary meet him?

VOLPONE.

Not that I know.

4 AVOCATORE. His coming will clear all.

2 AVOCATORE.

Yet, it is misty.

VOLTORE. May't please your fatherhoods.

VOLPONE. [whispers to VOLTORE]

Sir, the parasite

Willed me to tell you, that his master lives;

That you are still the man; your hopes the same;

9. Cautery was frequent medical procedure in the days before antiseptis.

1. Possession is a devil attacking the mind from within, obsession is the same temptation from without.

And this was only a jest—

VOLTORE.

How?

VOLPONE.

Sir, to try

If you were firm, and how you stood affected.

VOLTORE. Art sure he lives?

20

VOLPONE.

Do I live, sir?

VOLTORE.

O me!

I was too violent.

VOLPONE.

Sir, you may redeem it.

They said you were possessed; fall down, and seem so.

I'll help to make it good. [VOLTORE falls.] —God bless the man!

[aside] Stop your wind hard, and swell.—See, see, see, see!

He vomits crooked pins!² his eyes are set,

25

Like a dead hare's hung in a poulter's³ shop!

His mouth's running away! Do you see, signor?

Now it is in his belly.

CORVINO.

Ay, the devil!

VOLPONE. Now in his throat.

CORVINO.

Ay, I perceive it plain.

VOLPONE. 'Twill out, 'twill out! stand clear!

See where it flies,

30

In shape of a blue toad with a bat's wings!

Do not you see it, sir?

CORBACCIO.

What? I think I do.

CORVINO. 'Tis too manifest.

VOLPONE.

Look! he comes to himself!

VOLTORE. Where am I?

VOLPONE.

Take good heart, the worst is past, sir.

You are dispossessed.

35

1 AVOCATORE.

What accident is this?

2 AVOCATORE. Sudden and full of wonder!

3 AVOCATORE.

If he were

Possessed, as it appears, all this is nothing. [He waves the notes.]

CORVINO. He has been often subject to these fits.

1 AVOCATORE. Show him that writing. —Do you know it, sir?

VOLPONE. [whispers to VOLTORE] Deny it, sir, forswear it;

know it not.

40

VOLTORE. Yes, I do know it well, it is my hand;

But all that it contains is false.

BONARIO.

O practice!⁴

2 AVOCATORE. What maze is this?

1 AVOCATORE.

Is he not guilty then,

Whom you there name the parasite?

VOLTORE.

Grave fathers,

No more than his good patron, old Volpone.

45

2. The symptoms that Volpone "sees," and persuades others to see, were standard. The "blue toad with bat's wings" below is the demon himself.

3. A dealer in fowl and small game.

4. Deceit.

4 AVOCATORE. Why, he is dead.

VOLTORE.

O no, my honored fathers,

He lives—

1 AVOCATORE. How! Lives?

VOLTORE.

Lives.

2 AVOCATORE.

This is subtler yet!

3 AVOCATORE. You said he was dead.

VOLTORE.

Never.

AVOCATORE. [To CORVINO]

You said so!

CORVINO. I heard so.

4 AVOCATORE. Here comes the gentleman; make him way.⁵

[Enter MOSCA as a clarissimo.]

3 AVOCATORE.

A stool.

4 AVOCATORE. [aside] A proper man; and, were Volpone dead,
A fit match for my daughter.

3 AVOCATORE.

Give him way.

VOLPONE. [aside to MOSCA] Mosca, I was almost lost; the advocate
Had betrayed all; but now it is recovered;

All's on the hinge again—say, I am living.

MOSCA. What busy knave is this! Most reverend fathers, 55

I sooner had attended your grave pleasures,

But that my order for the funeral

Of my dear patron did require me—

VOLPONE. [aside]

Mosca!

MOSCA. Whom I intend to bury like a gentleman.

VOLPONE. [aside] Ay, quick,⁶ and cozen me of all.

2 AVOCATORE.

Still stranger! 60

More intricate!

1 AVOCATORE.

And come about again!

4 AVOCATORE. [aside] It is a match, my daughter is bestowed.

MOSCA. [aside to VOLPONE] Will you give me half?

VOLPONE.

First, I'll be hanged.

MOSCA.

I know

Your voice is good, cry not so loud.

1 AVOCATORE.

Demand

The advocate.—Sir, did you not affirm

Volpone was alive?

VOLPONE.

Yes, and he is;

This gentleman⁷ told me so. [aside to MOSCA] Thou shalt have half.

MOSCA. Whose drunkard is this same? speak, some that know him:

I never saw his face. [aside to VOLPONE] I cannot now

Afford it you so cheap.

VOLPONE.

No!

1 AVOCATORE. [To VOLTORE]

What say you?

5. Jonson's audience would be scandalized at the instant transformation of a parasite into a gentleman, partly because they had seen it happen frequently in their own land.

6. Alive.

7. I.e., Mosca.

The officer told me.

VOLTORE. I did, grave fathers,
And will maintain he lives, with mine own life,
And that this creature [points to MOSCA] told me. [aside]
I was born
With all good stars my enemies.

MOSCA. Most grave fathers,
If such an insolence as this must pass
Upon me, I am silent: 'twas not this
For which you sent, I hope. 75

2 AVOCATORE. Take him away.

VOLPONE. [aside] Mosca!

3 AVOCATORE. Let him be whipped.

VOLPONE. Wilt thou betray me?
Cozen me?

3 AVOCATORE. And taught to bear himself
Toward a person of his rank. 80

Away. [The OFFICERS seize VOLPONE.]

MOSCA. I humbly thank your fatherhoods.

VOLPONE. [aside] Soft, soft. Whipped!
And lose all that I have! If I confess,
It cannot be much more.

4 AVOCATORE. Sir, are you married?⁸

VOLPONE. They'll be allied anon; I must be resolute.

The fox shall here uncase.⁹ [Throws off his disguise.] 85

MOSCA. Patron!

VOLPONE. Nay, now

My ruins shall not come alone; your match
I'll hinder sure: my substance shall not glue you
Nor screw you into a family.

MOSCA. Why, patron!

VOLPONE. I am Volpone, and this [pointing to MOSCA] is my
knave;

This, [To VOLTORE] his own knave; this, [To CORBACCIO]
avarice's fool; 90

This, [To CORVINO] a chimera¹ of wittol, fool, and knave.

And, reverend fathers, since we all can hope
Nought but a sentence, let's not now despair it.
You hear me brief.

CORVINO. May it please your fatherhoods—

COMMENDATORE. Silence! 95

1 AVOCATORE. The knot is now undone by miracle.

2 AVOCATORE. Nothing can be more clear.

3 AVOCATORE. Or can more prove
These innocent.

1 ADVOCATORE. Give them their liberty.

BONARIO. Heaven could not long let such gross crimes be hid.

8. The question is addressed to Mosca.

9. Remove his mask.

1. The chimera was an unnatural imaginary creature compounded of lion, goat, and serpent.

- 2 AVOCATORE. If this be held the highway to get riches,
May I be poor! 100
- 3 AVOCATORE. This is not gain, but torment.
- 1 AVOCATORE. These possess wealth, as sick men possess fevers. }
Which trulier may be said to possess them.²
- 2 AVOCATORE. Disrobe that parasite.
- CORVINO, MOSCA. Most honored fathers!
- 1 AVOCATORE. Can you plead aught to stay the course of justice?
If you can, speak. 105
- CORVINO, VOLTORE. We beg favor.
- CELIA. And mercy.
- 1 AVOCATORE. You hurt your innocence, suing for the guilty.
Stand forth; and first, the parasite. You appear
T'have been the chiefest minister, if not plotter,
In all these lewd impostures; and now, lastly,
Have with your impudence abused the court, 110
And habit of a gentleman of Venice,
Being a fellow of no birth or blood:³
For which our sentence is, first, thou be whipped;
Then live perpetual prisoner in our galleys.
- VOLPONE. I thank you for him. 115
- MOSCA. Bane⁴ to thy wolfish nature!
- 1 AVOCATORE. Deliver him to the Saffi. [MOSCA is led out.]
—Thou, Volpone,
By blood and rank a gentleman, canst not fall
Under like censure; but our judgment on thee
Is, that thy substance all be straight confiscate
To the hospital of the Incurabili.⁵ 120
And, since the most was gotten by imposture,
By feigning lame, gout, palsy, and such diseases,
Thou art to lie in prison, cramped with irons,
Till thou be'st sick and lame indeed. Remove him. [He is taken away.]
- VOLPONE. This is called mortifying of a fox. 125
- 1 AVOCATORE. Thou, Voltore, to take away the scandal
Thou hast given all worthy men of thy profession,
Art banished from their fellowship, and our state.
Corbaccio!—bring him near—we here possess
Thy son of all thy state,⁶ and confine thee 130
To the monastery of San Spirito;
Where, since thou knew'st not how to live well here,
Thou shalt be learned⁷ to die well.

2. The aphorism is Seneca's (Epistle 119, par. 12).

3. Justice in Venice makes no pretense to equality; Mosca's sentence is most severe, and for snob reasons.

4. Poison. It was legitimate to poison wolves, not foxes. "Saffi": guards.

5. There was a Hospital of the Incurables in Venice, but the sentence carries an irony: these are the only people in Venice who can be trusted with money. The diseases to be picked up in Venetian jails were no joke; the Stinche, so called, were the most horrible dungeons in all Europe.

6. I.e., convey to your son your entire estate.

7. Taught.

CORBACCIO.

Ha! what said he?

COMMENDATORE. You shall know anon, sir.

1 AVOCATORE.

Thou, Corvino, shalt

Be straight embarked from thine own house, and rowed

135

Round about Venice, through the Grand Canal,

Wearing a cap with fair long ass's ears

Instead of horns; and so to mount, a paper

Pinned on thy breast, to the Berlina⁸—

CORVINO.

Yes,

And have mine eyes beat out with stinking fish,

140

Bruised fruit, and rotten eggs—'Tis well. I'm glad

I shall not see my shame yet.

1 AVOCATORE.

And to expiate

Thy wrongs done to thy wife, thou art to send her

Home to her father, with her dowry trebled:

And these are all your judgments—

145

ALL.

Honored fathers.

1 AVOCATORE. Which may not be revoked. Now you begin,

When crimes are done, and past, and to be punished,

To think what your crimes are: away with them!

Let all that see these vices thus rewarded,

Take heart, and love to study 'em! Mischiefs feed

150

Like beasts, till they be fat, and then they bleed. [Exeunt.]

[VOLPONE comes forward.]

The seasoning of a play is the applause.Now, though the fox be punished by the laws,He yet doth hope, there is no suffering due,For any fact which he hath done 'gainst you;

155

If there be, censure him; here he doubtful stands:If not, fare jovially, and clap your hands. [Exit.]

1606

To Penshurst¹*pen - surs - place*

Thou art not, Penshurst, built to envious show,

Of touch² or marble; nor canst boast a row

Of polished pillars, or a roof of gold;

Thou hast no lantern, whereof tales are told,

Or stair, or courts; but stand'st an ancient pile,

5

And, these grudged at,³ art revered the while.

Thou joy'st in better marks, of soil, of air,

8. Pillory.

1. The country seat of the Sidney family (famous for Sir Philip) in Kent; Jonson's is one of the first English poems celebrating a specific place (later examples are Cooper's Hill by John Denham and Windsor Forest by Alexander Pope).

2. Touchstone, i.e., basanite, a pure black, finely grained, and therefore expensive variety of basalt. "Lantern": cupola.

3. More pretentious houses are criticized.

Of wood, of water; therein thou art fair.
 Thou hast thy walks for health, as well as sport;
 Thy mount, to which the dryads⁴ do resort, 10
 Where Pan and Bacchus their high feasts have made,
 Beneath the broad beech and the chestnut shade;
 That taller tree, which of a nut was set
 At his great birth where all the Muses met.⁵
 There in the writhéd bark are cut the names 15
 Of many a sylvan, taken with his flames;⁶
 And thence the ruddy satyrs oft provoke
 The lighter fauns to reach thy Lady's Oak.⁷
 Thy copse too, named of Gamage,⁸ thou hast there,
 That never fails to serve thee seasoned deer 20
 When thou wouldst feast or exercise thy friends.
 The lower land, that to the river bends,
 Thy sheep, thy bullocks, kine, and calves do feed;
 The middle grounds thy mares and horses breed.
 Each bank doth yield thee conies;⁹ and the tops, 25
 Fertile of wood, Ashore and Sidney's copse,¹
 To crown thy open table, doth provide
 The purpled pheasant with the speckled side;
 The painted partridge lies in every field,
 And for thy mess is willing to be killed. 30
 And if the high-swollen Medway² fail thy dish,
 Thou hast thy ponds, that pay thee tribute fish,
 Fat aged carps that run into thy net,
 And pikes, now weary their own kind to eat,
 As loath the second draught or cast to stay, 35
 Officiously at first themselves betray;
 Bright eels that emulate them, and leap on land
 Before the fisher, or into his hand.
 Then hath thy orchard fruit, thy garden flowers,
 Fresh as the air, and new as are the hours. 40
 The early cherry, with the later plum,
 Fig, grape, and quince, each in his time doth come;
 The blushing apricot and woolly peach
 Hang on thy walls, that every child may reach.
 And though thy walls be of the country stone, 45
 They are reared with no man's ruin, no man's groan;
 There's none that dwell about them wish them down;
 But all come in, the farmer and the clown,³

4. Wood nymphs.

5. Sir Philip Sidney was born at Penshurst; an oak tree, planted the day of his birth, is still shown as "Sidney's oak."

6. Woodsman, in love because of reading Sidney's sonnets.

7. Lady Leicester's oak, named after a lady of the house who once entered into labor under its branches. "Provoke": challenge to a race.

8. Lady Barbara Gamage gave her name to a grove near the entrance of the park.

9. Rabbits.

1. "Ashore and Sidney's copse" are little woods and spinneys, lovingly enumerated by Jonson. They still survive, under their ancient names.

2. The local river.

3. Yokel.

And no one empty-handed, to salute
 Thy lord and lady, though they have no suit. 50
 Some bring a capon, some a rural cake,
 Some nuts, some apples; some that think they make
 The better cheeses bring them, or else send
 By their ripe daughters, whom they would commend
 This way to husbands, and whose baskets bear 55
 An emblem of themselves in plum or pear.
 But what can this (more than express their love)
 Add to thy free provisions, far above
 The need of such? whose liberal board doth flow
 With all that hospitality doth know; 60
 Where comes no guest but is allowed to eat,
 Without his fear, and of thy lord's own meat;
 Where the same beer and bread, and selfsame wine,
 That is his lordship's shall be also mine,
 And I not fain to sit (as some this day 65
 At great men's tables), and yet dine away.⁴
 Here no man tells⁵ my cups; nor, standing by,
 A waiter doth my gluttony envy,
 But gives me what I call, and lets me eat;
 He knows below he shall find plenty of meat. 70
 Thy tables hoard not up for the next day;
 Nor, when I take my lodging, need I pray
 For fire, or lights, or livery;⁶ all is there,
 As if thou then wert mine, or I reigned here:
 There's nothing I can wish, for which I stay.⁷ 75
 That found King James when, hunting late this way
 With his brave son, the prince, they saw thy fires
 Shine bright on every hearth, as the desires
 Of thy Penates⁸ had been set on flame
 To entertain them; or the country came 80
 With all their zeal to warm their welcome here.
 What (great I will not say, but) sudden cheer
 Didst thou then make 'em! and what praise was heaped
 On thy good lady then, who therein reaped
 The just reward of her high housewifery; 85
 To have her linen, plate, and all things nigh,
 When she was far; and not a room but dressed
 As if it had expected such a guest!
 These, Penshurst, are thy praise, and yet not all.
 Thy lady's noble, fruitful, chaste withal. 90
 His children thy great lord may call his own,
 A fortune in this age but rarely known.
 They are, and have been, taught religion; thence

4. Because the tables were so large, different courses might be served at different ends—hence the possibility of sitting at a man's table, yet dining away.

5. Counts.

6. Rations, food.

7. Wait.

8. Roman household gods. A room in the house is still known as "King James's room."

Their gentler spirits have sucked innocence.
 Each morn and even they are taught to pray, 95
 With the whole household, and may, every day,
 Read in their virtuous parents' noble parts
 The mysteries of manners, arms, and arts.
 Now, Penshurst, they that will proportion⁹ thee
 With other edifices, when they see 100
 Those proud, ambitious heaps, and nothing else,
 May say their lords have built, but thy lord dwells.
 1616

Inviting a Friend to Supper

Tonight, grave sir, both my poor house and I
 Do equally desire your company:
 Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
 But that your worth will dignify our feast
 With those that come; whose grace may make that seem 5
 Something, which else could hope for no esteem.
 It is the fair acceptance, Sir, creates
 The entertainment perfect: not the cates.¹
 Yet shall you have, to rectify your palate,
 An olive, capers, or some better salad 10
 Ushering the mutton; with a short-legged hen,
 If we can get her, full of eggs, and then
 Lemons and wine for sauce; to these, a coney
 Is not to be despaired of for our money;
 And though fowl now be scarce, yet there are clerks,² 15
 The sky not falling, think we may have larks.
 I'll tell you of more, and lie, so you will come:
 Of partridge, pheasant, wood-cock, of which some
 May yet be there; and godwit if we can,
 Knot, rail, and ruff, too.³ Howsoe'er, my man 20
 Shall read a piece of Virgil, Tacitus,
 Livy, or of some better book to us,
 Of which we'll speak our minds amidst our meat;
 And I'll profess⁴ no verses to repeat.
 To this, if aught appear which I not know of, 25
 That will the pastry, not my paper, show off.⁵
 Digestive cheese and fruit there sure will be;
 But that which most doth take my muse and me
 Is a pure cup of rich Canary wine,
 Which is the Mermaid's⁶ now, but shall be mine; 30

9. Compare.

1. Dishes.

2. Scholars; pronounced "clarks." A "coney" is a rabbit.

3. The treat of the feast will be these various game-birds respectively curlew, snipe, sandpiper, and corn crane.

4. Undertake, promise.

5. Jonson's promise not to recite his poetry is ironically qualified; poems may appear, but they will be on sheets of paper under pies, not for declamation.

6. The Mermaid tavern, famous haunt of the poets; sweet wine from the Canary Islands was very popular in England. Horace and Anacreon (the one in Latin, the other in Greek) wrote many poems in praise of good wine.

Of which, had Horace or Anacreon tasted,
 Their lives, as do their lines, till now had lasted.
 Tobacco, Nectar, or the Thespian spring
 Are all but Luther's beer to this I sing.⁷
 Of this we will sup free but moderately,
 And we will have no Pooly or Parrot⁸ by,
 Nor shall our cups make any guilty men,
 But at our parting we shall be as when
 We innocently met. No simple word
 That shall be uttered at our mirthful board
 Shall make us sad next morning; or affright
 The liberty that we'll enjoy tonight.

35

40

1616

An Ode

High-spirited friend,
 I send nor balms nor cor'sives¹ to your wound,
 Your fate hath found
 A gentler and more agile hand to tend
 The cure of that, which is but corporal;
 And doubtful days (which were named "critical")
 Have made their fairest flight,
 And now are out of sight.
 Yet doth some wholesome physick for the mind
 Wrapped in this paper lie,²
 Which in the taking if you mis-apply,
 You are unkind.

5

10

Your covetous hand,
 Happy in that fair honor it hath gained,
 Must now be reined.
 True valor doth her own renown command
 In one full action; nor have you now more
 To do, than be a husband³ of that store.
 Think but how dear you bought
 This same which you have caught,
 Such thoughts will make you more in love with truth.
 'Tis wisdom, and that high,

15

20

7. The Thespian spring is Castalia, haunt of the muses; compared to Canary, all these other intoxicants are no better than Luther's beer, i.e., weak stuff.

8. Pooly and Parrot were government spies though their conjunction also suggests a talkative bird, Poll Parrot. Jonson, as a Roman Catholic, had reason to be wary of undercover agents.

1. Balms would be soothing, as "cor'-

sives" (corrosives) would be irritating medications.

2. The situation is that the friend has been wounded in a duel. Now that the critical days are past, the lady over whom it was fought ("a gentler and more agile hand") will cure the wounded warrior's body. Jonson has a medication ("physick") for his mind.

3. Guardian, protector.

For men to use their fortune reverently,
Even in youth.

1640

To Lucy, Countess of Bedford, with Mr. Donne's Satires⁴

Lucy, you brightness of our sphere, who are
Life of the Muses' day, their morning star!
If works, not th' authors, their own grace should look,
Whose poems would not wish to be your book?
But these, desired by you, the maker's ends
Crown with their own. Rare poems ask rare friends.
Yet satires, since the most of mankind be
Their unavowed subject, fewest see:
For none e'er took that pleasure in sin's sense,
But, when they heard it taxed, took more offense.
They then that, living where the matter is bred,
Dare for these poems yet both ask and read
And like them too, must needfully, though few,
Be of the best: and 'mongst those, best are you;
Lucy, you brightness of our sphere, who are
The Muses' evening, as their morning star.

1616

Slow, Slow, Fresh Fount¹

Slow, slow, fresh fount, keep time with my salt tears;
Yet slower, yet, O faintly, gentle springs!
List to the heavy part the music bears,
Woe weeps out her division,² when she sings.
Droop herbs and flowers;
Fall grief in showers;
Our beauties are not ours.
O, I could still,
Like melting snow upon some craggy hill,
Drop, drop, drop, drop,³
Since nature's pride is now a withered daffodil.

4. Lucy, Countess of Bedford, was a famous patroness of the age, to whom both Jonson and Donne addressed a number of poems. Jonson's basic conceit is that you have to be a good person to read satire without twinges of conscience; since Lucy asks for the strongest satires, she must be the best person. What he was offering her was not, of course, a bound volume of Donne's satires; this was simply a manuscript collection, such as passed commonly from hand to hand in court circles.

1. From the satiric comedy Cynthia's Revels (1600). It deals with the sin of self-love, and this famous lyric is a lament sung by Echo for Narcissus, who was entranced by his own image and ultimately transformed into a flower.

2. Grief, but also a rapid, melodic passage of music.

3. This line shows how far Jonson could go in adapting his verse to the needs of a composer.

Queen and Huntress¹

Queen and huntress, chaste and fair,
 Now the sun is laid to sleep,
 Seated in thy silver chair,
 State in wonted manner keep;
 Hesperus entreats thy light,
 Goddess excellently bright.

5

Earth, let not thy envious shade
 Dare itself to interpose;
 Cynthia's shining orb was made
 Heaven to clear, when day did close.
 Bless us then with wished sight,
 Goddess excellently bright.

10

Lay thy bow of pearl apart,
 And thy crystal-shining quiver;
 Give unto the flying hart
 Space to breathe, how short soever.
 Thou that mak'st a day of night,
 Goddess excellently bright.

15

1600

Song: To Celia²

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
 And I will pledge with mine;
 Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
 And I'll not look for wine.
 The thirst that from the soul doth rise,
 Doth ask a drink divine:
 But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
 I would not change for thine.

5

I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
 Not so much honoring thee,
 As giving it a hope, that there
 It could not withered be.
 But thou threest did'st only breathe,
 And sent'st it back to me;
 Since when it grows and smells, I swear,
 Not of itself, but thee.

10

15

1616

1. Also from Cynthia's Revels, this song is sung by Hesperus, the evening star, to Cynthia, or Diana, goddess of chastity and the moon—with whom Queen Elizabeth was, almost automatically, equated.

2. These famous lines are a patchwork of five separate passages in the Epistles of Philostratus, a Greek sophist of the 3rd century A.D. Jonson very carefully reworded the phrases (there are several early MS. versions of the poem) into this classic lyric.

In the Person of Woman-kind

A SONG APOLOGETIC

Men, if you love us, play no more
 The fools or tyrants with your friends,
 To make us still sing o'er and o'er
 Our own false praises for your ends:
 We have both wits and fancies too, 5
 And if we must, let's sing of you.

Nor do we doubt but that we can,
 If we would search with care and pain,
 Find some one good in some one man;
 So going thorough¹ all your strain, 10
 We shall at last of parcels make
 One good enough for a song's sake.

And as a cunning painter takes
 In any curious piece you see
 More pleasure while the thing he makes 15
 Than when 'tis made, why so will we.
 And having pleased our art, we'll try
 To make a new, and hang that by.

On My First Daughter

Here lies, to each her parents' ruth,²
 Mary, the daughter of their youth;
 Yet all heaven's gifts being heaven's due,
 It makes the father less to rue.
 At six months' end she parted hence 5
 With safety of her innocence;
 Whose soul heaven's queen, whose name she bears,
 In comfort of her mother's tears,
 Hath placed amongst her virgin-train:
 Where, while that severed doth remain, 10
 This grave partakes the fleshly birth;
 Which cover lightly, gentle earth!

1616

On My First Son

Farewell, thou child of my right hand,³ and joy;
 My sin was too much hope of thee, loved boy:

1. "Thorough" could be used for "through" in the 17th century when the meter required it.

2. Grief. There is no sure identification of Jonson's daughter, nor a positive date of composition for the poem.

3. "Child of the right hand" is a literal translation of the Hebrew name "Benjamin," which implies the meanings "dexterous" or "fortunate." The boy was born in 1596, and died on his birthday in 1603.

Seven years thou wert lent to me, and I thee pay,
 Exacted by thy fate, on the just day.
 O could I lose all father⁴ now! for why
 Will man lament the state he should envy,
 To have so soon 'scaped world's and flesh's rage,
 And, if no other misery, yet age?
 Rest in soft peace, and asked, say, "Here doth lie
 Ben Jonson his best piece of poetry."
 For whose sake henceforth all his vows be such
 As what he loves may never like too much.⁵

1616

Epitaph on Elizabeth, L. H.⁶

Wouldst thou hear what man can say
 In a little? Reader, stay.
 Underneath this stone doth lie
 As much beauty as could die;
 Which in life did harbor give
 To more virtue than doth live.
 If at all she had a fault,
 Leave it buried in this vault.
 One name was Elizabeth;
 Th' other, let it sleep with death:
 Fitter, where it died, to tell,
 Than that it lived at all. Farewell!

1616

To the Memory of My Beloved Master
William ShakespeareAND WHAT HE HATH LEFT US¹

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name,
 Am I thus ample to thy book and fame,
 While I confess thy writings to be such
 As neither man nor Muse can praise too much.
 'Tis true, and all men's suffrage.² But these ways
 Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise:
 For silliest ignorance on these may light,
 Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
 Or blind affection,³ which doth ne'er advance
 The truth, but gropes, and ureth all by chance;
 Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
 And think to ruin where it seemed to raise.

4. Relinquish all thoughts of being a father.

5. The obscure grammar of the last lines seems to refer back to the feeling in line 2, that too much affection is fatal to the loved one.

6. The subject of this epitaph may have been Elizabeth, Lady Hatton; but, in fact, her name has slept with death.

1. This poem was prefixed to the first folio of Shakespeare's plays, published in 1623.

2. Agreement, consent.

3. Prejudice.

These are as some infamous bawd or whore
 Should praise a matron. What could hurt her more?
 But thou art proof against them, and, indeed, 15
 Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need.
 I therefore will begin. Soul of the age!
 The applause! delight! the wonder of our stage!
 My Shakespeare, rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie 20
 A little further to make thee a room:⁴
 Thou art a monument without a tomb,
 And art alive still while thy book doth live,
 And we have wits to read and praise to give.
 That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses, 25
 I mean with great, but disproportioned⁵ Muses;
 For, if I thought my judgment were of years,
 I should commit thee surely with thy peers,
 And tell how far thou didst our Lyly outshine,
 Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line.⁶ 30
 And though thou hadst small Latin and less Greek,⁷
 From thence to honor thee I would not seek
 For names, but call forth thund'ring Aeschylus,
 Euripides, and Sophocles to us,
 Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,⁸ 35
 To life again, to hear thy buskin⁹ tread
 And shake a stage; or, when thy socks were on,
 Leave thee alone for the comparison
 Of all that insolent Greece or haughty Rome
 Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come. 40
 Triumph, my Britain; thou hast one to show
 To whom all scenes¹ of Europe homage owe.
 He was not of an age, but for all time!
 And all the Muses still were in their prime
 When like Apollo he came forth to warm 45
 Our ears, or like a Mercury to charm.
 Nature herself was proud of his designs,
 And joyed to wear the dressing of his lines,
 Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
 As, since, she will vouchsafe no other wit: 50
 The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,

4. Chaucer, Spenser, and Francis Beaumont were buried in Westminster Abbey; Shakespeare, of course, in Stratford. Jonson endorses the separation; Shakespeare should not be crowded.

5. Not comparable.

6. John Lyly, Thomas Kyd, and Christopher Marlowe, Elizabethan dramatists put in the shade by Shakespeare.

7. Shakespeare had, by modern standards, a very adequate command of Latin; Jonson is speaking from the lofty height of his own remarkable scholarship. Shakespeare's French and Italian (he was competent in both tongues) Jonson does not think worthy of mention.

8. Marcus Pacuvius and Lucius Accius (2nd century B.C.) and "him of Cordova," Seneca the Younger (1st century A.D.), the greatest of the Latin tragedians. Only fragments survive of the plays of Pacuvius and Accius; Jonson's comparisons are more pedantic, in these instances, than relevant.

9. The symbol of tragedy, as contrasted with "socks" (in the next line), symbols of comedy.

1. Stages.

Neat Terence, witty Plautus² now not please,
 But antiquated and deserted lie,
 As they were not of Nature's family.
 Yet must I not give Nature all; thy Art, 55
 My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
 For though the poet's matter Nature be,
 His Art doth give the fashion;³ and that he
 Who casts to write a living line must sweat
 (Such as thine are) and strike the second heat 60
 Upon the muses' anvil; turn the same,
 And himself with it, that he thinks to frame,
 Or for the laurel he may gain a scorn;
 For a good poet's made as well as born.
 And such wert thou! Look how the father's face 65
 Lives in his issue; even so the race
 Of Shakespeare's mind and manners brightly shines
 In his well-turned and true-filed lines,
 In each of which he seems to shake a lance,⁴
 As brandished at the eyes of ignorance. 70
 Sweet swan of Avon, what a sight it were
 To see thee in our waters yet appar,
 And make those flights upon the banks of Thames
 That so did take Eliza and our James!⁵
 But stay; I see thee in the hemisphere 75
 Advanced and made a constellation there!⁶
 Shine forth, thou star of poets, and with rage
 Or influence⁷ chide or cheer the drooping stage,
 Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourned like night,
 And despairs day, but for thy volume's light. 80

1623

To John Donne

Donne, the delight of Phoebus and each Muse,
 Who, to thy one, all other brains refuse;¹
 Whose every work, of thy most early wit,
 Came forth example and remains so yet;
 Longer a-knowing than most wits do live, 5
 And which no affection praise enough can give.
 To it² thy language, letters, arts, best life,
 Which might with half mankind maintain a strife.

2. Aristophanes, the great Greek satirist and comic writer; Terence and Plautus (3rd and 2nd centuries B.C.), Roman writers of comedy.

3. Form, style. "Casts": undertakes. a petty sum.

4. Pun on Shake-speare.

5. Queen Elizabeth and King James.

6. Heroes and demigods were typically exalted after death to a place among the stars.

7. "Rage" and "influence" describe the supposed effects of the planets on earthly affairs. "Rage" also implies poetic inspiration.

1. The word "refuse" could imply a reproach against Donne's obscurity, a notion of egotism ("refusal" involving preference of one over others), or the idea of welding (re-fusing) lesser minds to a greater.
2. The verb "add" is understood.

All which I meant to praise, and yet I would,
But leave, because I cannot as I should.

10
1616

To the Immortal Memory and Friendship of That Noble Pair, Sir Lucius Cary and Sir H. Morison¹

The Turn

Brave infant of Saguntum, clear²
Thy coming forth in that great year
When the prodigious Hannibal did crown
His rage, with razing your immortal town.
Thou, looking then about 5
E'er thou wert half got out,
Wise child, didst hastily return
And mad'st thy mother's womb thine urn.
How summed a circle³ didst thou leave mankind
Of deepest lore, could we the center find! 10

The Counter-Turn

Did wiser nature draw thee back
From out the horror of that sack,
Where shame, faith, honor, and regard of right
Lay trampled on?—the deeds of death and night
Urged, hurried forth, and hurled 15
Upon th' affrighted world?
Sword, fire, and famine, with fell fury met,
And all on utmost ruin set:
As, could they but life's miseries foresee,
No doubt all infants would return like thee. 20

The Stand

For what is life if measured by the space,
Not by the act?
Or masked man, if valued by his face,
Above his fact?
Here's one outlived his peers 25
and told forth fourscore years:
He vexéd time, and busied the whole state,
Troubled both foes and friends,
But ever to no ends:
What did this stirrer but die late? 30

1. Henry Morison died in 1629 at the age of only twenty; his good friend Lucius Cary was a year or two younger. Jonson's ode is modeled on those of Pindar, with their triple pattern of strophe, antistrophe, and epode, translated literally by Jonson as turn, counter-turn, and stand. These divisions served, when the Greek odes were recited in a theater, to distinguish which part of the chorus chanted them; in English odes, they serve simply to formalize the structure.

2. Explain, describe. Pliny tells the story of the infant born while Sagunto, in Spain, was being assaulted by Hannibal; he dived back into his mother's womb (setting a record for brevity), and was buried there.

3. How complete a lesson.

How well at twenty had he fall'n or stood!
For three of his four-score, he did no good.

The Turn

He⁴ entered well, by virtuous parts,
Got up and thrived with honest arts:
He purchased friends and fame and honors then, 35
And had his noble name advanced with men;
But, weary of that flight,
He stooped in all men's sight
To sordid flatteries, acts of strife,
And sunk in that dead sea of life 40
So deep, as he did then death's waters sup;
But that the cork of title buoyed him up.

The Counter-Turn

Alas, but Morison fell young;—
He never fell, thou fall'st,⁵ my tongue.
He stood, a soldier, to the last right end, 45
A perfect patriot and a noble friend,
But most a virtuous son.
All offices⁶ were done
By him, so ample, full, and round
In weight, in measure, number, sound, 50
As, though his age imperfect might appear,
His life was of humanity the sphere.

The Stand

Go now, and tell out⁷ days summed up with fears,
And make them years;
Produce thy mass of miseries on the stage 55
To swell thine age;
Repeat of things a throng,
To show thou hast been long,
Not lived; for life doth her great actions spell,
By what was done and wrought 60
In season, and so brought
To light: her measures arc, how well
Each syllab'e answered, and was formed how fair;
These make the lines of life, and that's her air.⁸

The Turn

It is not growing like a tree 65
In bulk, doth make man better be,

4. I.e., another man, a separate example.

5. Slip, with a latent pun on Latin fallor, "to make a slip of the tongue."

6. Duties of life.

7. Count, number.

8. Life is a poem set to music, the music of its meaning. Life's "measures" are its metrical patterns, as well as the standards by which it is judged.

Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
 To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sere:
 A lily of a day
 Is fairer far in May
 Although it fall and die that night;
 It was the plant and flower of light.
 In small proportions we just beauties see,
 And in short measures life may perfect be.

70

The Counter-Turn

Call, noble Lucius, then for wine,
 And let thy looks with gladness shine:
 Accept this garland, plant it on thy head,
 And think, nay, know, thy Morison's not dead.
 He leaped the present age,
 Possessed with holy rage,
 To see that bright, eternal day,
 Of which we priests and poets say
 Such truths as we expect for happy men,
 And there he lives with memory: and Ben

75

80

The Stand

Jonson, who sung this of him ere he went
 Himself to rest,
 Or taste a part of that full joy he meant
 To have expressed
 In this bright Asterism:⁹
 Where it were friendship's schism
 (Were not his Lucius long with us to tarry)
 To separate these twi-
 Lights, the Dioscuri;¹
 And keep the one half from his Harry.
 But fate doth so alternate the design,
 Whilst that in heaven, this light on earth must shine.

85

90

95

The Turn

And shine as you exalted are,
 Two names of friendship, but one star,
 Of hearts the union. And those not by chance
 Made, or indentured, or leased out t' advance
 The profits for a time.
 No pleasures vain did chime
 Of rhymes or riots at your feasts,
 Orgies of drink, or feigned protests;
 But simple love of greatness and of good
 That knits brave minds and manners, more than blood.

100

105

9. Constellation.

1. Castor and Pollux, the Dioscuri, are stars comprising the constellation of Gemini, or the twins.

The Counter-Turn

This made you first to know the Why
 You liked, then after to apply
 That liking; and approach so one the tother,
 Till either grew a portion of the other; 110
 Each styled by his end,
 The copy of his friend.
 You lived to be the great surnames
 And titles by which all made claims
 Unto the Virtue. Nothing perfect done, 115
 But as a Cary or a Morison.

The Stand

And such a force the fair example had,
 As they that saw
 The good and durst not practice it, were glad
 That such a law 120
 Was left yet to mankind,
 Where they might read and find
 Friendship in deed was written, not in words,
 And with the heart, not pen,
 Of two so early men, 125
 Whose lives her rolls were, and records,
 Who, ere the first down blooméd on the chin
 Had sowed these fruits, and got the harvest in.

1629

1640

Ode to Himself¹

Come leave the loathéd stage,
 And the more loathsome age,
 Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
 Usurp the chair of wit!
 Indicting and arraigning every day 5
 Something they call a play.
 Let their fastidious, vain
 Commission of the brain
 Run on and rage, sweat, censure, and condemn;
 They were not made for thee, less thou for them. 10
 Say that thou pour'st them wheat,
 And they will acorns eat;
 'Twere simple fury still thyself to waste
 On such as have no taste!
 To offer them a surfeit of pure bread, 15
 Whose appetites are dead!
 No, give them grains their fill,
 Husks, draff to drink and swill:²

1. The failure of Jonson's The New Inn (1629) inspired this heroic assault on criticism and the public taste.

2. Jonson gets into one line three words which suggest pig-food.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
 Envy them not; their palate's with the swine.

20

No doubt some moldy tale,
 Like Pericles,³ and stale
 As the shrieve's crusts, and nasty as his fish—
 Scraps, out every dish
 Thrown forth and raked into the common tub,
 May keep up the Play-club:
 There, sweepings do as well
 As the best-ordered meal;
 For who the relish of these guests will fit
 Needs set them but the alms basket of wit.

25

30

And much good do 't you then:
 Brave plush and velvet men
 Can feed on orts;⁴ and, safe in your stage clothes,
 Dare quit, upon your oaths,
 The stagers and the stage-wrights too, your peers,⁵
 Of larding your large ears
 With their foul comic socks,
 Wrought upon twenty blocks;
 Which, if they are torn, and turned, and patched enough,
 The gamesters share your guilt, and you their stuff.

35

40

Leave things so prostitute
 And take th' Alcaic lute;⁶
 Or thine own Horace, or Anacreon's lyre;
 Warm thee by Pindar's fire:
 And though thy nerves be shrunk, and blood be cold,
 Ere years have made thee old,
 Strike that disdainful heat
 Throughout, to their defeat,
 As curious fools, and envious of thy strain,
 May, blushing, swear no palsy's in thy brain.

45

50

But when they hear thee sing
 The glories of thy king,
 His zeal to God and his just awe o'er men,
 They may, blood-shaken then,
 Feel such a flesh-quake to possess their powers
 As they shall cry, "Like ours,
 In sound of peace or wars,
 No harp e'er hit the stars
 In tuning forth the acts of his sweet reign,
 And raising Charles his chariot 'bove his Wain."⁷

60

1640

1631

3. Shakespeare's play, at least in part (printed 1609), which Jonson compares to poorhouse fare.

4. Scraps.

5. This fourth stanza turns toward an attack on the players and playwrights themselves, whom Jonson holds responsible for the low state of public taste. His anger here comes close to incoherence, and the plain sense of the stanza is most unclear.

6. That of Alcaeus, who lived ca. 600 B.C., and became famous, along with Horace, Anacreon, and Pindar, among the greatest lyric poets.

7. Jonson's poetry will elevate the chariot of Charles I (symbol of his royal power) above Charles's Wain (the seven bright stars of Ursa Major) among the constellations.

Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue In the opening pages of his famous study, The Civilization of the Renaissance in Italy, Jacob Burckhardt eloquently describes the many pageants, tourneys, triumphs, and festal displays that were a striking feature of courtly and urban life in those days. England too, and as late as the first third of the 17th century, fostered these semi-dramatic ceremonials, under the title of masques. In its whole social and literary structure the masque stood quite apart from the stage play. It was performed by noble amateurs, not professional players, and performed, as a rule, only once, perhaps as the climax of "revels" which were tied strictly to a calendar date. The aim of the masque was not to make money, but to lose it, in great quantities and with maximum splendor. The masque did not try to create or maintain an intact illusion by separating the audience sharply from the action; rather, it mingled the audience off-stage with the actors on-stage, either inviting the audience to join the dance (as in Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue) or leading the players off the stage in an act of homage or deference to the chief person in the audience (as in Milton's Comus). The masque had many elements of an audience-participation game. Especially when produced at court, it made use of elaborate and expensive "machinery"—sets far more intricate than any the playhouses could afford. It involved many musicians, special dancers, and extravagant costumes; it jumbled the heraldic and mythical figures together in strange profusion; it was both comic and serious, and anything but realistic. The three constant elements of the masque were a rich spectacle (with both song and dance), a moral allegory, and a courtly compliment. In weaving these traditional ingredients together, Jonson, with his special gifts of learning, fantasy, and lucid eloquence, showed particular mastery. He wrote nearly thirty masques in all, of which Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue may be taken as typical.

The reader should not look for too much narrative logic in Jonson's masque, which shifts scenes and characters, not according to the sequences of a story, but to provide good "production numbers." Comus appears at the beginning of the masque, but only to sing a song and do a wild dance with his "crew." Hercules is present, because he once had to make a hard choice between pleasure and virtue; but as this choice is no longer necessary, he soon fades into the role of a spectator. There is another grotesque dance (an "antimasque" or "antic masque") of pygmies. This comic dance serves to prepare for, and contrast with, the elegant and polished dances performed by the gentry at the end of the masque; its specific form in Jonson's masque was probably determined by the presence of some dwarfs among the court jesters who wanted a part in the action. Finally, the true masquers take possession of the stage; they are a group of court lords, led by Prince Charles, richly dressed and wearing masks, but obviously recognizable in their own persons. They perform a series of intricate figures, descend into the audience to invite forth their ladies, and perform one other formal dance before the festivities become general.

These last dances of the masque are all under the guidance of Daedalus, the master-craftsman of ancient Greece, who is shown to be capable of reconciling pleasure with virtue, life with artifice, and the court with its own fantastic mirror-image in the masque. If Hercules in the masque reminds us of Jonson himself (teased by spiteful but impotent pygmies), the figure of Daedalus can scarcely fail to suggest Jonson's partner in masque-making, Inigo Jones. Jones was a student of continental art and architecture, a practicing architect under the special influence of Palladio, the Italian master, and an adviser to many aristocratic art-collectors; in his own line, he was quite as remarkable and influential a man as Jonson himself. The two men quarrelled violently and permanently in later years; but Jones was far and away the most sophisticated stage-designer and deviser of stage-effects in his time; we know he was responsible for the production of Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue; and Jonson would have enjoyed paying this elegant tribute to him as Daedalus, the fabulous artificer.

Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue

A MASQUE. AS IT WAS PRESENTED AT COURT BEFORE KING JAMES.
1618.

The scene was the mountain Atlas, who had his top ending in the figure of an old man, his head and beard all hoary and frost as if his shoulders were covered with snow; the rest wood and rock. A grove of ivy at his feet, out of which, to a wild music of cymbals, flutes and tabors, is brought forth Comus,¹ the god of cheer, or the belly, riding in triumph, his head crowned with roses and other flowers, his hair curled; they that wait upon him crowned with ivy, their javelins done about with it; one of them going with Hercules his bowl bare before him, while the rest presented him with this

HYMN

Room, room! make room for the bouncing belly.
First father of sauce, and deviser of jelly;
Prime master of arts, and the giver of wit,
That found out the excellent engine, the spit,
The plow and the flail, the mill and the hopper, 5
The hutch and the bolter, the furnace and copper,
The oven, the bavin, the mawkin, the peel,
The hearth and the range, the dog and the wheel.²
He, he first invented the hogshead and tun,
The gimlet and vice too, and taught them to run. 10
And since, with the funnel, an Hippocras bag
He's made of himself, that now he cries swag.³

1. Comus is the traditional classical and Renaissance figure of sensual indulgence; many of his properties here (ivy, wild music, and the flowing bowl) suggest his kinship with Dionysus. The bowl of Hercules, given him by the Sun-god, was so big that the hero sailed across the ocean in it. At the root of the masque is the ancient story that early in his life Hercules had to choose between a life of easy pleasure and one of strenuous virtue. But now, under King James, the two principles are at last going to be reconciled. Jonson's stage directions, being partly descriptive (for the reader), partly instructive (for the performer), are rather casual about observing consistency of tense.

2. "Hutch" (bin), "mill," and "hopper" were used in grinding grain; bavin, mawkin, and peel are different sorts of apparatus used in a bake-shop. A dog harnessed to a wheel served to keep a roasting-spit turning.

3. "Gimlet" and "vice" are tools for tapping a keg. A "Hippocras bag" is a cloth filter for clearing wine; and to "cry swag" is to reveal a drooping, pendulous belly.

Which shows, though the pleasure be but of four inches,
 Yet he is a weasel, the gullet that pinches,
 Of any delight, and not spares from the back 15
 Whatever to make of the belly a sack.⁴
 Hail, hail, plump paunch! O the founder of taste
 For fresh meats, or powdered, or pickle, or paste;
 Devourer of broiled, baked, roasted or sod,⁵
 And emptier of cups, be they even or odd; 20
 All which have now made thee so wide i' the waist
 As scarce with no pudding thou art to be laced;
 But eating and drinking until thou dost nod,
 Thou break'st all thy girdles, and break'st forth a god.

To this, the Bowl-bearer.

Do you hear, my friends? to whom did you sing all this now? 25
 Pardon me only that I ask you, for I do not look for an answer;
 I'll answer myself. I know it is now such a time as the Saturnals⁶ for all the world, that every man stands under the eaves of his own hat and sings what pleases him; that's the right and the liberty of it. Now you sing of god Comus here, the Belly-god. I say 30 it is well, and I say it is not well. It is well as it is a ballad, and the belly worthy of it, I must needs say, an 'twere forty yards of ballad more—as much ballad as tripe. But when the belly is not edified by it, it is not well; for where did you ever read or hear that the belly had any ears? Come, never pump for an answer, for 35 you are defeated. Our fellow Hunger there, that was as ancient a retainer to the belly as any of us, was turned away for being unseasonable—not unreasonable, but unseasonable—and now is he (poor thin-gut) fain to get his living with teaching of starlings, magpies, parrots and jackdaws, those things he would have 40 taught the belly. Beware of dealing with the belly; the belly will not be talked to, especially when he is full. Then there is no venturing upon Venter;⁷ he will blow you all up; he will thunder indeed, la: some in derision call him the father of farts. But I say he was the first inventor of great ordnance, and taught us to dis- 45 charge them on festival days. Would we had a fit feast for him, i' faith, to show his activity: I would have something now fetched in to please his five senses, the throat; or the two senses, the eyes.
 Pardon me for my two senses; for I that carry Hercules' bowl⁸ in the service may see double by my place, for I have drunk like a frog today. I would have a tun now brought in to dance, and so many bottles about him. Ha! You look as if you would make a 50 problem of this. Do you see? Do you see? a problem: why bot-

4. The gullet, though only four inches long, is a harsh master; it imposes the belly's great weight on the back.

5. Boiled.

6. The Roman Saturnalia, which came about the end of the year, were a time of license; Jonson compares them to the twelfth-night festivities in the English court, at which this masque was produced.

7. Belly, in Latin.

8. To carry Hercules' bowl would clearly imply drinking a lot. "Tun": barrel.

tles? and why a tun? and why a tun? and why bottles to dance? I say that men that drink hard and serve the belly in any place of 55 quality (as The Jovial Tinkers, or *The Lusty Kindred*⁹) are living measures of drink, and can transform themselves, and do every day, to bottles or tuns when they please; and when they have done all they can, they are, as I say again (for I think I said somewhat like it afore) but moving measures of drink; and there 60 is a piece in the cellar can hold more than all they. This will I make good if it please our new god but to give a nod; for the belly does all by signs, and I am all for the belly, the truest clock in the world to go by.

Here the first antimasque¹ danced by men in the shape of bottles, tuns, etc., after which,

HERCULES. What rites are these? Breeds earth more monsters yet? 65

Antaeus² scarce is cold: what can beget

This store?—and stay! such contraries upon her?

Is earth so fruitful of her own dishonor?

Or 'cause his vice was inhumanity,

Hopes she by vicious hospitality

To work an expiation first?³ and then

(Help, Virtue!) these are sponges and not men.

Bottles? mere vessels? half a tun of paunch?

How? and the other half thrust forth in haunch?

Whose feast? the belly's! Comus'! and my cup

Brought in to fill the drunken orgies up

And here abused! that was the crowned reward

Of thirsty heroes after labor hard!

Burdens and shames of nature, perish, die;

For yet you never lived, but in the sty

Of vice have wallowed, and in that swine's strife

Been buried under the offense of life.

Go, reel and fall under the load you make,

Till your swoll'n bowels burst with what you take.

Can this be pleasure, to extinguish man?

Or so quite change him in his figure? Can

The belly love his pain, and be content

With no delight but what's a punishment?

These monsters plague themselves, and fitly, too,

For they do suffer what and all they do.

But here must be no shelter, nor no shroud

For such: sink grove, or vanish into cloud!

9. These seem to be names of taverns.

1. The antimasque, or antic masque, was a group of dancers, grotesquely or comically dressed, who served to contrast with the main group of masquers.

2. Antaeus, an earth-born giant, whom Hercules destroyed in the course of his labors. As his favored sport was wres-ting, and he grew stronger every time he touched the ground, Hercules had to kill him by holding him in the air till he died.

3. Hercules thinks that Comus is another child of earth. Earth, he supposes, is trying to expiate her guilt by producing one monster after another.

After this the whole grove vanished, and the whole music was discovered, sitting at the foot of the mountain, with Pleasure and Virtue seated above them. The choir invited Hercules to rest with this

SONG

Great friend and servant of the good,
 Let cool awhile thy heated blood,
 And from thy mighty labor cease. 95
 Lie down, lie down,
 And give thy troubled spirits peace,
 Whilst Virtue, for whose sake
 Thou dost this godlike travail take,
 May of the choicest herbage⁴ make, 100
 Here on this mountain bred,
 A crown, a crown
 For thy immortal head.

Here Hercules lay down at their feet, and the second antimasque, which was of pygmies, appeared.

- 1ST PYGMY. Antaeus dead and Hercules yet live!
 Where is this Hercules? What would I give 105
 To meet him now? Meet him? nay three such other,
 If they had hand in murder of our brother!⁵
 With three? with four, with ten, nay, with as many
 As the name yields! Pray anger there be any Whereon to feed my just revenge, and soon! 110
 How shall I kill him? Hurl him 'gainst the moon,
 And break him in small portions! Give to Greece
 His brain, and every tract of earth a piece!
- 2ND PYGMY. He is yonder.
- 1ST PYGMY. Where? 115
- 3RD PYGMY. At the hill foot, asleep.
- 1ST PYGMY. Let one go steal his club.
- 2ND PYGMY. My charge; I'll creep.
- 4TH PYGMY. He's ours.
- 1ST PYGMY. Yes, peace. 120
- 3RD PYGMY. Triumph, we have him, boy.
- 4TH PYGMY. Sure, sure, he's sure.
- 1ST PYGMY. Come, let us dance for joy.

At the end of their dance they thought to surprise him, when sud-

4. Plants and branches; "travail": labor, trouble.

5. Pygmies and giants, minimal and maximal, are disproportioned offspring of mere earth, therefore brothers to one another. The pygmies don't know how many Hercules-figures there are, because so many tales were told about the hero that even Renaissance mythographers were forced to think there must have been several persons of that name.

denly, being awaked by the music, he roused himself; and they all ran into holes.

SONG

CHOIR. Wake, Hercules, awake: but heave up thy black eye,
'Tis only asked from thee to look and these will die, 125
Or fly.
Already they are fled,
Whom scorn had else left dead.

At which Mercury descended from the hill with a garland of poplar to crown him.

MERCURY. Rest still, thou active friend of Virtue: these Should not disturb the peace of Hercules. 130
Earth's worms and honor's dwarfs, at too great odds,
Prove or provoke the issue of the gods.
See here a crown the agèd hill hath sent thee,
My grandsire Atlas, he that did present thee
With the best sheep that in his fold were found, 135
Or golden fruit in the Hesperian ground,
For rescuing his fair daughters, then the prey
Of a rude pirate, as thou cam'st this way;
And taught thee all the learning of the sphere,
And how, like him, thou might'st the heavens up-bear, 140
As that thy labor's virtuous recompense.⁶
He, though, a mountain now, hath yet the sense
Of thanking thee for more, thou being still Constant to goodness, guardian of the hill;
Antaeus, by thee suffocated here, 145
And the voluptuous Comus, god of cheer,
Beat from his grove, and that defaced. But now
The time's arrived that Atlas told thee of: how
By unaltered law, and working of the stars,
There should be a cessation of all jars⁷ 150
'Twixt Virtue and her noted opposite,
Pleasure; that both should meet here in the sight
Of Hesperus, the glory of the west,⁸
The brightest star, that from his burning crest
Lights all on this side the Atlantic seas 155
As far as to thy pillars, Hercules.⁹
See where he shines, Justice and Wisdom placed
About his throne, and those with Honor graced,

6. When Hercules was seeking the golden apples of the Hesperides, he took for a while Atlas' job of holding up the heavens, so the giant could wade out in the ocean and get the apples. Atlas himself was originally an astronomer, and thus knew "all the learning of the sphere."

7. Quarrels.

8. Jonson followed the mythographers in making Hesperus a brother of Atlas; as the evening star and guardian of the western isles, he identifies easily with King James.

9. The "pillars of Hercules" are the straits of Gibraltar.

Beauty and Love! It is not with his brother
 Bearing the world, but ruling such another 160
 Is his renown.¹ Pleasure, for his delight
 Is reconciled to Virtue, and this night
 Virtue brings forth twelve princes have been bred
 In this rough mountain and near Atlas' head,
 The hill of knowledge; one and chief of whom 165
 Of the bright race of Hesperus is come,
 Who shall in time the same that he is be,
 And now is only a less light than he.²
 These now she trusts with Pleasure, and to these
 She gives an entrance to the Hesperides, 170
 Fair Beauty's garden; neither can she fear
 They should grow soft or wax effeminate here,
 Since in her sight and by her charge all's done,
 Pleasure the servant, Virtue looking on.³

Here the whole choir of music called the twelve masquers forth from the lap of the mountain, which then opened with this

SONG

Ope, aged Atlas, open then thy lap, 175
 And from thy beamy bosom strike a light,
 That men may read in thy mysterious map
 All lines
 And signs
 Of royal education and the right, 180
 See how they come and show,
 That are but born to know,
 Descend,
 Descend,
 Though pleasure lead, 185
 Fear not to follow:
 They who are bred
 Within the hill
 Of skill
 May safely tread 190
 What path they will,
 No ground of good is hollow.

In their descent from the hill Daedalus⁴ came down before them.

1. As Hesperus, King James does not hold up the sky, like his brother Atlas, but rules over a special world of his own, England.

2. Tradition has it that Prince Charles was one of the masquers; he was just 18 at the time, and it was his first masque.

3. Having grown up inside Atlas itself, so that virtue comes naturally to them, the masquers can now be allowed to mingle freely with the daughters of Hesperus, in pursuit of pleasure.

4. Daedalus, the mythical Greek maker of mazes, acts here as master of the intricate steps of the dance which interweaves pleasure with virtue under the guidance of art.

HERCULES. But Hermes, stay a little, let me pause:

Who's this that leads?

MERCURY. A guide that gives them laws

To all their motions: Daedalus the wise.

195

HERCULES. And doth in sacred harmony comprise

His precepts?

MERCURY. Yes.

HERCULES. They may securely prove⁵

Then, any labyrinth, though it be of love.

Here, while they put themselves in form, Daedalus has his first

SONG

Come on, come on! and where you go,

So interweave the curious knot,

200

As ev'n th' observer scarce may know

Which lines are Pleasure's and which not.

First, figure out the doubtful way

At which awhile all youth should stay,⁶

205

Where she and Virtue did contend

Which should have Hercules to friend.

Then, as all actions of mankind.

Are but a labyrinth or maze,

So let your dances be entwined,

Yet not perplex men unto gaze;

210

But measured, and so numerous too,

As men may read each act you do,

And when they see the graces meet,

Admire the wisdom of your feet.

For dancing is an exercise

215

Not only shows the mover's wit,

But maketh the beholder wise,

As he hath power to rise to it.

The first dance.

After which Daedalus again.

SONG 2

O more, and more! this was so well

As praise wants half his voice to tell;

220

5. Experience.

6. The dancers are to "figure out" the doubtful moment of Hercules' choice in the sense of illustrating it; they are beyond the occasion of making it themselves, having already reconciled pleasure with virtue.

Again yourselves compose;
 And now put all the aptness on
 Of figure, that proportion
 Or color can disclose.

That if those silent arts were lost, 225
 Design and picture, they might boast
 From you a newer ground;⁷
 Instructed to the height'ning sense
 Of dignity and reverence
 In your true motions found: 230

Begin, begin; for look, the fair
 Do longing listen to what air
 You form your second touch;⁸
 That they may vent their murmuring hymns
 Just to the tune you move your limbs, 235
 And wish their own were such.

Make haste, make haste, for this
 The labyrinth of beauty is.

The second dance:

That ended, Daedalus.

SONG 3

It follows now you are to prove
 The subtlest maze of all, that's love, 240
 And if you stay too long,
 The fair will think you do 'em wrong,

Go choose among—but with a mind
 As gentle as the stroking wind
 Runs o'er the gentler flowers. 245
 And so let all your actions smile
 As if they meant not to beguile
 The ladies, but the hours.

Grace, laughter and discourse may meet,
 And yet the beauty not go less: 250
 For what is noble should be sweet,
 But not dissolved in wantonness.

Will you that I give the law
 To all your sport, and sum it?

7. Put on the "aptness of figure," i.e., significance of expression, of which art (proportion or color) is capable; thus, if design and picture, the silent arts, were lost, they could be rebuilt out of the dance alone.

8. Endeavor.

It should be such should envy draw, 255
But ever overcome it.

*Here they danced with the ladies, and the whole revels followed;⁹
which ended, Mercury called to Daedalus in this following speech, which was after repeated in song by two trebles, two tenors, a bass, and the whole chorus.*

SONG 4

An eye of looking back were well,
Or any murmur that would tell
Your thoughts, how you were sent
And went, 260
To walk with Pleasure, not to dwell.

These, these are hours by Virtue spared
Herself, she being her own reward,
But she will have you know
That though 265
Her sports be soft, her life is hard.

You must return unto the hill,
And there advance
With labor, and inhabit still
That height and crown 270
From whence you ever may look down
Upon triumphed Chance.

She, she it is, in darkness shines.
'Tis she that still herself refines
By her own light, to every eye 275
More seen, more known when Vice stands by.
And though a stranger here on earth,
In heaven she hath her right of birth.
There, there is Virtue's seat,
Strive to keep her your own; 280
'Tis only she can make you great,
Though place here make you known.

After which, they danced their last dance, and returned into the scene, which closed and was a mountain again as before.

And so it ended.

This pleased the king so well, as he would see it again; when it was presented with these additions.¹

1618

1640

9. Group of onlookers and courtiers.

masque, For the Honor of Wales.

1. The "additions" were another short

JOHN WEBSTER

(1580?-1625)

Though Shakespeare seems, in our eyes, to tower above all his contemporaries, and was by no means without honor in his own day, it is only by comparison with him that the Stuart playwrights look small. In any other age of English literature a group of writers which included not only Ben Jonson but John Ford, John Webster, Cyril Tourneur, Francis Beaumont, John Marston, John Fletcher, and Thomas Middleton would have been the climactic glory of the English stage. Such a galaxy of talent, working at a level just short of supreme, we shall not see again. Among them John Webster stands out as second only to Jonson himself—not as a contriver of well-articulated stage actions, but for the dark poetry of his tragic imagination. As a poet, he is scarcely less powerful than Shakespeare himself, though his range is more restricted. He is a poet of moods, and of certain specific moods, which his age tended to group under the heading of “melancholy.” Melancholy is a state of psychic arrest, of morbid inwardness, of fixation and paralysis; and to the exploration of this mood Webster sacrificed some of the movement and even the logic of his plots. Like Hamlet, the central consciousness responds eloquently and imaginatively to his dark circumstances, but is incapable of decisive action to change them. In The Duchess of Malfi, Daniel de Bosola is such a man. His inclinations are basically virtuous, but he has been soured and embittered by failure; a soldier and a scholar by profession, he has been reduced to playing what he knows is the mean role of a household spy. Out of his diseased imagination he thus becomes a sardonic wit and a grotesque, violent poet. This poetry of his mirrors the world in which he has fallen, a foul, stagnant, sumptuous sink of corruption, such as 17th-century Englishmen, with their strong Protestant feelings, imagined 16th-century, pre-Reformation Italy to have been.

Webster was obviously fascinated by the diseased and sophisticated corruption which he attributed to the Italy of the Borgias; and he used it as a background against which to pose the figure of his Duchess, one of the freest and most positive women in all English drama. In boldly asserting her right to choose a husband without regard to her family or her social class, the Duchess far transcends the standards of her age. Webster clearly expects us to admire both the assured sensitivity of her impulses and the perfect self-command with which she meets her final fate.

Though his plots are less artfully put together than Shakespeare's, Webster is capable of tremendous poetic flashes. His scenes of brooding terror are lit by fitful lightnings of the imagination, as when Ferdinand, faced with his sister's corpse, at last sees what his insane furies have meant. As for the man who created these lurid nightmares, we know little or nothing about his personal life. He was the son of a tailor, and may himself have plied the needle for a time. He collaborated with other playwrights, but came into his own style when he emancipated himself from that dependence. He professed to be a slow writer, and he drew heavily on his reading in the course of composition. Modern scholarship has found a literary source for nearly every phrase and concept in his plays. But, trite though it is to say so, what he made of his reading is distinctively his own. His art is one of brilliant highlights and black shadows of furtive and dangerous intrigue carried out in the flickering light of hell-fire; it serves to illumine one unflawed character who accepts without faltering or cringing the ultimate test.

The Duchess of Malfi

Dramatis Personae

FERDINAND, Duke of Calabria

THE CARDINAL, his brother

ANTONIO BOLOGNA, steward of the household to the DUCHESS

DELIO, his friend

DANIEL DE BOSOLA, gentleman of the horse to the DUCHESS

CASTRUCCIO

MARQUIS OF PESCARA

COUNT MALATESTA

SILVIO, a Lord, of Milan } gentlemen attending on the DUCHESS

RODERIGO

GRISOLAN

DOCTOR

Several MADMEN, PILGRIMS, EXECUTIONERS, OFFICERS, ATTENDANTS, &c.

THE DUCHESS OF MALFI, sister of FERDINAND and the CARDINAL
CARIOLA, her woman

JULIA, CASTRUCCIO's wife, and the CARDINAL's mistress

OLD LADY, LADIES, and CHILDREN

SCENE. Amalfi, Rome, and Milan

Act I

SCENE 1. Amalfi; a hall in the DUCHESS's palace.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

DELIO. You are welcome to your country, dear Antonio;
You have been long in France, and you return
A very formal Frenchman in your habit.¹
How do you like the French court?

ANTONIO. I admire it:

In seeking to reduce both state and people
To a fixed order, their judicious king
Begins at home; quits² first his royal palace
Of flattering sycophants, of dissolute
And infamous persons, which he sweetly terms
His master's masterpiece, the work of Heaven;

5

10

1. An absolute Frenchman in your manners.

2. Liberates, frees.

Considering duly that a prince's court
 Is like a common fountain, whence should flow
 Pure silver drops in general, but if 't chance
 Some cursed example poison't near the head,
 Death and diseases through the whole land spread. 15
 And what is 't makes this blessed government
 But a most provident council; who dare freely
 Inform him the corruption of the times?
 Though some o' th' court hold it presumption
 To instruct princes what they ought to do, 20
 It is a noble duty to inform them
 What they ought to foresee. Here comes Bosola.
 The only court-gall;³ yet I observe his railing
 Is not for simple love of piety.
 Indeed, he rails at those things which he wants; 25
 Would be as lecherous, covetous, or proud,
 Bloody, or envious, as any man,
 If he had means to be so. Here's the Cardinal.

[Enter the CARDINAL and BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA. I do haunt you still.

CARDINAL. So. 30

BOSOLA. I have done you better service than to be slighted thus.
 Miserable age, where the only reward of doing well is the doing of it!

CARDINAL. You enforce your merit too much.

BOSOLA. I fell into the galleys⁴ in your service; where, for two 35 years together, I wore two towels instead of a shirt, with a knot on the shoulder, after the fashion of a Roman mantle.
 Slighted thus? I will thrive some way. Blackbirds fatten best in hard weather; why not I in these dog-days?⁵

CARDINAL. Would you could become honest! 40

BOSOLA. With all your divinity do but direct me the way to it. I have known many travel far for it, and yet return as arrant knaves as they went forth, because they carried themselves always along with them. [Exit CARDINAL.] Are you gone?
 Some fellows, they say, are possessed with the devil, but this 45 great fellow were able to possess the greatest devil, and make him worse.

ANTONIO. He hath denied thee some suit?

BOSOLA. He and his brother are like plum-trees that grow crooked over standing-pools; they are rich and o'er-laden with fruit, but 50 none but crows, pies, and caterpillars feed on them.⁶ Could I be one of their flattering panders, I would hang on their ears

3. Court-satirist, but with the overtone of a disease, a blight.

4. Service at the oar of a Mediterranean galley was the last penalty this side of torture and execution, a 50-percent death sentence.

5. The hot, sultry season of midsummer. Being naturally an ill-omened creature, like a blackbird, Bosola thinks he may thrive under oppression.

6. "Standing-pools": stagnant, therefore poisonous, waters; "pies": magpies, birds of evil omen like blackbirds. By "panders," Bosola does not mean actual pimps, but slavish hangers-on, ready to perform any low office. The violence of these metaphors evidences the sickness of the speaker's mind.

like a horseleech till I were full and then drop off. I pray, leave me. Who would rely upon these miserable dependencies, in expectation to be advanced tomorrow? What creature ever fed 55 worse than hoping Tantalus?⁷ Nor ever died any man more fearfully than he that hoped for a pardon. There are rewards for hawks and dogs when they have done us service; but for a soldier that hazards his limbs in a battle, nothing but a kind of geometry is his last supportation. 60

DELIO. Geometry?

BOSOLA. Aye, to hang in a fair pair of slings, take his latter swing in the world upon an honorable pair of crutches, from hospital to hospital. Fare ye well, sir: and yet do not you scorn us; for places in the court are but like beds in the hospital, where this 65 man's head lies at that man's foot, and so lower and lower. [Exit.]

DELIO. I knew this fellow seven years⁸ in the galleys

For a notorious murder; and 'twas thought
The Cardinal suborned it. He was released 70
By the French general, Gaston de Foix,
When he recovered Naples.⁹

ANTONIO. 'Tis great pity

He should be thus neglected; I have heard
He's very valiant. This foul melancholy
Will poison all his goodness; for, I'll tell you,
If too immoderate sleep be truly said 75
To be an inward rust unto the soul,
It then doth follow want of action
Breeds all black malcontents; and their close rearing,
Like moths in cloth, do hurt for want of wearing.¹

DELIO. The presence 'gins to fill: you promised me 80
To make me the partaker of the natures
Of some of your great courtiers.

ANTONIO. The Lord Cardinal's,

And other strangers that are now in court?
I shall. Here comes the great Calabrian duke.

[Enter FERDINAND, CASTRUCCIO, SILVIO, RODERIGO,
GRISOLAN, and ATTENDANTS.]

FERDINAND. Who took the ring oftenest?² 85

SILVIO. Antonio Bologna, my lord.

FERDINAND. Our sister duchess' great-master of her household?

7. Tantalus, in classical mythology, was tantalized by the constant presence under his nose of delicious food and drink which, though he was starving, he could never reach.

8. In speaking to the Cardinal himself (above, line 35), Bosola mentions only two years.

9. Since Gaston de Foix was active in Italy during the early 1500's, this circumstance establishes the time of the tragedy as about 100 years before the time Webster wrote. Ferdinand and the Cardinal are Spaniards established in Italy.

like the notorious house of Borgia (incestuous, simoniacal Pope Alexander VI and his two illegitimate children Cesare and Lucrezia), also active at the beginning of the 16th century.

1. Because they don't have anything to do, malcontents suffer from moths as do clothes which have not been worn for a long time. "The presence": the assemblage of the court.

2. A common game around court, used in training for tournaments, involved catching a hanging ring on the tip of a lance.

Give him the jewel. When shall we leave this sportive action, and fall to action indeed?

CASTRUCCIO. Methinks, my lord, you should not desire to go to war in person. 90

FERDINAND. Now for some gravity. Why, my lord?

CASTRUCCIO. It is fitting a soldier arise to be a prince, but not necessary a prince descend to be a captain.

FERDINAND. No?

CASTRUCCIO. No, my lord, he were far better do it by a deputy. 95

FERDINAND. Why should he not as well sleep or eat by a deputy?

This might take idle, offensive, and base office from him, whereas the other deprives him of honor.

CASTRUCCIO. Believe my experience, that realm is never long in quiet where the ruler is a soldier. 100

FERDINAND. Thou told'st me thy wife could not endure fighting.

CASTRUCCIO. True, my lord.

FERDINAND. And of a jest she broke of a captain she met full of wounds. I have forgot it. 105

CASTRUCCIO. She told him, my lord, he was a pitiful fellow, to lie, like the children of Israel, all in tents.³

FERDINAND. Why, there's a wit were able to undo all the chirurgeons⁴ o' the city; for although gallants should quarrel and had drawn their weapons and were ready to go to it, yet her persuasions would make them put up. 110

CASTRUCCIO. That she would, my lord.

FERDINAND. How do you like my Spanish gennet?⁵

RODERIGO. He is all fire.

FERDINAND. I am of Pliny's opinion, I think he was begot by the wind; he runs as if he were ballasted⁶ with quicksilver. 115

SILVIO. True, my lord, he reels from the tilt often.⁷

RODERIGO and CRISOLAN. Ha, ha, ha!

FERDINAND. Why do you laugh? Methinks, you that are courtiers should be my touchwood, take fire when I give fire; that is, laugh but when I laugh, were the subject never so witty. 120

CASTRUCCIO. True, my lord, I myself have heard a very good jest, and have scorned to seem to have so silly a wit as to understand it.

FERDINAND. But I can laugh at your fool, my lord.

CASTRUCCIO. He cannot speak, you know, but he makes faces: my lady cannot abide him. 125

FERDINAND. No?

CASTRUCCIO. Nor endure to be in merry company, for she says too much laughing and too much company fills her too full of the wrinkle. 130

FERDINAND. I would, then, have a mathematical instrument

3. The lady's pun plays on the name for lint bandages, "tents."

4. Surgeons.

5. Sometimes "jennet": a small Spanish horse of Arabian stock.

6. Ballasted. Pliny in his natural history tells about some Spanish horses generated by a swift wind (VIII.lxvii).

7. "Reeling from the tilt" involves a double meaning: recoiling from the shock of a charge, and rolling about like quicksilver on a tilted table.

made for her face, that she might not laugh out of compass.⁸

I shall shortly visit you at Milan, Lord Silvio.

SILVIO. Your grace shall arrive most welcome. 135

FERDINAND. You are a good horseman, Antonio. You have excellent riders in France. What do you think of good horsemanship?

ANTONIO. Nobly, my lord: as out of the Grecian horse issued many famous princes, so out of brave horsemanship arise the first sparks of growing resolution that raise the mind to noble action. 140

FERDINAND. You have bespoke it worthily.

SILVIO. Your brother, the Lord Cardinal, and sister duchess.

[Re-enter CARDINAL, with DUCHESS, CARIOLA, and JULIA.]

CARDINAL. Are the galleys come about?

CRISOLAN. They are, my lord. 145

FERDINAND. Here's the Lord Silvio is come to take his leave.

DELIO. Now, sir, your promise. What's that Cardinal?

I mean his temper? They say he's a brave fellow,
Will play⁹ his five thousand crowns at tennis, dance,
Court ladies, and one that hath fought single combats. 150

ANTONIO. Some such flashes superficially hang on him for form; but observe his inward character: he is a melancholy churchman; the spring in his face is nothing but the engendering of toads; where he is jealous of any man, he lays worse plots for them than ever was imposed on Hercules, for he strews in his way flatterers, panders, intelligencers, atheists, and a thousand such political monsters.¹ He should have been Pope; but instead of coming to it by the primitive decency of the Church, he did bestow bribes so largely and so impudently as if he would have carried it away without Heaven's knowledge. 155
Some good he hath done——

DELIO. You have given too much of him. What's his brother?

ANTONIO. The duke there? A most perverse and turbulent nature.

What appears in him mirth is merely outside;
If he laugh heartily, it is to laugh
All honesty out of fashion. 165

DELIO. Twins?

ANTONIO. In quality.

He speaks with others' tongues, and hears men's suits
With others' ears; will seem to sleep o' th' bench
Only to entrap offenders in their answers;
Dooms men to death by information;²
Rewards by hearsay. 170

DELIO. Then the law to him

Is like a foul black cobweb to a spider:
He makes of it his dwelling and a prison
To entangle those shall feed him.

8. Excessively; with a pun on the draftsman's compass.

9. Wager.

1. "Intelligencers": spies. The Cardinal sets traps and dangers before his enemies as many and as formidable as the labors of Hercules.

2. On the basis of secret reports.

ANTONIO. Most true:
 He never pays debts unless they be shrewd turns,³ 175
 And those he will confess that he doth owe.
 Last, for his brother there, the Cardinal,
 They that do flatter him most say oracles
 Hang at his lips; and verily I believe them,
 For the devil speaks in them. 180
 But for their sister, the right noble duchess,
 You never fixed your eye on three fair medals
 Cast in one figure, of so different temper.
 For her discourse, it is so full of rapture,
 You only will begin then to be sorry 185
 When she doth end her speech, and wish, in wonder,
 She held it less vainglory to talk much,
 Than your penance to hear her: whilst she speaks,
 She throws upon a man so sweet a look,
 That it were able to raise one to a galliard⁴ 190
 That lay in a dead palsy, and to dote
 On that sweet countenance; but in that look
 There speaketh so divine a continence
 As cuts off all lascivious and vain hope.
 Her days are practiced in such noble virtue 195
 That sure her nights, nay, more, her very sleeps,
 Are more in heaven than other ladies' shifts.⁵
 Let all sweet ladies break their flattering glasses,
 And dress themselves in her.

DELIO. Fie, Antonio,
 You play the wire-drawer⁶ with her commendations. 200

ANTONIO. I'll case the picture up: only thus much;
 All her particular worth grows to this sum,
 She stains⁷ the time past, lights the time to come.

CARDINAL. You must attend my lady in the gallery,
 Some half an hour hence.

ANTONIO. I shall. 205
 [Exeunt ANTONIO and DELIO.]

FERDINAND. Sister, I have a suit to you.

DUCHESS. To me, sir?

FERDINAND. A gentleman here, Daniel de Bosola,
 One that was in the galleys—

DUCHESS. Yes, I know him.

FERDINAND. A worthy fellow he is. Pray, let me entreat for
 The provisorship of your horse.

DUCHESS. Your knowledge of him. 210
 Commends him and prefers him.

FERDINAND. Call him hither.

[Exit ATTENDANT.]

We are now upon parting. Good Lord Silvio,

3. Tricks to serve his own advantage.

4. A gay and lively dance.

5. Confessions.

6. Draw out her praises excessively;

"case the picture": frame it.

7. Darkens (by comparison with her brilliance).

Do us commend to all our noble friends
At the leaguer.⁸

SILVIO. Sir, I shall.

DUCHESS. You are for Milan?

215

SILVIO. I am.

DUCHESS. Bring the caroches. We'll bring you down

To the haven.⁹ [Exeunt all but FERDINAND and the CARDINAL.]

CARDINAL. Be sure you entertain that Bosola

For your intelligence:¹ I would not be seen in 't;

And therefore many times I have slighted him

220

When he did court our furtherance, as this morning.

FERDINAND. Antonio, the great-master of her household,
Had been far fitter.

CARDINAL. You are deceived in him:

His nature is too honest for such business.

He comes: I'll leave you.

[Exit.]

[Re-enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA. I was lured to you.

225

FERDINAND. My brother, here, the Cardinal could never Abide you.

BOSOLA. Never since he was in my debt.

FERDINAND. Maybe some oblique character in your face

Made him suspect you

BOSOLA. Doth he study physiognomy?

230

There's no more credit to be given to th' face

Than to a sick man's urine, which some call

The physician's whore because she cozens² him.

He did suspect me wrongfully.

FERDINAND. For that 235

You must give great men leave to take their times.

Distrust doth cause us seldom be deceived:

You see, the oft shaking of the cedar-tree

Fastens it more at root.

BOSOLA. Yet, take heed;

For to suspect a friend unworthily

240

Instructs him the next way to suspect you,

And prompts him to deceive you.

FERDINAND. [giving him money] There's gold.

BOSOLA.

So:

What follows? Never rained such showers as these Without thunderbolts i' th' tail of them. Whose throat must

I cut?

FERDINAND. Your inclination to shed blood rides post

Before my occasion to use you. I give you that 245

To live i' th' court here, and observe the duchess;

To note all the particulars of her havior,

What suitors do solicit her for marriage,

8. A gathering of the armies, as at a siege.

9. Harbor; "caroches": carriages.

1. I.e., be sure to hire Bosola as your spy.

2. Tricks.

And whom she best affects. She's a young widow:
I would not have her marry again.

BOSOLA.

No, sir?

250

FERDINAND. Do not you ask the reason, but be satisfied
I say I would not.

BOSOLA.

It seems you would create me
One of your familiars.³

FERDINAND.

Familiar? What's that?

BOSOLA. Why, a very quaint invisible devil in flesh,
An intelligencer.

255

FERDINAND. Such a kind of thriving thing

I would wish thee, and ere long thou may'st arrive
At a higher place by 't.

BOSOLA.

Take your devils,
Which hell calls angels;⁴ these cursed gifts would make
You a corrupter, me an impudent traitor;
And should I take these, they'd take me to hell.

260

FERDINAND. Sir, I'll take nothing from you that I have given:

There is a place that I procured for you
This morning, the provisorship o' th' horse;
Have you heard on 't?

265

BOSOLA.

No.

FERDINAND. 'Tis yours. Is't not worth thanks?

BOSOLA. I would have you curse yourself now, that your bounty,
Which makes men truly noble, e'er should make me

A villain. Oh, that to avoid ingratitude

For the good deed you have done me, I must do

270

All the ill man can invent! Thus the devil

Candies all sins o'er; and what heaven terms vile,
That names he complimentary.

FERDINAND.

Be yourself;

Keep your old garb of melancholy; 'twill express

You envy those that stand above your reach,

275

Yet strive not to come near 'em: this will gain

Access to private lodgings, where yourself

May, like a politic dormouse—

BOSOLA.

As I have seen some

Feed in a lord's dish, half asleep, not seeming

To listen to any talk; and yet these rogues

280

Have cut his throat in a dream. What's my place?

The provisorship o' th' horse? Say, then, my corruption

Grew out of horse-dung. I am your creature.

FERDINAND.

Away!

[Exit.]

BOSOLA. Let good men, for good deeds, covet good fame,
Since place and riches oft are bribes of shanic:

285

Sometimes the devil doth preach.

[Exit.]

3. Evil spirits, agents of the devil.

4. Gold coins were known, from the image on them, as angels.

SCENE 2

[Enter FERDINAND, DUCHESS, CARDINAL, and CARIOLA.]

CARDINAL. We are to part from you, and your own discretion.
Must now be your director.

FERDINAND. You are a widow:

You know already what man is; and therefore

Let not youth, high promotion, eloquence—

CARDINAL. No,

Nor any thing without the addition, honor, 5
Sway your high blood.

FERDINAND. Marry! They are most luxurious
Will wed twice.

CARDINAL. Oh, fie!

FERDINAND. Their lives are more spotted Than Laban's sheep.⁵

DUCHESS. Diamonds are of most value,

They say, that have passed through most jewelers' hands. 10

FERDINAND. Whores by that rule are precious.

DUCHESS. Will you hear me?
I'll never marry.

CARDINAL. So most widows say;
But commonly that motion⁶ lasts no longer
Than the turning of an hour-glass; the funeral sermon
And it end both together.

FERDINAND. Now hear me: 15

You live in a rank pasture, here, i' th' court;

There is a kind of honey-dew⁷ that's deadly;

'Twill poison your fame; look to't: be not cunning;

For they whose faces do belie their hearts

Are witches ere they arrive at twenty years, 20

Aye, and give the devil suck.

DUCHESS. This is terrible good counsel.

FERDINAND. Hypocrisy is woven of a fine small thread,
Subtler than Vulcan's engine:⁸ yet, believe't,
Your darkest actions, nay, your privatest thoughts,
Will come to light.

CARDINAL. You may flatter yourself, 25
And take your own choice; privately be married
Under the eaves of night—

FERDINAND. Think't the best voyage

That e'er you made; like the irregular crab,

Which, though't goes backward, thinks that it goes right

Because it goes its own way; but observe, 30

Such weddings may more properly be said

To be executed than celebrated.

5. Dividing his flock with Jacob, Laban took the speckled sheep (Genesis xxx.31-33); the liver as seat of the passions was thought to be diseased when discolored.

6. Impulse, notion.

7. A sweet, sticky substance left on plants by aphids.

8. The net in which Vulcan, Venus' husband, caught her misbehaving with Mars.

- CARDINAL. The marriage night
Is the entrance into some prison.
- FERDINAND. And those joys,
Those lustful pleasures, are like heavy sleeps
Which do forerun man's mischief.
- CARDINAL. Fare you well. 35
Wisdom begins at the end: remember it. [Exit.]
- DUCHESS. I think this speech between you both was studied,
It came so roundly off.
- FERDINAND. You are my sister;
This was my father's poniard,⁹ do you see?
I'd be loth to see 't look rusty, 'cause 'twas his. 40
I would have you to give o'er these chargeable¹ revels:
A visor and a mask are whispering-rooms
That were never built for goodness—fare ye well—
And women like that part which, like the lamprey,²
Hath never a bone in 't.
- DUCHESS. Fie, sir!
- FERDINAND. Nay, 45
I mean the tongue; variety of courtship.
What cannot a neat knave with a smooth tale
Make a woman believe? Farewell, lusty widow. [Exit.]
- DUCHESS. Shall this move me? If all my royal kindred
Lay in my way unto this marriage, 50
I'd make them my low footsteps; and even now,
Even in this hate, as men in some great battles,
By apprehending danger, have achieved
Almost impossible actions (I have heard soldiers say so).
So I through frights and threatenings will assay 55
This dangerous venture. Let old wives report
I winked and chose a husband. Cariola,
To thy known secrecy I have given up
More than my life—my fame.
- CARIOLA. Both shall be safe,
For I'll conceal this secret from the world 60
As warily as those that trade in poison
Keep poison from their children.
- DUCHESS. Thy protestation
Is ingenious and hearty:³ I believe it.
Is Antonio come?
- CARIOLA. He attends you.
- DUCHESS. Good dear soul,
Leave me, but place thyself behind the arras,⁴ 65
Where thou mayst overhear us. Wish me good speed,
For I am going into a wilderness

9. Dagger.

1. Expensive; "visor": a half-mask, worn by ladies at carnivals, theaters, and other dubious resorts.

2. "Lamprey": eel. They do, of course, have bones, but for the purposes of the Duke's insinuation they are better without.

3. Sincere and from the heart.

4. Tapestries were often hung in Renaissance palaces to moderate the chill of the bare walls.

Where I shall find nor path nor friendly clue
To be my guide. [CARIOLA goes behind the arras.]
[Enter ANTONIO.]

I sent for you: sit down;
Take pen and ink, and write. Are you ready?

ANTONIO. Yes. 70

DUCHESS. What did I say?

ANTONIO. That I should write somewhat.

DUCHESS. Oh, I remember.

After these triumphs and this large expense,
It's fit, like thrifty husbands,⁵ we inquire
What's laid up for tomorrow. 75

ANTONIO. So please your beauteous excellence.

DUCHESS. Beauteous?

Indeed, I thank you: I look young for your sake;
You have ta'en my cares upon you.

ANTONIO. I'll fetch your grace

The particulars of your revenue and expense.

DUCHESS. Oh, you are an upright treasurer: but you mistook; 80

For when I said I meant to make inquiry
What's laid up for tomorrow, I did mean
What's laid up yonder for me.

ANTONIO. Where?

DUCHESS. In heaven.

I am making my will (as 'tis fit princes should,
In perfect memory), and I pray sir, tell me, 85
Were not one better make it smiling thus
Than in deep groans and terrible ghastly looks,
As if the gifts we parted with procured⁶
That violent distraction?

ANTONIO. O, much better.

DUCHESS. If I had a husband now, this care were quit: 90

But I intend to make you overseer.

What good deed shall we first remember? Say.

ANTONIO. Begin with that first good deed begun i' th' world

After man's creation, the sacrament of marriage:

I'd have you first provide for a good husband; 95

Give him all.

DUCHESS. All?

ANTONIO. Yes, your excellent self.

DUCHESS. In a winding-sheet?

ANTONIO. In a couple.

DUCHESS. Saint Winfred, that were a strange will!⁷

ANTONIO. 'Twere stranger if there were no will in you

To marry again. 100

DUCHESS. What do you think of marriage?

5. Though used here in its original sense of one who preserves and safeguards property, the word shows where the Duchess' thoughts are tending.

6. Brought on.

7. Saint Winfred, Welsh virgin and martyr, is an odd saint for the Duchess of Malfi to swear on.

ANTONIO. I take't, as those that deny purgatory;
It locally contains or heaven or hell;
There's no third place in 't.

DUCHESS. How do you affect it?⁸

ANTONIO. My banishment, feeding my melancholy,
Would often reason thus—

DUCHESS. Pray, let's hear it.

105

ANTONIO. Say a man never marry, nor have children,
What takes that from him? Only the bare name
Of being a father, or the weak delight
To see the little wanton ride a-cock-horse
Upon a painted stick, or hear him chatter
Like a taught starling.

110

DUCHESS. Fie, fie, what's all this?

One of your eyes is bloodshot; use my ring to 't,
They say 'tis very sovereign.⁹ 'Twas my wedding-ring,
And I did vow never to part with it
But to my second husband.

ANTONIO. You have parted with it now.

115

DUCHESS. Yes, to help your eyesight.

ANTONIO. You have made me stark blind.

DUCHESS. How?

ANTONIO. There is a saucy and ambitious devil
Is dancing in this circle.¹

DUCHESS. Remove him.

ANTONIO. How?

DUCHESS. There needs small conjuration, when your finger
May do it: thus; is it fit?

[She puts the ring upon his finger; he kneels.]

ANTONIO. What said you?

DUCHESS. Sir,

120

This goodly roof of yours² is too low built;
I cannot stand upright in 't nor discourse,
Without I raise it higher: raise yourself;

Or, if you please, my hand to help you: so. [Raises him.]

ANTONIO. Ambition, madam, is a great man's madness,

125

That is not kept in chains and close-pent rooms,

But in fair lightsome lodgings, and is girt

With the wild noise of prattling visitants,

Which makes it lunatic beyond all cure.

Conceive not I am so stupid but I aim

130

Whereto your favors tend; but he's a fool

That, being a-cold, would thrust his hands i' th' fire

To warm them.

DUCHESS. So, now the ground's broke,

You may discover what a wealthy mine

8. Feel about it.

9. Healing, but with an additional over-tone implying royal power.

1. To conjure up a devil, the necroman-cer first draws a charmed circle on the ground—like the duchess' ring.

2. His head as he kneels before her.

I make you lord of.

ANTONIO. O my unworthiness!

135

DUCHESS. You were ill to sell yourself:

This darkening of your worth is not like that
Which tradesmen use i' th' city, their false lights
Are to rid bad wares off³ and I must tell you,
If you will know where breathes a complete man
(I speak it without flattery), turn your eyes,
And progress through yourself.

140

ANTONIO. Were there nor heaven
Nor hell, I should be honest: I have long served virtue,
And ne'er ta'en wages of her.

DUCHESS. Now she pays it.

145

The misery of us that are born great!
We are forced to woo, because none dare woo us;
And as a tyrant doubles with his words
And fearfully equivocates, so we Are forced to express our violent passions
In riddles and in dreams, and leave the path
Of simple virtue, which was never made
To seem the thing it is not. Go, go brag
You have left me heartless; mine is in your bosom:
I hope 'twill multiply love there. You do tremble:
Make not your heart so dead a piece of flesh,
To fear more than to love me. Sir, be confident:
What is 't distracts you? This is flesh and blood, sir;
'Tis not the figure cut in alabaster
Kneels at my husband's tomb. Awake, awake, man!
I do here put off all vain ceremony,
And only do appear to you a young widow
That claims you for her husband, and, like a widow,
I use but half a blush in 't.

150

155

160

ANTONIO. Truth speak for me;
I will remain the constant sanctuary
Of your good name.

DUCHESS. I thank you, gentle love:

165

And 'cause you shall not come to me in debt,
Being now my steward, here upon your lips
I sign your Quietus est.⁴ This you should have begged now;
I have seen children oft eat sweetmeats thus,
As fearful to devour them too soon.

170

ANTONIO. But for your brothers?

DUCHESS. Do not think of them.

All discord without this circumference⁵
Is only to be pitied, and not feared;
Yet, should they know it, time will easily
Scatter the tempest.

3. Tradesmen in the city display their goods in a poor light, so the defects won't be seen.

4. The legal formula for marking a bill "Paid" or "Acquitted."

5. Their arms around one another.

ANTONIO. These words should be mine,
And all the parts you have spoke, if some part of it
Would not have savored flattery. 175

DUCHESS. Kneel.
[CARIOLA comes from behind the arras.]

ANTONIO. Ha!

DUCHESS. Be not amazed; this woman's of my counsel:
I have heard lawyers say, a contract in a chamber
Per verba de presenti⁶ is absolute marriage. 180
[She and ANTONIO kneel.]

Bless, heaven, this sacred gordian,⁷ which let violence
Never untwine!

ANTONIO. And may our sweet affections, like the spheres,
Be still in motion!

DUCHESS. Quickening, and make
The like soft music! 185

ANTONIO. That we may imitate the loving palms,
Best emblem of a peaceful marriage, that ne'er
Bore fruit, divided!

DUCHESS. What can the Church force more?

ANTONIO. That fortune may not know an accident,
Either of joy or sorrow, to divide
Our fixed wishes! 190

DUCHESS. How can the Church build faster?⁸
We now are man and wife, and 'tis the Church
That must but echo this. Maid, stand apart:
I now am blind.⁹

ANTONIO. What's your conceit in this?

DUCHESS. I would have you lead your fortune by the hand
Unto your marriage bed 195
(You speak in me this, for we now are one);
We'll only lie, and talk together, and plot
To appease my humorous kindred; and if you please,
Like the old tale in "Alexander and Lodowick,"
Lay a naked sword between us, keep us chaste.¹ 200
Oh, let me shroud my blushes in your bosom,
Since 'tis the treasury of all my secrets!

[Exeunt DUCHESS and ANTONIO.]

CARIOLA. Whether the spirit of greatness or of woman
Reign most in her, I know not; but it shows
A fearful madness: I owe her much of pity. 205
[Exit.]

6. "Through words in the present tense"—not, as commonly supposed, and perhaps by Webster himself, "On the words of a witness." In canon law, the duchess is right; her agreement with Antonio to consider themselves married is a valid contract with or without priest, ceremony, or even the presence of a witness.

7. Knot.

8. More securely, with a pun on "swifter."

9. The phrase "Maid, stand apart" is addressed to Cariola. In shutting her eyes and rejecting all support, the Duchess dramatizes the quality of her choice.

1. Alexander and Lodowick were look-alike friends in an old ballad. For purely virtuous reasons, one slept with the wife of the other, but with the precaution indicated.

Act II

SCENE 1

[Enter BOSOLA and CASTRUCCIO.]

BOSOLA. You say you would fain be taken for an eminent courtier?

CASTRUCCIO. 'Tis the very main of my ambition.

BOSOLA. Let me see: you have a reasonable good face for 't already, and your nightcap expresses your ears sufficient largely. I would have you learn to twirl the strings of your band² with a good grace, and in a set speech, at th' end of every sentence, to hum three or four times, or blow your nose till it smart again, to recover your memory. When you come to be a president in criminal causes, if you smile upon a prisoner, hang him, but if you frown upon him and threaten him, let him be sure to 'scape the gallows.

CASTRUCCIO. I would be a very merry president.

BOSOLA. Do not sup o' night's; 'twill beget you an admirable wit.

CASTRUCCIO. Rather it would make me have a good stomach to quarrel; for they say, your roaring boys³ eat meat seldom, and that makes them so valiant. But how shall I know whether the people take me for an eminent fellow?

BOSOLA. I will teach a trick to know it: give out you lie a-dying, and if you hear the common people curse you, be sure you are taken for one of the prime nightcaps.⁴

[Enter an OLD LADY.]

You come from painting now.

OLD LADY. From what?

BOSOLA. Why, from your scurvy face-physic. To behold thee not painted inclines somewhat near a miracle; these in thy face here were deep ruts and foul sloughs the last progress.⁵ There was a lady in France that, having had the smallpox, flayed the skin off her face to make it more level; and whereas before she looked like a nutmeg-grater, after she resembled an abortive hedgehog.

OLD LADY. Do you call this painting?

BOSOLA. No, no, but you call it careening of an old morphewed lady, to make her disembugue again:⁶ there's rough-cast phrase to your plastic.

OLD LADY. It seems you are well acquainted with my closet.

BOSOLA. One would suspect it for a shop of witchcraft, to find in it the fat of serpents, spawn of snakes, Jews' spittle, and their young children's ordure; and all these for the face. I would sooner eat a dead pigeon taken from the soles of the feet of

2. The elaborate ruff of the day had strings attached to it.

3. London town-bullies. (Webster's Amalfi has about it an occasional touch of Cheapside.)

4. Roughs who roamed the streets at night.

5. A progress was a formal royal journey of state.

6. Scraping ("careening") of an old, scaly ("morphewed") ship ("lady") to fit her for the ocean ("making her disembugue") again.

one sick of the plague than kiss one of you fasting.⁷ Here are 40 two of you, whose sin of your youth is the very patrimony of the physician; makes him renew his foot-cloth with the spring,⁸ and change his high-priced courtesan with the fall of the leaf. I do wonder you do not loathe yourselves. Observe my meditation now.

What thing is in this outward form of man 45

To be beloved? We account it ominous,

If nature do produce a colt, or lamb,

A fawn, or goat, in any limb resembling

A man, and fly from 't as a prodigy: 50

Man stands amazed to see his deformity.

In any other creature but himself.

But in our own flesh, though we bear diseases

Which have their true names only ta'en from beasts—

As the most ulcerous wolf and swinish measles⁹— 55

Though we are eaten up of lice and worms,

And though continually we bear about us

A rotten and dead body, we delight

To hide it in rich tissue: all our fear,

Nay, all our terror, is lest our physician 60

Should put us in the ground to be made sweet—

Your wife's gone to Rome: you two couple, and get you

To the wells at Lucca to recover your aches.¹

I have other work on foot. [Exeunt CASTRUCCIO and OLD LADY.]

I observe our duchess

Is sick a-days: she pukes, her stomach seethes, 65

The fins of her eye-lids look most teeming blue,

She wanes i' th' cheek, and waxes fat i' th' flank,

And contrary to our Italian fashion,

Wears a loose-bodied gown: there's somewhat in 't. 70

I have a trick may chance discover it,

A pretty one; I have bought some apricocks,²

The first our spring yields.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

DELIO.

And so long since married?

You amaze me.

ANTONIO.

Let me seal your lips for ever:

For, did I think that anything but th' air 75

Could carry these words from you, I should wish

You had no breath at all. [turning to BOSOLA] Now, sir, in your contemplation?

7. Centuries of traditional invective about women's cosmetic practices, and some contemporary practices and superstitions, lie behind this speech. Freshly killed pigeons were indeed applied to the feet of plague-victims, and fasting was supposed to cause bad breath.

8. The physician grows rich on those who have outworn their youth; every spring he buys a new harness for his horse and every fall a new mistress for himself.

9. "Wolf" and "measle": an ulcerous skin disease (lupus) and an infection of swine.

1. The wells at Lucca are the mineral springs at nearby Montecatini, then as now renowned as a place to "take the cure."

2. The old spelling "apricots," emphasizing the derivation of the name from Latin præcox, "early ripener."

You are studying to become a great wise fellow?

BOSOLA. Oh, sir, the opinion of wisdom is a foul tetter³ that 80 runs all over a man's body. If simplicity direct us to have no evil, it directs us to a happy being, for the subtlest folly proceeds from the subtlest wisdom. Let me be simply honest.

ANTONIO. I do understand your inside.

BOSOLA. Do you so?

ANTONIO. Because you would not seem to appear to th' world 85
Puffed up with your preferment, you continue
This out-of-fashion melancholy. Leave it, leave it.

BOSOLA. Give me leave to be honest in any phrase, in any compliment whatsoever. Shall I confess myself to you? I look no higher than I can reach: they are the gods that must ride on 90 winged horses. A lawyer's mule of a slow pace will both suit my disposition and business; for, mark me, when a man's mind rides faster than his horse can gallop, they quickly both tire.

ANTONIO. You would look up to heaven, but I think 95
The devil, that rules i' th' air, stands in your light.

BOSOLA. Oh, sir, you are lord of the ascendant,⁴ chief man with the duchess; a duke was your cousin-german removed. Say you were lineally descended from King Pepin,⁵ or he himself, what of this? Search the heads of the greatest rivers in the world, 100 you shall find them but bubbles of water. Some would think the souls of princes were brought forth by some more weighty cause than those of meaner persons: they are deceived, there's the same hand to them; the like passions sway them; the same reason that makes a vicar go to law for a tithe-pig,⁶ and undo 105 his neighbors, makes them spoil a whole province, and batter down goodly cities with the cannon.

[Enter DUCHESS and LADIES.]

DUCHESS. Your arm, Antonio; do I not grow fat?

I am exceeding short-winded. Bosola,

I would have you, sir, provide for me a litter, 110

Such a one as the Duchess of Florence rode in.

BOSOLA. The duchess used one when she was great with child.

DUCHESS. I think she did. Come hither, mend my ruff;

Here, when?

Thou art such a tedious lady, and thy breath smells 115

Of lemon-peels.⁷ Would thou hadst done! Shall I swoon

Under thy fingers! I am so troubled

With the mother!⁸

BOSOLA. [aside] I fear too much.

DUCHESS.

I have heard you say

3. Scab.

4. In astrology, favored by the stars just coming into predominant influence.

5. Father of Charlemagne, and thus source of a great dynasty.

6. A parson was entitled to a tenth (tithe) of his parishioners' increase, but would be considered mean if he sued for a petty sum.

7. Lemon-peels were sometimes chewed to sweeten the breath. "Tedious": clumsy.

8. "The mother" is intestinal gas, sour stomach, but with a second meaning not lost on Bosola.

That the French courtiers wear their hats on 'fore
The king.

120

ANTONIO. I have seen it.

DUCHESS. In the presence?

ANTONIO. Yes.

DUCHESS. Why should not we bring up that fashion? 'Tis

Ceremony more than duty that consists

In the removing of a piece of felt.

125

Be you the example to the rest o' th' court;

Put on your hat first.

ANTONIO. You must pardon me.

I have seen, in colder countries than in France,

Nobles stand bare to th' prince, and the distinction

Methought showed reverently.

130

BOSOLA. I have a present for your grace.

DUCHESS. For me, sir?

BOSOLA. Apricocks, madam.

DUCHESS. O, sir, where are they?

I have heard of none to-year.

BOSOLA. [aside] Good; her color rises.

DUCHESS. Indeed, I thank you: they are wondrous fair ones.

What an unskillful fellow is our gardener!

135

We shall have none this month.

BOSOLA. Will not your grace pare them?

DUCHESS. No. They taste of musk, methinks; indeed they do.

BOSOLA. I know not: yet I wish your grace had pared 'em.

DUCHESS. Why?

BOSOLA. I forgot to tell you, the knave gardener,

140

Only to raise his profit by them the sooner,

Did ripen them in horse-dung.⁹

DUCHESS. O, you jest.

You shall judge: pray taste one.

ANTONIO. Indeed, madam,

I do not love the fruit.

DUCHESS. Sir, you are loath

To rob us of our dainties: 'tis a delicate fruit;

145

They say they are restorative.

BOSOLA. 'Tis a pretty art,

This grafting.

DUCHESS. 'Tis so; a bettering of nature.

BOSOLA. To make a pippin grow upon a crab,

A damson on a blackthorn. [aside] How greedily she eats them!

150

A whirlwind strike off these bawd farthingales!¹

For, but for that and the loose-bodied gown,

I should have discovered apparently²

The young springal³ cutting a caper in her belly.

9. The heat of decomposing manure was widely supposed to have special virtues; but Bosola is thinking also of his post as provisor of the horse.

1. Early hoop-skirts, capable of concealing the figure.

2. Easily, certainly.

3. Colt, youngster.

DUCHESS. I thank you, Bosola. They were right good ones,
If they do not make me sick. 155

ANTONIO. How now, madam?

DUCHESS. This green fruit and my stomach are not friends;
How they swell me!

BOSOLA. [aside] Nay, you are too much swelled already.

DUCHESS. Oh, I am in an extreme cold sweat!

BOSOLA. I am very sorry. 160

DUCHESS. Lights to my chamber! O good Antonio,
I fear I am undone!

DELIO. Lights there, lights!

[Exeunt DUCHESS and LADIES. Exit, on the other side, BOSOLA.]

ANTONIO. O my most trusty Delio, we are lost!

I fear she's fall'n in labor; and there's left
No time for her remove.

DELIO. Have you prepared 165
Those ladies to attend her? and procured
That politic safe conveyance for the midwife
Your duchess plotted?

ANTONIO. I have.

DELIO. Make use, then, of this forced occasion:
Give out that Bosola hath poisoned her 170
With these apricocks; that will give some color
For her keeping close.

ANTONIO. Fie, fie, the physicians
Will then flock to her.

DELIO. For that you may pretend
She'll use some prepared antidote of her own,
Lest the physicians should re-poison her, 175

ANTONIO. I am lost in amazement: I know not what to think on 't. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA. So, so, there's no question but her tetchiness⁴ and most vulturous eating of the apricocks are apparent signs of breeding.

[Enter an OLD LADY.]

Now?

OLD LADY. I am in haste, sir.

BOSOLA. There was a young waiting-woman had a monstrous 5 desire to see the glass-house⁵——

OLD LADY. Nay, pray let me go.

BOSOLA. And it was only to know what strange instrument it was should swell up a glass to the fashion of a woman's belly. 10

OLD LADY. I will hear no more of the glass-house. You are still

4. Irritability.

5. Where bottles were blown, near the theater in Blackfriars.

abusing women?

BOSOLA. Who, I? No; only, by the way now and then, mention your frailties. The orange-tree bears ripe and green fruit and blossoms all together; and some of you give entertainment for 15 pure love, but more for more precious reward. The lusty spring smells well, but drooping autumn tastes well. If we have the same golden showers that rained in the time of Jupiter the thunderer, you have the same Danaës still,⁶ to hold up their laps to receive them. Didst thou never study the mathematics? 20

OLD LADY. What's that sir?

BOSOLA. Why, to know the trick how to make a many lines meet in one center. Go, go, give your foster-daughters good counsel: tell them, that the devil takes delight to hang at a woman's girdle, like a false rusty watch, that she cannot discern how 25
the time passes. [Exit OLD LADY.]

[Enter ANTONIO, DELIO, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

ANTONIO. Shut up the court-gates.

RODERIGO. Why, sir? what's the danger?

ANTONIO. Shut up the posterns⁷ presently, and call
All the officers o' th' court.

GRISOLAN. I shall instantly. [Exit.]

ANTONIO. Who keeps the key o' th' park gate?

RODERIGO.

Forobosco. 30

ANTONIO. Let him bring 't presently.

[Re-enter GRISOLAN with SERVANTS.]

1 SERVANT. O, gentlemen o' the court, the foulest treason!

BOSOLA. [aside.] If that these apri-cocks should be poisoned now.
Without my knowledge!

1 SERVANT. There was taken even now
A Switzer⁸ in the duchess' bedchamber—

2 SERVANT. A Switzer? 35

1 SERVANT. With a pistol in his great cod-piece.⁹

BOSOLA. Ha, ha, ha!

1 SERVANT. The cod-piece was the case for 't.

2 SERVANT. There was
A cunning traitor: who would have searched his cod-piece?

1 SERVANT. True, if he had kept out of the ladies' chambers.
And all the molds of his buttons were leaden bullets.

2 SERVANT. O wicked cannibal! 40

A fire-lock in 's cod-piece!

1 SERVANT. 'Twas a French plot,
Upon my life.

2 SERVANT. To see what the devil can do!

ANTONIO. Are all the officers here?

SERVANTS. We are.

ANTONIO. Gentlemen, 45

6. Jupiter's success in wooing Danaë in a shower of gold traditionally illustrates female venality.

7. Outer gates of a castle or palace.

8. Swiss guard.

9. An outsize flap worn on the front of men's trunk hose.

We have lost much plate¹ you know, and but this evening
Jewels, to the value of four thousand ducats,
Are missing in the duchess' cabinet.
Are the gates shut?

SERVANT.

Yes.

ANTONIO.

'Tis the duchess' pleasure

Each officer be locked into his chamber
Till the sun-rising; and to send the keys
Of all their chests and of their outward doors
Into her bed-chamber. She is very sick.

50

RODERIGO. At her pleasure.

ANTONIO.

She entreats you take 't not ill:

The innocent shall be the more approved by it.

55

BOSOLA. Gentlemen o' th' wood-yard, where's your Switzer now?

1 SERVANT. By this hand, 'twas credibly reported by one o' th'
black guard.² [Exeunt all except ANTONIO and DELIO.]

DELIO. How fares it with the duchess?

ANTONIO.

She's exposed

Unto the worst of torture, pain, and fear.

DELIO. Speak to her all happy comfort.

60

ANTONIO. How I do play the fool with mine own danger!

You are this night, dear friend, to post to Rome;

My life lies in your service.

DELIO.

Do not doubt me.

ANTONIO. Oh, 'tis far from me, and yet fear presents me

Somewhat that looks like danger.

DELIO.

Believe it,

65

'Tis but the shadow of your fear, no more;

How superstitiously we mind our evils!

The throwing down salt, or crossing of a hare,

Bleeding at nose, the stumbling of a horse,

Or singing of a cricket, are of power

70

To daunt whole man in us. Sir, fare you well:

I wish you all the joys of a blessed father:

And, for my faith, lay this unto your breast,

Old friends, like old swords, still are trusted best.

[Exit.]

[Enter CARIOLA.]

CARIOLA. Sir, you are the happy father of a son:

75

Your wife commends him to you.

ANTONIO.

Blessed comfort!

For Heaven's sake tend her well: I'll presently

Go set a figure for 's nativity.³

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 3

[Enter BOSOLA, with a dark lantern.]

BOSOLA. Sure I did hear a woman shriek: list, ha!

1. Massive gold and silver dishes, a frequent form of wealth in the days before banks.
2. Kitchen-scullions; the "wood-yard" is a source of firewood for kitchen and fire-places.

3. Cast his horoscope.

And the sound came, if I received it right,
 From the duchess' lodgings. There's some stratagem
 In the confining all our courtiers
 To their several wards: I must have part of it;
 My intelligence will freeze else.⁴ List, again!
 It may be 'twas the melancholy bird,
 Best friend of silence and of solitariness,
 The owl, that screamed so. Ha! Antonio?

[Enter ANTONIO with a candle, his sword drawn.]

ANTONIO. I heard some noise. Who's there? What art thou?
 Speak.

BOSOLA. Antonio? Put not your face nor body
 To such a forced expression of fear.
 I am Bosola, your friend.

ANTONIO. Bosola!
 [aside] This mole does undermine me. Heard you not
 A noise even now?

BOSOLA. From whence?

ANTONIO. From the duchess' lodging.

BOSOLA. Not I. Did you?

ANTONIO. I did, or else I dreamed.

BOSOLA. Let's walk towards it.

ANTONIO. No, it may be 'twas
 But the rising of the wind.

BOSOLA. Very likely.
 Methinks 'tis very cold, and yet you sweat:
 You look wildly.

ANTONIO. I have been setting a figure⁵
 For the duchess' jewels.

BOSOLA. Ah, and how falls your question?
 Do you find it radical?⁶

ANTONIO. What's that to you?
 'Tis rather to be questioned what design,
 When all men were commanded to their lodgings,
 Makes you a night-walker.

BOSOLA. In sooth, I'll tell you:
 Now all the court's asleep, I thought the devil
 Had least to do here; I came to say my prayers;
 And if it do offend you I do so,
 You are a fine courtier.

ANTONIO. [aside] This fellow will undo me.
 You gave the duchess apriocks today:
 Pray Heaven they were not poisoned!

BOSOLA. Poisoned? A Spanish fig⁷
 For the imputation!

ANTONIO. Traitors are ever confident
 Till they are discovered. There were jewels stolen, too;

4. All my news will be cold.

5. Establishing the loss involved. But Bosola takes the expression astrologically, as if Antonio were casting a horoscope.

6. Indicative, significant.

7. An obscene gesture, which Bosola doubtless makes onstage.

In my conceit, none are to be suspected
More than yourself. 35

BOSOLA. You are a false steward.

ANTONIO. Saucy slave, I'll pull thee up by the roots.

BOSOLA. Maybe the ruin will crush you to pieces.

ANTONIO. You are an impudent snake indeed, sir:

Are you scarce warm, and do you show your sting? 40

You libel well, sir.

BOSOLA. No, sir: copy it out,

And I will set my hand to 't.⁸

ANTONIO. [aside] My nose bleeds.

One that were superstitious would count

This ominous, when it merely comes by chance:

Two letters, that are wrought here for my name, 45

Are drowned in blood!

Mere accident. For you, sir, I'll take order

I' th' morn you shall be safe: [aside] 'tis that must color

Her lying-in: sir, this door you pass not:

I do not hold it fit that you come near 50

The duchess' lodgings, till you have quit yourself.

[aside] The great are like the base, nay, they are the same,
When they seek shameful ways to avoid shame. [Exit.]

BOSOLA. Antonio hereabout did drop a paper:

Some of your help, false friend: [Opening his lantern.] Oh, 55
here it is.

What's here? A child's nativity calculated? [Reads.]

'The duchess was delivered of a son, 'tween the hours twelve and one in the night, Anno Dom. 1504,' that's this year—'de- cimo nono Decembris.'⁹—that's this night,—'taken according to the meridian of Malfi,'—that's our duchess: happy discov- 60
ery! 'The lord of the first house being combust¹ in the ascendant, signifies short life; and Mars being in a human sign, joined to the tail of the Dragon, in the eighth house, doth threaten a violent death. Caetera non scrutantur.'²

Why, now 'tis most apparent: this precise³ fellow 65

Is the duchess' bawd: I have it to my wish!

This is a parcel of intelligency

Our courtiers were cased up for: it needs must follow

That I must be committed on pretense

Of poisoning her; which I'll endure, and laugh at. 70

If one could find the father now! But that

Time will discover. Old Castruccio

I' th' morning posts to Rome: by him I'll send

A letter that shall make her brothers' galls

O'erflow their livers. This was a thrifty way. 75

8. Bosola denies the charge of under-handed malignancy, not by denying malignancy, but by offering to make it public.

9. The 19th of December.

1. Affre.

2. The rest is not to be seen. Mars and the Dragon are sinister signs, even separately; fatal together.

3. This very fellow, but also implying that Antonio acts like a Puritan, a "precisian." "Bawd": procurer.

Though lust do mask in ne'er so strange disguise,
She's oft found witty, but is never wise.

[Exit.]

SCENE 4. The palace of the CARDINAL at Rome.

[Enter CARDINAL and JULIA.]

CARDINAL. Sit. Thou art my best of wishes. Prithee, tell me
What trick didst thou invent to come to Rome
Without thy husband.

JULIA. Why, my lord, I told him
I came to visit an old anchorite⁴
Here for devotion.

CARDINAL. Thou are a witty false one, 5
I mean, to him.

JULIA. You have prevailed with me
Beyond my strongest thoughts! I would not now
Find you inconstant.

CARDINAL. Do not put thyself
To such a voluntary torture, which proceeds
Out of your own guilt.

JULIA. How, my lord?

CARDINAL. You fear 10
My constancy, because you have approved⁵
Those giddy and wild turnings in yourself.

JULIA. Did you e'er find them?

CARDINAL. Sooth, generally for women;
A man might strive to make glass malleable,
Ere he should make them fixed.

JULIA. So, my lord. 15

CARDINAL. We had need go borrow that fantastic glass
Invented by Galileo the Florentine⁶
To view another spacious world i' th' moon,
And look to find a constant woman there.

JULIA. This is very well, my lord.

CARDINAL. Why do you weep? 20
Are tears your justification? The self-same tears
Will fall into your husband's bosom, lady,
With a loud protestation that you love him
Above the world. Come, I'll love you wisely,
That's jealousy, since I am very certain 25
You cannot make me cuckold.

JULIA. I'll go home
To my husband.

CARDINAL. You may thank me, lady,
I have taken you off your melancholy perch,
Bore you upon my fist, and showed you game,

4. Hermit.

5. Experienced.

6. In 1504, Galileo's telescope was more than 100 years in the future, but the reference was topical for Webster's audience.

And let you fly at it.⁷ I pray thee, kiss me. 30

When thou wast with thy husband, thou wast watched
Like a tame elephant: still you are to thank me:

Thou hadst only kisses from him and high feeding;
But what delight was that? 'Twas just like one
That hath a little fingering on the lute, 35

Yet cannot tune it: still you are to thank me.

JULIA. You told me of a piteous wound i' th' heart
And a sick liver, when you wooed me first,
And spake like one in physic.⁸ [A knock is heard.]

CARDINAL. Who's that?

[Enter SERVANT.]

Rest firm, for my affection to thee, 40
Lightning moves slow to 't.⁹

SERVANT. Madam, a gentleman,

That's come post from Malfi, desires to see you.

CARDINAL. Let him enter. I'll withdraw. [Exit.]

SERVANT. He says

Your husband, old Castruccio, is come to Rome,
Most pitifully tired with riding post.¹ [Exit.] 45

[Enter DELIO.]

JULIA. Signior Delio! [aside] 'tis one of my old suitors.

DELIO. I was bold to come and see you.

JULIA. Sir, you are welcome.

DELIO. Do you lie here?

JULIA. Sure, your own experience

Will satisfy you no: our Roman prelates

Do not keep lodging for ladies.

DELIO. Very well. 50

I have brought you no commendations from your husband,

For I know none by him.

JULIA. I hear he's come to Rome.

DELIO. I never knew man and beast, of a horse and a knight,

So weary of each other: if he had had a good back,

He would have undertook to have borne his horse, 55

His breech was so pitifully sore.

JULIA. Your laughter

Is my pity.

DELIO. Lady, I know not whether

You want money, but I have brought you some.

JULIA. From my husband?

DELIO. No, from mine own allowance.

JULIA. I must hear the condition, ere I be bound to take it. 60

DELIO. Look on't, 'tis gold: hath it not a fine color?

JULIA. I have a bird more beautiful.

DELIO. Try the sound on 't.

7. The Cardinal speaks of himself as a falconer training a bird (Julia).

8. Like a man under a doctor's care.

9. By comparison.

1. When riding post, one changed horses at regular intervals without stopping to rest oneself.

JULIA. A lute-string far exceeds it:
 It hath no smell, like cassia or civet;
 Nor is it physical,² though some fond doctors
 Persuade us see the 't in cullises.³ I'll tell you,
 This is a creature bred by——
 [Re-enter SERVANT.]

SERVANT. Your husband's come,
 Hath delivered a letter to the Duke of Calabria
 That, to my thinking, hath put him out of his wits. [Exit.]

JULIA. Sir, you hear:
 Pray, let me know your business and your suit
 As briefly as can be. 70

DELIO. With good speed: I would wish you,
 At such time as you are non-resident
 With your husband, my mistress. 75

JULIA. Sir, I'll go ask my husband if I shall,
 And straight return your answer. [Exit.]

DELIO. Very fine!
 Is this her wit, or honesty, that speaks thus?
 I heard one say the duke was highly moved
 With a letter sent from Malfi. I do fear
 Antonio is betrayed: how fearfully
 Shows his ambition now! Unfortunate fortune!
 They pass through whirlpools, and deep woes do shun,
 Who the event weigh ere the action's done.⁴ [Exit.] 80

SCENE 5

[Enter CARDINAL, and FERDINAND with a letter.]

FERDINAND. I have this night digged up a mandrake.⁵ Say you?

CARDINAL.

FERDINAND. And I am grown mad with 't.

CARDINAL. What's the prodigy?

FERDINAND. Read there—a sister damned: she's loose i' th' hilt;⁶

Grown a notorious strumpet.

CARDINAL. Speak lower.

FERDINAND. Lower?

Rogues do not whisper 't now, but seek to publish 't 5
 (As servants do the bounty of their lords)

Aloud; and with a covetous searching eye,

To mark who note them. O, confusion seize her!

She hath had most cunning bawds to serve her turn,

And more secure conveyances for lust 10

Than towns of garrison for service.

CARDINAL. Is 't possible?

2. Medicinally valuable.

3. Boil it up in a broth.

4. I.e., who look ahead at the consequences of their actions.

5. A fabulous root, violently aphrodisiac

but also deadly poison. Both aspects apply to Ferdinand.

6. I.e., promiscuous; literally, a sword which is too limber.

Can this be certain?

FERDINAND. Rhubarb, oh, for rhubarb⁷
To purge this choler! Here's the cursèd day
To prompt my memory, and here 't shall stick
Till of her bleeding heart I make a sponge
To wipe it out.

15

CARDINAL. Why do you make yourself
So wild a tempest?

FERDINAND. Would I could be one,
That I might toss her palace 'bout her ears,
Root up her goodly forests, blast her meads.⁸
And lay her general territory as waste
As she hath done her honors.

20

CARDINAL. Shall our blood,
The royal blood of Aragon and Castile,
Be thus attainted?

FERDINAND. Apply desperate physic:
We must not now use balsamum,⁹ but fire,
The smarting cupping-glass, for that 's the mean
To purge infected blood, such blood as hers.
There is a kind of pity in mine eye,
I'll give it to my handkercher; and now 'tis here,
I'll bequeath this to her bastard.

25

CARDINAL. What to do?

FERDINAND. Why, to make soft lint for his mother's wounds,
When I have hewed her to pieces.

30

CARDINAL. Cursèd creature!
Unequal nature, to place women's hearts
So far upon the left side!¹

FERDINAND. Foolish men,
That e'er will trust their honor in a bark
Made of so slight weak bulrush as is woman,
Apt every minute to sink it!

35

CARDINAL. Thus ignorance, when it hath purchased honor,
It cannot wield it.

FERDINAND. Methinks I see her laughing—
Excellent hyena! Talk to me somewhat, quickly,
Or my imagination will carry me
To see her in the shameful act of sin.

40

CARDINAL. With whom?

FERDINAND. Happily² with some strong-thighed bargeman,
Or one o' the woodyard that can quoit the sledge
Or toss the bar, or else some lovely squire
That carries coals up to her privy lodgings.³

45

7. Rhubarb, as a laxative, was supposed to be good for the high pressures of choler, hot-burning rage.

8. Open fields.

9. Balm, a gentle remedy, gives way to cautery ("fire") and the "cupping-glass," by which people were bled.

1. The left is the sinister, or unlucky, side.

2. Probably, haply.

3. Beefy fellows employed in maintaining the supply of firewood, imagined as competing in gross tests of strength (throwing the sledge, tossing the bar), the winner to be promoted to the duchess's bed.

CARDINAL. You fly beyond your reason.

FERDINAND.

Go to, mistress!

'Tis not your whore's milk that shall quench my wild fire,
But your whore's blood.

CARDINAL. How idly shows this rage, which carries you, 50

As men conveyed by witches through the air,
On violent whirlwinds! This intemperate noise
Fitably resembles deaf men's shrill discourse,
Who talk aloud, thinking all other men
To have their imperfection.

FERDINAND.

Have not you 55

My palsy?

CARDINAL. Yes, I can be angry, but Without this rupture: there is not in nature

A thing that makes man so deformed, so beastly,
As doth intemperate anger. Chide yourself.
You have divers men who never yet expressed 60
Their strong desire of rest but by unrest,
By vexing of themselves. Come, put yourself
In tune.

FERDINAND. So; I will only study to seem

The thing I am not. I could kill her now,
In you, or in myself; for I do think 65
It is some sin in us heaven doth revenge
By her.

CARDINAL. Are you stark mad?

FERDINAND.

I would have their bodies

Burnt in a coal-pit with the ventage stopped,
That their cursed smoke might not ascend to heaven;
Or dip the sheets they lie in in pitch or sulphur, 70
Wrap them in 't, and then light them like a match;
Or else to-boil their bastard to a cullis,
And give 't his lecherous father to renew
The sin of his back.⁴

CARDINAL.

I'll leave you.

FERDINAND.

Nay, I have done.

I am confident, had I been damned in hell, 75
And should have heard of this, it would have put me
Into a cold sweat. In, in; I'll go sleep.
Till I know who leaps my sister, I'll not stir:
That known, I'll find scorpions to string my whips,⁵
And fix her in a general eclipse. [Exeunt.] 80

4. Only boiling down the bastard to a broth ("cullis") and feeding him to his father, as Atreus did to Thyestes in Greek legend, will satisfy Ferdinand. Thus the father will be made to "renew" (repair, atone for) the sin of his back in begetting the child.

5. Tipping the thongs of a whip with "scorpions" (tips of jagged steel or lead that sting and bite the flesh) is an old metaphor for aggravated punishment.

Act III

SCENE 1. Amalfi.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

ANTONIO. Our noble friend, my most beloved Delio!

Oh, you have been a stranger long at court;

Came you along with the Lord Ferdinand?

DELIO. I did, sir. And how fares your noble duchess?

ANTONIO. Right fortunately well: she's an excellent

Feeder of pedigrees; since you last saw her,

She hath had two children more, a son and daughter.

DELIO. Methinks 'twas yesterday: let me but wink,

And not behold your face, which to mine eye

Is somewhat leaner, verily I should dream

It were within this half-hour.

ANTONIO. You have not been in law, friend Delio,

Nor in prison, nor a suitor at the court,

Nor begged the reversion of some great man's place,

Nor troubled with an old wife, which doth make

Your time so insensibly hasten.⁶

DELIO. Pray, sir, tell me.

Hath not this news arrived yet to the ear

Of the lord cardinal?

ANTONIO. I fear it hath:

The Lord Ferdinand, that's newly come to court,

Doth bear himself right dangerously.

DELIO. Pray, why?

ANTONIO. He is so quiet that he seems to sleep

The tempest out, as dormice do in winter.

Those houses that are haunted are most still

Till the devil be up.

DELIO. What say the common people?

ANTONIO. The common rabble do directly say

She is a strumpet.

DELIO. And your graver heads

Which would be politic, what censure they?

ANTONIO. They do observe I grow to infinite purchase,

The left hand way,⁷ and all suppose the duchess

Would amend it, if she could; for, say they,

Great princes, though they grudge their officers

Should have such large and unconfined means

To get wealth under them, will not complain,

Lest thereby they should make them odious

Unto the people; for other obligation

Of love or marriage between her and me

They never dream of.

DELIO. The Lord Ferdinand

Is going to bed.

6. I.e., This is what makes your time pass imperceptibly ("insensibly") by.

7. I.e., they think I am getting rich dishonestly.

[Enter DUCHESS, FERDINAND, and BOSOLA.]

FERDINAND. I'll instantly to bed,
For I am weary.—I am to bespeak
A husband for you.

DUCHESS. For me, sir? Pray, who is 't? 40

FERDINAND. The great Count Malateste.

DUCHESS. Fie upon him!

A count? He's a mere stick of sugar-candy;
You may look quite through him. When I choose
A husband, I will marry for your honor.

FERDINAND. You shall do well in 't. How is 't, worthy Antonio? 45

DUCHESS. But, sir, I am to have private conference with you
About a scandalous report is spread
Touching mine honor.

FERDINAND. Let me be ever deaf to 't:

One of Pasquil's paper bullets,⁸ court-calumny,
A pestilent air, which princes' palaces
Are seldom purged of. Yet, say that it were true,
I pour it in your bosom, my fixed love
Would strongly excuse, extenuate, nay, deny
Faults, were they apparent in you. Go, be safe
In your own innocence.

50

DUCHESS. [aside] O blessed comfort!

55

This deadly air is purged.

[Exeunt DUCHESS, ANTONIO, and DELIO.]

FERDINAND. Her guilt treads on

Hot-burning coulters.⁹ Now, Bosola,
How thrives our intelligence?

BOSOLA. Sir, uncertainly
'Tis rumored she hath had three bastards, but
By whom we may go read i' th' stars.

FERDINAND. Why, some
Hold opinion all things are written there.

60

BOSOLA. Yes, if we could find spectacles to read them.
I do suspect there hath been some sorcery
Used on the duchess.

FERDINAND. Sorcery? To what purpose?

BOSOLA. To make her dote on some desertless fellow
She shames to acknowledge.

65

FERDINAND. Can your faith give way
To think there's power in potions or in charms,
To make us love whether we will or no?

BOSOLA. Most certainly.

FERDINAND. Away! These are mere gulleries,¹ horrid things,
Invented by some cheating mountebanks
To abuse us. Do you think that herbs or charms

70

8. Anonymous satires were traditionally pasted on the statue of Pasquillo, or Pasquino, near Piazza Navona in Rome, and attributed to his authorship.

9. Medieval virginity-inquests customarily required the questioned lady to walk barefoot over red-hot plowshares ("coulters").

1. Deceits.

Can force the will? Some trials have been made
 In this foolish practice, but the ingredients
 Were lenitive poisons,² such as are of force 75
 To make the patient mad; and straight the witch
 Swears by equivocation they are in love.
 The witchcraft lies in her rank blood. This night
 I will force confession from her. You told me
 You had got, within these two days, a false key 80
 Into her bedchamber.

BOSOLA. I have.
 FERDINAND. As I would wish.
 BOSOLA. What do you intend to do?
 FERDINAND. Can you guess?
 BOSOLA. No.
 FERDINAND. Do not ask, then:

He that can compass me, and know my drifts,
 May say he hath put a girdle 'bout the world, 85
 And sounded all her quicksands.

BOSOLA. I do not Think so.
 FERDINAND. What do you think, then, pray?
 BOSOLA. That you
 Are your own chronicle too much, and grossly
 Flatter yourself.

FERDINAND. Give me thy hand; I thank thee:
 I never gave pension but to flatterers, 90
 Till I entertained thee. Farewell.
 That friend a great man's ruin strongly checks,
 Who rails into his belief all his defects. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2. The Bedchamber of the DUCHESS.

[Enter DUCHESS, ANTONIO, and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS. Bring me the casket hither, and the glass.

You get no lodging here tonight, my lord.

ANTONIO. Indeed, I must persuade one.

DUCHESS. Very good:

I hope in time 'twill grow into a custom,
 That noblemen shall come with cap and knee 5
 To purchase a night's lodging of their wives.

ANTONIO. I must lie here.

DUCHESS. Must! You are a lord of misrule.³

ANTONIO. Indeed, my rule is only in the night.

DUCHESS. To what use will you put me?

ANTONIO. We'll sleep together.

DUCHESS. Alas, what pleasure can two lovers find in sleep! 10

2. Secret, slow-working poisons.

3. The mock-monarch of a carnival festival.

CARIOLA. My lord, I lie with her often, and I know
She'll much disquiet you.

ANTONIO. See, you are complained of.

CARIOLA. For she's the sprawling'st bedfellow.

ANTONIO. I shall like her
The better for that.

CARIOLA. Sir, shall I ask you a question?

ANTONIO. Oh, I pray thee, Cariola.

CARIOLA. Wherefore still, when you lie 15
With my lady, do you rise so early?

ANTONIO. Laboring men

Count the clock oftenest, Cariola, are glad

When their task's ended.

DUCHESS. I'll stop your mouth. [Kisses him.]

ANTONIO. Nay, that's but one; Venus had two soft doves

To draw her chariot; I must have another—

[She kisses him again.] 20

When wilt thou marry, Cariola?

CARIOLA. Never, my lord.

ANTONIO. Oh, fie upon this single life! Forgo it.

We read how Daphne, for her peevish flight,

Became a fruitless bay-tree; Syrinx turned

To the pale empty reed; Anaxarete

Was frozen into marble: whereas those 25

Which married, or proved kind unto their friends,

Were by a gracious influence transhaped

Into the olive, pomegranate, mulberry.

Became flowers, precious stones, or eminent stars.⁴

CARIOLA. This is a vain poetry, but I pray you tell me, 30

If there were proposed me, wisdom, riches, and beauty,

In three several young men, which should I choose?

ANTONIO. 'Tis a hard question: this was Paris' case,

And he was blind in 't, and there was great cause; 35

For how was 't possible he could judge right,

Having three amorous goddesses in view,

And they stark naked? 'Twas a motion⁵

Were able to benight the apprehension

Of the severest counsellor of Europe. 40

Now I look on both your faces so well formed,

It puts me in mind of a question I would ask.

CARIOLA. What is 't?

ANTONIO. I do wonder why hard-favored ladies,
For the most part, keep worse-favored waiting-women

4. The olive was created by Athene; the mulberry gained its color from the blood of Pyramus and Thisbe; the pomegranate seems to have no particular mythological origin. Most of the other stories of ladies being transformed for complying, or not complying, with the solicitations of a god are from Ovid, Metamorphoses.

5. Spectacle. Paris had to choose between Hera, Athena, and Aphrodite, goddesses of marriage, wisdom, and love; his selecting the latter led to the Trojan war.

To attend them, and cannot endure fair ones.

45

DUCHESS. Oh, that's soon answered.

Did you ever in your life know an ill painter
Desire to have his dwelling next door to the shop
Of an excellent picture-maker? 'Twould disgrace
His face-making, and undo him. I prithee,
When were we so merry?—My hair tangles.

50

ANTONIO. Pray thee, Cariola, let's steal forth the room,
And let her talk to herself: I have divers times
Served her the like, when she hath chafed extremely.
I love to see her angry. Softly, Cariola.

55

[Exeunt ANTONIO and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS. Doth not the color of my hair 'gin to change?

When I wax gray, I shall have all the court
Powder their hair with arras,⁶ to be like me.
You have cause to love me; I entered you into my heart
Before you would vouchsafe to call for the keys.

60

[Enter FERDINAND behind.]

We shall one day have my brothers take you napping;
Methinks his presence, being now in court,
Should make you keep your own bed; but you'll say
Love mixed with fear is sweetest. I'll assure you,
You shall get no more children till my brothers
Consent to be your gossips.⁷ Have you lost your tongue?

65

[She turns and sees FERDINAND.]

'Tis welcome:

For know, whether I am doomed to live or die,
I can do both like a prince.

FERDINAND. Die, then, quickly! [Giving her a poniard.]

Virtue, where art thou hid? What hideous thing
Is it that doth eclipse thee?

70

DUCHESS. Pray, sir, hear me.

FERDINAND. Or is it true thou art but a bare name,
And no essential thing?

DUCHESS. Sir—

FERDINAND. Do not speak.

DUCHESS. No, sir: I will plant my soul in mine ears, to hear you.

75

FERDINAND. O most imperfect light of human reason,

That mak'st us so unhappy to foresee
What we can least prevent! Pursue thy wishes,
And glory in them: there's in shame no comfort
But to be past all bounds and sense of shame.

DUCHESS. I pray, sir, hear me. I am married.

FERDINAND. So!

80

DUCHESS. Haply,⁸ not to your liking: but for that,

Alas, your shears do come untimely now

6. Orris-root, used in powdered form to make hair artificially gray.

baptism.

8. Perhaps.

7. Intimate friends, but also sponsors in

To clip the bird's wings that's already flown!
Will you see my husband?

FERDINAND.

Yes, if I could change

Eyes with a basilisk.⁹

DUCHESS.

Sure, you came hither

By his confederacy.

85

FERDINAND.

The howling of a wolf

Is music to thee, screech-owl: prithee, peace.

Whate'er thou art that hast enjoyed my sister,

For I am sure thou hear'st me, for thine own sake

Let me not know thee. I came hither prepared

To work thy discovery; yet am now persuaded

It would beget such violent effects

As would damn us both. I would not for ten millions

I had beheld thee: therefore use all means

I never may have knowledge of thy name;

Enjoy thy lust still, and a wretched life,

On that condition. And for thee, vile woman,

If thou do wish thy lecher may grow old

In thy embracements, I would have thee build

Such a room for him as our anchorites

To holier use inhabit. Let not the sun

Shine on him till he's dead; let dogs and monkeys

Only converse with him, and such dumb things

To whom nature denies use to sound his name;

Do not keep a paraquito,¹ lest she learn it;

If thou do love him, cut out thine own tongue,

Lest it bewray him.

90

95

100

105

DUCHESS.

Why might not I marry?

I have not gone about in this to create

Any new world or custom.

FERDINAND.

Thou art undone;

And thou hast ta'en that massy sheet of lead

That hid thy husband's bones, and folded it

About my heart.

110

DUCHESS.

Mine bleeds for 't.

FERDINAND.

Thine? Thy heart?

What should I name't unless a hollow bullet

Filled with unquenchable wild-fire?

DUCHESS.

You are in this

Too strict, and were you not my princely brother,

I would say, too willful. My reputation

Is safe.

115

FERDINAND. Dost thou know what reputation is?

I'll tell thee—to small purpose, since the instruction

Comes now too late.

Upon a time Reputation, Love, and Death,

120

9. The mythical basilisk was fabled to kill with a glance.

1. Parrot.

Would travel o'er the world; and it was concluded
 That they should part, and take three several ways.
 Death told them, they should find him in great battles,
 Or cities plagued with plagues. Love gives them counsel 125
 To inquire for him 'mongst unambitious shepherds,
 Where dowries were not talked of, and sometimes
 'Mongst quiet kindred that had nothing left
 By their dead parents. "Stay," quoth Reputation,
 "Do not forsake me; for it is my nature, 130
 If once I part from any man I meet,
 I am never found again." And so for you:
 You have shook hands with Reputation,
 And made him invisible. So, fare you well.
 I will never see you more.

DUCHESS. Why should only I, 135
 Of all the other princes of the world,
 Be cased up, like a holy relic? I have youth
 And a little beauty.

FERDINAND. So you have some virgins
 That are witches. I will never see thee more. [Exit.]
 [Enter ANTONIO with a pistol, and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS. You saw this apparition?
 ANTONIO. Yes. We are 140

Betrayed. How came he hither? I should turn
 This to thee, for that. [Pointing the pistol at CARIOLA.]

CARIOLA. Pray, sir, do; and when
 That you have cleft my heart, you shall read there
 Mine innocence.

DUCHESS. That gallery gave him entrance.
 ANTONIO. I would this terrible thing would come again, 145
 That, standing on my guard, I might relate
 My warrantable² love. [She shows the poniard.]

Ha! What means this?

DUCHESS. He left this with me.

ANTONIO. And it seems did wish
 You would use it on yourself.

DUCHESS. His action seemed
 To intend so much.

ANTONIO. This hath a handle to 't 150
 As well as a point: turn it towards him, and
 So fasten the keen edge in his rank gall. [Knocking within.]
 How now! Who knocks? More earthquakes?

DUCHESS. I stand
 As if a mine beneath my feet were ready
 To be blown up.

CARIOLA. 'Tis Bosola.

DUCHESS. Away! 155
 O misery! Methinks unjust actions

2. Legitimate, defensible.

Should wear these masks and curtains, and not we.
 You must instantly part hence: I have fashioned it Already.

[Exit ANTONIO.]

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA. The duke your brother is ta'en up in a whirlwind,
 Hath took horse, and 's rid post to Rome. 160

DUCHESS. So late?

BOSOLA. He told me, as he mounted into th' saddle,
 You were undone.

DUCHESS. Indeed, I am very near it.

BOSOLA. What's the matter?

DUCHESS. Antonio, the master of our household, 165

Hath dealt so falsely with me in 's accounts:
 My brother stood engaged with me for money
 Ta'en up of certain Neapolitan Jews,
 And Antonio lets the bonds be forfeit.³

BOSOLA. Strange!—[aside] This is cunning.

DUCHESS. And hereupon 170

My brother's bills at Naples are protested
 Against.⁴—Call up our officers.

BOSOLA. I shall. [Exit.]

[Re-enter ANTONIO.]

DUCHESS. The place that you must fly to is Ancona:⁵

Hire a house there; I'll send after you
 My treasure and my jewels. Our weak safety 175

Runs upon ingenious wheels:⁶ short syllables

Must stand for periods. I must now accuse you

Of such a feigned crime as Tasso calls

Magnanima menzogna, a noble lie,

'Cause it must shield our honors. Hark! They are coming. 180

[Re-enter BOSOLA and OFFICERS.]

ANTONIO. Will your grace hear me?

DUCHESS. I have got well by you; you have yielded me

A million of loss: I am like to inherit

The people's curses for your stewardship.

You had the trick in audit-time to be sick,

Till I had signed your quietus;⁷ and that cured you 185

Without help of a doctor. Gentlemen,

I would have this man be an example to you all;

So shall you hold my favor; I pray, let him;⁸

For h'as done that, alas, you would not think of, 190

And, because I intend to be rid of him,

I mean not to publish. [to ANTONIO] Use your fortune elsewhere.

3. I.e., my brother advanced me some money in the form of notes, which I sent to Neapolitan money-lenders; now Antonio has let them call on the Duke for payment.

4. I.e., the Duke of Calabria's checks have bounced.

5. Ancona lies on the Adriatic coast of Italy, across the peninsula from Amalfi and well to the north.

6. Automatic wheels.

7. Receipt.

8. Release him.

- ANTONIO. I am strongly armed to brook my overthrow;
As commonly men bear with a hard year,
I will not blame the cause on 't; but do think 195
The necessity of my malevolent star
Procures this, not her humor. Oh, the inconstant
And rotten ground of service! You may see,
'Tis even like him, that in a winter night,
Takes a long slumber o'er a dying fire, 200
A-loth to part from 't; yet parts thence as cold
As when he first sat down.
- DUCHESS. We do confiscate,
Towards the satisfying of your accounts,
All that you have.
- ANTONIO. I am yours, and 'tis very fit
All mine should be so.
- DUCHESS. So, sir, you have your pass.⁹ 205
- ANTONIO. You may see, gentlemen, what 'tis to serve
A prince with body and soul. [Exit.]
- BOSOLA. Here's an example for extortion: what moisture is drawn out of the sea, when foul weather comes, pours down, and runs into the sea again. 210
- DUCHESS. I would know what are your opinions of this Antonio.
- SECOND OFFICER. He could not abide to see a pig's head gaping:
I thought your grace would find him a Jew.¹
- THIRD OFFICER. I would you had been his officer, for your own sake. 215
- FOURTH OFFICER. You would have had more money.
- FIRST OFFICER. He stopped his ears with black wool, and to those came to him for money said he was thick of hearing.
- SECOND OFFICER. Some said he was an hermaphrodite, for he could not abide a woman. 220
- FOURTH OFFICER. How scurvy proud he would look when the treasury was full! Well, let him go!
- FIRST OFFICER. Yes, and the chippings of the buttery fly after him, to scour his gold chain!²
- DUCHESS. Leave us. [Exeunt OFFICERS.] What do you think of 225 these?
- BOSOLA. That these are rogues that in 's prosperity, but to have waited on his fortune, could have wished his dirty stirrup riveted through their noses, and followed after 's mule, like a bear in a ring; would have prostituted their daughters to his 230 lust; made their first-born intelligencers; thought none happy but such as were born under his blessed planet, and wore his livery: and do these lice drop off now? Well, never look to have the like again:³ he hath left a sort of flattering rogues

9. Passport, leave to depart.

1. Jews were identified by their antipathy to pork; but the assumptions here are deliberately ridiculous.

2. A gold chain was the steward's traditional badge of office. Bread crumbs (the "chippings of the buttery") were used to polish gold and silver plate.

3. I.e., a servant as good as he was.

behind him; their doom must follow. Princes pay flatterers in their own money: flatterers dissemble their vices, and they dissemble their lies; that's justice. Alas, poor gentleman!

DUCHESS. Poor? He hath amply filled his coffers.

BOSOLA. Sure, he was too honest. Pluto, the god of riches, when he 's sent by Jupiter to any man, he goes limping, to signify ²⁴⁰ that wealth that comes on God's name comes slowly; but when he 's sent on the devil's errand, he rides post and comes in by scuttles.⁴ Let me show you what a most unvalued jewel you have in a wanton humor thrown away, to bless the man shall find him. He was an excellent courtier and most faithful; ²⁴⁵ a soldier that thought it as beastly to know his own value too little as devilish to acknowledge it too much. Both his virtue and form deserved a far better fortune: his discourse rather delighted to judge itself than show itself; his breast was filled with all perfection, and yet it seemed a private whispering- ²⁵⁰
 room,⁵ it made so little noise of 't.

DUCHESS. But he was basely descended.

BOSOLA. Will you make yourself a mercenary herald, rather to examine men's pedigrees than virtues? You shall want⁶ him:
 for know, an honest statesman to a prince is like a cedar ²⁵⁵ planted by a spring; the spring bathes the tree's root, the grateful tree rewards it with his shadow: you have not done so.
 I would sooner swim to the Bermoothes⁷ on two politicians' rotten bladders, tied together with an intelligencer's heart-string, than depend on so changeable a prince's favor. Fare ²⁶⁰ thee well, Antonio! Since the malice of the world would needs down with thee, it cannot be said yet that any ill happened unto thee, considering thy fall was accompanied with virtue.

DUCHESS. Oh, you render me excellent music!

BOSOLA.

Say you?

DUCHESS. This good one that you speak of is my husband.

265

BOSOLA. Do I not dream? Can this ambitious age

Have so much goodness in 't as to prefer

A man merely for worth, without these shadows

Of wealth and painted honors? Possible?

DUCHESS. I have had three children by him.

BOSOLA.

Fortunate lady!

270

For you have made your private nuptial bed

The humble and fair seminary of peace.

No question but many an unbeneficed scholar⁸

Shall pray for you for this deed, and rejoice

That some preferment in the world can yet

275

Arise from merit. The virgins of your land

That have no dowries shall hope your example

Will raise them to rich husbands. Should you want

4. In haste. Unvalued: invaluable.

5. Confessional-booth.

6. Miss.

7. The Bermudas, unknown in 1504, but very topical a hundred years later, when the play was written.

8. A scholar without an official appointment.

Soldiers, 'twould make the very Turks and Moors
Turn Christians, and serve you for this act. 280

Last, the neglected poets of your time,
In honor of this trophy of a man,
Raised by that curious engine, your white hand,
Shall thank you, in your grave, for 't; and make that
More reverend than all the cabinets⁹ 285

Of living princes. For Antonio,
His fame shall likewise flow from many a pen,
When heralds shall want coats to sell to men.

DUCHESS. As I taste comfort in this friendly speech,
So would I find concealment. 290

BOSOLA. Oh, the secret of my prince,
Which I will wear on th' inside of my heart!

DUCHESS. You shall take charge of all my coin and jewels,
And follow him; for he retires himself
To Ancona.

BOSOLA. So.

DUCHESS. Whither, within few days,
I mean to follow thee. 295

BOSOLA. Let me think:

I would wish your grace to feign a pilgrimage
To our Lady of Loreto,¹ scarce seven leagues
From fair Ancona; so may you depart
Your country with more honor, and your flight
Will seem a princely progress, retaining
Your usual train about you. 300

DUCHESS. Sir, your direction
Shall lead me by the hand.

CARIOLA. In my opinion,
She were better progress to the baths at Lucca,
Or go visit the Spa in Germany; 305
For, if you will believe me, I do not like
This jesting with religion, this feigned
Pilgrimage.

DUCHESS. Thou art a superstitious fool.
Prepare us instantly for our departure. 310
Past sorrows, let us moderately lament them;
For those to come, seek wisely to prevent them.

[Exit DUCHESS, with CARIOLA.]

BOSOLA. A politician is the devil's quilted anvil;
He fashions all sins on him, and the blows
Are never heard: he may work in a lady's chamber, 315
As here for proof. What rests but I reveal
All to my lord? Oh, this base quality
Of intelligencer! Why, every quality i' th' world
Prefers but gain or commendation:

9. Reception-rooms. She will be more honored in her grave than living princes in their courts.

1. The shrine of the Virgin at Loreto was famous throughout Europe.

Now for this act I am certain to be raised,
And men that paint weeds to the life are praised.

320

SCENE 3. Rome.

[Enter CARDINAL, FERDINAND, MALATESTA, PESCARA, SILVIO, DELIO.]

CARDINAL. Must we turn soldier, then?

MALATESTA.

The emperor,²

Hearing your worth that way, ere you attained

This reverend garment, joins you in commission

With the right fortunate soldier the Marquis of Pescara.

And the famous Lannoy.

CARDINAL.

He that had the honor

Of taking the French king prisoner?³

5

MALATESTA.

The same.

Here's a plot drawn for a new fortification

At Naples.

[They talk apart.]

FERDINAND. This great Count Malatesta, I perceive,

Hath got employment?

DELIO.

No employment, my lord;

10

A marginal note in the muster-book, that he is

A voluntary lord.

FERDINAND.

He's no soldier?

DELIO. He has worn gunpowder in 's hollow tooth for the toothache.⁴

SILVIO. He comes to the leaguer⁵ with a full intent

15

To eat fresh beef and garlic, means to stay

Till the scent be gone, and straight return to court.

DELIO. He hath read all the late service as the city chronicle relates it, and keeps two pewterers going, only to express battles in model.⁶

20

SILVIO. Then he'll fight by the book.

DELIO. By the almanac, I think, to choose good days and shun the critical. That's his mistress' scarf.

SILVIO. Yes, he protests he would do much for that taffeta.

DELIO. I think he would run away from a battle, to save it from taking prisoner. 25

SILVIO. He is horribly afraid gunpowder will spoil the perfume on 't.

DELIO. I saw a Dutchman break his pate once for calling him pot-gun;⁷ he made his head have a bore in 't like a musket. 30

2. The Spanish Emperor, Charles V. The transformation of the Cardinal to a soldier (which has no consequence for the action of the play) again recalls Cesare Borgia, who was created a cardinal by his father, Alexander VI, before he resigned the office and became famous, or infamous, as a soldier.

3. Charles de Lannoy, Belgian by origin, did indeed capture Francis I at Pavia, but only in 1525, 21 years after the date of the play's supposed action.

4. Saltpeter was sometimes used against the toothache.

5. Assembly, muster of the troops.

6. He has studied all the recent military history as it's represented on pewter dishes, and employs two craftsmen of his own to keep him up to date.

7. Loudmouth.

SILVIO. I would he had made a touchhole to 't. He is indeed a guarded sumpter-cloth,⁸ only for the remove of the court.

[Enter BOSOLA and speaks to FERDINAND and the CARDINAL.]

PESCARA. Bosola arrived? What should be the business?

Some falling-out amongst the cardinals.

These factions amongst great men, they are like

35

Foxes; when their heads are divided,

They carry fire in their tails, and all the country

About them goes to wrack for 't.⁹

SILVIO.

What's that Bosola?

DELIO. I knew him in Padua—a fantastical scholar, like such who study to know how many knots were in Hercules' club, of what color Achilles' beard was, or whether Hector were not troubled with the toothache. He hath studied himself half blear-eyed to know the true symmetry of Caesar's nose by a shoeing-horn; and this he did to gain the name of a speculative man.¹

45

PESCARA. Mark Prince Ferdinand:

A very salamander lives in 's eye,

To mock the eager violence of fire.²

SILVIO. That Cardinal hath made more bad faces with his oppression than ever Michael Angelo³ made good ones: he lifts up 's nose, like a foul porpoise before a storm.

50

PESCARA. The Lord Ferdinand laughs.

DELIO. Like a deadly cannon that lightens ere it smokes.

PESCARA. These are your true pangs of death,

The pangs of life, that struggle with great statesmen.

55

DELIO. In such a deformed silence witches whisper

Their charms.

CARDINAL. Doth she make religion her riding-hood

To keep her from the sun and tempest?

FERDINAND.

That,

That damns her. Methinks her fault and beauty,

60

Blended together, show like leprosy,

The whiter, the fouler. I make it a question

Whether her beggarly brats were ever christened.

CARDINAL. I will instantly solicit the state of Ancona.

To have them banished.

FERDINAND.

You are for Loreto?

65

I shall not be at your ceremony; fare you well.

Write to the Duke of Malfi, my young nephew

8. He is an empty ceremony, a mere formality. "Touchhole": where the match was applied to set off a cannon.

9. Samson once tied some foxes together by the tail and set them afire to burn down the cornfields of the Philistines (Judges XV).

1. Scholarship was the traditional cause of melancholy, especially when exercised on impossible, useless questions like these.

2. The salamander, or water-lizard, was supposed to be so cold and wet of constitution that it could live in fire; Ferdinand is cold in his rage.

3. Michelangelo Buonarroti, the great Florentine painter and sculptor.

She had by her first husband, and acquaint him
With 's mother's honesty.

BOSOLA.

I will.

FERDINAND.

Antonio!

A slave that only smelled of ink and counters,
And never in 's life looked like a gentleman,
But in the audit-time. Go, go presently,⁴
Draw me out an hundred and fifty of our horse,
And meet me at the fort-bridge.

70

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 4. The Shrine of Our Lady of Loreto.

[Enter TWO PILGRIMS.]

FIRST PILGRIM. I have not seen a goodlier shrine than this;
Yet I have visited many.

SECOND PILGRIM.

The Cardinal of Aragon

Is this day to resign his cardinal's hat:
His sister duchess likewise is arrived
To pay her vow of pilgrimage. I expect
A noble ceremony.

5

FIRST PILGRIM. No question. They come.

[Here the ceremony of the CARDINAL'S installment, in the habit of a soldier, is performed in delivering up his cross, hat, robes, and ring, at the shrine, and investing him with sword, helmet, shield, and spurs; then ANTONIO, the DUCHESS, and their children, having presented themselves at the shrine, are, by a form of banishment in dumb-show expressed towards them by the CARDINAL and the state of Ancona, banished: during all which ceremony, this ditty is sung, to very solumn music, by divers churchmen.]

Arms and honors deck thy story,
To thy fame's eternal glory!
Adverse fortune ever fly thee;
No disastrous fate come nigh thee!

10

I alone will sing thy praises,
Whom to honor virtue raises;
And thy study, that divine is,
Bent to martial discipline.
Lay aside all those robes lie by thee;
Crown thy arts with arms, they'll beautify thee.

15

O worthy of worthiest name, adorned in this manner,
Lead bravely thy forces on under war's warlike banner!
Oh, mayst thou prove fortunate in all martial courses!
Guide thou still by skill in arts and forces!

20

Victory attend thee nigh, whilst fame sings loud thy powers;
Triumphant conquest crown thy head, and blessings pour down showers!⁵ [Exeunt all except the TWO PILGRIMS.]

FIRST PILGRIM. Here's a strange turn of state! Who would have thought

So great a lady would have matched herself
Unto so mean a person? Yet the Cardinal
Bears himself much too cruel.

25

SECOND PILGRIM. They are banished.

FIRST PILGRIM. But I would ask what power hath this state
Of Ancona to determine of a free prince?

SECOND PILGRIM. They are a free state, sir, and her brother showed

30

How that the Pope, fore-hearing of her looseness,
Hath seized into th' protection of the Church
The dukedom which she held as dowager.⁶

FIRST PILGRIM. But by what justice?

SECOND PILGRIM. Sure, I think by none,
Only her brother's instigation.

35

FIRST PILGRIM. What was it with such violence he took Off from her finger?

SECOND PILGRIM. 'Twas her wedding-ring,
Which he vowed shortly he would sacrifice
To his revenge.

FIRST PILGRIM. Alas, Antonio!

If that a man be thrust into a well,
No matter who sets hands to 't, his own weight
Will bring him sooner to th' bottom. Come, let's hence.
Fortune makes this conclusion general,
All things do help th' unhappy man to fall.

40

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 5. Near Loreto.

[Enter DUCHESS, ANTONIO, CHILDREN, CARIOLA, and SERVANTS.]

DUCHESS. Banished Ancona!

ANTONIO. Yes, you see what power
Lightens in great men's breath.

DUCHESS. Is all our train
Shrunk to this poor remainder?

ANTONIO. These poor men,
Which have got little in your service, vow
To take your fortune, but your wiser buntings,⁷
Now they are fledged, are gone.

5

DUCHESS. They have done wisely.

5. This song is not very suitable to the scene, and Webster, in the edition of 1623, denied writing it.

6. The Duchess held Malfi only as guardian for her son, the still youthful Duke.

7. Migratory birds; "take": accept.

This puts me in mind of death: physicians thus,
With their hands full of money, use to give o'er
Their patients.

ANTONIO. Right⁸ the fashion of the world:

From decayed fortunes every flatterer shrinks;
Men cease to build where the foundation sinks.

10

DUCHESS. I had a very strange dream tonight.

ANTONIO. What was 't?

DUCHESS. Methought I wore my coronet of state,
And on a sudden all the diamonds
Were changed to pearls.

ANTONIO. My interpretation

15

Is, you'll weep shortly, for to me the pearls
Do signify your tears.

DUCHESS. The birds that live

I' th' field on the wild benefit of nature
Live happier than we; for they may choose their mates,
And carol their sweet pleasures to the spring.

20

[Enter BOSOLA with a letter.]

BOSOLA. You are happily o'erta'en.

DUCHESS. From my brother?

BOSOLA. Yes, from the Lord Ferdinand your brother
All love and safety.

DUCHESS. Thou dost blanch⁹ mischief,

Wouldst make it white. See, see, like to calm weather
At sea before a tempest, false hearts speak fair
To those they intend most mischief.

25

"Send Antonio to me; I want his head in a business."
A politic equivocation!

He doth not want your counsel, but your head;
That is, he cannot sleep till you be dead.

30

And here's another pitfall that's strewed o'er
With roses: mark it, 'tis a cunning one:

"I stand engaged for your husband for several debts at Naples: let not that trouble him; I had rather have his heart than his money."

35

And I believe so too.

BOSOLA. What do you believe?

DUCHESS. That he so much distrusts my husband's love,
He will by no means believe his heart is with him
Until he see it: the devil is not cunning
Enough to circumvent us in riddles.

40

BOSOLA. Will you reject that noble and free league
Of amity and love which I present you?

DUCHESS. Their league is like that of some politic kings,
Only to make themselves of strength and power
To be our after-ruin: tell them so.

45

BOSOLA. And what from you?

ANTONIO. Thus tell him: I will not come.

8. Exactly.

9. Whitewash, cover up.

BOSOLA. And what of this? [Pointing to the letter.]

ANTONIO. My brothers have dispersed

Blood-hounds abroad; which till I hear are muzzled,
No truce, though hatched with ne'er such politic skill,
Is safe, that hangs upon our enemies' will.
I'll not come at them.

50

BOSOLA. This proclaims your breeding:

Every small thing draws a base mind to fear,
As the adamant draws iron.¹ Fare you well, sir;
You shall shortly hear from 's.

[Exit.]

DUCHESS. I suspect some ambush;

Therefore, by all my love I do conjure you
To take your eldest son, and fly towards Milan.
Let us not venture all this poor remainder
In one unlucky bottom.²

55

ANTONIO. You counsel safely.

Best of my life, farewell. Since we must part,
Heaven hath a hand in 't, but no otherwise
Than as some curious artist³ takes in sunder
A clock or watch, when it is out of frame,
To bring 't in better order.

60

DUCHESS. I know not

Which is best, to see you dead, or part with you.
Farewell, boy.

65

Thou art happy that thou hast not understanding
To know thy misery; for all our wit
And reading brings us to a truer sense
Of sorrow. In the eternal church, sir,
I do hope we shall not part thus.

ANTONIO. Oh, be of comfort!

70

Make patience a noble fortitude,
And think not how unkindly we are used:
Man, like to cassia, is proved best being bruised.⁴

DUCHESS. Must I, like to a slave-born Russian,

Account it praise to suffer tyranny?
And yet, O heaven, thy heavy hand is in 't!
I have seen my little boy oft scourge his top,⁵
And compared myself to 't: naught made me e'er
Go right but heaven's scourge-stick.

75

ANTONIO. Do not weep:

Heaven fashioned us of nothing, and we strive
To bring ourselves to nothing. Farewell, Cariola,
And thy sweet armful. If I do never see thee more,
Be a good mother to your little ones,
And save them from the tiger. Fare you well.

80

1. As the loadstone draws iron.

2. The metaphor is mercantile; let's not load all our cargo in one ship ("bottom").

3. Clever craftsman; "out of frame": not working.

4. Man, like cinnamon-bark, is most aromatic (virtuous) when pressed (oppressed).

5. Boys used to make tops spin by whipping them.

DUCHESS. Let me look upon you once more, for that speech
 Came from a dying father. Your kiss is colder
 Than that I have seen an holy anchorite
 Give to a dead man's skull. 85

ANTONIO. My heart is turned to a heavy lump of lead,
 With which I sound my danger. Fare you well. 90
[Exeunt ANTONIO and his son.]

DUCHESS. My laurel is all withered.

CARIOLA. Look, madam, what a troop of arméd men
 Make toward us.

DUCHESS. Oh, they are very welcome:
 When Fortune's wheel⁶ is over-charged with princes,
 The weight makes it move swift: I would have my ruin 95
 Be sudden.

[Enter BOSOLA vizarded,⁷ with a guard.]

I am your adventure,⁸ am I not?

BOSOLA. You are. You must see your husband no more.

DUCHESS. What devil art thou that counterfeits heaven's thunder?

BOSOLA. Is that terrible? I would have you tell me whether
 Is that note worse that frights the silly birds 100
 Out of the corn, or that which doth allure them
 To the nets? You have hearkened to the last too much.

DUCHESS. Oh, misery! Like to a rusty o'ercharged cannon,
 Shall I never fly in pieces?—Come, to what prison?

BOSOLA. To none.

DUCHESS. Whither, then?

BOSOLA. To your palace.

DUCHESS. I have heard 105

That Charon's boat serves to convey all o'er⁹

The dismal lake, but brings none back again.

BOSOLA. Your brothers mean you safety and pity.

DUCHESS. Pity!

With such a pity men preserve alive

Pheasants and quails, when they are not fat enough 110

To be eaten.

BOSOLA. These are your children?

DUCHESS. Yes.

BOSOLA. Can they prattle?

DUCHESS. No.

But I intend, since they were born accursed,

Curses shall be their first language.

BOSOLA. Fie, madam!

Forget this base, low fellow—

DUCHESS. Were I a man, 115

6. The wheel of fortune is an ancient emblem of mutability; men have their fixed positions on it, and rise or fall as it turns.

7. Bosola wears a mask.

8. I.e., I am what you're looking for, am I not?

9. In classical mythology, Charon transports the souls of the dead across the river Styx to Hades.

I'd beat that counterfeit face into thy other.¹

BOSOLA. One of no birth.²

DUCHESS. Say that he was born mean,

Man is most happy when 's own actions

Be arguments and examples of his virtue.

BOSOLA. A barren, beggarly virtue!

120

DUCHESS. I prithee, who is greatest? Can you tell?

Sad tales befit my woe: I'll tell you one.

A salmon, as she swam unto the sea,

Met with a dog-fish, who encounters her

With this rough language: "Why art thou so bold

125

To mix thyself with our high state of floods,

Being no eminent courtier, but one

That for the calmest and fresh time o' the year

Dost live in shallow rivers, rank'st thyself

With silly smelts and shrimps? And darest thou

130

Pass by our dog-ship without reverence?"

"Oh!" quoth the salmon, "sister, be at peace:

Thank Jupiter we both have passed the net!

Our value never can be truly known,

Till in the fisher's basket we be shown:

135

I' th' market then my price may be the higher,

Even when I am nearest to the cook and fire."

So to great men the moral may be stretchéd;

Men oft are valued high, when they're most wretched.

But come, whither you please. I am armed 'gainst misery;

140

Bent to all sways of the oppressor's will:

There's no deep valley but near some great hill. [Exeunt.]

Act IV

SCENE 1. Amalfi.

[Enter FERDINAND and BOSOLA.]

FERDINAND. How doth our sister duchess bear herself

In her imprisonment?

BOSOLA. Nobly. I'll describe her.

She's sad as one long used to 't, and she seems

Rather to welcome the end of misery

Than shun it; a behavior so noble

5

As gives a majesty to adversity:

You may discern the shape of loveliness

More perfect in her tears than in her smiles;

She will muse for hours together; and her silence,

Methinks, expresseth more than if she spake.

10

FERDINAND. Her melancholy seems to be fortified

With a strange disdain.

1. I.e., I'd push your mask down your throat. 2. Of low rank by birth.

BOSOLA. 'Tis so; and this restraint,
Like English mastiffs that grow fierce with tying,
Makes her too passionately apprehend
Those pleasures she's kept from.

FERDINAND. Curse upon her!
I will no longer study in the book
Of another's heart. Inform her what I told you. [Exit.]
[Enter DUCHESS.]

BOSOLA. All comfort to your grace!

DUCHESS. I will have none.
Pray thee, why dost thou wrap thy poisoned pills
In gold and sugar? 20

BOSOLA. Your elder brother, the Lord Ferdinand,
Is come to visit you, and sends you word,
'Cause once he rashly made a solemn vow
Never to see you more, he comes i' th' night,
And prays you gently neither torch nor taper 25
Shine in your chamber. He will kiss your hand
And reconcile himself, but for his vow
He dares not see you.

DUCHESS. At his pleasure. Take hence the lights.
He's come.

[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND. Where are you?

DUCHESS. Here, sir.

FERDINAND. This darkness suits you well. 30

DUCHESS. I would ask you pardon.

FERDINAND. You have it; for I account it
The honorabl'st revenge, where I may kill,
To pardon. Where are your cubs?

DUCHESS. Whom?

FERDINAND. Call them your children;
For though our national law distinguish bastards
From true legitimate issue, compassionate nature 35
Makes them all equal.

DUCHESS. Do you visit me for this?

You violate a sacrament o' th' Church
Shall make you howl in hell for 't.

FERDINAND. It had been well

Could you have lived thus always; for, indeed,
You were too much i' th' light—but no more— 40
I come to seal my peace with you. Here's a hand

[Gives her a dead man's hand.]

To which you have vowed much love; the ring upon 't
You gave.

DUCHESS. I affectionately kiss it.

FERDINAND. Pray, do, and bury the print of it in your heart.

I will leave this ring with you for a love-token, 45
And the hand as sure as the ring; and do not doubt
But you shall have the heart, too. When you need a friend,

Send it to him that owed³ it; you shall see
Whether he can aid you.

DUCHESS. You are very cold;
I fear you are not well after your travel. 50
Ha! Lights! Oh, horrible!

FERDINAND. Let her have lights enough. [Exit.]

DUCHESS. What witchcraft doth he practice, that he hath left
A dead man's hand here?
[Here is discovered, behind a traverse,⁴ the artificial figures of Antonio and his children, appearing as if they were dead.]

BOSOLA. Look you, here's the piece from which 'twas ta'en.
He doth present you this sad spectacle, 55
That, now you know directly they are dead,
Hereafter you may wisely cease to grieve
For that which cannot be recovered.

DUCHESS. There is not between heaven and earth one wish
I stay for after this: it wastes⁵ me more 60
Than were't my picture, fashioned out of wax,
Stuck with a magical needle, and then buried
In some foul dunghill; and yond's an excellent property⁶
For a tyrant, which I would account mercy.

BOSOLA. What's that?

DUCHESS. If they would bind me to that lifeless trunk 65
And let me freeze to death.

BOSOLA. Come, you must live.

DUCHESS. That's the greatest torture souls feel in hell,
In hell, that they must live, and cannot die.
Portia,⁷ I'll new-kindle thy coals again,
And revive the rare and almost dead example 70
Of a loving wife.

BOSOLA. Oh, fie! Despair? Remember
You are a Christian.

DUCHESS. The Church enjoins fasting:
I'll starve myself to death.

BOSOLA. Leave this vain sorrow.
Things being at the worst begin to mend: the bee
When he hath shot his sting into your hand, may then 75
Play with your eyelid.

DUCHESS. Good comfortable fellow,
Persuade a wretch that's broke upon the wheel
To have all his bones new set; entreat him live
To be executed again. Who must dispatch me?
I account this world a tedious theater, 80

3. Owned.

4. A translucent screen or curtain.

5. Consumes, as by secret disease; witches were supposed to be able to "waste" their enemies by making wax images and tormenting them as indicated below.

6. There's an excellent scheme.

7. Portia, the wife of Brutus, committed suicide by swallowing hot coals.

For I do play a part in 't 'gainst my will.

BOSOLA. Come, be of comfort; I will save your life.

DUCHESS. Indeed,

I have not leisure to tend so small a business.

BOSOLA. Now, by my life, I pity you.

DUCHESS. Thou art a fool, then,

To waste thy pity on a thing so wretched

As cannot pity itself. I am full of daggers.

Puff, let me blow these vipers from me.

[Enter SERVANT.]

What are you?

SERVANT. One that wishes you long life.

DUCHESS. I would thou wert hanged for the horrible curse

Thou hast given me. I shall shortly grow one

Of the miracles of pity. I'll go pray—

No, I'll go curse.

BOSOLA. Oh, fie!

DUCHESS. I could curse the stars—

BOSOLA. Oh, fearful!

DUCHESS. And those three smiling seasons of the year

Into a Russian winter, nay, the world

To its first chaos.⁸

BOSOLA. Look you, the stars shine still.

DUCHESS. Oh, but you must Remember, my curse hath a great way to go.

Plagues, that make lanes through largest families,

Consume them!

BOSOLA. Fie, lady!

DUCHESS. Let them, like tyrants,

Never be remembered but for the ill they have done;

Let all the zealous prayers of mortified

Churchmen forget them!

BOSOLA. Oh, uncharitable!

DUCHESS. Let Heaven a little while cease crowning martyrs

To punish them!

Go, howl them this, and say, I long to bleed:

It is some mercy when men kill with speed.

[Exeunt DUCHESS and SERVANT.]

[Re-enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND. Excellent, as I would wish; she's plagued in art:

These presentations are but framed in wax

By the curious master in that quality,

Vincentio Lauriola,⁹ and she takes them

For true substantial bodies.

BOSOLA. Why do you do this?

FERDINAND. To bring her to despair.

8. A Russian winter would last all year long.

9. The art of wax modeling was common enough, but the name of the artist seems to be imaginary.

BOSOLA. 'Faith, end here;
And go no farther in your cruelty. 115
Send her a penitential garment to put on Next to her delicate skin, and furnish her
With beads and prayer-books.

FERDINAND. Damn her! That body of hers,
While that my blood ran pure in 't, was more worth
Than that which thou wouldst comfort, called a soul. 120
I will send her masks of common courtesans,
Have her meat served up by bawds and ruffians,
And, 'cause she'll needs be mad, I am resolved
To remove forth the common hospital
All the mad-folk, and place them near her lodging; 125
There let them practice together, sing and dance,
And act their gambols to the full o' th' moon:
If she can sleep the better for it, let her.
Your work is almost ended.

BOSOLA. Must I see her again?

FERDINAND. Yes.

BOSOLA. Never.

FERDINAND. You must. 130

BOSOLA. Never in mine own shape;
That's forfeited by my intelligence¹
And this last cruel lie. When you send me next,
The business shall be comfort.

FERDINAND. Very likely.
Thy pity is nothing of kin to thee.² Antonio 135
Lurks about Milan: thou shalt shortly thither
To feed a fire as great as my revenge,
Which ne'er will slack till it have spent his fuel.
Intemperate agues make physicians cruel. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter DUCHESS and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS. What hideous noise was that?

CARIOLA. 'Tis the wild consort
Of madmen, lady, which your tyrant brother
Hath placed about your lodging. This tyranny,
I think, was never practiced till this hour.

DUCHESS. Indeed, I thank him. Nothing but noise and folly 5
Can keep me in my right wits, whereas reason
And silence make me stark mad. Sit down;
Discourse to me some dismal tragedy.

CARIOLA. Oh, 'twill increase your melancholy.

DUCHESS. Thou are deceived:

To hear of greater grief would lessen mine. 10

1. I.e., I can't do that because she knows now I've played the spy on her. 2. I.e., pity doesn't suit you very well.

This is a prison?

CAROLA. Yes, but you shall live
To shake this durance off.

DUCHESS. Thou art a fool:
The robin-redbreast and the nightingale
Never live long in cages.

CAROLA. Pray, dry your eyes.

What think you of, madam?

DUCHESS. Of nothing; when I muse thus, 15
I sleep.

CAROLA. Like a madman, with your eyes open?

DUCHESS. Dost thou think we shall know one another in th' other world?

CAROLA. Yes, out of question.

DUCHESS. Oh, that it were possible

We might but hold some two days' conference
With the dead! From them I should learn somewhat, I am sure, 20

I never shall know here. I'll tell thee a miracle;
I am not mad yet, to my cause of sorrow:
Th' heaven o'er my head seems made of molten brass,
The earth of flaming sulphur, yet I am not mad.

I am acquainted with sad misery 25
As the tanned galley-slave is with his oar;
Necessity makes me suffer constantly,
And custom makes it easy. Who do I look like now?

CAROLA. Like to your picture in the gallery,
A deal of life in show, but none in practice, 30
Or rather like some reverend monument
Whose ruins are even pitied.

DUCHESS. Very proper.
And Fortune seems only to have her eyesight
To behold my tragedy.
How now! What noise is that?

[Enter SERVANT.]

SERVANT. I am come to tell you 35

Your brother hath intended you some sport.
A great physician, when the Pope was sick
Of a deep melancholy, presented him
With several sorts of madmen, which wild object
Being full of change and sport, forced him to laugh, 40
And so the imposthume³ broke. The self-same cure
The duke intends on you.

DUCHESS. Let them come in.

SERVANT. There's a mad lawyer; and a secular priest;

A doctor that hath forfeited his wits

By jealousy; an astrologian

That in his works said such a day o' the' month 45

Should be the day of doom, and, failing of 't,

Ran mad; an English tailor crazed i' th' brain

With the study of new fashions; a gentleman-usher⁴
 Quite beside himself with care to keep in mind 50
 The number of his lady's salutations
 Or 'How do you's' she employed him in each morning;
 A farmer, too, an excellent knave in grain,
 Mad 'cause he was hindered transportation:
 And let one broker that's mad loose to these, 55
 You'd think the devil were among them.⁵

DUCHESS. Sit, Cariola. Let them loose when you please,
 For I am chained to endure all your tyranny.

[Enter MADMEN.]

[Here by a MADMAN this Song is sung to a dismal kind of music.]

Oh, let us howl some heavy note,
 Some deadly dogged howl, 60
 Sounding as from the threatening throat
 Of beasts and fatal fowl!
 As ravens, screech-owls, bulls, and bears,
 We'll bell, and bawl our parts,
 Till irksome noise have cloyed your ears 65
 And corrosived your hearts.
 At last, whenas our choir wants breath,
 Our bodies being blest,
 We'll sing, like swans, to welcome death,
 And die in love and rest. 70

FIRST MADMAN. Doom's-day not come yet? I'll draw it nearer by a perspective,⁶ or make a glass that shall set all the world on fire upon an instant. I cannot sleep; my pillow is stuffed with a litter of porcupines.

SECOND MADMAN. Hell is a mere glass-house, where the devils are 75 continually blowing up women's souls on hollow irons, and the fire never goes out.

THIRD MADMAN. I will lie with every woman in my parish the tenth night; I will tithe them over like haycocks.

FOURTH MADMAN. Shall my pothecary out-go me because I am a 80 cuckold? I have found out his roguery; he makes alum of his wife's urine, and sells it to Puritans that have sore throats with overstraining.

FIRST MADMAN. I have skill in heraldry.

SECOND MADMAN. Hast? 85

FIRST MADMAN. You do give for your crest a woodcock's head with the brains picked out on 't; you are a very ancient gentleman.

THIRD MADMAN. Greek is turned Turk: we are only to be saved by the Helvetian translation.⁷ 90

4. Doorkeeper.

5. All the madmen have lost their wits in the pursuit of their trades; lead them to a broker, who might get them back to work again, and they'll be madder than ever.

6. Telescope.

7. The Geneva Bible; but how it would help with the Greeks and Turks is clear only to the lunatic.

FIRST MADMAN. Come on, sir, I will lay the law to you.

SECOND MADMAN. Oh, rather lay a corrosive: the law will eat to the bone.

THIRD MADMAN. He that drinks but to satisfy nature is damned.

FOURTH MADMAN. If I had my glass⁸ here, I would show a sight 95 should make all the women here call me mad doctor.

FIRST MADMAN. What's he? A rope-maker?

SECOND MADMAN. No, no, no, a snuffing knave that, while he shows the toms, will have his hand in a wench's placket.

THIRD MADMAN. Woe to the caroché⁹ that brought home my 100 wife from the masque at three o'clock in the morning! It had a large feather-bed in it.

FOURTH MADMAN. I have pared the devil's nails forty times, roasted them in raven's eggs, and cured agues with them.

THIRD MADMAN. Get me three hundred milchbats, to make pos- 105 sets to procure sleep.¹

FOURTH MADMAN. All the college may throw their caps at me: I have made a soap boiler costive; it was my masterpiece.

[Here the dance, consisting of eight MADMEN, with music answerable thereunto; after which BOSOLA, like an old man, enters.]

DUCHESS. Is he mad too?

SERVANT.

Pray, question him. I'll leave you.

[Exeunt SERVANT and MADMEN.]

BOSOLA. I am come to make thy tomb.

DUCHESS.

Ha! My tomb?

110

Thou speak'st as if I lay-upon my deathbed,

Gasping for breath. Dost thou perceive me sick?

BOSOLA. Yes, and the more dangerously, since thy sickness
Is insensible.²

DUCHESS. Thou art not mad, sure. Dost know me?

115

BOSOLA. Yes.

DUCHESS.

Who am I?

BOSOLA. Thou art a box of worm-seed, at best but a salvatory of green mummy.³ What's this flesh? A little crudded⁴ milk, fantastical puff-paste. Our bodies are weaker than those paper-prisons boys use to keep flies in, more contemptible, since ours 120 is to preserve earthworms. Didst thou ever see a lark in a cage? Such is the soul in the body: this world is like her little turf of grass, and the heaven o'er our heads, like her looking-glass, only gives us a miserable knowledge of the small compass of our prison.

125

DUCHESS. Am not I thy duchess?

BOSOLA. Thou art some great woman, sure, for riot⁵ begins to sit

8. Looking-glass.

9. Carriage.

1. It is a mad idea indeed that toddies ("possets") made of bat's milk would put people to sleep.

2. Imperceptible.

3. "Worm-seed" is a matter whose ultimate end is the generation of worms. "A salvatory of green mummy": the substance of mummified bodies was considered medicinal. The living body is a box ("salvatory") of such medicine, only not yet ready for use.

4. Curdled.

5. Debauchery.

on thy forehead, clad in gray hairs, twenty years sooner than on a merry milkmaid's. Thou sleep'st worse than if a mouse should be forced to take up her lodging in a cat's ear: a little 130 infant that breeds its teeth,⁶ should it lie with thee, would cry out, as if thou wert the more unquiet bedfellow.

DUCHESS. I am Duchess of Malfi still.

BOSOLA. That makes thy sleep so broken:

Glories, like glow-worms, afar off shine bright, 135

But, looked to near, have neither heat nor light.

DUCHESS. Thou art very plain.

BOSOLA. My trade is to flatter the dead, not the living; I am a tomb-maker.

DUCHESS. And thou com'st to make my tomb? 140

BOSOLA. Yes.

DUCHESS. Let me be a little merry. Of what stuff wilt thou make it?

BOSOLA. Nay, resolve me first, of what fashion?

DUCHESS. Why, do we grow fantastical in our deathbed? Do we 145 affect fashion in the grave?

BOSOLA. Most ambitiously. Princes' images on their tombs do not lie, as they were wont, seeming to pray up to heaven, but with their hands under their cheeks, as if they died of the toothache. They are not carved with their eyes fixed upon the stars, 150 but as their minds were wholly bent upon the world, the self-same way they seem to turn their faces.

DUCHESS. Let me know fully therefore the effect

Of this thy dismal preparation,

This talk fit for a charnel.

BOSOLA. Now I shall. 155

[Enter EXECUTIONERS, with a coffin, cords, and a bell.]

Here is a present from your princely brothers;

And may it arrive welcome, for it brings

Last benefit, last sorrow.

DUCHESS. Let me see it:

I have so much obedience in my blood,

I wish it in their veins to do them good. 160

BOSOLA. This is your last presence-chamber.⁷

CARIOLA. O my sweet lady!

DUCHESS. Peace; it affrights not me.

BOSOLA. I am the common bellman,

That usually is sent to condemned persons

The night before they suffer.

DUCHESS. Even now

Thou said'st thou wast a tomb-maker.

BOSOLA. 'Twas to bring you 165

By degrees to mortification.⁸ Listen.

6. A teething infant.

7. The room in which a person of quality (duchess or prince) received courtiers and diplomats.

8. Repentance, but also death and decomposition.

- Hark, now every thing is still
 The screech-owl and the whistler⁹ shrill
 Call upon our dame aloud,
 And bid her quickly don her shroud! 170
 Much you had of land and rent:
 Your length in clay's now competent:¹
 A long war disturbed your mind;
 Here your perfect peace is signed.
 Of what is 't fools make such vain keeping? 175
 Sin their conception, their birth weeping,
 Their life a general mist of error,
 Their death a hideous storm of terror.
 Strew your hair with powders sweet,
 Don clean linen, bathe your feet, 180
 And (the foul fiend more to check)
 A crucifix let bless your neck:
 'Tis now full tide 'tween night and day;
 End your groan, and come away.
- CARIOLA. Hence, villains, tyrants, murderers! Alas! 185
 What will you do with my lady? Call for help.
 DUCHESS. To whom? To our next neighbors? They are madfolks.
 BOSOLA. Remove that noise.
 DUCHESS. Farewell, Cariola.
 In my last will I have not much to give:
 A many hungry guests have fed upon me; 190
 Thine will be a poor reversion.
- CARIOLA. I will die with her.
 DUCHESS. I pray thee, look thou giv'st my little boy
 Some syrup for his cold, and let the girl
 Say her prayers ere she sleep.
 [CARIOLA is forced out by the EXECUTIONERS.]
 Now what you please.
- What death?
 BOSOLA. Strangling; 195
 Here are your executioners.
- DUCHESS. I forgive them:
 The apoplexy, catarrh, or cough o' th' lungs,
 Would do as much as they do.
 BOSOLA. Doth not death fright you?
 DUCHESS. Who would be afraid on 't,
 Knowing to meet such excellent company 200
 In th' other world?
- BOSOLA. Yet, methinks,
 The manner of your death should much afflict you:
 This cord should terrify you.
 DUCHESS. Not a whit.
 What would it pleasure me to have my throat cut

9. A bird premonitory of death.

1. Sufficient.

- With diamonds? Or to be smothered
 With cassia?² Or to be shot to death with pearls?
 I know death hath ten thousand several doors
 For men to take their exits, and 'tis found
 They go on such strange geometrical hinges,
 You may open them both ways.—Any way, for heaven sake,
 So I were out of your whispering. Tell my brothers
 That I perceive death, now I am well awake,
 Best gift is they can give or I can take.
 I would fain put off my last woman's fault,
 I'd not be tedious to you. 205
- EXECUTIONER. We are ready. 215
- DUCHESS. Dispose my breath how please you, but my body
 Bestow upon my women, will you?
- EXECUTIONER. Yes.
- DUCHESS. Pull, and pull strongly, for your able strength
 Must pull down heaven upon me—
 Yet stay; heaven-gates are not so highly arched
 As princes' palaces; they that enter there
 Must go upon their knees [Kneels]. Come, violent death.
 Serve for mandragora³ to make me sleep!
 Go tell my brothers, when I am laid out,
 They then may feed in quiet. [They strangle her.] 225
- BOSOLA. Where's the waiting woman? Fetch her: some other
 Strangle the children.
 [Exeunt EXECUTIONERS, some of whom return with CARIOLA.]
- Look you, there sleeps your mistress.
- CARIOLA. Oh, you are damned
 Perpetually for this! My turn is next.
 Is 't not so ordered?
- BOSOLA. Yes, and I am glad
 You are so well prepared for 't. 230
- CARIOLA. You are deceived, Sir,
 I am not prepared for 't, I will not die;
 I will first come to my answer, and know
 How I have offended.
- BOSOLA. Come, dispatch her.
 You kept her counsel; now you shall keep ours. 235
- CARIOLA. I will not die, I must not; I am contracted
 To a young gentleman.
- EXECUTIONER. Here's your wedding-ring.
- CARIOLA. Let me but speak with the duke; I'll discover Treason to his person.
- BOSOLA. Delays! Throttle her.
- EXECUTIONER. She bites and scratches.
- CARIOLA. If you kill me now,
 I am damned; I have not been at confession 240

2. Cinnamon.

3. The word is used loosely for a stupefying drug.

This two years.

BOSOLA. [to EXECUTIONERS] When!

CARIOLA.

I am quick with child.

BOSOLA.

Why, then,

Your credit's saved.⁴

[They strangle CARIOLA.]

Bear her into th' next room;

Let this lie still.

[Exeunt the EXECUTIONERS with the body of CARIOLA.]

[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND. Is she dead?

BOSOLA.

She is what

245

You'd have her. But here begin your pity.

[Shows the children strangled.]

Alas, how have these offended?

FERDINAND.

The death

Of young wolves is never to be pitied.

BOSOLA.

Fix

Your eye here.

FERDINAND. Constantly.

BOSOLA.

Do you not weep?

Other sins only speak; murder shrieks out:

250

The element of water moistens the earth,

But blood flies upwards and bedews the heavens.

FERDINAND. Cover her face; mine eyes dazzle: she died young.

BOSOLA. I think not so; her infelicity

Seemed to have years too many.

FERDINAND.

She and I were twins;

255

And should I die this instant, I had lived

Her time to a minute.

BOSOLA.

It seems she was born first:

You have bloodily approved⁵ the ancient truth,

That kindred commonly do worse agree

Than remote strangers.

FERDINAND.

Let me see her face

260

Again. Why didst not thou pity her? What

An excellent honest man mightst thou have been,

If thou hadst borne her to some sanctuary!

Or, bold in a good cause, opposed thyself,

With thy advanced sword above thy head,

265

Between her innocence and my revenge!

I bade thee, when I was distracted of my wits,

Go kill my dearest friend, and thou hast done 't.

For let me but examine well the cause:

What was the meanness of her match to me?

270

Only I must confess I had a hope,

Had she continued widow, to have gained

An infinite mass of treasure by her death:

And that was the main cause, her marriage,

4. Your reputation will now be safe.

5. Given proof of.

That drew a stream of gall quite through my heart. 275
 For thee, as we observe in tragedies
 That a good actor many times is cursed
 For playing a villain's part, I hate thee for 't,
 And, for my sake, say thou hast done much ill well.
 BOSOLA. Let me quicken your memory, for I perceive 280
 You are falling into ingratitude: I challenge
 The reward due to my service.
 FERDINAND. I'll tell thee
 What I'll give thee.
 BOSOLA. Do.
 FERDINAND. I'll give thee a pardon
 For this murder.
 BOSOLA. Ha!
 FERDINAND. Yes, and 'tis
 The largest bounty I can study to do thee. 285
 By what authority didst thou execute
 This bloody sentence?
 BOSOLA. By yours.
 FERDINAND. Mine! Was I her judge?
 Did any ceremonial form of law
 Doom her to not-being? Did a complete jury
 Deliver her conviction up i' th' court? 290
 Where shalt thou find this judgment registered,
 Unless in hell? See, like a bloody fool,
 'Thou'st forfeited thy life, and thou shalt die for 't.
 BOSOLA. The office of justice is perverted quite
 When one thief hangs another. Who shall dare 295
 To reveal this?
 FERDINAND. Oh, I'll tell thee;
 The wolf shall find her grave, and scrape it up,
 Not to devour the corpse, but to discover
 The horrid murder.
 BOSOLA. You, not I, shall quake for 't.
 FERDINAND. Leave me.
 BOSOLA. I will first receive my pension. 300
 FERDINAND. You are a villain.
 BOSOLA. When your ingratitude
 Is judge, I am so.
 FERDINAND. Oh, horror, that not the fear
 Of Him which binds the devils can prescribe man obedience! Never look upon me more.
 BOSOLA. Why, fare thee well. 305
 Your brother and yourself are worthy men:
 You have a pair of hearts are hollow graves,
 Rotten, and rotting others; and your vengeance,
 Like two chained bullets, still goes arm in arm.
 You may be brothers, for treason, like the plague, 310
 Doth take much in a blood.⁶ I stand like one

6. Treason and plague run in certain families.

That long hath ta'en a sweet and golden dream.

I am angry with myself, now that I wake.

FERDINAND. Get thee into some unknown part o' th' world,

That I may never see thee.

BOSOLA.

Let me know

315

Wherefore I should be thus neglected. Sir,

I served your tyranny, and rather strove

To satisfy yourself than all the world,

And though I loathed the evil, yet I loved

You that did counsel it; and rather sought

320

To appear a true servant than an honest man.

FERDINAND. I'll go hunt the badger by owl-light:

'Tis a deed of darkness.

[Exit.]

BOSOLA. He's much distracted. Off, my painted honor!

While with vain hopes our faculties we tire,

325

We seem to sweat in ice and freeze in fire.

What would I do, were this to do again?

I would not change my peace of conscience

For all the wealth of Europe.—She stirs; here's life.

Return, fair soul, from darkness, and lead mine

330

Out of this sensible⁷ hell. She's warm, she breathes.

Upon thy pale lips I will melt my heart,

To store them with fresh color.—Who's there!

Some cordial⁸ drink!—Alas! I dare not call:

So pity would destroy pity.—Her eye opes,

335

And heaven in it seems to ope, that late was shut,

To take me up to mercy.

DUCHESS. Antonio!

BOSOLA.

Yes, madam, he is living;

The dead bodies you saw were but feigned statues:

He's reconciled to your brothers: the Pope hath wrought

340

The atonement.

DUCHESS.

Mercy!

[She dies.]

BOSOLA. Oh, she's gone again! There the cords of life broke.

Oh, sacred innocence, that sweetly sleeps

On turtles'⁹ feathers, whilst a guilty conscience

Is a black register wherein is writ

345

All our good deeds and bad, a perspective¹

That shows us hell! That we cannot be suffered

To do good when we have a mind to it!

This is manly sorrow; these tears, I am very certain,

Never grew in my mother's milk. My estate

350

Is sunk below the degree of fear. Where were

These penitent fountains while she was living?

Oh, they were frozen up! Here is a sight

As direful to my soul as is the sword

Unto a wretch hath slain his father. Come, I'll bear thee

355

Hence, and execute thy last will; that's deliver

7. Material, tangible.

couple.

8. Restorative.

1. Picture.

9. Turtle doves, emblems of a loving

Thy body to the reverend dispose²
 Of some good women: that the cruel tyrant
 Shall not deny me. Then I'll post to Milan,
 Where somewhat I will speedily enact
 Worth my dejection. 360
[Exit with the body.]

Act V

SCENE 1. A Public Place in Milan.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

ANTONIO. What think you of my hope of reconcilment
 To the Aragonian brethren?

DELIO. I misdoubt it;
 For though they have sent their letters of safe-conduct
 For your repair to Milan, they appear
 But nets to entrap you. The Marquis of Pescara,
 Under whom you hold certain land in cheat,³ 5
 Much 'gainst his noble nature hath been moved
 To seize those lands, and some of his dependents
 Are at this instant making it their suit
 To be invested in your revenues.⁴ 10
 I cannot think they mean well to your life
 That do deprive you of your means of life,
 Your living.

ANTONIO. You are still an heretic
 To any safety I can shape myself.⁵

DELIO. Here comes the marquis. I will make myself
 Petitioner for some part of your land,
 To know whither it is flying. 15

ANTONIO. I pray do. [Withdraws.]
[Enter PESCARA.]

DELIO. Sir, I have a suit to you.

PESCARA. To me?

DELIO. An easy one.
 There is the citadel of Saint Bennet,⁶ 20
 With some demesnes, of late in the possession
 Of Antonio Bologna; please you bestow them on me.

PESCARA. You are my friend, but this is such a suit,
 Nor fit for me to give, nor you to take.

DELIO. No, sir?

PESCARA. I will give you ample reason for 't
 Soon in private. Here's the Cardinal's mistress. 25
[Enter JULIA.]

JULIA. My lord, I am grown your poor petitioner,
 And should be an ill beggar, had I not

2. Disposition.

3. Escheat, in default of legal heirs.

4. I.e., to be given your rents.

5. I.e., you still don't give me any hope of safety that I can believe in. "Heretic": unbeliever.

6. Saint Benedict; "demesnes": associated estates.

A great man's letter here, the Cardinal's,
To court you in my favor. [Gives a letter.]

PESCARA. He entreats for you 30
The citadel of Saint Bennet, that belonged
To the banished Bologna.

JULIA. Yes.

PESCARA. I could not Have thought of a friend I could rather pleasure with it;
'Tis yours.

JULIA. Sir, I thank you; and he shall know 35
How doubly I am engaged both in your gift,
And speediness of giving, which makes your grant
The greater. [Exit.]

ANTONIO. [aside] How they fortify themselves
With my ruin!

DELIO. Sir, I am little bound to you.

PESCARA. Why?

DELIO. Because you denied this suit to me, and gave 't
To such a creature.

PESCARA. Do you know what it was? 40

It was Antonio's land, not forfeited
By course of law, but ravished from his throat
By the Cardinal's entreaty. It were not fit
I should bestow so main a piece of wrong
Upon my friend; 'tis a gratification 45

Only due to a strumpet, for it is injustice.
Shall I sprinkle the pure blood of innocents
To make those followers I call my friends
Look ruddier upon me? I am glad
This land, ta'en from the owner by such wrong, 50
Returns again unto so foul an use

As salary for his lust. Learn, good Delio,
To ask noble things of me, and you shall find
I'll be a noble giver.

DELIO. You instruct me well.

ANTONIO. [aside] Why, here's a man now would fright impu- 55
dence.

From sauciest beggars.

PESCARA. Prince Ferdinand's come to Milan,
Sick, as they give out, of an apoplexy,
But some say 'tis a frenzy. I am going
To visit him. [Exit.]

ANTONIO. 'Tis a noble old fellow.

DELIO. What course do you mean to take, Antonio? 60

ANTONIO. This night I mean to venture all my fortune,
Which is no more than a poor lingering life,
To the Cardinal's worst of malice. I have got Private access to his chamber, and intend
To visit him about the mid of night, 65
As once his brother did our noble duchess.
It may be that the sudden apprehension

Of danger—for I'll go in mine own shape—
 When he shall see it fraught with love and duty,
 May draw the poison out of him, and work
 A friendly reconciliation. If it fail, 70
 Yet it shall rid me of this infamous calling,
 For better fall once than be ever falling.
 DELIO. I'll second you in all danger, and, howe'er,
 My life keeps rank with yours.
 ANTONIO. You are still my loved 75
 And best friend. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter PESCARA and DOCTOR.]

PESCARA. Now, doctor, may I visit your patient?

DOCTOR. If 't please your lordship: but he's instantly?
 To take the air here in the gallery
 By my direction.

PESCARA. Pray thee, what's his disease?

DOCTOR. A very pestilent disease, my lord, 5
 They call lycanthropia.⁸

PESCARA. What's that?

I need a dictionary to 't.

DOCTOR. I'll tell you.

In those that are possessed with 't there o'erflows

Such melancholy humor, they imagine 10
 Themselves to be transformed into wolves;

Steal forth to churchyards in the dead of night,

And dig dead bodies up: as two nights since

One met the duke 'bout midnight in a lane 15
 Behind Saint Mark's Church, with the leg of a man

Upon his shoulder; and he howled fearfully;

Said he was a wolf, only the difference

Was, a wolf's skin was hairy on the outside,

His on the inside; bade them take their swords,

Rip up his flesh, and try. Straight I was sent for,

And, having ministered to him, found his grace 20
 Very well recovered.

PESCARA. I'm glad on 't.

DOCTOR. Yet not without some fear

Of a relapse. If he grow to his fit again,

I'll go a nearer way to work with him

Than ever Paracelsus⁹ dreamed of: if 25
 They'll give me leave, I'll buffet his madness

Out of him. Stand aside; he comes.

[Enter FERDINAND, MALATESTA, CARDINAL, and BOSOLA.]

7. Very shortly.

8. The mental aberration that produces werewolves—as the Doctor will shortly explain.

9. Paracelsus, the great Swiss alchemist, famous for his cures by sympathetic magic. Though anachronistic in this play, he would be well known to Webster's audience.

FERDINAND.

Leave me.

MALATESTA. Why doth your lordship love this solitariness?

FERDINAND. Eagles commonly fly alone: they are crows, daws, 30 and starlings that flock together. Look, what's that follows me?

MALATESTA. Nothing, my lord.

FERDINAND. Yes.

MALATESTA. 'Tis your shadow.

35

FERDINAND. Stay it; let it not haunt me.

MALATESTA. Impossible, if you move, and the sun shine.

FERDINAND. I will throttle it. [Throws himself on the ground.]

MALATESTA. O, my lord, you are angry with nothing.

FERDINAND. You are a fool: how is 't possible I should catch my 40 shadow, unless I fall upon 't? When I go to hell, I mean to carry a bribe; for, look you, good gifts evermore make way for the worst persons.

PESCARA. Rise, good my lord.

FERDINAND. I am studying the art of patience.

45

PESCARA. 'Tis a noble virtue.

FERDINAND. To drive six snails before me from this town to Moscow; neither use goad nor whip to them, but let them take their own time—the patient'st man i' th' world match me for an experiment—and I'll crawl after like a sheep-biter.¹ 50

CARDINAL. Force him up. [They raise him.]

FERDINAND. Use me well, you were best. What I have done, I have done: I'll confess nothing.

DOCTOR. Now let me come to him. Are you mad, my lord? Are you out of your princely wits? 55

FERDINAND. What's he?

PESCARA. Your doctor.

FERDINAND. Let me have his beard sawed off, and his eyebrows filed more civil.

DOCTOR. I must do mad tricks with him, for that's the only way 60 on 't. I have brought your grace a salamander's skin to keep you from sunburning.²

FERDINAND. I have cruel sore eyes.

DOCTOR. The white of a cockatrix's³ egg is present remedy.

FERDINAND. Let it be a new laid one, you were best. Hide me 65 from him: physicians are like kings—they brook no contradiction.

DOCTOR. Now he begins to fear me: now let me alone with him.

CARDINAL. How now? Put off your gown?

DOCTOR. Let me have some forty urinals filled with rosewater: he 70 and I'll go pelt one another with them. Now he begins to fear me. Can you fetch a frisk, sir?⁴ Let him go, let him go, upon my peril: I find by his eye he stands in awe of me; I'll make

1. A sheepdog, nipping at the heels of his flock.

2. The ideas are deliberately crazy: the Doctor is trying to enter into Ferdinand's frenzy in order gradually to draw

him out.

3. A fabulous, and deadly poisonous, serpent, supposed to be hatched of a cock's egg.

4. Cut a caper, dance a jig.

him as tame as a dormouse.

75

FERDINAND. Can you fetch your frisks, sir? I will stamp him into a cullis, flay off his skin, to cover one of the anatomies⁵ this rogue hath set i' th' cold yonder in Barber-Chirurgeons' Hall. Hence, hence! You are all of you like beasts for sacrifice: there's nothing left of you but tongue and belly, flattery and lechery.

[Exit.] 80

PESCARA. Doctor, he did not fear you thoroughly.

DOCTOR.

True;

I was somewhat too forward.

BOSOLA.

Mercy upon me,

What a fatal judgment hath fall'n upon this Ferdinand!

PESCARA. Knows your grace what accident hath brought Unto the prince this strange distraction?

85

CARDINAL. [aside] I must feign somewhat. Thus they say it grew.

You have heard it rumored, for these many years

None of our family dies but there is seen

The shape of an old woman, which is given

By tradition to us to have been murdered

90

By her nephews for her riches. Such a figure

One night, as the prince sat up late at 's book,

Appeared to him; when, crying out for help,

The gentlemen of's chamber found his grace

All on a cold sweat, altered much in face

95

And language; since which apparition,

He hath grown worse and worse, and I much fear

He cannot live.

BOSOLA.

Sir, I would speak with you.

PESCARA. We'll leave your grace,

Wishing to the sick prince, our noble lord,

100

All health of mind and body.

CARDINAL.

You are most welcome.

[Exeunt PESCARA, MALATESTA, and DOCTOR.]

Are you come? So. [aside] This fellow must not know

By any means I had intelligence⁶

In our duchess' death; for, though I counseled it,

The full of all th' engagement seemed to grow

105

From Ferdinand.—Now, sir, how fares our sister?

I do not think but sorrow makes her look

Like to an oft-dyed garment: she shall now

Taste comfort from me. Why do you look so wildly?

Oh, the fortune of your master here the prince

110

Dejects you, but be you of happy comfort:

If you'll do one thing for me I'll entreat,

Though he had a cold tombstone o'er his bones,

I'll make you what you would be.

BOSOLA.

Anything;

5. Anatomical skeletons hung up in the surgeon's college, which Ferdinand proposes to cover with the Doctor's flayed skin.

6. Had a hand in.

Give it me in a breath, and let me fly to 't:
 They that think long small expedition win,
 For musing much o' th' end cannot begin.

115

[Enter JULIA.]

JULIA. Sir, will you come in to supper?

CARDINAL.

I am busy;

Leave me.

JULIA. [aside] What an excellent shape hath that fellow! [Exit.] 120

CARDINAL. 'Tis thus. Antonio lurks here in Milan:

Inquire him out, and kill him. While he lives,
 Our sister cannot marry, and I have thought
 Of an excellent match for her. Do this, and style me
 Thy advancement. 7

125

BOSOLA. But by what means shall I find him out?

CARDINAL. There is a gentleman called Delio

Here in the camp, that hath been long approved

His loyal friend. Set eye upon that fellow;

Follow him to mass; maybe Antonio,

130

Although he do account religion

But a school-name,⁸ for fashion of the world

May accompany him; or else go inquire out

Delio's confessor, and see if you can bribe

Him to reveal it. There are a thousand ways

135

A man might find to trace him; as to know

What fellows haunt the Jews for taking up

Great sums of money, for sure he's in want;

Or else to go to th' picture-makers, and learn

Who bought her picture lately. Some of these 140

Haply may take.

BOSOLA. Well, I'll not freeze i' th' business:

I would see that wretched thing, Antonio,

Above all sights i' th' world.

CARDINAL.

Do, and be happy.

[Exit.]

BOSOLA. This fellow doth breed basilisks in 's eyes,

He's nothing else but murder; yet he seems 145

Not to have notice of the duchess' death.

'Tis his cunning: I must follow his example;

There cannot be a surer way to trace

Than that of an old fox.

[Re-enter JULIA, with a pistol.]

150

JULIA. So, sir, you are well met.

BOSOLA. How now?

JULIA.

Nay, the doors are fast enough.

Now, sir,

I will make you confess your treachery.

BOSOLA. 'Treachery?

JULIA. Yes,

Confess to me which of my women 'twas

155

7. Look to me for your promotion.

8. Just an idle phrase.

You hired to put love-powder into my drink?

BOSOLA. Love-powder?

JULIA. Yes, when I was at Malfi.

Why should I fall in love with such a face else?

I have already suffered for thee so much pain,

The only remedy to do me good

Is to kill my longing.

160

BOSOLA. Sure, your pistol holds

Nothing but perfumes or kissing-comfits.⁹

Excellent lady! You have a pretty way on 't

To discover your longing. Come, come, I'll disarm you,

And arm you thus:¹ yet this is wondrous strange.

165

JULIA. Compare thy form and my eyes together, you'll find

My love no such great miracle. Now you'll say

I am wanton: this nice modesty in ladies

Is but a troublesome familiar² that haunts them.

BOSOLA. Know you me, I am a blunt soldier.

JULIA. The better:

170

Sure, there wants³ fire where there are no lively sparks

Of roughness.

BOSOLA. And I want compliment.⁴

JULIA. Why, ignorance

In courtship cannot make you do amiss,

If you have a heart to do well.

BOSOLA. You are very fair.

175

JULIA. Nay, if you lay beauty to my charge,

I must plead unguilty.

BOSOLA. Your bright eyes carry

A quiver of darts in them sharper than sunbeams.

JULIA. You will mar me with commendation,

Put yourself to the charge of courting me,

Whereas now I woo you.

180

BOSOLA. [aside] I have it, I will work upon this creature.—

Let us grow most amorously familiar.

If the great Cardinal now should see me thus,

Would he not count me a villain?

JULIA. No; he might 185

Count me a wanton, not lay a scruple

Of offence on you; for if I see and steal

A diamond, the fault is not i' th' stone,

But in me the thief that purloins it. I am sudden

With you: we that are great women of pleasure

Use to cut off these uncertain wishes

And unquiet longings, and in an instant join

The sweet delight and the pretty excuse together.

Had you been i' th' street, under my chamber-window,

190

9. Candies to sweeten the breath.

1. Disarm (by taking away her pistol and kissing her); arm (by embracing her).

2. An irksome ghost.

3. Lacks, is missing.

4. I don't have the gift of flattery.

- Even there I should have courted you.
 BOSOLA. Oh, you are 195
 An excellent lady!
- JULIA. Bid me do somewhat for you
 Presently⁵ to express I love you.
- BOSOLA. I will;
 And if you love me, fail not to effect it.
 The Cardinal is grown wondrous melancholy;
 Demand the cause, let him not put you off 200
 With feigned excuse; discover the main ground on 't.
- JULIA. Why would you know this?
- BOSOLA. I have depended on him,
 And I hear that he is fallen in some disgrace
 With the emperor: if he be, like the mice
 That forsake falling houses, I would shift 205
 To other dependence.
- JULIA. You shall not need
 Follow the wars: I'll be your maintenance.
- BOSOLA. And I your loyal servant: but I cannot Leave my calling.
- JULIA. Not leave an ungrateful
 General for the love of a sweet lady? 210
 You are like some cannot sleep in feather-beds,
 But must have blocks for their pillows.
- BOSOLA. Will you do this?
- JULIA. Cunningly.
- BOSOLA. Tomorrow I'll expect th' intelligence.
- JULIA. Tomorrow? Get you into my cabinet; 215
 You shall have it with you. Do not delay me,
 No more than I do you: I am like one
 That is condemned; I have my pardon promised,
 But I would see it sealed. Go, get you in:
 You shall see me wind my tongue about his heart 220
 Like a skein of silk. [Exit BOSOLA.]
- [Re-enter CARDINAL.]
- CARDINAL. Where are you?
- [Enter SERVANTS.]
- SERVANTS. Here.
- CARDINAL. Let none, upon your lives, have conference
 With the Prince Ferdinand, unless I know it.
 [aside] In this distraction he may reveal
 The murder.— [Exeunt SERVANTS.]
- Yond's my lingering consumption: 225
 I am weary of her, and by any means
 Would be quit of.
- JULIA. How now, my lord? What ails you?
- CARDINAL. Nothing.
- JULIA. Oh, you are much altered: come, I must be

Your secretary, and remove this lead
From off your bosom.⁶ What's the matter? 230

CARDINAL. I may not Tell you.

JULIA. Are you so far in love with sorrow
You cannot part with part of it? Or think you
I cannot love your grace when you are sad
As well as merry? Or do you suspect 235
I, that have been a secret to your heart
These many winters, cannot be the same
Unto your tongue?

CARDINAL. Satisfy thy longing—
The only way to make thee keep my counsel
Is not to tell thee.

JULIA. Tell your echo this, 240
Or flatterers, that like echoes still report
What they hear though most imperfect, and not me;
For if that you be true unto yourself,
I'll know.

CARDINAL. Will you rack⁷ me?

JULIA. No, judgment shall 245
Draw it from you: it is an equal fault,
To tell one's secrets unto all or none.

CARDINAL. The first argues folly.

JULIA. But the last, tyranny.

CARDINAL. Very well. Why, imagine I have committed
Some secret deed which I desire the world
May never hear of.

JULIA. Therefore may not I know it? 250
You have concealed for me as great a sin
As adultery. Sir, never was occasion
For perfect trial of my constancy
Till now: sir, I beseech you——

CARDINAL. You'll repent it.

JULIA. Never. 255

CARDINAL. It hurries thee to ruin: I'll not tell thee.
Be well advised, and think what danger 'tis
To receive a prince's secrets: they that do,
Had need have their breasts hooped with adamant
To contain them. I pray thee, yet be satisfied; 260
Examine thine own frailty; 'tis more easy
To tie knots than unloose them: 'tis a secret
That, like a lingering poison, may chance lie
Spread in thy veins, and kill thee seven year hence.

JULIA. Now you dally with me.

CARDINAL. No more; thou shalt know it. 265
By my appointment the great Duchess of Malfi
And two of her young children, four nights since,

6. Secretaries opened letters addressed to their masters by removing the heavy lead seals.

7. Will you put me to the torture?

Were strangled.

JULIA. O Heaven! Sir, what have you done!

CARDINAL. How now? How settles this? Think you your bosom
Will be a grave dark and obscure enough
For such a secret? 270

JULIA. You have undone yourself, sir.

CARDINAL. Why?

JULIA. It lies not in me to conceal it.

CARDINAL. No?

Come, I will swear you to 't upon this book.

JULIA. Most religiously.

CARDINAL. Kiss it. [She kisses the book.]
Now you shall

Never utter it; thy curiosity
Hath undone thee: thou'rt poisoned with that book.
Because I knew thou couldst not keep my counsel,
I have bound thee to 't by death. 275
[Re-enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA. For pity sake, Hold!

CARDINAL. Ha! Bosola?

JULIA. I forgive you
This equal piece of justice you have done;
For I betrayed your counsel to that fellow: 280
He overheard it; that was the cause I said
It lay not in me to conceal it.

BOSOLA. O foolish woman,
Couldst not thou have poisoned him?

JULIA. 'Tis weakness,
Too much to think what should have been done. I go
I know not whither. 285
[Dies.]

CARDINAL. Wherefore com'st thou hither?

BOSOLA. That I might find a great man like yourself,
Not out of his wits as the Lord Ferdinand,
To remember my service.

CARDINAL. I'll have thee hewed in pieces.

BOSOLA. Make not yourself such a promise of that life
Which is not yours to dispose of. 290

CARDINAL. Who placed thee here?

BOSOLA. Her lust, as she intended.

CARDINAL. Very well.

Now you know me for your fellow-murderer.

BOSOLA. And wherefore should you lay fair marble colors⁸
Upon your rotten purposes to me? 295
Unless you imitate some that do plot great treasons,
And when they have done, go hide themselves i' th' graves
Of those were actors in 't?

CARDINAL. No more; there is

8. Plaster was often painted to look like marble.

A fortune attends thee.

BOSOLA. Shall I go sue
To Fortune any longer? 'Tis the fool's
Pilgrimage. 300

CARDINAL. I have honors in store for thee.

BOSOLA. There are a many ways that conduct to seeming Honor, and some of them very dirty ones.

CARDINAL. Throw
To the devil thy melancholy. The fire burns well;
What need we keep a stirring of 't, and make 305
A greater smother? Thou wilt kill Antonio?

BOSOLA. Yes.

CARDINAL. Take up that body.

BOSOLA. I think I shall

Shortly grow the common bearer for churchyards.

CARDINAL. I will allow thee some dozen of attendants
To aid thee in the murder. 310

BOSOLA. Oh, by no means. Physicians that apply horse-leeches to any rank swelling use to cut off their tails, that the blood may run through them the faster: let me have no train⁹ when I go to shed blood, lest it make me have a greater when I ride to the gallows. 315

CARDINAL. Come to me after midnight, to help to remove
That body to her own lodging: I'll give out
She died o' th' plague; 'twill breed the less inquiry
After her death.

BOSOLA. Where's Castruccio her husband?

CARDINAL. He's rode to Naples, to take possession
Of Antonio's citadel. 320

BOSOLA. Believe me, you have done
A very happy turn.

CARDINAL. Fail not to come.

There is the master-key of our lodgings, and by that
You may conceive what trust I plant in you.

BOSOLA. You shall find me ready. [Exit CARDINAL.]

O poor Antonio, 325
Though nothing be so needful to thy estate
As pity, yet I find nothing so dangerous;
I must look to my footing:
In such slippery ice-pavements men had need
To be frost-nailed well; they may break their necks else; 330
The precedent's here afore me. How this man
Bears up in blood! Seems fearless! Why, 'tis well:
Security some men call the suburbs of hell,
Only a dead wall between.¹ Well, good Antonio,
I'll seek thee out, and all my care shall be 335

9. Followers. Criminals, dragged through the streets to be hanged at Tyburn, were followed by crowds of the idle, the satirical, and their own fellow criminals.

1. When men are close to hell, with only a dead wall between—but the wall isn't altogether dead, as we soon see—they can live securely there.

To put thee into safety from the reach
 Of these most cruel biters that have got
 Some of thy blood already. It may be,
 I'll join with thee in a most just revenge:
 The weakest arm is strong enough that strikes
 With the sword of justice. Still methinks the duchess Haunts me. There, there, 'tis nothing but my melancholy.
 O Penitence, let me truly taste thy cup.
 That throws men down only to raise them up! [Exit.]

SCENE 3. A Fortification at Milan.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO. Echo from the DUCHESS' grave.]

DELIO. Yond's the Cardinal's window. This fortification
 Grew from the ruins of an ancient abbey;
 And to yond side o' th' river lies a wall,
 Piece of a cloister, which in my opinion
 Gives the best echo that you ever heard,
 So hollow and so dismal, and withal
 So plain in the distinction of our words,
 That many have supposed it is a spirit
 That answers.

ANTONIO. I do love these ancient ruins.

We never tread upon them but we set
 Our foot upon some reverend history:

And, questionless, here in this open court,
 Which now lies naked to the injuries

Of stormy weather, some men lie interred
 Loved the church so well, and gave so largely to 't,

They thought it should have canopied their bones
 Till doomsday; but all things have their end:

Churches and cities, which have diseases
 Like to men, must have like death that we have.

ECHO. "Like death that we have."

DELIO. Now the echo hath caught you.

ANTONIO. It groaned, methought, and gave

A very deadly accent.

ECHO. "Deadly accent."

DELIO. I told you 'twas a pretty one: you may make it

A huntsman, or a falconer, a musician

Or a thing of sorrow.

ECHO. "A thing of sorrow."

ANTONIO. Aye, sure, that suits it best.

ECHO. "That suits it best."

ANTONIO. 'Tis very like my wife's voice.

ECHO. "Aye, wife's voice."

DELIO. Come, let's walk further from 't. I would not have you

Go to th' Cardinal's tonight: do not.

ECHO. "Do not."

DELIO. Wisdom doth not more moderate wasting sorrow

Than time: take time for 't; be mindful of thy safety.

ECHO. "Be mindful of thy safety."

ANTONIO. Necessity compels me:

Make scrutiny throughout the passes of

Your own life, you'll find it impossible

To fly your fate.

35

ECHO. "Oh, fly your fate."

DELIO. Hark!

The dead stones seem to have pity on you, and give you

Good counsel.

ANTONIO. Echo, I will not talk with thee,

For thou art a dead thing.

ECHO. "Thou art a dead thing."

ANTONIO. My duchess is asleep now,

40

And her little ones, I hope sweetly: O Heaven,

Shall I never see her more?

ECHO. "Never see her more."

ANTONIO. I marked not one repetition of the echo

But that, and on the sudden a clear light

Presented me a face folded in sorrow.

45

DELIO. Your fancy merely.

ANTONIO. Come, I'll be out of this ague,

For to live thus is not indeed to live;

It is a mockery and abuse of life.

I will not henceforth save myself by halves;

Lose all, or nothing.

DELIO. Your own virtue save you!

50

I'll fetch your eldest son, and second² you:

It may be that the sight of his own blood

Spread in so sweet a figure³ may beget

The more compassion. However, fare you well.

Though in our miseries Fortune have a part,

55

Yet in our noble sufferings she hath none:

Contempt of pain, that we may call our own.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 4. A Room in the CARDINAL's Palace.

[Enter CARDINAL, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

CARDINAL. You shall not watch tonight by the sick prince;

His grace is very well recovered.

MALATESTA. Good my lord, suffer⁴ us.

CARDINAL. Oh, by no means;

The noise and change of object in his eye

Doth more distract him. I pray, all to bed;

5

2. Back you up.

3. Face.

4. Allow.

And though you hear him in his violent fit,
Do not rise, I entreat you.

PESCARA. So, sir; we shall not.

CARDINAL. Nay, I must have you promise upon your honors,
For I was enjoined to 't by himself; and he seemed To urge it sensibly.⁵

PESCARA. Let our honors bind

This trifle.

CARDINAL. Nor any of your followers.

MALATESTA. Neither.

CARDINAL. It may be, to make trial of your promise,

When he's asleep, myself will rise and feign
Some of his mad tricks, and cry out for help,
And feign myself in danger.

MALATESTA. If your throat were cutting,
I'd not come at you, now I have protested against it.

CARDINAL. Why, I thank you.

GRISOLAN. 'Twas a foul storm tonight.

RODERIGO. The Lord Ferdinand's chamber shook like an osier.⁶

MALATESTA. 'Twas nothing but pure kindness in the devil,
To rock his own child. [Exeunt all except the CARDINAL.] 20

CARDINAL. The reason why I would not suffer these

About my brother, is, because at midnight

I may with better privacy convey

Julia's body to her own lodging. Oh, my conscience!

I would pray now, but the devil takes away my heart

For having any confidence in prayer.

About this hour I appointed Bosola

To fetch the body: when he hath served my turn,

He dies.

[Exit.]

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA. Ha! 'Twas the Cardinal's voice; I heard him name

Bosola and my death. Listen! I hear

One's footing.

[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND. Strangling is a very quiet death.

BOSOLA. [aside] Nay, then, I see I must stand upon my guard.

FERDINAND. What say to that? Whisper softly; do you agree to
't? So; it must be done i' th' dark: the Cardinal would not for 35
a thousand pounds the doctor should see it. [Exit.]

BOSOLA. My death is plotted; here's the consequence of murder.

We value not desert nor Christian breath,

When we know black deeds must be cured with death.

[Enter ANTONIO and SERVANT.]

SERVANT. Here stay, sir and be confident, I pray:

I'll fetch you a dark lantern.

[Exit.]

ANTONIO. Could I take him

At his prayers, there were hope of pardon.

5. With real feeling.

6. Reed.

- BOSOLA. Fall right, my sword! [Stabs him.]
 I'll not give thee so much leisure as to pray.
- ANTONIO. Oh, I am gone! Thou hast ended a long suit⁷
 In a minute.
- BOSOLA. What art thou?
- ANTONIO. A most wretched thing, 45
 That only have thy benefit in death,
 To appear myself.
 [Re-enter SERVANT with a lantern.]
- SERVANT. Where are you, sir?
- ANTONIO. Very near my home. Bosola?
- SERVANT. Oh, misfortune!
- BOSOLA. Smother thy pity; thou art dead else. Antonio?
 The man I would have saved 'bove mine own life! 50
 We are merely the stars' tennis-balls, struck and bandied
 Which way please them.⁸ O good Antonio,
 I'll whisper one thing in thy dying ear
 Shall make thy heart break quickly! Thy fair duchess
 And two sweet children——
- ANTONIO. Their very names 55
 Kindle a little life in me.
- BOSOLA. Are murdered.
- ANTONIO. Some men have wished to die
 At the hearing of sad tidings; I am glad
 That I shall do 't in sadness: I would not now
 Wish my wounds balmed nor healed, for I have no use 60
 To put my life to. In all our quest of greatness,
 Like wanton boys, whose pastime is their care,
 We follow after bubbles blown in th' air.
 Pleasure of life, what is 't? Only the good
 Hours of an age; merely a preparative 65
 To rest, to endure vexation. I do not ask
 The process of my death; only commend me
 To Delio.
- BOSOLA. Break, heart!
- ANTONIO. And let my son
 Fly the courts of princes. [Dies.]
- BOSOLA. Thou seem'st
 To have loved Antonio?
- SERVANT. I brought him hither, 70
 To have reconciled him to the Cardinal.
- BOSOLA. I do not ask thee that.
 Take him up, if thou tender thine own life,
 And bear him where the lady Julia
 Was wont to lodge. Oh, my fate moves swift; 75

7. Antonio thinks it is the Cardinal, to whom he was addressing his "suit" (plea for reconciliation), who has murdered him.

8. The power of the stars over men's lives was a Renaissance commonplace.

I have this Cardinal in the forge already;
 Now I'll bring him to th' hammer. Oh direful misprision!⁹
 I will not imitate things glorious,
 No more than base; I'll be mine own example.
 On, on, and look thou represent, for silence,
 The thing thou bear'st.¹

[Exeunt.]

80

SCENE 5

[Enter CARDINAL, with a book.]

CARDINAL. I am puzzled in a question about hell:
 He says, in hell there's one material fire,
 And yet it shall not burn all men alike.
 Lay him by. How tedious is a guilty conscience!
 When I look into the fish-ponds in my garden,
 Methinks I see a thing armed with a rake,
 That seems to strike at me.

5

[Enter BOSOLA, and SERVANT bearing ANTONIO's body.]
 Now, art thou come?

Thou look'st ghastly:
 There sits in thy face some great determination
 Mixed with some fear.

BOSOLA. Thus it lightens into action:
 I am come to kill thee.

10

CARDINAL. Ha! Help! Our guard!

BOSOLA. Thou art deceived; they are out of thy howling.

CARDINAL. Hold; and I will faithfully divide
 Revenues with thee.

BOSOLA. Thy prayers and proffers
 Are both unseasonable.

CARDINAL. Raise the watch!
 We are betrayed!

15

BOSOLA. I have confined your flight:²
 I'll suffer your retreat to Julia's chamber,
 But no further.

CARDINAL. Help! We are betrayed!

[Enter, above, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

MALATESTA. Listen.

CARDINAL. My dukedom for rescue!

RODERIGO. Fie upon
 His counterfeiting!

20

MALATESTA. Why, 'tis not the Cardinal.

RODERIGO. Yes, yes, 'tis he, but I'll see him hanged
 Ere I'll go down to him.

CARDINAL. Here's a plot upon me;
 I am assaulted! I am lost, unless some rescue.

9. Error.

carrying.

1. I.e., be as still as the corpse you're

2. Cut off your escape.

- GRISOLAN. He doth this pretty well, but it will not serve
To laugh me out of mine honor. 25
- CARDINAL. The sword's at my throat!
- RODERIGO. You would not bawl so loud then.
- MALATESTA. Come, come,
Let's go to bed. He told us thus much aforehand.
- PESCARA. He wished you should not come at him; but, believe't,
The accent of the voice sounds not in jest: 30
I'll down to him, howsoever, and with engines³
Force ope the doors. [Exit above.]
- RODERIGO. Let's follow him aloof,⁴
And note how the Cardinal will laugh at him.
[Exeunt, above, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]
- BOSOLA. There's for you first, [He kills the SERVANT.]
'Cause you shall not unbarricade the door 35
To let in rescue.
- CARDINAL. What cause hast thou to pursue my life?
BOSOLA. Look there.
- CARDINAL. Antonio?
- BOSOLA. Slain by my hand unwittingly.
Pray, and be sudden: when thou killed'st thy sister,
Thou took'st from Justice her most equal balance, 40
And left her naught but her sword.
- CARDINAL. Oh, mercy!
- BOSOLA. Now, it seems thy greatness was only outward;
For thou fall'st faster of thyself than calamity
Can drive thee. I'll not waste longer time; there! [Stabs him.]
- CARDINAL. Thou hast hurt me.
- BOSOLA. Again! [Stabs him again.]
- CARDINAL. Shall I die like a leveret,⁵ 45
Without any resistance? Help, help, help!
I am slain!
[Enter FERDINAND.]
- FERDINAND. Th' alarum? Give me a fresh horse;
Rally the vaunt-guard, or the day is lost.
Yield, yield! I give you the honor of arms,
Shake my sword over you; will you yield?⁶ 50
- CARDINAL. Help me; I am your brother!
- FERDINAND. The devil!
My brother fight upon the adverse party?
[He wounds the CARDINAL, and, in the scuffle, gives BOSOLA his death-wound.]
There flies your ransom.
- CARDINAL. O justice!
I suffer now for what hath former been: 55

3. Bars and beams.

4. At a distance.

5. A baby hare, a defenseless creature.

6. It won't do to look for too much sense in Ferdinand's wild cries; he thinks he's on the field of battle and offering the "honor of arms" (liberal surrender terms) to his foes.

Sorrow is held the eldest child of sin.

FERDINAND. Now you're brave fellows. Caesar's fortune was harder than Pompey's; Caesar died in the arms of prosperity, Pompey at the feet of disgrace. You both died in the field. The pain's nothing: pain many times is taken away with the apprehension of greater, as the toothache with the sight of a barber that comes to pull it out: there's philosophy for you. 60

BOSOLA. Now my revenge is perfect. Sink, thou main cause
[He kills FERDINAND.]

Of my undoing! The last part of my life
Hath done me best service. 65

FERDINAND. Give me some wet hay; I am broken-winded. I do account this world but a dog-kennel: I will vault credit and affect high pleasures beyond death.⁷

BOSOLA. He seems to come to himself, now he's so near
The bottom.

FERDINAND. My sister, O my sister! There's the cause on 't.
Whether we fall by ambition, blood, or lust,
Like diamonds we are cut with our own dust. [Dies.] 70

CARDINAL. Thou hast thy payment, too.

BOSOLA. Yes, I hold my weary soul in my teeth.
'Tis ready to part from me. I do glory
That thou, which stood'st like a huge pyramid
Begun upon a large and ample base,
Shalt end in a little point, a kind of nothing. 75

[Enter, below, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

PESCARA. How now, my lord?

MALATESTA. O sad disaster!

RODERIGO. How
Comes this? 80

BOSOLA. Revenge for the Duchess of Malfi murdered
By th' Aragonian brethren; for Antonio
Slain by this hand; for lustful Julia
Poisoned by this man; and lastly for myself,
That was an actor in the main of all,
Much 'gainst mine own good nature, yet i' th' end
Neglected. 85

PESCARA. How now, my lord?

CARDINAL. Look to my brother: he gave us these large wounds
As we were struggling here i' the rushes.⁸ And now,
I pray, let me be laid by and never thought of. [Dies.] 90

PESCARA. How fatally, it seems, he did withstand
His own rescue!

MALATESTA. Thou wretched thing of blood,
How came Antonio by his death?

7. Worn-out horses are said to be broken-winded. The last sentence implies that he expects no more of this life and looks forward only to the next one.

8. Reed mats laid down over Elizabethan floors in lieu of carpets.

- BOSOLA. In a mist;
 I know not how: such a mistake as I 95
 Have often seen in a play. Oh, I am gone!
 We are only like dead walls or vaulted graves,
 That, ruined, yield no echo. Fare you well.
 It may be pain, but no harm, to me to die
 In so good a quarrel. Oh, this gloomy world! 100
 In what a shadow, or deep pit of darkness,
 Doth, womanish and fearful, mankind live!
 Let worthy minds ne'er stagger in distrust
 To suffer death or shame for what is just:
 Mine is another voyage. [Dies.] 105
- PESCARA. The noble Delio, as I came to the palace,
 Told me of Antonio's being here, and showed me
 A pretty gentleman, his son and heir.
 [Enter DELIO and ANTONIO'S SON.]
- MALATESTA. O sir,
 You come too late!
- DELIO. I heard so, and was armed⁹ for 't 110
 Ere I came. Let us make noble use
 Of this great ruin; and join all our force
 To establish this young hopeful gentleman
 In 's mother's right. These wretched eminent things
 Leave no more fame behind 'em, than should one 115
 Fall in a frost, and leave his print in snow;
 As soon as the sun shines, it ever melts,
 Both form and matter. I have ever thought
 Nature doth nothing so great for great men
 As when she's pleased to make them lords of truth: 120
 Integrity of life is fame's best friend,
 Which nobly, beyond death, shall crown the end. [Exeunt.]

performed, 1614

published, 1623

9. Inwardly prepared.

ROBERT HERRICK

(1591-1674)

What little personal history Robert Herrick had was always too much for him; the decisions he had to take were mostly forced on him, and he accepted them as misfortunes. Yet he is the happiest of English poets. The son of a prosperous London goldsmith, he was slow in taking his degrees, slower still in finding himself a career. Clearly he would have liked nothing better than a life of leisured study in London, talking literature and drinking sack with his hero Ben Jonson, while polishing his verses. But social pressures were insistent; he took orders in the church and moved reluctantly to a parish at Dean Prior, in Devonshire.

As a Londoner, he did not much like the rough West Country or its people, but he gradually adapted to both, settling placidly into his bachelor quarters and secreting poems as a hen lays eggs. For the purposes of these poems, he invented for himself dozens of imaginary mistresses—hectic, bewitching creatures with exotic names; but the maid who kept house for him was prophetically named Prudence. At the top of his poetic bent, in Corinna's Going A-Maying, Herrick produced a truly major lyric on the central theme of his life, the happy reconciliation of nature and nature's god. But much of his poetic work seems casual, even trivial, though one can easily be misled by his apparent off-handedness into overlooking a serious strain that lies subsurface. He wrote against Devonshire, and then for it; about his cat, and his spaniel Tracy, and his maid Prudence; a farewell to sack (heart-rending) and a return to it (joyous). A recurrent theme in his work is a deftly balanced personal paganism—private sacrifices to household gods, tiny rituals and allusions to ancient creeds only half-seriously taken. The Puritans would have been scandalized had they realized that this minister of the holy gospel was at least half a pagan, and didn't even have the grace to be ashamed of the fact.

Herrick himself did not advertise his beliefs; but when the storm of civil war broke, and the Puritans came to power, they dispossessed him anyhow, and Herrick came down to London with the fruits of his exile. They were published early in 1648 in a fat little octavo volume with two titles, Hesperides for the secular poems, and Noble Numbers for those with sacred subjects. Altogether, there were over 1,200 poems in this one volume, the only publication of Herrick's life. But the time was not right for tiny, playful lyrics; nobody noticed Hesperides, either to applaud or deplore; and Herrick disappeared in silence and oblivion, not to be restored to English literature till the 19th century. He did manage to survive the harsh weather of Puritanism till King Charles was restored in 1660; and that restoration brought him back to Dean Prior, where he lived out his last years quietly, dying at the ripe age of 83.

Jonson taught Herrick the art of the polished trifle, the light touch, and the quiet mood. For both of them life was a sacrament—and Herrick brought to that sometimes portentous view of things a modesty and sense of proportion that are uniquely his own.

The Argument¹ of His Book

I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds, and bowers,
Of April, May, of June, and July flowers.

I sing of Maypoles, hock carts, wassails, wakes,²
Of bridegrooms, brides, and of their bridal cakes.

I write of youth, of love, and have access

By these to sing of cleanly wantonness.³

I sing of dews, of rains, and, piece by piece,

5

1. Subject matter.

2. "Hock carts" carried home the last load of the harvest; therefore adorned and celebrated. "Wakes": festive, not funerary occasions, to commemorate the dedication of a parish church.

3. Good fun, but already tinged with the lascivious overtone the word carries today.

Of balm, of oil, of spice, and ambergris.⁴
 I sing of times trans-shifting, and I write
 How roses first came red and lilies white.
 I write of groves, of twilights, and I sing
 The court of Mab and of the fairy king.⁵
 I write of hell; I sing (and ever shall)
 Of heaven, and hope to have it after all.

10

1648

His Prayer to Ben Jonson

When I a verse shall make,
 Know I have prayed thee,
 For old religion's sake,⁶
 Saint Ben to aid me.

Make the way smooth for me
 When I, thy Herrick,
 Honoring thee, on my knee,
 Offer my lyric.

5

Candles I'll give to thee
 And a new altar;
 And thou Saint Ben shalt be Writ in my psalter.

10

1648

To the Water Nymphs Drinking at the Fountain

Reach with your whiter hands to me
 Some crystal of the spring;
 And I about the cup shall see
 Fresh lilies flourishing.

Or else, sweet nymphs, do you but this—
 To the glass your lips incline;
 And I shall see by that one kiss
 The water turned to wine.

5

1648

The Lily in a Crystal

You have beheld a smiling rose
 When virgin hands have drawn

4. Ambergris is used in making perfumes; hence it carries the overtone of something rare and delectable.

5. Mab was by long-standing tradition queen of the fairies and wife of King Oberon. See Shakespeare, A Midsummer Night's Dream.

6. The Puritans were hostile to the invocation of saints, above all such "saints" as Ben Jonson. Herrick plays on the fact that Jonson was a Catholic (of the "old religion"), as well as a saint in mock-religion of poetry.

O'er it a cobweb-lawn;¹
 And here you see, this lily shows,
 Tombed in a crystal stone,
 More fair in this transparent case
 Than when it grew alone
 And had but single grace.

5

You see how cream but naked is,
 Nor dances in the eye
 Without a strawberry;
 Or some fine tincture,² like to this,
 Which draws the sight thereto,
 More by that wantoning³ with it
 Than when the paler hue
 No mixture did admit.

10

15

You see how amber through the streams
 More gently strokes the sight
 With some concealed delight⁴
 Than when he darts his radiant beams
 Into the boundless air,
 Where either too much life his worth
 Doth all at once impair
 Or set it little forth.

20

Put purple grapes or cherries in-
 To glass, and they will send
 More beauty to commend
 Them from that clean and subtle skin
 Than if they naked stood,
 And had no other pride at all
 But their own flesh and blood
 And tinctures natural.

25

30

Thus lily, rose, grape, cherry, cream,
 And strawberry do stir
 More love when they transfer
 A weak, a soft, a broken beam,
 Than if they should discover
 At full their proper excellence
 Without some scene cast over
 To juggle with the sense.

35

40

Thus let this crystaled lily be
 A rule how far to teach
 Your nakedness must reach,
 And that no further than we see

1. A very fine, transparent linen.

2. Slight coloration.

3. Toying, sporting.

4. Some varieties of cloudy amber do in fact look more attractive under water.

Those glaring colors laid 45
By art's wise hand, but to this end
They should obey a shade
Lest they too far extend.

So, though you're white as swan or snow
And have the power to move 50
A world of men to love,
Yet when your lawns and silks shall flow
And that white cloud divide
Into a doubtful twilight, then,
Then will your hidden pride 55
Raise greater fires in men.

1648

To Blossoms

Fair pledges of a fruitful tree,
Why do ye fall so fast?
Your date is not so past
But you may stay yet here a while,
To blush and gently smile, 5
And go at last.

What, were ye born to be
An hour or half's delight,
And so to bid good night?
'Twas pity Nature brought you forth 10
Merely to show your worth,
And lose you quite.

But you are lovely leaves, where we
May read how soon things have
Their end, though ne'er so brave; 15
And after they have shown their pride
Like you a while, they glide
Into the grave.

1648

To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time

Carpe diem - seize the day

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old time is still a-flying;
And this same flower that smiles today
Tomorrow will be dying.

The glorious lamp of heaven, the sun, person
The higher he's a-getting, person 5 met
person

The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer he's to setting.

That age is best which is the first,
When youth and blood are warmer;
But being spent, the worse, and worst
Times still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time,
And, while ye may, go marry;
For, having lost but once your prime,
You may forever tarry.

1648

Corinna's Going A-Maying

Get up! get up for shame! the blooming morn
Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.¹

See how Aurora throws her fair
Fresh-quilted colors through the air:²
Get up, sweet slug-a-bed, and see
The dew bespangling herb and tree.

Each flower has wept and bowed toward the east
Above an hour since, yet you not dressed;

Nay, not so much as out of bed?
When all the birds have matins said,
And sung their thankful hymns, 'tis sin,

Nay, profanation to keep in,
Whenas a thousand virgins on this day
Spring, sooner than the lark, to fetch in May.³

Rise, and put on your foliage, and be seen
To come forth, like the springtime, fresh and green,

And sweet as Flora.⁴ Take no care
For jewels for your gown or hair;
Fear not; the leaves will strew
Gems in abundance upon you;

Besides, the childhood of the day has kept,
Against you come, some orient⁵ pearls unwept;

Come and receive them while the light
Hangs on the dew-locks of the night,
And Titan⁶ on the eastern hill

1. Apollo, the sun god, whose hair (the rays of the sun) is never cut. For a discussion of the poem, and Apollo's rôle in it, see Cleanth Brooks, The Well-Wrought Urn (New York, 1947), Ch. 4.
2. Aurora, goddess of the dawn, is both tossing her blankets aside, like one anxious to be up, and spreading over the earth a freshly composed coverlet of light.
3. On May Day morning, it was the custom to gather whitethorn blossoms and trim the house with them (see below, lines 30-35).

4. Flora, the Roman goddess of flowers and vegetation, had her festival in the spring.

5. Eastern, as pearls come from the Orient, but also rosy and glowing like the rising sun. "Against": until.

6. The sun.

Retires himself, or else stands still
Till you come forth. Wash, dress, be brief in praying:
Few beads⁷ are best when once we go a-Maying.

Come, my Corinna, come; and, coming, mark
How each field turns a street,⁸ each street a park 30
Made green and trimmed with trees; see how Devotion gives each house a bough
Or branch: each porch, each door ere this,
An ark, a tabernacle is,⁹
Made up of whitethorn neatly interwove, 35
As if here were those cooler shades of love.
Can such delights be in the street
And open fields, and we not see 't?
Come, we'll abroad; and let's obey
The proclamation made for May, 40
And sin no more, as we have done, by staying;
But, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

There's not a budding boy or girl this day
But is got up and gone to bring in May;
A deal of youth, ere this, is come 45
Back, and with whitethorn laden home.
Some have dispatched their cakes and cream
Before that we have left to dream;
And some have wept, and wooed, and plighted troth,
And chose their priest, ere we can cast off sloth. 50
Many a green-gown¹ has been given,
Many a kiss, both odd and even;²
Many a glance, too, has been sent
From out the eye, love's firmament;
Many a jest told of the keys betraying 55
This night, and locks picked; yet we're not a-Maying.

Come, let us go while we are in our prime,
And take the harmless folly of the time.
We shall grow old apace, and die
Before we know our liberty. 60
Our life is short, and our days run
As fast away as does the sun;
And, as a vapor or a drop of rain
Once lost, can ne'er be found again;
So when or you or I are made 65
A fable, song, or fleeting shade,
All love, all liking, all delight

7. A casual term for prayers, but with overtones of the old (Catholic) religion, which in the next stanza is playfully converted into, and identified with, the worship of nature.

8. Turns into a street.

9. The doorways, ornamented with whitethorn, are like the Hebrew Ark of the Covenant; May sprigs are the central mystery of the religion of nature.

1. Got by rolling in the grass.

2. Kisses are odd and even in kissing games.

Lies drowned with us in endless night.
 Then while time serves, and we are but decaying,
 Come, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

70
 1648

Delight in Disorder

A sweet disorder in the dress
 Kindles in clothes a wantonness.³
 A lawn⁴ about the shoulders thrown Into a fine distraction;
 An erring⁵ lace, which here and there
 Enthralls the crimson stomacher;⁶
 A cuff neglectful, and thereby
 Ribbons to flow confusedly;
 A winning wave, deserving note,
 In the tempestuous petticoat;
 A careless shoestring, in whose tie
 I see a wild civility;
 Do more bewitch me than when art
 Is too precise⁷ in every part.

5

10

1648

Upon Julia's Clothes

Whenas in silks my Julia goes,
 Then, then, methinks, how sweetly flows
 That liquefaction of her clothes.

Next, when I cast mine eyes, and see
 That brave⁸ vibration, each way free,
 O, how that glittering taketh me!

5

1648

Upon Prue, His Maid

In this little urn is laid
 Prudence Baldwin, once my maid,
 From whose happy spark here let
 Spring the purple violet.

1648

3. Most of the terms used to describe the ladies' clothing have an ethical or social overtone.

4. A scarf of fine linen.

5. Wandering, floating.

6. The lower part of the bodice.

7. "Precise" and "precision" were terms used freely of Puritans; Herrick, in praising feminine disarray, is defining the "sprezzatura," or careless grace, of his own cavalier art.

8. Glorious, splendid.

Upon His Spaniel Tracy

Now thou art dead, no eye shall ever see,
For shape and service, spaniel like to thee.
This shall my love do, give thy sad death one
Tear, that deserves of me a millón.

1648

Dreams

Here we are all, by day; by night, we're hurled
By dreams, each one into a several¹ world.

1648

To Lar²

No more shall I, since I am driven hence,
Devote to thee my grains of frankincense.
No more shall I from mantle-trees³ hang down,
To honor thee, my little parsley crown:
No more shall I (I fear me) to thee bring
My chives of garlic for an offering.
No more shall I, from henceforth, hear a choir
Of merry crickets by my country fire.
Go where I will, thou lucky Lar stay here,
Warm by a glittering chimney all the year.

5

10
1648

His Return to London

From the dull confines of the drooping West,
To see the day spring from the pregnant East,
Ravished in spirit, I come, nay more, I fly
To thee, blest place of my nativity!
Thus, thus with hallowed foot I touch the ground
With thousand blessings by thy fortune crowned.
O fruitful genius! that bestowest here
An everlasting plenty, year by year;
O place! O people! Manners framed to please
All nations, customs, kindreds, languages!
I am a free-born Roman;⁴ suffer then
That I amongst you live a citizen.

person
by perb

5 metaph

10

1. Separate.

2. The Roman Lar was a household god associated with the hearth and the family-center; he would normally be paid just such familiar, homely honors as Herrick describes—a bit of incense, an occasional bit of herb or savory seasoning. The poem was evidently written when Herrick was ejected from his living by the Puritans.

3. Mantlepiece.

4. A Roman born in the city was said to be "free of it," i.e., entitled to its liberties.

London my home is: though by hard fate sent
 Into a long and irksome banishment;
 Yet since called back; henceforward let me be,
 O native country, repóssessed by thee!
 For, rather than I'll to the West return,
 I'll beg of thee first here to have mine urn.
 Weak I am grown, and must in short time fall;
 Give thou my sacred relics burial.⁵

15

20

1648

5. As a priest and a poet, Herrick might without immodesty claim that his "relics" were sacred.

GEORGE HERBERT

(1593-1633)

George Herbert was the fifth son of an ancient and distinguished Welsh family. His father died when he was young, and he was brought up by his mother, Magdalen Herbert, a friend of Donne's, and a lady eminent both for her piety and her love of letters. After taking his degrees with distinction at the University of Cambridge, George Herbert was elected Public Orator of the university. It was a post carrying dignity and even some authority: its incumbent was called on to express, in the florid Latin of the day, the sentiments of the university on public occasions. Other men had used the post as a steppingstone to high political office; and Herbert seems to have had this idea, at least briefly, in mind. But the death of his patrons, and the bent of his own temper, soon drew him in another direction. In 1626 he took a minor office in the church; in 1629 he married Jane Danvers; and in 1630 he accepted the living of Bemerton, in Salisbury, and took orders.

Many younger sons of highly connected houses entered the church in those days—picking up a sinecure here and a nonresident ministry there; accepting the pay, and letting the work be done by underpaid curates; filling the offices of the church, perhaps without scandal, but also without the least breath of spiritual fervor. At Bemerton, on the contrary, George Herbert became at once what the age delighted to recognize as "a learned, godly, and painful divine." He preached and prayed; he rebuilt the church out of his own pocket; he visited the poor, consoled the sick, and sat by the bed of the dying—administering true pastoral care to the plowman and the peer alike. "Holy Mr. Herbert" became the talk of the countryside in the three short years of his ministry, before he died of consumption. And during these years, he completed the volume of poems known as The Temple, which was published shortly after his death, in 1633, by the friend to whom it had been left. His fame rests on this volume, and all our selections are taken from it.

As a poet, Herbert is quiet, inward, subtle, graceful, and neat. Working within the great tradition of Christian types and imagery, he delights in using quaint devices and homely images. But his spiritual feeling is to an extraordinary degree pure and fresh and free. Donne may be described as the poet of religious doubt, of strain, of anxiety; Herbert is the poet of religious faith, of submission, of acceptance. Both are classified as "metaphysical" poets; both use "concited" and ingenious images; but Herbert, in a poem like Love, for example, allows his meaning to unfold from the situation gently like a flower, where Donne would be tugging at it or arguing with a mock opponent. Herbert is never flashy, nor even strongly dramatic; like the church he served, he is devoted to the quiet middle way. Yet his quiet is never the quiet of emotional poverty or torpor. Herbert's moods are as changeable as the English weather; but underneath them one hears the uninterrupted murmur of prayer, the serene wisdom of a thousand years of faith. The ancient forms were ever George Herbert's chief delight; his poetry, from which the concept of "freshness" is rarely absent, is like the parish church—an intricate, ancient structure, rich in traditional designs, which is open for the humblest and simplest person to enter.

Virtue

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky:
The dew shall weep thy fall tonight;
For thou must die.

Sweet rose, whose hue, angry and brave,¹
Bids the rash gazer wipe his eye:
Thy root is ever in its grave,
And thou must die.

Sweet spring, full of sweet days and roses,
A box where sweets² compacted lie;
My music shows ye have your closes,³
And all must die.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like seasoned timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,⁴
Then chiefly lives.

1633

Man

My God, I heard this day
That none doth build a stately habitation,
But he that means to dwell therein.
What house more stately hath there been,
Or can be, than is man? to whose creation
All things are in decay.¹

1. "Angry": having the hue of anger, red. "Brave": splendid. Both adjectives indicate the arrogant yet pathetic defiance of beauty in the face of time.

2. Perfumes.

3. Concluding cadences. The expression shows that Herbert intended his poem to be sung—as it has, in fact, often been.

4. Be reduced to a cinder at the Last Judgment. See II Peter iii.10.

1. By comparison with created man, and as a result of their service to him, all other things are in decay.

For man is every thing
 And more; he is a tree, yet bears more fruit;
 A beast, yet is or should be more;
 Reason and speech we only bring. 10
 Parrots may thank us, if they are not mute:
 They go upon the score.²

Man is all symmetry,
 Full of proportions, one limb to another,
 And all to all the world besides; 15
 Each part may call the farthest, brother;
 For head with foot hath private amity,
 And both with moons and tides.

Nothing hath got so far
 But man hath caught and kept it as his prey. 20
 His eyes dismount the highest star:
 He is in little all the sphere.
 Herbs gladly cure our flesh; because that they Find their acquaintance there.

For as the winds do blow, 25
 The earth doth rest, heav'n move, and fountains flow;
 Nothing we see but means our good,
 As our delight, or as our treasure.
 The whole is either our cupboard of food,
 Or cabinet of pleasure. 30

The stars have us to bed;
 Night draws the curtain which the sun withdraws,
 Music and light attend our head.
 All things unto our flesh are kind
 In their descent and being; to our mind 35
 In their ascent and cause.

Each thing is full of duty.
 Waters united are our navigation,
 Distinguished, our habitation;
 Below, our drink; above, our meat; 40
 Both are our cleanliness. Hath one such beauty?³
 Then how are all things neat!

2. Man has a vegetable, an animal, and a spiritual nature; he's the only creature which speaks and reasons. Parrots may seem to be an exception to the first of these rules, but they talk on credit (because we taught them how).

3. All the elements serve us multiply, for instance water. Oceans are valuable for navigation; the earth was created by dividing waters from waters (Genesis i.6-7); on earth water is drink, from above (as dew or manna), food. If one element can serve so richly, how beautiful is the sum of things.

More servants wait on man
 Than he'll take notice of; in every path,
 He treads down that which doth befriend him, 45
 When sickness makes him pale and wan.⁴
 O mighty love! Man is one world, and hath Another to attend him.

Since then, my God, thou hast
 So brave a palace built: O, dwell in it, 50
 That it may dwell with thee at last!
 Till then, afford us so much wit,
 That, as the world serves us, we may serve thee,
 And both, thy servants be.

1633

The Pilgrimage

I traveled on, seeing the hill where lay
 My expectation.
 A long it was and weary way.
 The gloomy cave of desperation
 I left on th'one, and on the other side 5
 The rock of pride.¹

And so I came to fancy's meadow, strowed
 With many a flower;
 Fain would I here have made abode,
 But I was quickened by my hour. 10
 So to care's copse I came, and there got through With much ado.

That led me to the wild of passion, which
 Some call the wold²—
 A wasted place but sometimes rich. 15
 Here I was robbed of all my gold
 Save one good angel,³ which a friend had tied
 Close to my side.

At length I got unto the gladsome hill
 Where lay my hope, 20
 Where lay my heart; and, climbing still,
 When I had gained the brow and top,
 A lake of brackish waters on the ground
 Was all I found.

4. Man thoughtlessly treads down the herb that will cure him when he's sick.

1. The spiritual pilgrimage or search through allegorical perils was a frequent literary motif long before Bunyan's Pil- grim's Progress; compare Henry Vaughan's Regeneration, below.

2. Upland moor country.

3. A golden coin as well as (punningly) a guardian angel.

With that abashed, and struck with many a sting 25
 Of swarming fears,
 I fell, and cried, "Alas, my king!
 Can both the way and end be tears?"
 Yet taking heart I rose, and then perceived
 I was deceived: 30

My hill was further; so I flung away,
 Yet heard a cry,
 Just as I went: None goes that way
And lives: "If that be all," said I,
 "After so foul a journey, death is fair, 35
 And but a chair."⁴

1633

Easter Wings¹

Lord, who createdst man in wealth and store,²
 Though foolishly he lost the same,
 Decaying more and more
 Till he became
 Most poor: 5
 With thee
 O let me rise
 As larks, harmoniously,
 And sing this day thy victories:
 Then shall the fall further the flight in me. 10

My tender age in sorrow did begin:
 And still with sicknesses and shame
 Thou didst so punish sin,
 That I became
 Most thin. 15
 With thee
 Let me combine,
 And feel this day thy victory;
 For, if I imp³ my wing on thine,
 Affliction shall advance the flight in me. 20

1633

4. "Chair" implies rest and immobility, but also, in the sense of "sedan chair," a conveyance.

1. This poem and The Altar (below) are "shaped verses," which represent, by the typographical shape of the poem on the page, some part of the subject. Though sometimes condemned as "false wit," this sort of poem has appealed to an occasional author from Hellenistic times to the present. Among recent examples are Vision and Prayer by Dylan Thomas and Un Coup de Dés by Stéphane Mallarmé. The most amazing poet in this mode was a Byzantine pedant, Publius Optatian Porphyry, who printed his poems in two colors of ink, and got them to represent triremes and other complicated objects. Early editions of Herbert print Easter Wings with the lines running vertically.

2. Abundance.

3. Graft (a technical term from falconry).

The Altar

A broken ALTAR, Lord, thy servant rears,
Made of a heart, and cemented with tears:

Whose parts are as thy hand did frame;
No workman's tool hath touched the same.⁴

A HEART alone
Is such a stone,
As nothing but
Thy power doth cut.
Wherefore each part
Of my hard heart
Meets in this frame,
To praise thy Name:

That, if I chance to hold my peace,
These stones to praise thee may not cease.⁵
Oh let thy blessed SACRIFICE be mine,
And sanctify this ALTAR to be thine.

1633

The Flower

How fresh, oh Lord, how sweet and clean
Are thy returns! even as the flowers in spring;

To which, besides their own demesne,¹
The late-past frosts tributes of pleasure bring.

Grief melts away

Like snow in May,

As if there were no such cold thing.

Who would have thought my shriveled heart
Could have recovered greenness? It was gone

Quite underground; as flowers depart
To see their mother-root, when they have blown,²

Where they together

All the hard weather,

Dead to the world, keep house unknown.

These are thy wonders, Lord of power,
Killing and quickening, bringing down to hell

And up to heaven in an hour;

4. A reference to Exodus xx.25, in which the Lord enjoins Moses to build an altar without using cut stone or any tools. Herbert's book was titled The Temple, and many individual poems are about particular parts of a church—the porch, the windows, the floor, the lock and key, or the altar.

5. Herbert wants his poem to praise God whether or not it is being read or spoken. There is also a reference to Luke xix.40: "I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." Herbert's poetry, like Milton's, is rich to overflowing in Scriptural echoes.

1. Estate of one's own (here, beauty or pleasure). The word, spelled demean in the original text, may also be a short form of "demeanor," i.e., bearing.

2. Bloomed.

Making a chiming of a passing-bell.³

We say amiss

This or that is:⁴

Thy word is all, if we could spell.

20

Oh that I once past changing were,
Fast in thy Paradise, where no flower can wither!

Many a spring I shoot up fair,
Offering⁵ at heaven, growing and groaning thither;

25

Nor doth my flower
Want a spring shower,⁶

My sins and I joining together.

But while I grow in a straight line,
Still upwards bent, as if heaven were mine own,
Thy anger comes, and I decline:

30

What frost to that? what pole is not the zone
Where all things burn,

When thou dost turn,

And the least frown of thine is shown?⁷

35

And now in age I bud again,
After so many deaths I live and write;

I once more smell the dew and rain,
And relish versing. Oh, my only light,

It cannot be 40

That I am he

On whom thy tempests fell all night.

These are thy wonders, Lord of love,
To make us see we are but flowers that glide;⁸

Which when we once can find and prove,⁹
Thou hast a garden for us where to bide;

45

Who would be more,
Swelling through store,

Forfeit their Paradise by their pride.

1633

The Forerunners

The harbingers are come: see, see their mark;
White is their color, and behold my head.¹

3. The passing-bell, intended to mark the death of a parishioner, is tolled in a monotone; a chiming offers pleasant variety.

4. I.e., that a thing exists in its own nature. "Spell": decipher the letters, but also cast a spell.

5. Aiming.

6. The tears of contrition produced by the "joining together" of the poet's conscience and his sins.

7. Lines 32-35 may be paraphrased: "What cold compares to God's anger? Compared to God's wrath, what polar chill would not seem like the heat of the equator?"

8. Pass silently away.

9. Experience.

1. Great men when they traveled in the 17th century often had "harbingers" (cf. French, auberge, lodging), who rode ahead of the main party to comman-

But must they have my brain? must they dispart
Those sparkling notions which therein were bred?

Must dullness turn me to a clod? 5
Yet have they left me "Thou art still my God."

Good men ye be to leave me my best room,
Even all my heart and what is lodgéd there:
I pass not,² I, what of the rest become,
So "Thou art still my God" be out of fear. 10
He will be pleaséd with that ditty;
And if I please Him, I write fine and witty.

Farewell, sweet phrases, lovely metaphors:
But will ye leave me thus? when ye before
Of stews and brothels only knew the doors, 15
Then did I wash you with my tears, and more,
Brought you to Church well-dressed and clad:
My God must have my best, even all I had.

Lovely enchanting language, sugarcane,
Honey of roses, whither wilt thou fly? 20
Hath some fond lover 'ticed thee to thy bane?
And wilt thou leave the Church and love a sty?
Fie! thou wilt soil thy 'broidered coat,
And hurt thyself and him that sings the note.

Let foolish lovers, if they will love dung, 25
With canvas, not with arras,³ clothe their shame;
Let Folly speak in her own native tongue.
True Beauty dwells on high; ours is a flame
But borrowed thence to light us thither:
Beauty and beauteous words should go together. 30

Yet, if you go, I pass not; take your way.
For "Thou art still my God" is all that ye
Perhaps with more embellishment can say.
Go, birds of Spring; let Winter have his fee;⁴
Let a bleak paleness chalk the door, 35
So all within be livelier than before.

1633

deer resting places for the night. Customarily they marked the doors of the houses they had selected with chalk. Herbert's conceit is that he has been so marked, by the appearance of his first white hairs—a sign that all his fine language must be dispossessed, to make room for the great Lord to come.

2. I.e., I don't care. All the other thoughts in my house (my mind, my soul) can be turned out of doors, as long as you leave "my best room," my heart, and its one inhabitant, the thought "Thou art still my God."

3. I.e., with coarse cloth, not with fine tapestry.
4. The "birds of Spring" are the language of secular or erotic poetry; Winter with its snowy whiteness prefigures death, heralded by the chalk marks on the door.

Redemption⁵

Having been tenant long to a rich Lord,
 Not thriving, I resolvéd to be bold,
 And make a suit unto Him, to afford
 A new small-rented lease, and cancel th' old.⁶

In heaven at His manor I Him sought:
 They told me there that He was lately gone
 About some land which He had dearly bought
 Long since on earth, to take possession.

I straight returned, and knowing His great birth,
 Sought Him accordingly in great resorts—
 In cities, theaters, gardens, parks, and courts:
 At length I heard a ragged noise and mirth

Of thieves and murderers; there I Him espied,
 Who straight, "Your suit is granted," said, and died.

1633

Love Unknown

Dear friend, sit down; the tale is long and sad,
 And in my faintings I presume your love
 Will more comply than help: a Lord I had,
 And have, of Whom some grounds, which may improve,
 I hold for two lives, and both lives in me.⁷
 To Him I brought a dish of fruit one day,
 And in the middle placed my heart. But He,
 I sigh to say,

Looked on a servant who did know His eye
 Better than you know me, or which is one,
 Than I myself. The servant, instantly
 Quitting the fruit, seized on my heart alone,
 And threw it in a font, wherein did fall
 A stream of blood which issued from the side
 Of a great rock—I well remember all,
 And have good cause—there it was dipped and dyed
 And washed and wrung; the very wringing yet

5. "Redemption" means literally "buying back." In this beautifully concise sonnet, Herbert figures God as a landlord, himself as a discontented tenant.

6. I.e., to ask him for a new lease, involving a smaller rent, and to cancel the old lease. Herbert is often concerned to put spiritual relationships in terms of very humble, everyday business transactions, over which he casts a sacramental coloring.

7. The terminology is from legal contracts for leasing ground for a fixed number of "lives" or generations. God has leased a soul to Herbert for two lives, one in this world, one in the next.

*All did but strive to mend what you had marred.
Wherefore be cheered, and praise Him to the full,
Each day, each hour, each moment of the week,
Who fain would have you be new, tender, quick.*⁸

70
1633

Time

Meeting with Time, "Slack thing," said I,
"Thy scythe is dull; whet it for shame."
"No marvel, sir," he did reply,
"If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty for one too sharp do find it."

5

"Perhaps some such of old did pass¹
Who above all things loved this life;
To whom thy scythe a hatchet was
Which now is but a pruning knife.²
Christ's coming hath made man thy debtor,
Since by thy cutting he grows better.

10

"And in his blessing thou art blessed,
For where thou only wert before
An executioner at best,
Thou art a gardener now, and more,
An usher to convey our souls
Beyond the utmost stars and poles.

15

"And this is that makes life so long,
While it detains us from our God.
Ev'n pleasures here increase the wrong,
And length of days lengthens the rod.³
Who wants the place where God doth dwell
Partakes already half of hell.

20

"Of what strange length must that needs be,
Which ev'n eternity excludes!"⁴—
Thus far Time heard me patiently,
Then chafing said, "This man deludes:
What do I here before his door?
He doth not crave less time, but more."⁵

25

30

1633

8. "Quick" carries the meaning of sensitive, as in the "quick" under our fingernails.

1. Herbert is understood to be the speaker in stanzas 2, 3, 4, and the first two lines of stanza 5.

2. A hatchet kills, a pruning knife improves growing things like souls.

3. I.e., long life on earth is a punishment because it keeps us from bliss. "Wants": lacks, does not enjoy.

4. I.e., earthly time, however long or short it seems to be, has no real dimensions, since only after it has come to an end does man enter into eternity.

5. Time as a scythesman thinks he will cut men off; paradoxical Herbert welcomes him as a doorman to eternal life.

Sure there was wine 10
 Before my sighs did dry it; there was corn
 Before my tears did drown it.
 Is the year only lost to me?
 Have I no bays⁴ to crown it,
 No flowers, no garlands gay? all blasted? 15
 All wasted?
 Not so, my heart; but there is fruit,
 And thou hast hands.
 Recover all thy sigh-blown age
 On double pleasures: leave thy cold dispute 20
 Of what is fit and not. Forsake thy cage,
 Thy rope of sands,⁵
 Which petty thoughts have made, and made to thee
 Good cable, to enforce and draw,
 And be thy law, 25
 While thou didst wink⁶ and wouldst not see.
 Away! take heed;
 I will abroad.
 Call in thy death's-head⁷ there; tie up thy fears.
 He that forbears 30
 To suit and serve his need,
 Deserves his load."
 But as I raved and grew more fierce and wild
 At every word,
 Methought I heard one calling, Child!
 And I replied, My Lord. 35

1633

The Pulley

When God at first made man,
 Having a glass of blessings standing by,
 "Let us," said he, "pour on him all we can.
 Let the world's riches, which dispersed lie,
 Contract into a span." 5
 So strength first made a way;
 Then beauty flowed, then wisdom, honor, pleasure.
 When almost all was out, God made a stay,
 Perceiving that, alone of all his treasure,
 Rest in the bottom lay.¹ 10

4. The poet's wreath, here used as a general symbol of festivity.

5. Christian restrictions on behavior, which the "petty thoughts" of the docile believer have made "good cable," i.e., strong.

6. Shut your eyes (to the real weakness of the church's injunctions).

7. The skull which reminds the penitent of approaching death.

1. "Rest" in the poem has two senses ("remainder" and "repose"); Herbert works them against one another. This seesaw suggests the pulley, which can draw us to God one way or the other.

"For if I should," said he,
 "Bestow this jewel also on my creature,
 He would adore my gifts instead of me,
 And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature;
 So both should losers be.

15

"Yet let him keep the rest,
 But keep them with repining restlessness.
 Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
 If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
 May toss him to my breast."

20

Discipline

Throw away thy rod,
 Throw away thy wrath:
 O my God,
 Take the gentle path.

For my heart's desire
 Unto thine is bent:
 I aspire
 To a full consent.

5

Not a word or look
 I affect to own,
 But by book,
 And thy book alone.²

10

Though I fail, I weep:
 Though I halt in pace,
 Yet I creep
 To the throne of grace.

15

Then let wrath remove;
 Love will do the deed:
 For with love
 Stony hearts will bleed.

20

Love is swift of foot;
 Love's a man of war,³
 And can shoot,
 And can hit from far.

Who can 'scape his bow?
 That which wrought on thee,
 Brought thee low,
 Needs must work on me.

25

2. Disclaiming all independence, Herbert describes himself as an actor, who will speak only "by the book."

3. The jubilant song sung by Moses in Exodus xv calls the Lord "a man of war"; but Herbert is thinking also, and without any apparent sense of contradiction, about Cupid, another divine bowman.

Throw away thy rod;
 Though man frailties hath,
 Thou art God:
 Throw away thy wrath.

30

1633

Jordan (I) ¹

Who says that fictions only and false hair
 Become a verse? Is there in truth no beauty?
 Is all good structure in a winding stair?
 May no lines pass, except they do their duty
 Not to a true, but painted chair?²

5

Is it no verse, except enchanted groves
 And sudden arbors shadow coarse-spun lines?³
 Must purling streams refresh a lover's loves?
 Must all be veiled while he that reads, divines,
 Catching the sense at two removes?

10

Shepherds are honest people; let them sing:
 Riddle who list, for me, and pull for prime:⁴
 I envy no man's nightingale or spring;
 Nor let them punish me with loss of rhyme,
 Who plainly say, My God, My King.

15

1633

Jordan (II)

When first my lines of heavenly joys made mention,
 Such was their luster, they did so excel,
 That I sought out quaint words, and trim invention;
 My thoughts began to burnish,¹ sprout, and swell,
 Curling with metaphors a plain intention,
 Decking the sense, as if it were to sell.²

5

1. Both poems titled Jordan are about complexity and simplicity; "crossing Jordan" is of course a symbol for entering into the Promised Land, and it seems likely that Herbert means to indicate by his title that for one who has crossed the river (i.e., come into God's country), many worldly complexities cease to be necessary or desirable.

2. May no poems ("lines") pass as good unless they make a reverence ("do their duty") to a false throne? It has often been the custom for men to bow before a throne, whether it was occupied or not (see Donne, Satire III, lines 47-48); but to require bowing to a throne in a painting (i.e., an artificial throne), would be excessive. Herbert implies that earthly love is a mere painted imitation of divine love.

3. "Sudden": i.e., that appear unexpectedly (an artificial effect much sought after in landscape gardening). "Shadow": overshadow, cause to be overlooked. Herbert is suggesting that flashy dramatic effects obscure poor craftsmanship.

4. To draw a lucky card in the card game of "primero." Herbert implies that anyone who understands one of the complex poems he is describing (and parodying) has made a wild and lucky guess.

1. Expand, burgeon.

2. For sale.

Thousands of notions in my brain did run,
 Offering their service, if I were not sped:³
 I often blotted what I had begun;
 This was not quick⁴ enough, and that was dead. 10
 Nothing could seem too rich to clothe the sun,
 Much less those joys which trample on his head.⁵
 As flames do work and wind when they ascend,
 So did I weave myself into the scuse;
 But while I bustled, I might hear a friend 15
 Whisper, "How wide⁶ is all this long pretense!
 There is in love a sweetness ready penned:
 Copy out only that, and save expense."

1633

Denial

When my devotions could not pierce
 Thy silent ears;
 Then was my heart broken, as was my verse:
 My breast was full of fears
 And disorder: 5
 My bent thoughts, like a brittle bow,
 Did fly asunder:
 Each took his way; some would to pleasure go,
 Some to the wars and thunder
 Of alarms. 10
 As good go anywhere, they say,
 As to benumb
 Both knees and heart in crying night and day,
 Come, come, my God, O come!
 But no hearing. 15
 O that thou shouldst give dust a tongue
 To cry to thee,
 And then not hear it crying! All day long
 My heart was in my knee,¹
 But no hearing. 20
 Therefore my soul lay out of sight,
 Untuned, unstrung:
 My feeble spirit, unable to look right,
 Like a nipped blossom, hung
 Discontented. 25
 O cheer and tune my heartless breast;
 Defer no time,

3. Supplied, satisfied.

4. Lively, alive.

5. The "joys which trample on" the sun's head are those of the Son.

6. Irrelevant, "wide of the mark."

1. I.e., my heart was bowed and bent, like my knee, in reverence.

That so thy favors granting my request,
 They and my mind may chime,²
 And mend my rhyme.

30
 1633

Aaron

Holiness on the head,
 Light and perfections on the breast,
 Harmonious bells below, raising the dead
 To lead them unto life and rest:
 Thus are true Aarons dressed.³

5

Profaneness in my head,
 Defects and darkness in my breast,
 A noise of passions ringing me for dead
 Unto a place where is no rest:
 Poor priest, thus am I dressed.

10

Only another head
 I have, another heart and breast,
 Another music, making live, not dead,
 Without whom I could have no rest:
 In him I am well dressed.

15

Christ is my only head,
 My alone only heart and breast,
 My only music, striking me even dead,
 That to the old man I may rest,
 And be in him new dressed.⁴

20

So, holy in my head,
 Perfect and light in my dear breast,
 My doctrine tuned by Christ, who is not dead,
 But lives in me while I do rest,
 Come, people; Aaron's dressed.

25

1633

Love (III)

Love bade me welcome: yet my soul drew back,
 Guilty of dust and sin.
 But quick-eyed Love, observing me grow slack⁵
 From my first entrance in,

2. Agree. The rhyming of the last two lines, coming to restore the harmony of this stanza, illustrates Herbert's hope of harmony with God.

3. Exodus xxviii describes in great detail the garments to be worn by Aaron as high priest. Note that there are five letters in the name "Aaron," five stanzas in the poem, and five lines in each stanza.

4. As the clapper strikes the bell and makes music of it, Christ strikes the priest, killing the Old Adam (the "old man," i.e., human frailty) in him, and raising the regenerate soul.

5 Backward.

Drew nearer to me, sweetly questioning
 If I lacked anything.⁶ 5

"A guest," I answered, "worthy to be here":
 Love said, "You shall be he."
 "I, the unkind, ungrateful? Ah, my dear,
 I cannot look on thee." 10

Love took my hand, and smiling did reply,
 "Who made the eyes but I?"

"Truth, Lord; but I have marred them; let my shame Go where it doth deserve."
 "And know you not," says Love, "who bore the blame?" 15

 "My dear, then I will serve."
 "You must sit down," says Love, "and taste my meat."
 So I did sit and eat.

1633

6. The first question of shopkeepers and tavern waiters to an entering customer would be "What d'ye lack?" (i.e., want).

RICHARD CRASHAW

(ca. 1613-1649)

Richard Crashaw is a phenomenon unique in Anglo-Saxon taste; there is really no other English poet who is much like him. His roots seem to be sunk less in English literature than in Italian and neo-Latin writings. His personal background was thoroughly English (his father was a noted Puritan clergyman, and his academic training was at Cambridge), but from the first he was devoted to ritual, ceremony, and ecclesiastical exercise. This habit of mind ultimately led him out of the English church altogether, and into Roman Catholicism—the church, as many Englishmen considered it, of the scarlet woman and of Antichrist himself. But, for one of Crashaw's ardent devotional temperament, it was a natural home. In terms of chronological time, Crashaw spent only the last five or six years of his life on the Continent and in the church of Rome; but in terms of his spiritual development, he never belonged anywhere else.

Poetically, Crashaw was a follower of George Herbert, as the title of his second volume (Steps to the Temple) suggests. But the feeling one gets from the two poets is altogether different. There is a little streak of quaint and homely imagery in Herbert; Crashaw exaggerates it toward the grotesque. In this practice he was following the writers of emblem-books—volumes in which a picture with allegorical meanings stood at the head of a poem explaining those meanings. He was also influenced by a widespread school of Jesuit writers of sacred Latin epigrams, and by the great Italian writer of conceits (conceetti) Giambattista Marino, the first book of whose poem The Massacre of the Innocents Crashaw translated. All these influences—plus, of course, his own ardent temperament—pushed Crashaw toward the exploitation of far-fetched, almost perverse parallels, in which familiar physical objects not only stood for, but were sometimes distorted by, extravagant spiritual pressures. The method hardly allowed for any interest in “decorum,” in the traditional sense of tonal harmony—and that, of course, is an assumption about the proper character of poetry that has prevailed very generally, until recent times. Thus Crashaw was bitterly ridiculed during the 19th and early 20th centuries for lines like those in The Weeper, his poem on the tears of Saint Mary Magdalen:

And now where'er he strays
Among the Galilean mountains
Or more unwelcome ways,
He's followed by two faithful fountains,
Two walking baths; two weeping motions;
Portable and compendious oceans.

The ludicrous effect produced by these lines isn't open to much question, any more than is the macabre effect produced by that little epigram on Luke 11 (below). But in seeking these effects, it is evident that Crashaw was a conscious and deliberate craftsman working in an established tradition which on the Continent often goes by the name of “baroque.” Whether this term is worth importing into English literary history in order to take care of a largely isolated figure like Crashaw may be argued. Undeniably, it opens the way to make suggestive parallels, with Continental poetry and with developments in the sister arts. In any event, we of the modern world, with the violent and unresolved images of modern literature and the surrealist phantasmagoria behind us, seem better equipped to appreciate the poetry of Crashaw than readers have been for several hundred years past.

Since the image is so violent in Crashaw, the structure of his poems is often less strict than an English reader is used to; they wander from image to image, without seeming to “get anywhere.” He wrote many of his poems several times over, in differing versions; the same images and stanzas will recur, but in an entirely different order, without any sign that the poem “as a whole” (if it is a whole) has suffered in any way. For the effect at which he aims is a phantasmagoria, a blurring together of erotic and spiritual, tortured and ecstatic, infantile and sadistic themes. This doesn't preclude wit, even cheerful wit, but it's wit under the impulsion of a more consuming religious passion than English devotional writers before Gerard Manley Hopkins generally display. Like Saint Teresa of Avila, the Spanish mystic whom Crashaw admired so much, he yearned to be eaten up by the zeal of God's house—a spiritual act of faith to whose ecstatic paradoxes his best poetry does spectacular justice.

Crashaw's publications were not many. In 1634 he published a book of Sacred Epigrams in Greek and Latin; a volume titled Steps to the Temple (with Other Delights of the Muses) appeared in 1646; and in 1652, a volume published in Paris under the title of Carmen Deo Nostro collected his final writings. Some new material has since been added from manuscript collections; and Crashaw has enjoyed, of late years, a genuine revival of popular favor, after long years of hostility, neglect, and, at best, condescension.

A special feature of Crashaw's poetry, in the manuscripts as well as the printed volumes, is the styling of his poem's titles. They are elaborately constructed in different sorts of lettering, the lines piled on top of one another to create outsize typographical façades, like the weighty fronts of baroque churches. The titles to The Flaming Heart and the poem To the Countess of Denbigh are reproduced here from the 1652 edition.

The Flaming Heart Saint Teresa of Avila, a 16th-century Spanish mystic, was one of the great figures of the Catholic counter-reformation. Her autobiography, describing not only her practical problems in establishing her ascetic order of barefoot Carmelites, but a series of ecstatic trances and visions which brought her close to the Heavenly Vision itself, was immediately popular throughout all Europe. Gian Lorenzo Bernini, the great Italian sculptor and architect, created the ultimate baroque statue of Saint Teresa, which stands to this day in the church of Santa Maria della Vittoria, in Rome. It shows the saint in an attitude of ecstatic, swooning abandonment, while a somewhat juvenile seraph stands over her, in the act of plunging a golden arrow into her heart. The statue is based on a famous passage of the autobiography.

Bernini's statue was not actually unveiled till after Crashaw's death, and though the poet was in Rome and could easily have learned about the statue, or seen it by visiting Bernini's studio, there is no definite proof that he actually did so. In any case, what he says in the poem about a "picture" applies perfectly to Bernini's statue: the seraph is a weak and childish figure, the saint an embodiment of sensual and religious passion. The reversal of roles with which the poet plays in the first part of his poem makes an effective literary game; but it isn't clear what sort of picture or statue would express his preferred conception of the saint. What excites him—and Bernini too, for that matter—is the moment of total absorption in the divine, the ecstatic union. For Puritans this is too fleshly an experience to be sacred, but for those who respond to imaginative challenge, holding these two elements in balance is a special and perilous delight.

The Flaming Heart
Vpon the Book and picture of the seraphicall saint

TERESA, (AS SHE IS VSVALLY EXpressed with a SERAPHIM
bisode her.)¹

Well-meaning readers! you that come as friends,
And catch the precious name this piece pretends;²
Make not too much haste to admire
That fair-cheeked fallacy of fire.

1. Crashaw does not know (or perhaps care) that "seraphim" is the plural form of the singular "seraph"; "seraphs" are distinguished among angels by dwelling continually in the fire of divine love.

2. Puts forward.

That is a Seraphim, they say, 5
 And this the great Teresia.
 Readers, be ruled by me, and make
 Here a well-placed and wise mistake:
 You must transpose the picture quite
 And spell it wrong to read it right; 10
 Read him for her and her for him,
 And call the Saint the Seraphim.

Painter, what didst thou understand,
 To put her dart into his hand!
 See, even the years and size of him 15
 Shows this the Mother Seraphim.
 This is the mistress-flame; and duteous he,
 Her happy fire-works here comes down to see.
 O most poor-spirited of men!
 Had thy cold pencil kissed her pen³ 20
 Thou couldst not so unkindly err
 To show us this faint shade for her.
 Why, man, this speaks pure mortal frame,
 And mocks with female frost love's manly frame.
 One would suspect thou mean'st to paint 25
 Some weak, inferior, woman saint.
 But had thy pale-faced purple took
 Fire from the burning cheeks of that bright book,
 Thou wouldst on her have heaped up all
 That could be found seraphical: 30
 Whate'er this youth of fire wears fair,
 Rosy fingers, radiant hair,
 Glowing cheek and glistering wings,
 All those fair and flagrant⁴ things,
 But before all, that fiery dart 35
 Had filled the hand of this great heart.

Do then as equal right requires,
 Since his the blushes be, and hers the fires,
 Resume and rectify thy rude design,
 Undress thy seraphim into mine. 40
 Redeem this injury of thy art,
 Give him the veil, give her the dart.

Give him the veil, that he may cover
 The red cheeks of a rivaled lover,
 Ashamed that our world now can show 45
 Nests of new Seraphims here below.⁵

Give her the dart, for it is she (Fair youth) shoots both thy shaft and thee.
 Say, all ye wise and well-pierced hearts
 That live and die amidst her darts, 50
 What is it your tasteful spirits do prove

3. I.e., if you'd only been properly inspired by her book.

4. Burning (from Latin flagrare).

5. Teresa burns on earth in the element of fire, as seraphim do in heaven.

In that rare life of her and love?
 Say and bear witness. Sends she not
 A Seraphim at every shot?
 What magazines of immortal arms there shine! 55
 Heaven's great artillery in each love-spun line.
 Give then the dart to her who gives the flame,
 Give him the veil who kindly takes the shame.
 But if it be the frequent fate
 Of worst faults to be fortunate; 60
 If all's prescription, and proud wrong
 Harkens not to an humble song,
 For all the gallantry of him,
 Give me the suffering Seraphim.⁶
 His be the bravery of all those bright things, 65
 The glowing cheeks, the glistering wings,
 The rosy hand, the radiant dart;
 Leave her alone the Flaming Heart.
 Leave her that, and thou shalt leave her
 Not one loose shaft, but love's whole quiver. 70
 For in love's field was never found
 A nobler weapon than a wound.
 Love's passives are his activ'st part,
 The wounded is the wounding heart.
 O heart! the equal poise of love's both parts, 75
 Big alike with wounds and darts,
 Live in these conquering leaves,⁷ live all the same;
 And walk through all tongues one triumphant flame.
 Live here, great heart; and love and die and kill,
 And bleed and wound; and yield and conquer still. 80
 Let this immortal life, where'er it comes,
 Walk in a crowd of loves and martyrdoms.
 Let mystic deaths wait on 't, and wise souls be
 The love-slain witnesses of this life of thee:
 O sweet incendiary! show here thy art, 85
 Upon this carcass of a hard, cold heart;⁸
 Let all thy scattered shafts of light, that play
 Among the leaves of thy large books of day,⁹ Combined against this breast, at once break in
 And take away from me myself and sin!
 This gracious robbery shall thy bounty be, 90
 And my best fortunes such fair spoils of me.¹
 O thou undaunted daughter of desires!
 By all thy dower of lights and fires;
 By all the eagle in thee, all the dove;²

6. If Teresa can't be transformed into the angel, as he would like, Crashaw still prefers her as the "suffering Seraphim."

7. I.e., the leaves of St. Teresa's book.

8. After being Saint Teresa's, the heart is now Crashaw's.

9. Books filled with intellectual and spiritual light.

1. I.e., my best fortune will be to be despoiled in this way.

2. The eagle symbolizes wisdom, for its lofty flight and ability to look into the sun's eye; the dove symbolizes mercy. Cf. Donne's Canonization, line 22.

By all thy lives and deaths of love; 95
 By thy large draughts of intellectual day,
 And by thy thirsts of love more large than they;
 By all thy brim-filled bowls of fierce desire,
 By thy last morning's draught of liquid fire; 100
 By the full kingdom of that final kiss
 That seized thy parting soul, and sealed thee His;
 By all the heavens thou hast in Him,
 Fair sister of the seraphim,
 By all of Him we have in thee, 105
 Leave nothing of myself in me!
 Let me so read thy life that I
 Unto all life of mine may die!

1652

Non Vi.¹

*'Tis not the work of force but skill
 To find the way into man's will.
 'Tis loue alone can hearts unlock.
 Who knowes the WORD, he needs not knock.*

To the Noblest & best of Ladyes,
 the Countesse of Denbigh.

Perswading her to Resolution in Religion,
 & to render her selfe without further delay into the Communion of the Catholick Church.²

1. Not by force. The emblem, which expresses a moral question and answer through a picture and appended poem, was popular throughout Europe in the late Renaissance. The heart here has a hinge on the right to show that it can be opened, but it is sealed on the left with a scroll or phylactery inscribed with certain Biblical phrases, standing for the Word or the Law. Only knowledge of the Word enables one to open the heart.

2. Lords and ladies with religious doubts and scruples were the object of tremendous attention during the 17th century. Anxious conferences were held, with priests of all faiths eager to put their views before a possible influential convert; accounts of these conferences were published, disputed, analyzed, and pre-

What heaven-entreated heart is this,
 Stands trembling at the gate of bliss,
 Holds fast the door, yet dares not venture
 Fairly to open it, and enter?
 Whose definition is a doubt 5
 'Twixt life and death, 'twixt in and out.
 Say, lingering fair! why comes the birth
 Of your brave soul so slowly forth?
 Plead your pretenses (O you strong
 In weakness!) why you choose so long 10
 In labor of your self to lie,
 Not daring quite to live nor die.
 Ah, linger not, loved soul! a slow
 And late consent was a long no;
 Who grants at last, long time tried, 15
 And did his best to have denied.
 What magic bolts, what mystic bars,
 Maintain the will in these strange wars!
 What fatal yet fantastic bands
 Keep the free heart from its own hands! 20
 So when the year takes cold, we see
 Poor waters their own prisoners be.
 Fettered and locked up fast they lie
 In a sad self-captivity.
 Th' astonished nymphs their flood's strange fate deplore, 25
 To see themselves their own severer shore.
 Thou that alone canst thaw this cold,
 And fetch the heart from its stronghold,
 Almighty Love! end this long war,
 And of a meteor make a star. 30
 O fix this fair Indefinite;
 And 'mongst thy shafts of sovereign light
 Choose out that sure decisive dart
 Which has the key of this close heart,
 Knows all the corners of 't, and can control 35
 The self-shut cabinet of an unsearched soul.
 O let it be at last love's hour!
 Raise this tall trophy of thy power;
 Come once the conquering way, not to confute,
 But kill this rebel-word, irresolute, 40
 That so, in spite of all this peevish strength
 Of weakness, she may write, resolved at length.
 Unfold at length, unfold, fair flower,
 And use the season of love's shower.

sented to the perplexed for their guidance. Susan, Countess of Denbigh, had been widowed in 1643, when her husband was killed fighting for the king; she had gone with the queen to Paris in 1644. and there, in a thoroughly Catholic environment, had begun contemplating conversion. The queen was a lifelong Catholic, Crashaw, though simply another member of the court in exile, was a new convert; pressure on the lady was therefore very strong to abjure her Anglicanism. As is his wont, Crashaw uses all the imagery of erotic persuasion in urging the Countess to "yield the fort and let life in."

Meet his well-meaning wounds, wise heart, 45
 And haste to drink the wholesome dart,
 That healing shaft which heaven till now
 Hath in love's quiver hid for you.
 O dart of love! arrow of light!
 O happy you, if it hit right; 50
 It must not fall in vain, it must
 Not mark the dry, regardless dust.
 Fair one, it is your fate, and brings
 Eternal worlds upon its wings.
 Meet it with wide-spread arms, and see 55
 Its seat your soul's just center be.
 Disband dull fears; give faith the day.
 To save your life, kill your delay.
 It is love's siege, and sure to be
 Your triumph, though his victory. 60
 'Tis cowardice that keeps this field,
 And want of courage not to yield.
 Yield, then, O yield, that love may win
 The fort at last, and let life in.
 Yield quickly, lest perhaps you prove 65
 Death's prey before the prize of love.
 This fort of your fair self, if 't be not won,
 He is repulsed indeed; but you are undone.
 1652

On Our Crucified Lord, Naked and Bloody

Th' have left Thee naked, Lord, O that they had;
 This garment too I would they had denied.
 Thee with Thyself they have too richly clad,
 Opening the purple wardrobe of Thy side.
 O never could be found garments too good 5
 For Thee to wear, but these, of Thine own blood.
 1646

To the Infant Martyrs¹

Go, smiling souls, your new-built cages² break,
 In heaven you'll learn to sing, ere here to speak,
 Nor let the milky fonts that bathe your thirst
 Be your delay;
 The place that calls you hence is, at the worst, 5
 Milk all the way.³
 1646

1. This poem, and the five which follow, were originally published in Latin, as sacred epigrams; but also appeared in Steps to the Temple, translated into English.

2. I.e., the bodies which confine them to an earthly existence.

3. The Milky Way will replace their mothers' milk, at the worst; at best, they may rise even higher in the heavens.

I Am the Door

And now Th' art set wide ope, the spear's sad art,
Lo! hath unlocked Thee at the very heart;

He to himself (I fear the worst)

And his own hope

Hath shut these doors of heaven, that durst

Thus set them ope.

5

1646

Luke 11

Blessed be the paps which Thou hast sucked.

Suppose He had been tabled at thy teats,

Thy hunger feels not what He eats;

He'll have his teat ere long (a bloody one),

The Mother then must suck the Son.

1646

Upon the Infant Martyrs

To see both blended in one flood,

The mothers' milk, the children's blood,

Make me doubt if heaven will gather

Roses hence, or lilies rather.

1646

Luke 7

She began to wash His feet with tears and wipe them with the hairs of her head.

Her eyes' flood licks His feet's fair stain,

Her hairs' flame licks that up again.

This flame thus quenched hath brighter beams;

This flood thus stained fairer streams.

1646

On the Wounds of Our Crucified Lord

O these wakeful wounds of Thine!

Are they mouths? or are they eyes?

Be they mouths, or be they eyne,¹

Each bleeding part some one supplies.²

Lo! a mouth, whose full-bloomed lips

At too dear a rate are roses.

5

1. An old plural form of "eyes."

2. I.e., each wound of Christ's supplies either an eye or a mouth.

Lo! a bloodshot eye! that weeps
And many a cruel tear discloses.

O thou that on this foot hast laid
Many a kiss and many a tear, 10
Now thou shalt have all repaid,
Whatsoe'er thy charges were.

This foot hath got a mouth and lips
To pay the sweet sum of thy kisses;
To pay thy tears, an eye that weeps 15
Instead of tears such gems as this is.

The difference only this appears
(Nor can the change offend),
The debt is paid in ruby-tears
Which thou in pearls didst lend. 20

1646

HENRY VAUGHAN

(1621-1695)

The doctrines of mystic correspondence (that is, of analogical relations between the world of creatures and the world of spirits), which had been publicly accepted philosophy during the Middle Ages, and which the genius of Donne had daringly revitalized in the late 16th century, faded during the 17th century before the rising rationalism and materialism which culminated in Hobbes, Locke, and Newton. One of the last figures to give full-voiced expression to it was a Welsh country doctor with special interest in the occult, Henry Vaughan.

Like Herrick, Vaughan enjoyed only a brief interlude of poetry in his long life. His career as a student at Oxford was interrupted by the civil wars, in which he took a brief part on the king's side. But after the royal defeat, he retired to his native Wales and began to practice medicine—as men could do in those days, without many preliminaries. (A treatise of Hermetical Physic, which he published in 1655, is reproduced in L. C. Martin's edition of Vaughan's Works, Vol. II; it gives some curious notions of his medical practice. But fortunately the Welsh are by nature a sturdy race.) In 1650 he published a thin volume of verse titled Silex Scintillans, The Fiery Flint; this was followed immediately by a second book called Olor Iscanus, or The Swan of Usk (1651). Both titles make rather erudite reference to Vaughan's Welsh ancestry and habitat: Wales is rough, rocky country, the home of hard men as well as of flinty hearts; and Usk is a little brook that flows near Vaughan's native town of Scethrog hard by Llansantffraed. Silex Scintillans was reprinted in 1655, with the addition of a second part—and that was, effectually, Vaughan's poetic career.

The major influences on Vaughan were evidently two. George Herbert's poetry made a great impression on the poet, and his verses are full of echoes from The Temple. More remarkably, Vaughan's twin brother Thomas was an esoteric, hermetic philosopher, an alchemist and a student of the occult correspondences of things. Vaughan's poems often imply some knowledge of these "secret doctrines" of the alchemical philosophers—doctrines in which folklore, sympathetic magic, religion, and the rudiments of scientific method rub elbows under the aegis of the mythical Egyptian teacher Hermes Trismegistus.

But though they are "occult" in their undertones and overtones, Vaughan's best poems are direct and untangled in their expression. They tend to start with a brilliant phrase or set of phrases and trail off into relatively prosaic meditations. Sparkles of poetic brightness attend most of his writings; but they glow irregularly and fade under the unsteady breath of the poet's personal inspiration. When that inspiration is up, he sees, or tries to see, through the veil of things, to the spiritual quick of life lying just under its commonplace, material surface. There is a kind of silver-gray purity in Vaughan's finest work, which, though comparable to Herbert's and tangibly influenced by it, is more nervous and restive, more apt to dissolve the physical book under our hands (as his last poem does), turning it into the living mind and immediate soul of a man.

The Retreat

Happy those early days! when I
 Shined in my angel infancy.
 Before I understood this place
 Appointed for my second race,¹
 Or taught my soul to fancy aught 5
 But a white, celestial thought;
 When yet I had not walked above
 A mile or two from my first love,
 And looking back, at that short space,
 Could see a glimpse of His bright face; 10
 When on some gilded cloud or flower
 My gazing soul would dwell an hour,
 And in those weaker glories spy
 Some shadows of eternity;
 Before I taught my tongue to wound 15
 My conscience with a sinful sound,
 Or had the black art to dispense
 A several² sin to every sense,
 But felt through all this fleshly dress
 Bright shoots of everlastingness. 20
 O, how I long to travel back,
 And tread again that ancient track!
 That I might once more reach that plain

1. The "second race" suggests, dimly, a doctrine of pre-existence. Comparisons are often made with Wordsworth's Ode:

Intimations of Immortality.
 2. Different.

Where first I left my glorious train,
 From whence th' enlightened spirit sees 25
 That shady city of palm trees.³
 But, ah! my soul with too much stay⁴
 Is drunk, and staggers in the way.
 Some men a forward motion love;
 But I by backward steps would move, 30
 And when this dust falls to the urn,
 In that state I came, return.

1650

Regeneration

A ward, and still in bonds, one day
 I stole abroad;
 It was high spring, and all the way
 Primrosed and hung with shade;
 Yet was it frost within, 5
 And surly winds
 Blasted my infant buds, and sin
 Like clouds eclipsed my mind.
 Stormed thus, I straight perceived my spring
 Mere stage and show, 10
 My walk a monstrous, mountained thing,
 Roughcast with rocks and snow;
 And as a pilgrim's eye,
 Far from relief,
 Measures the melancholy sky, 15
 Then drops and rains for grief,
 So sighed I upwards still; at last
 'Twixt steps and falls
 I reached the pinnacle, where placed
 I found a pair of scales; 20
 I took them up and laid
 In th' one, late pains;
 The other smoke and pleasures weighed,
 But proved the heavier grains.¹
 With that some cried, "Away!" Straight I 25
 Obeyed, and led
 Full cast, a fair, fresh field could spy;
 Some called it Jacob's bed,²
 A virgin soil which no

3. The New Jerusalem, the Heavenly City (see Deuteronomy xxxiv.3).

4. Delay.

1. Vaughan's spiritual adventure can only be described darkly. After his purgatorial ascent, smoke and pleasures prove heavier than "late pains"; i.e., the vanity of his mind outweighs its recent turning to repentance.

2. Jacob, who wrestled with an angel and ascended directly to heaven on a ladder, is here a type of the mystical visionary.

Rude feet ere trod, 30
 Where, since he stepped there, only go
 Prophets and friends of God.
 Here I reposed; but scarce well set,
 A grove descried
 Of stately height, whose branches met 35
 And mixed on every side;
 I entered, and once in,
 Amazed to see 't,
 Found all was changed, and a new spring
 Did all my senses greet. 40
 The unthrift sun shot vital gold,
 A thousand pieces,
 And heaven its azure did unfold,
 Checkered with snowy fleeces;
 The air was all in spice, 45
 And every bush
 A garland wore; thus fed my eyes,
 But all the ear lay hush.³
 Only a little fountain lent
 Some use for ears, 50
 And on the dumb shades language spent,
 The music of her tears;
 I drew her near, and found
 The cistern full
 Of divers stones, some bright and round, 55
 Others ill-shaped and dull.⁴
 The first, pray mark, as quick as light
 Danced through the flood,
 But the last, more heavy than the night,
 Nailed to the center stood; 60
 I wondered much, but tired
 At last with thought,
 My restless eye that still desired
 As strange an object brought.
 It was a bank of flowers, where I descried, 65
 Though 'twas midday,
 Some fast asleep, others broad-eyed
 And taking in the ray;
 Here, musing long, I heard
 A rushing wind 70
 Which still increased, but whence it stirred
 No where I could not find.

3. Quiet.

4. The stones may be thoughts, images, and concepts in the "little fountain" of inspiration; the imagery is no doubt tinged with alchemical symbolism, as well.

I turned me round, and to each shade
 Dispatched an eye

To see if any leaf had made

75

Least motion or reply,

But while I listening sought

My mind to ease

By knowing where 'twas, or where not,

It whispered, "Where I please."⁵

80

"Lord," then said I, "on me one breath,
 And let me die before my death!"

1650

Corruption

Sure it was so. Man in those early days

Was not all stone and earth;

He shined a little, and by those weak rays

Had some glimpse of his birth.

He saw heaven o'er his head, and knew from whence

5

He came, condemned, hither;

And, as first love draws strongest, so from hence

His mind sure progressed thither.

Things here were strange unto him: sweat and till,

All was a thorn or weed:

10

Nor did those last, but (like himself) died still

As soon as they did seed.

They seemed to quarrel with him, for that act

That felled him foiled them all:

He drew the curse upon the world, and cracked

15

The whole frame with his fall.¹

This made him long for home, as loath to stay

With murmurers and foes;

He sighed for Eden, and would often say,

"Ah! what bright days were those!"

20

Nor was heaven cold unto him; for each day

The valley or the mountain

Afforded visits, and still paradise lay

In some green shade or fountain.

Angels lay *leiger*² here; each bush and cell,

25

Each oak and highway knew them;

Walk but the fields, or sit down at some well,

And he was sure to view them.

Almighty Love! where art Thou now? Mad man

5. John iii.8: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Cf. also the inspiring breath by which God breathed life into man (Genesis ii.7).

1. Compare Paradise Lost X.650 ff.

2. As resident ambassadors (from heaven).

Sits down and freezeth on; 30
 He raves, and swears to stir nor fire, nor fan,
 But bids the thread be spun.³
 I see, Thy curtains are close-drawn; Thy bow
 Looks dim, too, in the cloud;
 Sin triumphs still, and man is sunk below 35
 The center, and his shroud.
 All's in deep sleep and night: thick darkness lies
 And hatcheth o'er Thy people—
 But hark! what trumpet's that? what angel cries,
 "Arise! thrust in Thy sickle"?⁴ 40 1650

The World

I saw eternity the other night
 Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
 All calm as it was bright;
 And round beneath it, Time, in hours, days, years,
 Driven by the spheres,¹ 5
 Like a vast shadow moved, in which the world
 And all her train were hurled.
 The doting lover in his quaintest² strain
 Did there complain;
 Near him, his lute, his fancy, and his flights,³ 10
 Wit's sour delights,
 With gloves and knots,⁴ the silly snares of pleasure,
 Yet his dear treasure,
 All scattered lay, while he his eyes did pour
 Upon a flower. 15
 The darksome statesman, hung with weights and woe,
 Like a thick midnight fog, moved there so slow
 He did nor stay nor go;
 Condemning thoughts, like sad eclipses, scowl
 Upon his soul, 20
 And clouds of crying witnesses without Pursued him with one shout.
 Yet digged the mole, and, lest his ways be found,
 Worked underground,
 Where he did clutch his prey. But One did see 25
 That policy:⁵

3. Man is willing to do none of the work of salvation, but expects all the rewards.

4. Revelation xiv.15: "And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, 'Thrust in thy sickle and reap * * *'" The time to harvest is now.

1. The concentric spheres of Ptolemaic astronomy.

2. Most elaborate.

3. Light arrows, as used by Cupid.

4. Love knots.

5. Strategy. The "mole" (i.e., the "darksome statesman," line 16) worked underground to avoid detection: but He who marks the fall of a sparrow was not deceived.

Churches and altars fed him; perjuries
 Were gnats and flies;
 It rained about him blood and tears; but he Drank them as free.⁶

30

The fearful miser on a heap of rust
 Sat pining all his life there, did scarce trust
 His own hands with the dust;
 Yet would not place⁷ one piece above, but lives
 In fear of thieves.

35

Thousands there were as frantic as himself,
 And hugged each one his pelf:
 The downright epicure placed heaven in sense,⁸
 And scorned pretense;
 While others, slipped into a wide excess,
 Said little less;
 The weaker sort, slight, trivial wares enslave,
 Who think them brave;⁹
 And poor, despised Truth sat counting by¹
 Their victory.

40

45

Yet some, who all this while did weep and sing,
 And sing and weep, soared up into the ring;
 But most would use no wing.

"O fools!" said I, "thus to prefer dark night
 Before true light!

50

To live in grots and caves, and hate the day
 Because it shows the way,
 The way which from this dead and dark abode
 Leads up to God,

A way where you might tread the sun and be
 More bright than he!"

55

But, as I did their madness so discuss,
 One whispered thus:

"This ring the bridegroom did for none provide,
 But for His bride."²

60

1652

1650

They Are All Gone into the World of Light!

They are all gone into the world of light!
 And I alone sit lingering here;
 Their very memory is fair and bright,
 And my sad thoughts doth clear.¹

It glows and glitters in my cloudy breast
 Like stars upon some gloomy grove,

5

6. I.e., as freely as they rained.

7. Invest.

8. Found his heaven in the senses.

9. Fine, flashy.

1. Watching.

2. See Revelation xix.7-9 and xxi for the marriage of the Lamb and the bride (Christ and His church).

1. Brighten.

Or those faint beams in which this hill is dressed
 After the sun's remove.

I see them walking in an air of glory,
 Whose light doth trample on my days; 10
 My days, which are at best but dull and hoary,
 Mere glimmering and decays.

O holy hope, and high humility,
 High as the heavens above!
 These are your walks, and you have showed them me 15
 To kindle my cold love.

Dear, beauteous death! the jewel of the just,
 Shining nowhere but in the dark;
 What mysteries do lie beyond thy dust,
 Could man outlook that mark! 20

He that hath found some fledged bird's nest may know
 At first sight if the bird be flown;
 But what fair well³ or grove he sings in now,
 That is to him unknown.

And yet, as angels in some brighter dreams 25
 Call to the soul when man doth sleep,
 So some strange thoughts transcend our wonted themes,
 And into glory peep.

If a star were confined into a tomb,
 Her captive flames must needs burn there; 30
 But when the hand that locked her up gives room,
 She'll shine through all the sphere.

O Father of eternal life, and all
 Created glories under Thee!
 Resume Thy spirit from this world of thrall⁴ 35
 Into true liberty!

Either disperse these mists, which blot and fill
 My perspective⁵ still as they pass;
 Or else remove me hence unto that hill⁶
 Where I shall need no glass. 40

1655

Man

Weighing the steadfastness and state
 Of some mean things which here below reside,
 Where birds, like watchful clocks, the noiseless date
 And intercourse of times divide,
 Where bees at night get home and hive, and flowers, 5

2. Limit.

3. Spring.

4. I.e., take back the spirit which you have made from this world of slavery.

5. Literally, "telescope," but more freely, "distant vision."

6. Sion hill (figuratively, Abraham's bosom).

Early as well as late,
Rise with the sun and set in the same bowers;

I would (said I) my God would give
The staidness of these things to man! for these
To His divine appointments ever cleave,

And no new business breaks their peace;
The birds nor sow nor reap, yet sup and dine;

The flowers without clothes live,
Yet Solomon was never dressed so fine.¹

Man hath still either toys or care;²
He hath no root, nor to one place is tied,
But ever restless and irregular

About this earth doth run and ride.
He knows he hath a home, but scarce knows where;

He says it is so far
That he hath quite forgot how to go there.

He knocks at all doors, strays and roams,
Nay, hath not so much wit as some stones³ have,
Which in the darkest nights point to their homes,

By some hid sense their Maker gave;
Man is the shuttle, to whose winding quest

And passage through these looms
God ordered motion, but ordained no rest.

1650

Silence and Stealth of Days!

Silence and stealth of days! 'tis now
Since thou art gone¹

Twelve hundred hours, and not a brow
But clouds hang on.

As he that in some cave's thick damp,
Locked from the light,

Fixeth a solitary lamp
To brave the night,

And walking from his sun, when past
That glimmering ray,

Cuts through the heavy mists in haste
Back to his day,²

So o'er fled minutes I retreat
Unto that hour

Which showed thee last, but did defeat
Thy light and power;

I search and rack my soul to see

1. Cf. Matthew vi.26-29.

2. Diversions or grief.

3. Loadstones.

1. As indicated below, lines 27-28, the poem is on the loss of Vaughan's brother—not his twin brother Thomas, the hermetic philosopher, who did not die till 1666, but his younger brother William, who died in July, 1648.

2. The miner fixes his lamp halfway down the dark shaft, ventures a little beyond it, but then beats a hasty retreat.

Those beams again,
 But nothing but the snuff³ to me
 Appeareth plain, 20
 That dark and dead sleeps in its known
 And common urn;
 But those⁴ fled to their maker's throne,
 There shine and burn.
 O could I track them! but souls must 25
 Track one the other,
 And now the spirit, not the dust,
 Must be thy brother.
 Yet I have one Pearl,⁵ by whose light
 All things I see, 30
 And in the heart of earth and night,
 Find heaven and thee.
 1655

Unprofitableness

How rich, O Lord! how fresh thy visits are!
 'Twas but just now my bleak leaves hopeless hung,
 Sullied with dust and mud;
 Each snarling blast shot through me, and did share¹
 Their youth and beauty; cold showers nipped and wrung 5
 Their spiciness and blood.
 But since thou didst in one sweet glance survey
 Their sad decays, I flourish, and once more
 Breathe all perfumes and spice;
 I smell a dew like myrrh, and all the day 10
 Wear in my bosom a full sun; such store
 Hath one beam from thy eyes.
 But, ah, my God! what fruit hast thou of this?
 What one poor leaf did ever I let² fall
 To wait upon thy wreath? 15
 Thus thou all day a thankless weed dost dress,
 And when th' hast done, a stench or fog is all
 The odor I bequeath.
 1650

3. The wick of the lamp; also, metaphorically, the bodily form of the brother.

4. The reference is back to "light and power."

5. The Bible.

1. Cut away; the word "share" derives from, and is here used for, "shear."

2. The original printed text reads "yet"; corrected to avoid a strained construction.

ANDREW MARVELL

(1621-1678)

Andrew Marvell was one of those quiet men of wit and spirit whose voices generally go unheard during the storm and turmoil of revolution. He attended Cambridge; but after graduating B.A. in 1638 and traveling abroad for some years, he disappears from the biographer's view, turning up around 1650 as tutor to the daughter of Sir Thomas Fairfax, Lord-General of the Parliamentary forces. Here, at the family seat in Yorkshire, Nun Appleton House, Marvell seems to have written many if not most of his English poems. They are playful miniatures, for the most part, which display a genius for catching in a phrase some glancing overtone of serious, almost profound, reflection. Yet their learning, like their serious intent, is hidden beneath a graceful, humorous surface, and they suggest that Marvell must have been a delightful tutor to the little girl who was growing up to be the daughter of a great house.

In 1657 Marvell was appointed assistant to the blind Latin Secretary for the Commonwealth, John Milton; and in his quiet way, he seems to have been responsible after the Restoration for saving Milton from imprisonment and possible execution. Starting in 1659, Marvell was returned M.P. for his home town of Hull, and he continued to represent it in a businesslike way until his death. He was a good committee man, though not a public speaker, and devoted to the interests of Hull. His letters to his constituents are valuable historical documents; but one would never guess from reading them that their author was an accomplished poet.

And in fact, when Marvell died, he was known to the world simply as the author of a few rough-and-ready satires in prose and verse which had been printed during the Restoration. His "serious" verse was only published three years after his death, by a woman who gave herself out as his widow but had really been his housekeeper. The reputation of these poems has made its way slowly, but steadily; and it has never stood higher than in our own time. For it is now clear that Marvell's is the most major minor verse in English. Playful, casual, and witty in tone, always light on its metrical feet and exact in its diction, it displays depth and intellectual hardness in unexpected places; its texture is extraordinarily rich. For example, the four poems about a mower seem almost to mock the tiny, conventional figures of Damon the susceptible mower and his hardhearted girl Juliana. They are conventional figures, and Damon voices the conventional complaints about her chilly responses to his ardent proposals. Yet the poems move so persistently and allusively around the old metaphor that all flesh is grass that we can hardly avoid sensing the presence of those other sinister scythemen, Old Father Time and the Grim Reaper. The poems have no more unity than is implied in the phrase "variations on a theme"; but their combination of a light touch, a view of mockery, and the shadow of a dark thought is perfectly Marvellian.

To His Coy Mistress

seduction, escape them
if... but... therefore.

Had we but world enough, and time,
 This coyness, lady, were no crime.
 We would sit down, and think which way
 To walk, and pass our long love's day.
 Thou by the Indian Ganges' side
 Shouldst rubies find; I by the tide
 Of Humber would complain.¹ I would Love you ten years before the flood,
 And you should, if you please, refuse
 Till the conversion of the Jews.²
 My vegetable love should grow
 Vaster than empires and more slow;
 An hundred years should go to praise
 Thine eyes, and on thy forehead gaze;
 Two hundred to adore each breast,
 But thirty thousand to the rest;
 An age at least to every part,
 And the last age should show your heart.
 For, lady, you deserve this state,³
 Nor would I love at lower rate.

But at my back I always hear
 Time's winged chariot hurrying near;
 And yonder all before us lie
 Deserts of vast eternity.

Thy beauty shall no more be found,
 Nor, in thy marble vault, shall sound
 My echoing song; then worms shall try
 That long-preserved virginity,
 And your quaint honor turn to dust,
 And into ashes all my lust:
 The grave's a fine and private place,
 But none, I think, do there embrace.

Now therefore, while the youthful hue
 Sits on thy skin like morning dew,⁴
 And while thy willing soul transpires⁵
 At every pore with instant fires,
 Now let us sport us while we may,
 And now, like amorous birds of prey,
 Rather at once our time devour
 Than languish in his slow-chapped⁶ power.

1. Compared to the gorgeous Oriental Ganges, the Humber (which flows past Marvell's home town of Hull) is a muddy estuary, where one is more likely to encounter herring-boats and coal scows than rubies. "Complain" implies ditties of plaintive, unavailing love.

2. According to popular chronology, the Jews were to be converted just before the Last Judgment.

3. Dignity.

4. The text reads "glew"—an odious reading. "Lew" (meaning "warmth") has also been suggested, but it was obsolete long before Marvell wrote.

5. Breathes forth. "Instant fires": immediate, present enthusiasm.

6. Slow-jawed. Time is envisaged as slowly chewing up the world and the people in it.

5

15

20

25

30

35

40

Let us roll all our strength and all
 Our sweetness up into one ball,
 And tear our pleasures with rough strife
 Thorough the iron gates of life:
 Thus, though we cannot make our sun
 Stand still, yet we will make him run.⁷

metaph

45 person

1681

The Garden

How vainly men themselves amaze
 To win the palm, the oak, or bays,¹
 And their incessant labors see
 Crowned from some single herb, or tree,
 Whose short and narrow-verged shade
 Does prudently their toils upbraid;
 While all flowers and all trees do close²
 To weave the garlands of repose!

5

Fair Quiet, have I found thee here,
 And Innocence, thy sister dear?
 Mistaken long, I sought you then
 In busy companies of men.
 Your sacred plants, if here below,
 Only among the plants will grow;
 Society is all but rude
 To this delicious solitude.

10

15

mixes of sylphs and

No white nor red was ever seen
 So amorous as this lovely green.
 Fond lovers, cruel as their flame, simple
 Cut in these trees their mistress' name:
 Little, alas, they know or heed
 How far these beauties hers exceed!
 Fair trees, wheresoe'er your barks I wound,
 No name shall but your own be found.³

20

When we have run our passion's heat,
 Love hither makes his best retreat.
 The gods, that mortal beauty chase,
 Still in a tree did end their race:
 Apollo hunted Daphne so,
 Only that she might laurel grow;⁴

25

30

7. In the final lines, lover and mistress triumphantly reverse their relation to time, eating it avidly like birds of prey instead of being eaten by it, forcing the sun to race after them instead of fruitlessly imploring it to stand still.

1. Crowns, respectively, for athletics, civic merit, and poetry. "Amaze": bewilder.

2. Unite.

3. Marvell proposes to carve on the bark of trees, not "Sylvia" or "Laura," but "Beech" and "Oak."

4. Ovid tells (in Metamorphoses) how Apollo hunted Daphne until she turned into a laurel, and how Pan pursued Syrinx until she became a reed, out of which he made Panpipes.

And Pan did after Syrinx speed,
Not as a nymph, but for a reed.

What wondrous life is this I lead!
Ripe apples drop about my head;
The luscious clusters of the vine
Upon my mouth do crush their wine;
The nectarine and curious⁵ peach
Into my hands themselves do reach;
Stumbling on melons, as I pass,
Insnares with flowers, I fall on grass. 35 40

Meanwhile the mind, from pleasure less,⁶
Withdraws into its happiness;
The mind, that ocean where each kind
Does straight its own resemblance find;⁷
Yet it creates, transcending these, 45
Far other worlds and other seas,
Annihilating all that's made
To a green thought in a green shade.⁸

Here at the fountain's sliding foot,
Or at some fruit tree's mossy root,
Casting the body's vest⁹ aside,
My soul into the boughs does glide:
There, like a bird, it sits and sings,
Then whets¹ and combs its silver wings,
And, till prepared for longer flight, 55
Waves in its plumes the various light.²

Such was that happy garden-state,
While man there walked without a mate: between above to begin
After a place so pure and sweet,
What other help could yet be meet!³ 60
But 'twas beyond a mortal's share
To wander solitary there:
Two paradises 'twere in one
To live in paradise alone.

How well the skillful gardener drew 65
Of flowers and herbs this dial⁴ new,
Where, from above, the milder sun

5. Exquisite.

6. Diminished and drawn in on itself to savor the pleasure.

7. Every creature on earth was popularly supposed to have its counterpart in the ocean; thus the mind is an ocean because it contains a counterpart to everything on earth.

8. The garden is a symbol of the contemplative life as contrasted with the active life; and green, distinguished from the white of innocence and the red of passion (line 17), connotes a way of life which is cool and detached from human concerns.

9. Vestment, garment.

1. Preen.

2. The many-colored light of this world, contrasted with the white radiance of eternity.

3. Genesis ii.18 records the Lord's decision to make "an help meet" for Adam—i.e., Eve.

4. Clock. While the growth and decline of the garden measure the passage of time, the sun, a milder clock, runs through the zodiac, or constellation of the seasons.

Does through a fragrant zodiac run;
 And as it works, th' industrious bee
 Computes its time as well as we!
 How could such sweet and wholesome hours
 Be reckoned but with herbs and flowers?

70

1681

The Mower, Against Gardens

Luxurious man,¹ to bring his vice in use,
 Did after him the world seduce,
 And from the fields the flowers and plants allure,
 Where Nature was most plain and pure.
 He first enclosed within the gardens square
 A dead and standing pool of air,
 And a more luscious earth for them did knead,
 Which stupefied them while it fed.
 The pink grew then as double as his mind;²
 The nutriment did change the kind.
 With strange perfumes he did the roses taint;
 And flowers themselves were taught to paint.
 The tulip white did for complexion seek,
 And learned to interline its cheek;
 Its onion root they then so high did hold,
 That one was for a meadow sold:³
 Another world was searched through oceans new,
 To find the marvel of Peru;⁴
 And yet these rarities might be allowed
 To man, that sovereign thing and proud,
 Had he not dealt between the bark and tree,⁵
 Forbidden mixtures there to see.
 No plant now knew the stock from which it came;
 He grafts upon the wild the tame,
 That the uncertain and adulterate fruit
 Might put the palate in dispute.
 His green seraglio has its eunuchs too,
 Lest any tyrant him outdo;
 And in the cherry he does Nature vex,
 To procreate without a sex.
 'Tis all enforced, the fountain and the grot,
 While the sweet fields do lie forgot,
 Where willing Nature does to all dispense
 A wild and fragrant innocence;

5

10

15

20

25

30

1. Luxury-loving, voluptuous man, who wants to popularize ("bring in use") his own vices.

2. The double pink or carnation is a product of sophisticated, therefore hypocritical ("double"), minds.

3. A great boom in tulip bulbs took place in Holland during the 17th century; Marvell's line was therefore, on occasion, strictly accurate.

4. Mirabilis Jalapa, the four o'clock, a flower found originally in South America.

5. By grafting.

And fauns and fairies do the meadows till 35
 More by their presence than their skill.
 Their statues polished by some ancient hand,
 May to adorn the gardens stand;
 But, howsoe'er the figures do excel,
 The gods themselves with us do dwell. 40
 1681

Damon the Mower

Hark how the mower Damon¹ sung,
 With love of Juliana stung!
 While everything did seem to paint
 The scene more fit for his complaint.² 5
 Like her fair eyes the day was fair,
 But scorching like his amorous care;
 Sharp, like his scythe, his sorrow was,
 And withered, like his hopes, the grass.

"Oh what unusual heats are here,
 Which thus our sunburnt meadows fear! 10
 The grasshopper its pipe gives o'er,
 And hamstringed frogs can dance no more;
 But in the brook the green frog wades,
 And grasshoppers seek out the shades;
 Only the snake, that kept within, 15
 Now glitters in its second skin.

"This heat the sun could never raise,
 Nor dog star so inflame the days;³
 It from an higher beauty grow'th,
 Which burns the fields and mower both; 20
 Which made the dog, and makes the sun
 Hotter than his own Phaeton;⁴
 Not July causeth these extremes,
 But Juliana's scorching beams.

"Tell me where I may pass the fires 25
 Of the hot day or hot desires,
 To what cool cave shall I descend,
 Or to what gelid⁵ fountain bend?

1. Damon is a pastoral name familiar since Virgil's time; Juliana gets her name, if anywhere from July (lines 23-24).

2. Love song. The word "complaint" in this context carries a certain mockery with it; a shepherd who has nothing but love pangs to complain about is not really in much pain.

3. The dog star (Sirius in the constellation of Canis Major) is seen from July to September; coincidentally this is the period when dogs most often develop hydrophobia (i.e., rabies).

4. Son of Helios, the sun god of Greek mythology, he tried to drive his father's chariot, but let the horses run away, and scorched the world.

5. Icy.

Alas! I look for ease in vain,
 When remedies themselves complain:⁶ 30
 No moisture but my tears do rest,
 No cold but in her icy breast.

"How long wilt thou, fair shepherdess,
 Esteem me and my presents less?
 To thee the harmless snake I bring, 35
 Disarméd of its teeth and sting;
 To thee chameleons, changing hue,
 And oak leaves tipped with honey dew;
 Yet thou, ungrateful, hast not sought
 Nor what they are, nor who them brought. 40

"I am the mower Damon, known
 Through all the meadows I have mown.
 On me the morn her dew distills
 Before her darling daffodils,
 And if at noon my toil me heat, 45
 The sun himself licks off my sweat;
 While, going home, the evening sweet
 In cowslip-water bathes my feet.

"What though the piping shepherd stock
 The plains with an unnumbered flock, 50
 This scythe of mine discovers wide
 More ground than all his sheep do hide.
 With this the golden fleece I shear
 Of all these closes every year,⁷
 And though in wool more poor than they, 55
 Yet I am richer far in hay.

"Nor am I so deformed to sight
 If in my scythe I looked right;
 In which I see my picture done
 As in a crescent moon the sun. 60
 The deathless fairies take me oft
 To lead them in their dances soft,
 And when I tune myself to sing,
 About me they contract their ring.⁸

"How happy might I still have mowed, 65
 Had not Love here his thistle sowed!
 But now I all the day complain,
 Joining my labor to my pain;

6. I.e., the fountain and cave themselves complain of unusual heat.

7. Hay is the "wool" of the fields ("closes"); it is a "golden" fleece simply because it is the mower's cash crop.

8. British folklore has it that the circular "raths" or earthen forts surviving from Druid days are fairy "rings" around which the little people dance at night. "Contract": the word means, not "tighten" or "squeeze," but simply "form."

And with my scythe cut down the grass,
Yet still my grief is where it was;
But when the iron blunter grows,
Sighing, I whet my scythe and woes." 70

While thus he drew his elbow round,
Depopulating all the ground,
And with his whistling scythe does cut 75
Each stroke between the earth and root,
The edged steel, by careless chance,
Did into his own ankle glance,
And there among the grass fell down
By his own scythe the mower mown. 80

"Alas!" said he, "these hurts are slight
To those that die by Love's despite.
With shepherd's purse and clown's all-heal⁹
The blood I stanch and wound I heal.
Only for him no cure is found 85
Whom Juliana's eyes do wound;
'Tis Death alone that this must do;
For, Death, thou art a mower too."

1681

The Mower to the Glowworms

Ye living lamps, by whose dear light
The nightingale does sit so late,
And studying all the summer night
Her matchless songs does meditate;¹

Ye country comets, that portend 5
No war nor prince's funeral,
Shining unto no higher end
Than to presage the grass's fall;

Ye glowworms, whose officious flame 10
To wandering mowers shows the way,
That in the night have lost their aim,
And after foolish fires² do stray;

Your courteous fires in vain you waste,
Since Juliana here is come,
For she my mind hath so displaced 15
That I shall never find my home.

1681

9. Folk-names for popular remedies found in fields and hedges. Like a good Petrarchan lover, the mower falls with an erotic conceit and a sentimental morality on his lips.

1. The root word of "meditate" carries in Latin, the secondary meaning "to sing."

2. Will-o-the-wisps, swampfires.

The Mower's Song

My mind was once the true survey
 Of all these meadows fresh and gay,
 And in the greenness of the grass
 Did see its hopes as in a glass;¹
 When Juliana came, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me. 5

But these, while I with sorrow pine,
 Grew more luxuriant still and fine,
 That not one blade of grass you spied,
 But had a flower on either side;
 When Juliana came, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me. 10

Unthankful meadows, could you so
 A fellowship so true forego,
 And in your gaudy May-games² meet,
 While I lay trodden under feet?
 When Juliana came, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me. 15

But what you in compassion ought
 Shall now by my revenge be wrought,
 And flowers, and grass, and I, and all,
 Will in one common ruin fall;
 For Juliana comes, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me. 20

And thus ye meadows, which have been Companions of my thoughts more green,
 Shall now the heraldry become
 With which I shall adorn my tomb.
 For Juliana came, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me. 25

30
1681The Picture of Little T. C.
in a Prospect of Flowers¹

See with what simplicity
 This nymph begins her golden days!

1. Looking glass, mirror.

2. Festivals and merrymaking marked the first of May—and still do for the heartless grass, though not for the melancholy mower.

1. We do not know who T. C. was, though speculation has not been idle; all we need know is that she was a little girl. "Prospect": landscape, background scene.

In the green grass she loves to lie,
And there with her fair aspect tames
The wilder flowers and gives them names, 5
But only with the roses plays,
And them does tell
What color best becomes them and what smell.

Who can foretell for what high cause
This darling of the gods was born? 10
Yet this is she whose chaster laws
The wanton Love shall one day fear,
And under her command severe
See his bow broke and ensign² torn.
Happy who can 15
Appease this virtuous enemy of man!

O then let me in time compound
And parley with those conquering eyes
Ere they have tried their force to wound,
Ere with their glancing wheels they drive 20
In triumph over hearts that strive
And them that yield but more despise:
Let me be laid
Where I may see the glories from some shade.

Meantime, whilst every verdant thing 25
Itself does at thy beauty charm,
Reform the errors of the spring;
Make that the tulips may have share
Of sweetness, seeing they are fair;
And roses of their thorns disarm: 30
But most procure
That violets may a longer time endure.

But O, young beauty of the woods,
Whom Nature courts with fruit and flowers,
Gather the flowers but spare the buds, 35
Lest Flora,³ angry at thy crime
To kill her infants in their prime,
Do quickly make th' example yours;
And ere we see,
Nip in the blossom all our hopes and thee. 40

1681

2. Flag, pennant.

3. Roman goddess of flowers and plants.

The Coronet

When for the thorns with which I long, too long,
 With many a piercing wound,
 My Saviour's head have crowned,
 I seek with garlands to redress that wrong,
 Through every garden, every mead, 5
 I gather flowers (my fruits are only flowers),
 Dismantling all the fragrant towers
 That once adorned my shepherdess's head:
 And now, when I have summed up all my store,
 Thinking (so I myself deceive) 10
 So rich a chaplet¹ thence to weave
 As never yet the King of Glory wore,
 Alas! I find the serpent old,²
 That, twining in his speckled breast,
 About the flowers disguised does fold 15
 With wreaths of fame and interest.³
 Ah, foolish man, that wouldst debase with them
 And mortal glory, Heaven's diadem!
 But Thou who only couldst the serpent tame,
 Either his slippery knots at once untie, 20
 And disentangle all his winding snare,
 Or shatter too with him my curious frame,⁴
 And let these wither, so that he may die,
 Though set with skill and chosen out with care;
 That they, while thou on both their spoils dost tread, 25
 May crown Thy feet, that could not crown Thy head.⁵

1681

A Dialogue Between the Soul and Body

SOUL. O, who shall from this dungeon raise
 A soul enslaved so many ways? ¹
 With bolts of bones, that fettered stands
 In feet; and manacled in hands.
 Here blinded with an eye; and there 5
 Deaf with the drumming of an ear;
 A soul hung up, as 'twere, in chains
 Of nerves, and arteries, and veins;
 Tortured, besides each other part,
 In a vain head and double heart? 10

1. Garland.

2. Satan.

3. Self-glorification and self-interest.

4. I.e., my wreath of flowers. "These" in the next line refers to the flowers again.

5. Cf. the curse of Genesis iii.15, that the seed of Eve shall bruise the ser-pent's head.

1. The soul speaks almost in the words of St. Paul's epistle to the Romans vii.24: "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The body's speech mirrors or parodies that of the soul.

- BODY. O, who shall me deliver whole
From bonds of this tyrannic soul?
Which, stretched upright, impales me so
That mine own precipice² I go;
And warms and moves this needless frame³ 15
(A fever could but do the same),
And, wanting where⁴ its spite to try,
Has made me live to let me die.
A body that could never rest
Since this ill spirit it possessed. 20
- SOUL. What magic could me thus confine Within another's grief to pine?
Where, whatsoever it complain,
I feel, that cannot feel,⁵ the pain;
And all my care itself employs, 25
That to preserve which me destroys;
Constrained not only to endure
Diseases, but, what's worse, the cure;
And, ready oft the port to gain,
Am shipwrecked into health again. 30
- BODY. But Physic⁶ yet could never reach
The maladies thou me dost teach;
Whom first the cramp of hope does tear,
And then the palsy shakes of fear;
The pestilence of love does heat, 35
Or hatred's hidden ulcer eat;
Joy's cheerful madness does perplex,
Or sorrow's other madness vex;
Which knowledge forces me to know,
And memory will not forego; 40
What but a soul could have the wit
To build me up for sin so fit?
So architects do square and hew
Green trees that in the forest grew.⁷

1681

The Definition of Love

My Love is of a birth as rare
As 'tis, for object, strange and high;

2. Possession of a soul is the reason why man walks erect, facing the heavens, instead of prowling the earth like a brute; but it is also the reason why he can fall and be damned, as brutes cannot; so the soul is an interior precipice.
3. This frame, which does not need it.
4. Lacking an object.

5. The soul can "feel" (sympathize) even though it "cannot feel" (has no power of physical sensation).
6. Medicine.
7. The body asserts that it has been trimmed and squared to an alien purpose, instead of being allowed to grow freely and naturally, as in the forest.

It was begotten by Despair
Upon Impossibility.

Magnanimous Despair alone
Could show me so divine a thing,
Where feeble Hope could ne'er have flown
But vainly flapped its tinsel wing.

And yet I quickly might arrive
Where my extended soul is fixed;¹
But Fate does iron wedges drive,
And always crowds itself betwixt.

For Fate with jealous eye does see
Two perfect loves, nor lets them close;²
Their union would her ruin be,
And her tyrannic power depose.³

And therefore her decrees of steel
Us as the distant poles have placed
(Though Love's whole world on us doth wheel),
Not by themselves to be embraced,

Unless the giddy heaven fall,
And earth some new convulsion tear,
And, us to join, the world should all
Be cramped into a planisphere.⁴

As lines, so loves oblique may well
Themselves in every angle greet;⁵
But ours, so truly parallel,
Though infinite, can never meet.

Therefore the love which us doth bind,
But Fate so enviously debars,
Is the conjunction of the mind,
And opposition of the stars.⁶

1681

Bermudas

Where the remote Bermudas ride,
In th' ocean's bosom unespied,

1. Marvell thinks of his soul as having gone out of his body ("extended") and attached ("fixed") itself to his mistress.
2. Unite.

3. Fate, and its agents Time and Change, would none of them have any power against a perfect mixture of the elements.

4. A flat sphere, literally absurd, but describing a kind of astrological projection in which the world was represented in two dimensions and the poles were united.

5. "Oblique" includes the meaning of "deviating from right conduct or thought"; oblique loves, like oblique lines, touch in angles (corners), but Marvell's love and the lady's, being parallel and perfect, can never touch.

6. "Conjunction" and "opposition" are technical terms from astronomy, here yoked to Marvell's "definition."

From a small boat that rowed along,
The listening winds received this song:

“What should we do but sing His praise, 5
That led us through the watery maze
Unto an isle so long unknown,
And yet far kinder than our own?
Where He the huge sea monsters wracks,
That lift the deep upon their backs;¹ 10
He lands us on a grassy stage,
Safe from the storms, and prelate’s rage.²
He gave us this eternal spring
Which here enamels everything,
And sends the fowls to us in care, 15
On daily visits through the air;
He hangs in shades the orange bright,
Like golden lamps in a green night,
And does in the pomegranates close
Jewels more rich than Ormus³ shows; 20
He makes the figs our mouths to meet,
And throws the melons at our feet;
But apples⁴ plants of such a price,
No tree could ever bear them twice;
With cedars, chosen by His hand, 25
From Lebanon, He stores the land;
And makes the hollow seas, that roar,
Proclaim the ambergris⁵ on shore;
He cast (of which we rather boast)
The Gospel’s pearl upon our coast, 30
And in these rocks for us did frame
A temple, where to sound His name.
O! let our voice His praise exalt,
Till it arrive at heaven’s vault,
Which, thence (perhaps) rebounding, may 35
Echo beyond the Mexique Bay.”⁶

Thus sung they in the English boat,
An holy and a cheerful note;
And all the way, to guide their chime,
With falling oars they kept the time. 40

1681

1. See Milton’s use of the same sea fable in Paradise Lost I.203 ff. “Wracks”: shipwrecks, destroys.

2. Storms at sea are quietly equated with bishops as sources of peril.

3. Pearl- and jewel-trading center in the Persian Gulf.

4. Pineapples.

5. “Proclaim,” a kind of learned joke, suggests the seas roaring to announce their bounty. Ambergris is an expensive, mysterious, soapy substance found in sperm whales and used in the manufacture of perfumes (see Moby-Dick, Chapter XCII).

6. The Gulf of Mexico.

An Horatian Ode

UPON CROMWELL'S RETURN FROM IRELAND¹

The forward youth that would appear,
Must now forsake his Muses dear,
Nor in the shadows sing
His numbers languishing:

'Tis time to leave the books in dust,
And oil the unused armor's rust;
Removing from the wall
The corselet of the hall.²

So restless Cromwell could not cease
In the inglorious arts of peace,
But through adventurous war
Urg'd his active star;

And, like the three-forked lightning, first
Breaking the clouds where it was nursed,
Did thorough his own side
His fiery way divide.³

For 'tis all one to courage high,
The emulous, or enemy;
And with such, to enclose,
Is more than to oppose;

Then burning through the air he went,
And palaces and temples rent;
And Caesar's head at last
Did through his laurels blast.⁴

1. Cromwell returned from conquering Ireland in May, 1650, about 18 months after the execution of Charles I. The two events were vaguely but persistently connected: Cromwell's victory over the Irish was somehow a "vindication" of his career to this point, a sign that God did not disapprove of his laying violent hands on the sacred person of the monarch. The title phrase, "An Horatian Ode," promises a poem of cool and balanced judgment, not "enthusiastic" or heroic like the odes of Pindar. For the political background of Marvell's poem, see John M. Wallace, "Marvell's Horatian Ode," PMLA 77 (1962), 33-45.

2. The "forward youth" who removes armor from the wall owes something to a similar figure in the first book of Lucan's Pharsalia, which is also a poem about force, justice, and civil war. Andrew Marvell was not by any means dropping books and picking up armor in 1650.

3. Cromwell had begun as a relatively inconspicuous Presbyterian, but soon became the leader of the more radical group variously known as the "Rump" or the "Independents." The "three-forked lightning" he wields identifies him with Zeus; and his giving birth (to himself, presumably) through his own side (party, of course, but a part of the body, too) might remind a reader of Athena's birth through Zeus's ear.

4. Laurels were used for royal crowns precisely because they were supposed to protect from lightning. "Caesar," of course, is Charles I. Cromwell's acts with his thunderbolt (smashing palaces, temples, and at last Caesar's head through its laurels) suggest a tyrannical God. Yet Caesar was a tyrant too.

'Tis madness to resist or blame 25
 The face of angry Heaven's flame;
 And if we would speak true,
 Much to the man is due,
 Who from his private gardens, where
 He lived reserv'd and austere, 30
 As if his highest plot
 To plant the bergamot;⁵
 Could by industrious valor climb
 To ruin the great work of Time,
 And cast the kingdom old, 35
 Into another mold;
 Though Justice against Fate complain,
 And plead the ancient rights in vain;
 But those do hold or break,
 As men are strong or weak. 40
 Nature that hateth emptiness,
 Allows of penetration less,
 And therefore must make room
 Where greater spirits come.
 What field of all the civil wars 45
 Where his were not the deepest scars?
 And Hampton shows what part
 He had of wiser art;⁶
 Where, twining subtle fears with hope,
 He wove a net of such a scope 50
 That Charles himself might chase
 To Caresbrooke's narrow case,
 That thence the royal actor borne,
 The tragic scaffold might adorn;
 While round the arm'd bands 55
 Did clap their bloody hands.
 He nothing common did or mean
 Upon that memorable scene,
 But with his keener eye
 The ax's edge did try;⁷ 60

5. Bergamot is a variety of pear; but its etymology (from the Turkish, "prince's pear") may conceal the insinuation that Cromwell had been plotting for power even in his early days of "private" life. The whole poem is full of puns (cf. "enclose," line 19, "mold," line 36) for the reader to seek out.

6. Hampton Court, where Charles I was confined shortly before his execution. It was popularly said that Cromwell connived at his momentary escape to Carisbrooke Castle on the Isle of Wight in order to convince the doubtful Parliament that the king could not be trusted and must be executed.

7. Latin uses one word, acies, for the front of a battle line, the edge of a sword- or ax-blade, and the beam of an eye.

Nor called the gods with vulgar spite
 To vindicate his helpless right;
 But bowed his comely head
 Down, as upon a bed.

This was that memorable hour, 65
 Which first assured the forced power;
 So when they did design
 The capitol's first line,

A bleeding head where they begun,
 Did fright the architects to run; 70
 And yet in that the state
 Foresaw its happy fate.⁸

And now the Irish are ashamed
 To see themselves in one year tamed;
 So much one man can do, 75
 That does both act and know.

They can affirm his praises best,
 And have, though overcome, confessed
 How good he is, how just,
 And fit for highest trust. 80

Nor yet grown stiffer with command,
 But still in the republic's hand—
 How fit he is to sway,
 That can so well obey.

He to the Commons' feet presents 85
 A kingdom for his first year's rents;
 And, what he may, forbears
 His fame to make it theirs;

And has his sword and spoils ungirt,
 To lay them at the public's skirt: 90
 So, when the falcon high
 Falls heavy from the sky,

She, having killed, no more does search,
 But on the next green bough to perch;
 Where, when he first does lure, 95
 The falconer has her sure.

What may not then our isle presume,
 While victory his crest does plume!
 What may not others fear,
 If thus he crown each year! 100

8. When foundations were being dug for the temple of Jupiter at Rome, Pliny tells us, the workmen uncovered a bloody head. They at first thought it an ill omen but then were persuaded to consider it a token that Rome would be the head (caput) of an empire; hence the name of the temple, Jupiter Capitolinus, and of the hill on which it stood, the Capitoline. The tale may well imply a generic relation between civilization and violence.

A Caesar he ere long to Gaul,
To Italy an Hannibal,
And to all states not free,
Shall climactic be.⁹

The Pict no shelter now shall find
Within his party-colored mind,
But from this valor sad,
Shrink underneath the plaid;¹

Happy if in the tufted brake
The English hunter him mistake,
Nor lay his hounds in near
The Caledonian² deer.

But thou, the war's and fortune's son,
March indefatigably on;
And for the last effect,
Still keep thy sword erect;³

Besides the force it has to fright
The spirits of the shady night,
The same arts that did gain
A power must it maintain.⁴

c. 1650

120
1681

9. Neither Caesar nor Hannibal brought, or pretended to bring, freedom to the lands they attacked. "Climactic": a period of crucial change in human life (for better or worse), popularly supposed to occur when 9 joined with 7 in man's age, i.e., in his 63rd year.

1. Early inhabitants of Scotland were called Picts because their warriors painted themselves many colors (Latin, pictus: painted); Marvell is playing with an image of the Scotch as divided by factions (parties) into as many colors as Scotch plaids.

2. Scotch.

3. The sword is being carried "erect,"

i.e., with the bare blade up, not the cross of the handle. Naked power, not religion, is to be the ensign of Cromwell's rule.

4. The last lines of the poem seem to paraphrase a saying of Christ's to the effect that they who take the sword shall perish with the sword (Matthew xxvi.52); from Cromwell's point of view, it is not a very reassuring ending to the poem. Yet when the poem was printed, in 1681, the censor of Charles II thought it politically subversive, and had it physically cut out of all the copies of Marvell's poems except (fortunately) one.

JOHN MILTON

(1608-1674)

1637: Lycidas.

1640-60: The pamphlet wars.

1651: Blindness.

1667: Paradise Lost.

The life of John Milton falls conveniently into three divisions. There is a period of youthful education and apprenticeship, which culminates in the writing of Lycidas (1637) and Milton's foreign travels (1638-39).

There is a period of prose and controversy (1640–60), when almost all his verse was occasional, and when his major preoccupations were political and social; and finally, there are the last fourteen years of his life, when he returned to literature, a mature and somewhat embittered figure, to publish his three great poems, Paradise Lost (1667), Paradise Regained (1671), and Samson Agonistes (1671).

Milton was born at Bread Street in Cheapside, the elder son of what we would nowadays probably call a real-estate man. From the beginning, Milton showed prodigious gifts as a student of languages. At St. Paul's School he mastered Latin and Greek, and before long he was adept in most modern European tongues, as well as Hebrew. Sent to Christ's College, Cambridge, he proceeded B.A. in 1629 and M.A. in 1632, meanwhile continuing to read voraciously and writing (too infrequently for his own satisfaction) an occasional poem. In the normal course of events, a career like this would have culminated in ordination to the ministry and a position in the church. Both Milton and his parents seem to have anticipated this. But after taking his M.A., Milton, who disliked the trend of civil and religious affairs in England, did not take orders; instead, he retired to his father's country house at Horton in Buckinghamshire, and for five more years, under his own direction, read day and night. It seems likely that Milton, in his time, read just about everything that was ever written in English, Latin, Greek, and Italian. (Of course, he had the Bible by heart.) In 1634 he wrote, at the invitation of a nearby noble family, the masque known as Comus; and in 1637 he contributed to a volume memorializing a college classmate the elegy of Lycidas. Finally, in 1638, his most indulgent father sent this most voracious of students abroad, to put the finishing touches on an already splendid education. For two years, Milton traveled on the Continent, visiting famous literary figures and scenes; then, hearing rumors of impending troubles in England, he returned home in 1639.

Of Milton's complex and troubled career in controversy we need not say much. It too is divided in three phases. He began by publishing anti-prelatical tracts, against the government of the church by bishops. These are rough, knockabout, name-calling tracts in the style of the times, which take a popular position on a relatively popular issue. But Milton's next venture procured him a reputation as a radical. In June, 1642, he married Mary Powell. Within six weeks, she left him, to return to her parents' house; and from 1643 to 1645, Milton published a series of pamphlets advocating that divorce be granted on the grounds of incompatibility. Clearly his personal situation had influenced his social judgment; just as clearly, respectable Englishmen, who were disturbed by the troubles of the time, were bound to feel that "divorce at pleasure" represented the end of all social order, the coming of complete anarchy. Though the position he took is moderate, even traditional, in many modern societies, it was too scandalous for his day, and Milton was much embittered by the rejection of his ideas. After the execution of Charles I, in 1649, he published a series of Latin disputations against Continental critics of the regime, defending the actions of Parliament in executing Charles. In the middle of this work, he went blind, as the result of eyestrain continued over many years. By the use of secretaries and amanuenses, however, he was able to fulfill his duties as Latin Secretary to Cromwell's Council of State, and to contribute very substantially to the diplomatic dignity of the new government.

Meanwhile, his wife returned to him, and having borne him three daughters, died in 1652. In 1656 Milton married Katharine Woodcock, who died in childbirth, in 1658. Finally, in 1660, the whole political movement for which Milton had sacrificed so much, went to smash. Though Milton boldly published pamphlets in its support to the very last minute, the Good Old Cause was defeated, and Charles II recalled from his travels. For a time under the Restoration, Milton was imprisoned and in danger of his life; but friends intervened, and he escaped with a fine and the loss of most of his property.

In 1663 Milton married his third wife, Elizabeth Minshull; and in blindness, poverty, defeat, and relative isolation, he set about completing a poem "justifying the ways of God to men," which he had first envisaged many years before. It was published in 1667, as Paradise Lost; and despite the many difficulties which it presented, despite its unfamiliar meter (blank verse was rare outside drama), despite the unpopularity of its attitudes and Milton's reputation as a dangerous man, it was recognized at once as a supreme epic achievement. In 1671 Milton published Paradise Regained, an epic poem in four books describing Christ's temptation in the wilderness, and Samson Agonistes, a "closet" tragedy (i.e., not intended for the stage). He died, of complications arising from gout, in 1674.

In the writings of Milton, the work of two tremendous intellectual and social movements comes to a head. The Renaissance is responsible for the rich and complex texture of Milton's style, the multiplicity of its classical references, its wealth of ornament and decoration. Paradise Lost, being an epic, not only challenges comparison with Homer and Virgil, it undertakes to encompass the whole life of mankind—war, love, religion, Hell, Heaven, the cosmos. It is a poem vastly capacious of worldly experience. On the other hand, the Reformation speaks with equal, if not greater, authority in Milton's earnest and individually-minded Christianity. The great epic, which resounds with the grandeur and multiplicity of the world, is also a poem the central actions of which take place inwardly, at the core of man's conscience. Adam's fate culminates in an act of passive suffering, not of active heroism. He does not kill Hector or Turnus, much less Satan, he picks up the burden of worldly existence, and triumphs over his guilt by admitting it and repenting of it.

These two contrasting aspects of Milton's life and thought place him among the Christian humanists. His literary art places him in the small circle of great epic writers.

On Shakespeare¹

What needs my Shakespeare for his honored bones
The labor of an age in piléd stones,
Or that his hallowed relics should be hid

1. Milton's tribute to Shakespeare appeared in the Second Folio of the plays.

Under a star-ypointing pyramid?²
 Dear son of memory, great heir of fame, 5
 What need'st thou such weak witness of thy name?
 Thou in our wonder and astonishment
 Hast built thyself a livelong monument.
 For whilst to th' shame of slow-endavoring art,
 Thy easy numbers flow, and that each heart 10
 Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued book³
 Those delphic lines with deep impression took,
 Then thou, our fancy of itself bereaving,
 Dost make us marble with too much conceiving;⁴
 And so sepulchered in such pomp dost lie, 15
 That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

1632

L'Allegro¹

Hence loathéd Melancholy
 Of Cerberus² and blackest midnight born,
 In Stygian³ cave forlorn
 'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy,

2. "Star-ypointing" uses one of Spenser's archaic "y-" prefixes to eke out the meter. (Note also the interpolated "that" in line 10, serving the same purpose.) Milton's poem begins by answering the common complaint of the day, that Shakespeare should have been buried in some place more splendid than Stratford. Shakespeare is described as the "son of memory" because that makes him a brother of the muses, daughters of Mnemosyne ("memory") by Zeus.

3. Beyond all value, invaluable book.

4. The monuments of Shakespeare's tomb are all the enchanted and motionless readers of his book.

1. L'Allegro and Il Penseroso are a pair of companion-poems, probably written around 1630 or 1631, in those dancing tetrameter couplets which are so hard to keep from degenerating into singsong, and so delightful when controlled. Milton's handling of this difficult meter may be compared with virtuosic performances like those of Marvell (To His Coy Mistress), Keats (Lines on the Mermaid Tavern) and A. E. Housman (Terence, This Is Stupid Stuff).

The titles are almost untranslatable, which is why Milton did not translate them. But within the framework of two contrasted days, we see the cheerful, sociable man, and the melancholy, contemplative man in their typical spiritual attitudes. Milton's interest in the typical accounts for the striking generality of the pictures: "And every shepherd tells his tale / Under the hawthorn in the dale"—there is no effort to create an individual shepherd in a particular setting. All the shepherds in all the dales for miles around are telling one story or another, each under his own hawthorn bush. But Milton's focus is on the mind that sees, and on the tone which it casts over a landscape. The cheerful man infuses his world with contagious cheerfulness; the melancholy man casts over the events of his day (which, as events, are not very different) a pervasive veil of melancholy. The backgrounds of this complex contemplative mood may be explored in Burton's famous Anatomy of Melancholy; in a more recent book, Erwin Panofsky's study, Albrecht Dürer, where it occurs in connection with Dürer's magnificent engraving of Melancholia; or in Saxl, Panofsky, and Klibansky's immense study, Saturn and Melancholy (1964). There is a history of literary cheerfulness, too—The Happy Man, by Maren Sofie Røstvig (1954).

Milton's poems stand in contrast to one another, but the contrasts are shaded, not glaring; there is no effort to "decide" the conflict, or to make melancholy black and cheerfulness convivial. Both poems exist in a reflective half-light, as little idylls of description which for sheer elegance and charm have rarely been equaled.

2. The three-headed hell-hound of classical mythology.

3. I.e., near the river Styx, the river of the underworld.

Find out some uncouth cell, 5
 Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous wings,
 And the night-raven sings;
 There under ebon shades, and low-browed rocks,
 As ragged as thy locks,
 In dark Cimmerian⁴ desert ever dwell. 10
 But come thou goddess fair and free,
 In Heaven yclept Euphrosyne,⁵
 And by men, heart-easing Mirth,
 Whom lovely Venus at a birth
 With two sister Graces more 15
 To ivy-crownéd Bacchus bore;⁶
 Or whether (as some sager sing)⁷
 The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
 Zephyr with Aurora playing,
 As he met her once a-Maying, 20
 There on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh-blown⁸ roses washed in dew,
 Filled her with thee a daughter fair,
 So buxom,⁹ blithe, and debonair.
 Haste thee nymph, and bring with thee 25
 Jest and youthful Jollity,
 Quips and Cranks,¹ and wanton Wiles,
 Nods, and Becks, and wreathéd Smiles,
 Such as hang on Hebe's² cheek,
 And love to live in dimple sleek; 30
 Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
 And Laughter, holding both his sides.
 Come, and trip it as ye go
 On the light fantastic toe,
 And in thy right hand lead with thee, 35
 The mountain nymph, sweet Liberty;
 And if I give thee honor due,
 Mirth, admit me of thy crew
 To live with her and live with thee,
 In unprovéd pleasures free; 40
 To hear the lark begin his flight,
 And, singing, startle the dull night,
 From his watch-tower in the skies,
 Till the dappled dawn doth rise;
 Then to come³ in spite of sorrow, 45
 And at my window bid good morrow,
 Through the sweetbriar, or the vine,

4. The Cimmerians, who gave their name to Crimea, were supposed to live on the outer edge of the world, in perpetual twilight.

5. Euphrosyne, Aglaia, and Thalia were the Graces, daughters (according to one story) of Zeus himself, and goddesses of beauty and delight. "Yclept": called.

6. Bacchus is god of wine.

7. The "sager" (poets) who describe the Graces as born of Zephyr and Aurora are in fact John Milton himself; he invented this version of the myth.

8. Newly opened.

9. Lively.

1. Jokes. "Becks": curtsseys.

2. Goddess of youth and cupbearer to the other gods. Pronounced Hee-bee.

3. I.e., then admit me to come.

Or the twisted eglantine.
 While the cock with lively din,
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
 And to the stack, or the barn door,
 Stoutly struts his dames before;
 Oft listening how the hounds and horn
 Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,
 From the side of some hoar hill,
 Through the high wood echoing shrill.
 Sometime walking not unseen
 By hedgerow elms, on hillocks green,
 Right against the eastern gate,
 Where the great sun begins his state,
 Robed in flames, and amber light,
 The clouds in thousand liveries dight;
 While the plowman near at hand,
 Whistles o'er the furrowed land,
 And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his scythe,
 And every shepherd tells his tale,
 Under the hawthorn in the dale.
 Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures
 Whilst the landscape round it measures,
 Russet lawns and fallows gray,
 Where the nibbling flocks do stray,
 Mountains on whose barren breast
 The laboring clouds do often rest;
 Meadows trim with daisies pied,
 Shallow brooks, and rivers wide.
 Towers and battlements it sees
 Bosomed high in tufted trees,
 Where perhaps some beauty lies,
 The cynosure⁷ of neighboring eyes.
 Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes,
 From betwixt two aged oaks,
 Where Corydon and Thyrsis⁸ met,
 Are at their savory dinner set
 Of herbs, and other country messes,
 Which the neat-handed Phyllis dresses;
 And then in haste her bower she leaves,
 With Thestylis to bind the sheaves;
 Or if the earlier season lead
 To the tanned haycock in the mead.
 Sometimes with secure delight
 The upland hamlets will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round

4. Procession.

5. Dressed.

6. Dappled.

7. Literally, the bright polestar, by which mariners steer; here, a splendid, eminent object, much gazed at.

8. Since the days of Theocritus, the names "Corydon," "Thyrsis," "Phyllis," and "Thestylis" have been traditional shepherds' names.

And the jocund rebecks⁹ sound
 To many a youth and many a maid, 95
 Dancing in the checkered shade;
 And young and old come forth to play
 On a sunshine holiday,
 Till the livelong daylight fail;
 Then to the spicy nut-brown ale, 100
 With stories told of many a feat,
 How fairy Mab¹ the junkets eat;
 She was pinched and pulled, she said,
 And he, by Friar's lantern led,
 Tells how the drudging goblin² sweat 105
 To earn his cream-bowl, duly set,
 When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath threshed the corn
 That ten day-laborers could not end;
 Then lies him down the lubber fiend,³ 110
 And, stretched out all the chimney's length,
 Basks at the fire his hairy strength;
 And crop-full out of doors he flings
 Ere the first cock his matin rings.
 Thus done the tales, to bed they creep, 115
 By whispering winds soon lulled asleep.
 Towered cities please us then,
 And the busy hum of men,
 Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
 In weeds⁴ of peace high triumphs hold, 120
 With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
 Rain influence,⁵ and judge the prize
 Of wit, or arms, while both contend
 To win her grace, whom all commend.
 There let Hymen⁶ oft appear 125
 In saffron robe, with taper clear,
 And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
 With masque, and antique pageantry;
 Such sights as youthful poets dream
 On summer eves by haunted stream. 130
 Then to the well-trod stage anon,
 If Jonson's learned sock⁷ be on,
 Or sweetest Shakespeare, fancy's child,
 Warble his native wood-notes wild.

9. A rebeck is a small three-stringed fiddle; "jocund" implies a festive occasion.

1. Queen Mab, wife of Oberon, the fairy king. "She" and "he" in the next two lines are country folk, telling of their experiences with the fairies.

2. Robin Goodfellow, alias Puck, Pook, or Hobgoblin. "Friar's lantern": will-o'-the-wisp.

3. Oafish spirit.

4. Garments. "Triumphs": festive ceremonies.

5. The ladies' eyes are stars, and so have astrological influence over the men.

6. Roman god of marriage, wearing a yellow ("saffron") robe.

7. A low-heeled slipper, worn by actors in classical comedy, and often contrasted with the buskin (high-heeled boot) appropriate to tragedy. The contrast of Jonson as a "learned" poet with Shakespeare as a "natural" one was conventional.

And ever against eating cares⁸ 135
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs,⁹
 Married to immortal verse
 Such as the meeting soul may pierce
 In notes, with many a winding bout¹
 Of linked sweetness long drawn out, 140
 With wanton heed, and giddy cunning,
 The melting voice through mazes running;
 Untwisting all the chains that tie
 The hidden soul of harmony;
 That Orpheus' self² may heave his head 145
 From golden slumber on a bed
 Of heaped Elysian flowers, and hear
 Such strains as would have won the ear
 Of Pluto, to have quite set free
 His half-regained Eurydice. 150
 These delights if thou canst give,
 Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

ca. 1631

1645

Il Penseroso

Hence vain deluding Joys,
 The brood of Folly without father bred.
 How little you bestead,³
 Or fill the fix'd mind with all your toys;⁴
 Dwell in some idle brain, 5
 And fancies fond⁵ with gaudy shapes possess,
 As thick and numberless
 As the gay motes that people the sunbeams,
 Or likest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners⁶ of Morpheus' train. 10
 But hail thou Goddess, sage and holy,
 Hail, divinest Melancholy,
 Whose saintly visage is too bright
 To hit⁷ the sense of human sight;
 And therefore to our weaker view,
 O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue. 15
 Black, but such as in esteem,

8. "Eating cares" is but one of many classical phrases in the poem; it is from Horace, Odes II.xi.18 (curas edaces).

9. "Lydian" airs in music would be soft, languishing, sensual—unlike the chaste Dorian and brisk Ionian.

1. A musical "run" passage.

2. Orpheus went to the underworld to regain his wife Eurydice, and by his music dissolved the guardians of Hades in tears. But as they left, he violated the condition of her release by looking back at her, and so lost her again. Milton uses the Orpheus story again in Il Penseroso, Lycidas, and Paradise Lost VII.32 ff.

3. Avail, help.

4. Trifles.

5. Foolish.

6. Followers. Morpheus is the god of sleep; the melancholy man feels the cheerful man lives in a dream.

7. Suit, agree with.

Prince Memnon's sister⁸ might beseech,
 Or that starred Ethiop queen⁹ that strove
 To set her beauty's praise above 20
 The sea nymphs, and their powers offended.
 Yet thou art higher far descended;
 Thee bright-haired Vesta long of yore
 To solitary Saturn bore;¹
 His daughter she (in Saturn's reign 25
 Such mixture was not held a stain).
 Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
 He met her, and in secret shades
 Of woody Ida's inmost grove,
 While yet there was no fear of Jove. 30
 Come pensive nun, devout and pure,
 Sober, steadfast, and demure,
 All in a robe of darkest grain,²
 Flowing with majestic train,
 And sable stole of cypress lawn³ 35
 Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
 Come, but keep thy wonted state,
 With even step and musing gait,
 And looks commercing with the skies,
 Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes: 40
 There held in holy passion still,
 Forget thyself to marble, till
 With a sad leaden downward cast,
 Thou fix them on the earth as fast.
 And join with thee calm Peace and Quiet, 45
 Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
 And hears the Muses in a ring
 Aye round about Jove's altar sing.
 And add to these retired Leisure,
 That in trim gardens takes his pleasure; 50
 But first, and chiefest, with thee bring,
 Him that yon soars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery-wheeléd throne,
 The cherub Contemplation;⁴
 And the mute Silence hist along 55

8. Memnon in Odyssey XI was a handsome Ethiopian prince who fought for Troy; his sister, mentioned not by Homer but by later commentators, was Hemera.

9. Cassiopeia, who was "starred" (i.e., turned into a constellation) for bragging that her daughter Andromeda or she herself (Milton follows this second version) was more beautiful than the sea nymphs.

1. Vesta was a goddess of purity; Milton invented the story of her connection with Saturn on Mt. Ida in Crete, and of her giving birth to Melancholy.

But Saturn helps out the poem because he was a primitive deity (hence melancholy is "natural") and because a saturnine complexion is said to show a dark and melancholy disposition.

2. Color.

3. "Cypress": a dark, delicate cloth (originally Cyprus, from the island; but the cypress is also the tree of death). "Lawn": a transparent, gauzy material, much like crape. "Decent": comely, proper.

4. The cherub Contemplation is suggested by the Biblical vision of Ezekiel.

'Less Philomel⁵ will deign a song,
 In her sweetest, saddest plight,
 Smoothing the rugged brow of night,
 While Cynthia⁶ checks her dragon yoke
 Gently o'er th' accustomed oak;
 Sweet bird that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy!
 Thee chantress oft the woods among,
 I woo to hear thy evensong;
 And missing thee, I walk unseen
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the Heaven's wide pathless way;
 And oft as if her head she bowed,
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
 Oft on a plat⁷ of rising ground,
 I hear the far-off curfew sound,
 Over some wide-watered shore,
 Swinging slow with sullen roar;
 Or if the air will not permit,
 Some still removéd place will fit,
 Where glowing embers through the room
 Teach light to counterfeit a gloom
 Far from all resort of mirth,
 Save the cricket on the hearth,
 Or the bellman's⁸ drowsy charm,
 To bless the doors from nightly harm;
 Or let my lamp at midnight hour
 Be seen in some high lonely tower,
 Where I may oft outwatch the Bear,⁹
 With thrice great Hermes,¹ or unsphere
 The spirit of Plato to unfold
 What worlds, or what vast regions hold
 The immortal mind that hath forsook
 Her mansion in this fleshly nook;
 And of those demons² that are found
 In fire, air, flood, or underground,
 Whose power hath a true consent³
 With planet, or with element.

5. The nightingale, whose song is traditionally one of grief. "Hist": summon.

6. Goddess of the moon, and of the underworld as well, she drives a pair of sleepless dragons.

7. Plot, flat open space.

8. The night watchman in little villages rang a bell to call the hours.

9. Since the Great Bear never sets, outwatching it is a major enterprise.

1. The Egyptian god Thoth or Hermes, to whom were attributed various esoteric books of the 3rd and 4th centuries A.D.; under the name of Hermes Trismegistus he later became a patron of magicians and alchemists. To "unsphere" Plato is to call Plato by magical means back to earth from the sphere he now inhabits.

2. Not devils, but classical beings akin to heroes, halfway between gods and men. There were four sorts of demons, corresponding to the four elements, each with a corresponding planet.

3. Mysterious agreement.

Some time let gorgeous Tragedy
 In scepter'd pall⁴ come sweeping by,
 Presenting Thebes', or Pelops' line,
 Or the tale of Troy divine.⁵ 100
 Or what (though rare) of later age
 Ennobled hath the buskin'd⁶ stage.
 But, O sad virgin, that thy power
 Might raise Musaeus⁷ from his bower,
 Or bid the soul of Orpheus⁸ sing 105
 Such notes as, warbled to the string,
 Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
 And made Hell grant what Love did seek.
 Or call up him⁹ that left half told
 The story of Cambuscan bold, 110
 Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
 And who had Canacee to wife,
 That owned the virtuous¹ ring and glass,
 And of the wondrous horse of brass,
 On which the Tartar king did ride; 115
 And if aught else great bards beside
 In sage and solemn tunes have sung,
 Of tourneys and of trophies hung,
 Of forests and enchantments drear,
 Where more is meant than meets the ear.² 120
 Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
 Till civil-suited morn appear,³
 Not tricked and frownc'd as she was wont,
 With the Attic boy to hunt,
 But kerchiefed in a comely cloud, 125
 While rocking winds are piping loud,
 Or ushered with a shower still,
 When the gust hath blown his fill,
 Ending on the rustling leaves,
 With minute-drops from off the eaves. 130
 And when the sun begins to fling
 His flaming beams, me, Goddess, bring
 To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown that Sylvan⁴ loves
 Of pine or monumental oak, 135
 Where the rude ax with heav'd stroke,
 Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,

4. Royal robe (from Latin palla, the robe of tragic actors).

5. Tragedies about the royal line of Thebes would include Sophocles' Oedipus cycle; those about the line of Pelops, Aeschylus' Oresteia; and those about Troy, Euripides' Trojan Women.

6. The buskin of tragedy, contrasted with the sock of comedy.

7. A mythical poet-priest of the pre-Homeric age, supposedly son or pupil of the equally mythical Orpheus.

8. For the story of Orpheus, see

L'Allegro, line 145, and note.

9. I.e., Chaucer, who in the Squire's Tale left the tale of Cambuscan half told.

1. Having special power.

2. A capsule description of allegory.

3. The goddess Aurora, who once fell in love with Cephalus ("the Attic boy," line 124), and used to go hunting with him. "Tricked and frownc'd": adorned and frizzled.

4. Roman god of the woodlands.

Or fright them from their hallowed haunt.
 There in close covert by some brook,
 Where no profaner eye may look, 140
 Hide me from day's garish eye,
 While the bee with honeyed thigh,
 That at her flowery work doth sing,
 And the waters murmuring
 With such consort⁵ as they keep, 145
 Entice the dewy-feathered sleep;
 And let some strange mysterious dream,
 Wave at his wings in airy stream,
 Of lively portraiture displayed,
 Softly on my eyelids laid.⁶ 150
 And as I wake, sweet music breathe
 Above, about, or underneath,
 Sent by some spirit to mortals good,
 Or th' unseen genius⁷ of the wood.
 But let my due feet never fail 155
 To walk the studious cloister's pale,⁸
 And love the high embow'd roof,
 With antic⁹ pillars massy proof,
 And storied windows¹ richly dight,
 Casting a dim religious light. 160
 There let the pealing organ blow,
 To the full-voiced choir below,
 In service high, and anthems clear,
 As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
 Dissolve me into ecstasies, 165
 And bring all heaven before mine eyes.
 And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell² 170
 Of every star that Heaven doth show,
 And every herb that sips the dew
 Till old experience do attain
 To something like prophetic strain.
 These pleasures, Melancholy, give, 175
 And I with thee will choose to live. 1645

ca. 1631

5. Accompaniment.

6. Milton's syntax gets loose and dreamy too, here. He means, "Let some strange dream wave at the wings of sleep, while a stream of vivid pictures passes softly over my eyelids."

7. Guardian angel.

8. Enclosure.

9. I.e., covered with quaint, grotesque, or antic carvings; but "antique," which derives from the same Latin root, was not excluded from the sense. "Massy proof": massive and strong.

1. I.e., with stories told by stained-glass images. "Dight": dressed.

2. Study. The melancholy man wants to think his way into the cosmos until he becomes a prophet.

Lycidas This poem is a pastoral elegy; that is, it uses the sometimes artificial imagery supplied by an idyllic shepherd's existence to bewail the loss of a friend. Among its many predecessors in the Renaissance and in classical antiquity are poems by Spenser, Ronsard, Castiglione, Mantuan, Petrarch, Virgil, Theocritus, Moschus, and Bion; its successors include poems like Adonais by Shelley and Thyrsis by Matthew Arnold. T. P. Harrison and H. J. Leon have collected in The Pastoral Elegy (1939) a selection of poems from the tradition.

All pastoral poems enjoy the privilege of saying something about the world as a whole while seeming to talk simply of an artificial play-society; they are irresistibly allegorical. They have certain conventions—the swain (i.e., the shepherd) is ignorant but unspoiled, naturally virtuous, inherently poetic; life is pleasant and easy, yet just for this reason the basic human preoccupations stand out. The pastoral elegy has a further list of conventions—a history of past friendship, a questioning of destiny, a procession of mourners, a laying-on of flowers, a consolation, and usually a refrain. Milton adapted all but the last of these to Lycidas.

Edward King, who was the occasion of the poem if not its subject, was a fellow student of Milton's at Cambridge. Milton says he was a poet, and he was in the church. While proceeding to his new parish in Ireland, he was drowned, in 1637; and Milton joined with his school-fellows, the following year, to produce a little memorial volume. Iusta Edouardo King includes 35 poems, mostly in Latin; only Lycidas is of literary consequence.

It is written in a flowing, extended manner, with many run-on lines and great impetus, predominantly in pentameter, but with many variations of line length, and an irregular rhyme scheme including ten unrhymed lines and two perfectly formed stanzas of ottava rima. Many of these technical qualities are reminiscent of the Italian canzone or song, but most of them had been exemplified previously in Spenser's Epithalamion.

There are usually taken to be three explicit climaxes in Lycidas, each having to do with an aspect of the shepherd's life and with a problem which Milton wished to pose regarding the meaning of existence. Apollo answers his first question about the reward of poetry; St. Peter answers a second question, about the spiritual shepherd who betrays his flock; and finally Lycidas is translated into the Christian Paradise, to be at one with the Lamb of God, the Good Shepherd, the supreme giver of poetic fame, and the proper subject of all song. Subordinate patterns of imagery include vegetation and nature deities, water and water gods, who serve an immense variety of purposes.

Lycidas

IN THIS MONODY¹ THE AUTHOR BEWAILS A LEARNED FRIEND, UNFORTUNATELY DROWNED IN HIS PASSAGE FROM CHESTER
ON THE IRISH SEAS, 1637. AND BY OCCASION FORETELLS
THE RUIN OF OUR CORRUPTED CLERGY,
THEN IN THEIR HEIGHT.

Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more
Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,²
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,³
And with forced fingers rude,
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
Bitter constraint, and sad occasion dear,⁴
Compels me to disturb your season due;
For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.
Who would not sing for Lycidas? He knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed⁵ of some melodious tear.

Begin then, sisters of the sacred well⁶
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring,
Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse;
So may some gentle Muse
With lucky words favor my destined urn,⁷
And as he passes turn,
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.
For we were nursed upon the selfsame hill,
Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade, and rill.

Together both, ere the high lawns⁸ appeared
Under the opening eyelids of the morn,
We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the grayfly winds her sultry horn.⁹
Battening our flocks with the fresh dews of night,
Oft till the star that rose at evening bright

1. A song sung in Greek drama by a single voice. This Miltonic headnote was added in the edition of 1645.

2. "Laurels" for the crown of poetry given by Apollo; "myrtles" for the undying love granted by Venus; "ivy," the plant of Bacchus, also the reward of learning. All three plants are evergreens associated with poetic inspiration.

3. Unripe.

4. Heartfelt, profoundly moving; but also, in the 17th century, with overtones of "dire."

5. Reward.

6. The nine sister Muses were reported to dwell by various springs or "wells"; most likely Milton had in mind that of Aganippe near Mt. Helicon.

7. The speaker suggests that if he sings for Lycidas, "some gentle Muse" (i.e., poet) may some day sing for him.

8. Upland pastures.

9. I.e., heard the grayfly when she buzzes ("winds her sultry horn"). "Battening": feeding.

A B C C B B D E B D E F B

Apostrophe.

A B C C B B D E B D E F B

metaphor

convention

established ethic
(right to speak)

Toward Heaven's descent had sloped his westering wheel.
 Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
 Tempered to th' oaten flute,¹
 Rough satyrs danced, and fauns with cloven heel
 From the glad sound would not be absent long, 35
 And old Damoetas² loved to hear our song.
 But O the heavy change, now thou art gone,
 Now thou art gone, and never must return!
 Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
 With wild thyme and the gadding³ vine o'ergrown, 40
 And all their echoes mourn.
 The willows and the hazel copses green
 Shall now no more be seen,
 Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.
 As killing as the canker⁴ to the rose, 45
 Or taint-worm to the weanling herds that graze,
 Or frost to flowers that their gay wardrobe wear,
 When first the white thorn blows;⁵
 Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.
 Where were ye, nymphs,⁶ when the remorseless deep
 Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas?
 For neither were ye playing on the steep,
 Where your old Bards, the famous Druids⁷ lie,
 Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,⁸
 Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard stream: 55
 Ay me! I fondly dream—
 Had ye been there—for what could that have done?
 What could the Muse⁹ herself that Orpheus bore,
 The Muse herself, for her enchanting¹ son
 Whom universal Nature did lament, 60
 When by the rout² that made the hideous roar,
 His gory visage down the stream was sent,
 Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?
 Alas! What boots³ it with incessant care
 To tend the homely slighted shepherd's trade, 65
 And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?⁴

synecdoche
 soul imagery
 synecdoche

1. Traditional Panpipes, played by shepherds.

2. A type name from pastoral poetry, possibly referring to some specific tutor at Cambridge.

3. Straggling.

4. Cankerworm.

5. Blossoms (as in the surviving expression, "full-blown"). could be snow

6. Nature deities.
 7. The Druids, priestly poet-kings of Celtic Britain, worshiped the forces of nature. They lie dead in their burying ground on the mountain ("steep") Kerig-y-Druidion in Wales.

8. "Mona" is the island of Anglesey. "Deva" is the river Dee in Cheshire. The Dee was magic ("wizard") because the size and position of its shifting stream foretold prosperity or dearth for the land. All the places mentioned in lines 52–55 are in the West Country, near where King drowned.

9. Calliope, Muse of epic poetry, was the mother of Orpheus.

1. "Inchanting" implies both song and magic; the root word survives as "incantation."

2. Orpheus was torn to pieces by a mob ("rout") of screaming Thracian women, who threw his gory head into the river Hebrus, down which it floated, still singing, and out to Lesbos in the Aegean. The fate of Orpheus and the Druids suggests that nature everywhere is indifferent to the destruction of the poet.

3. Profits.

4. Study to write poetry (the phrase is Virgil's).

Were it not better done as others use,
 To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
 Or with the tangles of Neaera's hair?⁵
 Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise 70
 (That last infirmity of noble mind)
 To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
 But the fair guerdon⁶ when we hope to find,
 And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
 Comes the blind Fury⁷ with th' abhorred shears,
 And slits the thin spun life. "But not the praise," 75
 Phoebus⁸ replied, and touched my trembling ears;
 "Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
 Not in the glittering foil⁹
 Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumor lies, 80
 But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes,
 And perfect witness of all-judging Jove;
 As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
 Of so much fame in Heaven expect thy meed."
 O fountain Arethuse,¹ and thou honored flood, 85
 Smooth-sliding Mincius, crowned with vocal reeds,
 That strain I heard was of a higher mood.
 But now my oat² proceeds,
 And listens to the herald of the sea³
 That came in Neptune's plea. 90
 He asked the waves, and asked the felon winds,
 "What hard mishap hath doomed this gentle swain?"
 And questioned every gust of rugged wings
 That blows from off each beaked promontory;
 They knew not of his story, 95
 And sage Hippotades⁴ their answer brings,
 That not a blast was from his dungeon strayed,
 The air was calm, and on the level brine,
 Sleek Panope⁵ with all her sisters played.
 It was that fatal and perfidious bark metonymy → world 100
 Built in th' eclipse,⁶ and rigged with curses dark,

Transition

5. "Amaryllis" and "Neaera," conventional names for pretty nymphs, a passing hour's diversion for idle shepherds.

6. Reward.

7. Atropos, one of the three Fates, bearing scissors with which she cuts the thread of human life. Milton, to suggest the bitterness of death, makes her an avenging Fury.

8. Phoebus Apollo, god of poetic inspiration. Touching the ears of one's hearers was a traditional Roman way of asking them to remember something that had been said (Virgil, Eclogues VI; Horace, Satires I.ix.77).

9. Cheap, flashy metal, used to add glitter to glass gems.

1. Arethusa was a fountain in Sicily, Mincius a river in Lombardy, the former associated with the pastorals of Theocritus, the latter with those of Virgil. Arethusa was originally a nymph who went bathing in the river Alpheus, in Arcadian Greece. The river god grew enamored, and gave chase; she dove into the ocean and fled undersea to Sicily, where she came up as a fountain. Milton plays here with the idea of his pastoral going underground while the "strain of a higher mood" (line 87) is heard.

2. Pipe, hence song.

3. Neptune's "herald" is Triton, pleading his master's innocence in the death of Lycidas.

4. Aeolus, god of winds, and son of Hippotas.

5. The chief Nereid or sea nymph.

6. I.e., time of the worst possible luck.

That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next Camus,⁷ reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe.⁸
"Ah! who hath reft," quoth he, "my dearest pledge?"

105

Last came and last did go
The pilot of the Galilean lake,⁹

Two massy keys he bore of metals twain
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain¹).

110

He shook his mitered locks,² and stern bespake:

"How well could I have spared for thee, young swain,
Enow³ of such as for their bellies' sake,

Creep and intrude, and climb into the fold!

115

Of other care they little reckoning make,

Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,

And shove away the worthy bidden guest.

Blind mouths!⁴ That scarce themselves know how to hold

A sheep-hook,⁵ or have learned aught else the least

120

That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs!

What recks it them?⁶ What need they? They are sped;

And when they list,⁷ their lean and flashy songs

Grate on their scrannel⁸ pipes of wretched straw.

The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,

125

But swoln with wind, and the rank mist they draw,

Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread,

Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw⁹

Daily devours apace, and nothing said.

But that two-handed engine at the door¹

130

Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more."

Return, Alpheus,² the dread voice is past,

That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian muse,

7. God of the river Cam (properly, Granta), representing the ancient University of Cambridge, but slow and shaggy like the stream.

8. The honnet and mantle of Camus have marks of woe on the edge like the Al Al supposedly found on the hyacinth, a "sanguine flower" sprung from the blood of a youth killed accidentally by Apollo.

9. St. Peter, originally a fisherman on Lake Tiberias in Galilee, was first founder and bishop of the Christian church; his keys open and shut the gates to heaven.

1. Literally "in full force," "exceedingly"; in this context, "for good," "once and for all."

2. He wears the bishop's miter.

3. An old plural form of "enough," used here with contemptuous intensification, as if to say, "enough and more than enough."

4. This audacious metaphor, as of tape-worms, takes on new depth when one notes that the word episcopus (bishop) originally meant "over-seer" and a "pastor" is properly one who feeds his flock.

5. The bishop's staff, or crozier, is made in the form of a shepherd's crook.

6. What do they care? "They are sped": i.e., they have prospered in a worldly sense; but also, "their doom is sealed."

7. Choose (that is, choose to play on their pipes, as shepherds should); but with the secondary meaning of "listen."

8. Harsh, meager. Milton's is the first recorded literary use of the word in English; it existed previously only in a North-Country dialect.

9. I.e., Roman Catholicism, whose agents operated in secret.

1. Many guesses as to the specific meaning of the "two-handed engine" are on record; it may be St. Peter's keys, the two houses of Parliament, or a big sword, but there is no harm in letting it remain an indistinct, apocalyptic instrument of revenge.

2. With the return of Alpheus, the pastoral mode of the poem revives (see

And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
 Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues. 135
 Ye valleys low where the mild whispers use,³
 Of shades and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
 On whose fresh lap the swart star⁴ sparsely looks,
 Throw hither all your quaint enameled eyes,
 That on the green turf suck the honeyed showers, 140
 And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.
 Bring the rathe⁵ primrose that forsaken dies.
 The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
 The white pink, and the pansy freaked⁶ with jet,
 The glowing violet, 145
 The musk-rose, and the well attired woodbine.
 With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
 And every flower that sad embroidery wears:
 Bid amaranthus⁷ all his beauty shed,
 And daffadillies fill their cups with tears, 150
 To strew the laureate hearse⁸ where Lycid lies.
 For so to interpose a little ease,
 Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise.⁹
 Ay me! Whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
 Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurled, 155
 Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,¹
 Where thou perhaps under the whelming tide
 Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world;
 Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
 Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,² 160
 Where the great vision of the guarded mount
 Looks toward Namancos and Bayona's hold;³
 Look homeward angel now, and melt with ruth:⁴
 And, O ye dolphins,⁵ waft the hapless youth.
 Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no more, 165
 For Lycidas your sorrow is not dead, above, lines 85-87), and a catalogue of flowers serves, as in Castiglione's Alcon, to "interpose a little ease."

3. I.e., are used or accustomed to be heard.

4. The Dog Star, Sirius, which during the heats of late summer "looks sparsely" (witheringly) on the vegetation.

5. Early.

6. Flecked (the early verb survives in our word "freckle").

7. The amaranth is an imaginary flower that never fades; but for Lycidas it will.

8. Bier decked with laurels (see line 1).

9. The "false surmise" is that the body of Lycidas has been recovered and can receive Christian burial.

1. Islands off the coast of Scotland, representing the northern terminus of the Irish Sea.

2. The fabulous giant Bellerus is supposed to lie buried on Land's End in Cornwall.

3. St. Michael's Mount, in Cornwall, from which the archangel is envisioned as looking south, over miles of open Atlantic, across the Bay of Biscay, to Bayona and the stronghold of Namancos in northern Spain, where the historical Catholic enemy of Protestant England lay entrenched.

4. Michael is implored to look homeward, relaxing his stern guard for a moment of grief and pity ("ruth").

5. Dolphins, admirable sea beasts, brought the Greek poet Arion safely ashore for love of his verses, and also wafted the dead body of Melicertes to land, where he was promptly transformed to a sea god, Palaemon.

Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor,
 So sinks the day-star⁶ in the ocean bed,
 And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
 And tricks⁷ his beams, and with new-spangled ore,
 170
 Flames in the forehead of the morning sky:
 So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high, antithesis/paradox
 Through the dear might of him that walked the waves,
 Where other groves, and other streams along,
 With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves, 175
 And hears the unexpressive nuptial song,⁸
 In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
 There entertain him all the saints above,
 In solemn troops and sweet societies
 That sing, and singing in their glory move, 180
 And wipe the tears forever from his eyes.
 Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more;
 Henceforth thou art the genius⁹ of the shore,
 In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
 To all that wander in that perilous flood. 185
 Thus sang the uncouth swain¹ to th' oaks and rills,
 While the still morn went out with sandals gray;
 He touched the tender stops of various quills,²
 With eager thought warbling his Doric³ lay:
 And now the sun had stretched out all the hills, 190
 And now was dropped into the western bay;
 At last he rose, and twitched his mantle blue:
 Tomorrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

1637

How Soon Hath Time

How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of youth,
 Stolen on his wing my three and twentieth year!
 My hasting days fly on with full career,
 But my late spring no bud or blossom show'th.
 Perhaps my semblance might deceive the truth,
 That I to manhood am arrived so near,
 And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
 That some more timely-happy spirits endu'th.¹

5

6. The sun.

7. Dresses.

8. Inexpressible hymn of joy, sung at "the marriage supper of the Lamb" (Revelation xix).

9. One who by divine appointment haunts a locality (in this case, "the shore") where he suffered and died.

protecting others who might undergo a fate like his own.

1. Unlettered shepherd (a stock convention of this supremely literary form).

2. The oaten stalks of Panpipes.

3. Rustic, simple.

1. Endoweth.

Yet be it less or more, or soon or slow,
 It shall be still in strictest measure even²
 To that same lot, however mean or high,
 Toward which Time leads me, and the will of Heaven;
 All is, if I have grace to use it so,
 As ever in my great Taskmaster's eye.³

1631

1645

On the New Forcers of Conscience Under the Long Parliament¹

Because you have thrown off your prelate lord,²
 And with stiff vows renounced his liturgy,
 To seize the widowed whore Plurality³
 From them whose sin ye envied, not abhorred,
 Dare ye for this adjure the civil sword
 To force our consciences that Christ set free,
 And ride us with a classic hierarchy⁴
 Taught ye by mere A. S. and Rutherford?⁵
 Men whose life, learning, faith, and pure intent
 Would have been held in high esteem with Paul
 Must now be named and printed heretics
 By shallow Edwards and Scotch what d'ye call:⁶
 But we do hope to find out all your tricks,
 Your plots and packing worse than those of Trent,⁷
 That so the Parliament
 May with their wholesome and preventive shears
 Clip your phylacteries,⁸ though balk your ears,

5

10

15

2. Equal, adequate. Whenever it appears and however much it amounts to, Milton's inner growth will be adequate to the destiny which time and heaven are preparing.

3. The last two lines are enigmatic; their sense depends on whether one reads the "all" of line 13 as referring to time or talent.

1. "The new forcers of conscience" are Presbyterians, whom Milton at first supported against the Episcopalians (Church-of-England men). Now, under the Puritan-dominated Long Parliament, he finds them as bad as their predecessors ("whose sin ye envied, not abhorred"). The sonnet proper has 14 lines followed by two "tails" of three lines each; in Italy, where it was common, this was called a sonnetto caudato, or "tailed sonnet."

2. Bishop.

3. I.e., the comfortable, and sometimes necessary, practice of one priest's holding several livings at once.

4. A church discipline made up on the Presbyterian model of synods or classes, ecclesiastical governing boards with strong powers over the laity.

5. Adam Stuart and Samuel Rutherford, Presbyterian pamphleteers, whose full names Milton does not deign to give. Does not have space to give

6. Thomas Edwards, alarmed by the spread of heresies, began to describe them in a book picturesquely titled Gangraena (1645-46). Before giving up in despair, he wrote three fat volumes, including a denunciation of Milton, whom he described unjustly as an advocate of "divorce at pleasure." "Scotch what d'ye call" is Milton's humanistic sneer at the unpronounceability of Scottish names.

7. I.e., of the Council of Trent, held by the Papacy in consequence of the Reformation; it was widely reported to have been the scene of political jockeying.

8. Little scrolls, containing texts from the Pentateuch, worn by orthodox Jews to remind them of the Law. Milton uses them here as symbols of superstition. Mutilation by having one's ears cut

And succor our just fears
When they shall read this clearly in your charge:
New presbyter is but old priest writ large.

ca. 1646

20
1673

On the Late Massacre in Piedmont¹

Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold,
Even them who kept thy truth so pure of old
When all our fathers worshiped stocks and stones,
Forget not: in thy book record their groans
Who were thy sheep and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piemontese that rolled
Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
To Heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow
O'er all th' Italian fields where still doth sway
The triple tyrant:² that from these may grow
A hundredfold, who having learnt thy way
Early may fly the Babylonian woe.³

1655

1673

When I Consider How My Light Is Spent¹ or On His Blindness

When I consider how my light is spent
Ere half my days, in this dark world and wide,
And that one talent which is death to hide,
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent
To serve therewith my Maker, and present
My true account, lest he returning chide;
"Doth God exact day-labor, light denied?"
I fondly² ask; but Patience to prevent off was a common punishment for sedition, and several Presbyterian leaders had suffered it. Milton's MS. read, "Clip ye as close as marginal P——'s ears," but the jeer was too brutal. William Prynne, whose books had many footnotes in the margins, and whose ears had twice been cropped, had suffered for a cause in which Milton at the time believed; and his final version of the line is gentler.

1. The Waldenses were a heretical sect, probably of Eastern origin by way of Venice: they lived in the valleys of northern Italy ("the Piedmont") and southern France, professing a creed which was particularly akin to Protestantism in its avoidance of graven images ("stocks and stones"). The understanding which had allowed them freedom of worship was terminated in 1655, and the massacre which ensued was widely protested by the Protestant powers of Europe. Milton, as Latin secretary to Cromwell, wrote several indignant letters.

2. I.e., the Pope, wearing his tiara with three crowns.

3. Protestants in Milton's day frequently identified the Roman Church with the "whore of Babylon" (Revelation xvii, xviii).

1. Milton's sonnet on his blindness is very close, in theme, to that on his 23rd birthday. But the absolute repose of the latter sonnet's final line is beyond anything in the earlier one.

2. Foolishly. "Prevent": forestall.

That murmur, soon replies, "God doth not need
 Either man's work or his own gifts; who best
 Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state
 Is kingly. Thousands at his bidding speed
 And post o'er land and ocean without rest:
 They also serve who only stand and wait."

1655

1673

Methought I Saw My Late Espoused Saint

Methought I saw my late espoused saint
 Brought to me like Alcestis¹ from the grave,
 Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband gave,
 Rescued from death by force though pale and faint.
 Mine, as whom washed from spot of childbed taint,
 Purification in the old law did save,²
 And such, as yet once more I trust to have Full sight of her in Heaven without restraint,
 Came vested all in white, pure as her mind.
 Her face was veiled, yet to my fancied sight,
 Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
 So clear, as in no face with more delight.
 But O, as to embrace me she inclined,
 I waked, she fled, and day brought back my night.

1658

1673

To My Friend, Mr. Henry Lawes, on His Airs¹

Harry, whose tuneful and well measur'd song
 First taught our English music how to span
 Words with just note and accent, not to scan
 With Midas' ears,² committing short and long,
 Thy worth and skill exempts thee from the throng,
 With praise enough for envy to look wan;
 To after age thou shalt be writ the man
 That with smooth air couldst humor best our tongue.
 Thou honor'st verse, and verse must lend her wing
 To honor thee, the priest of Phoebus' choir³

10

1. Alcestis, wife of Admetus, was rescued from the underworld by Hercules ("Jove's great son").

2. The old law, prescribing periods for the purification of women after childbirth, is found in Leviticus xii. The compression of line 5 is perhaps extreme; expanded, it would read, "My wife, like the woman whom when washed from spot of childbed taint," etc.

1. Henry Lawes, who composed the original music for Milton's Comus, was a real innovator in the art of setting poems to music; he brought the two elements into closer harmony than anyone had achieved before.

2. Ovid tells, in Metamorphoses XI, how Midas was given ass's ears because he preferred Pan's pipes to the music of Apollo. "Committing": confusing, setting into conflict with one another.

3. The choir of Phoebus consists of the muses.

That tun'st their happiest lines in hymn, or story.
 Dante shall give fame leave to set thee higher
 Than his Casella,⁴ whom he woo'd to sing,
 Met in the milder shades of Purgatory.

1648

From Areopagitica¹

* * * In Athens, where books and wits were ever busier than in any other part of Greece, I find but only two sorts of writings which the magistrate cared to take notice of: those either blasphemous and atheistical, or libelous. Thus the books of Protagoras were by the judges of Areopagus commanded to be burnt, and himself banished the territory for a discourse begun with his confessing not to know *whether there were gods, or whether not.*² And against defaming, it was decreed that none should be traduced by name, as was the manner of Vetus Comoedia,³ whereby we may guess how they censured libeling: and this course was quick enough, as Cicero writes, to quell both the desperate wits of other atheists, and the open way of defaming, as the event showed. Of other sects and

4. Dante met Casella (Purgatory II) on the lower slopes of the mountain, and persuaded him to sing.

1. Areopagitica appeared on November 24, 1644. The title means "things to be said before the Areopagus." The Areopagus was an ancient, powerful, and much-respected tribunal in Athens, before which Isocrates, in 355 B.C., delivered a famous speech. Milton's title implies a comparison between the Areopagus and the English Parliament, and this comparison may be thought to validate, in some degree, the florid, oratorical tone of the tract.

Areopagitica is a plea for the liberty of unlicensed printing; its occasion was a severe ordinance for the control of printing which had been passed by Parliament on June 14, 1643. This ordinance, however disagreeable at the moment, was no striking novelty in English history. On the contrary, control of the press had been actively exercised by all the Tudors and both the early Stuarts. The aim of this government regulation was traditionally defined as the preservation of order and uniformity in church and state; but it also had an economic motive. Unlicensed printers threatened a monopoly enjoyed by the twenty licensed printers of London. Thus the censorship laws familiar to Englishmen had generally been strictly defined and had bristled with penalties. But to enforce them was another matter entirely. Tudor and Stuart police forces being what they were, few printers or authors had to worry about the consequences of going to print without a license. As a matter of fact, Areopagitica was itself unlicensed, Milton's third unlicensed pamphlet since the passage of the Ordinance for Printing only seventeen months before.

Thus the practical effects of the Ordinance for Printing were less important (particularly, we may be sure, in Milton's eyes) than the principle involved. Having taken the lead in destroying the licensing system of the Stuarts, Parliament was now setting up a censorship of its own. After a long prologue, Milton's first approach to his subject was to undertake a condensed history of censorship intended to discredit the institution by showing that only degenerate cultures ever made use of it.

2. It was in the 5th century B.C. that the sophist Protagoras of Abdera was censured in the manner described; Cicero wrote approvingly of this action in his treatise On the Nature of the Gods I.xxiii.

3. The "Old Comedy" of Aristophanes dealt with individuals, unlike the "New Comedy" of Menander, which dealt with types.

opinions, though tending to voluptuousness and the denying of Divine Providence, they took no heed. Therefore we do not read that either Epicurus, or that libertine school of Cyrene, or what the Cynic impudence uttered, was ever questioned by the laws.⁴ Neither is it recorded that the writings of those old comedians were suppressed, though the acting of them were forbid; and that Plato commended the reading of Aristophanes, the loosest of them all, to his royal scholar Dionysius,⁵ is commonly known, and may be excused, if holy Chrysostom, as is reported, nightly studied so much the same author and had the art to cleanse a scurrilous vehemence into the style of a rousing sermon.⁶ * * *

And that the primitive councils and bishops were wont only to declare what books were not commendable, passing no further, but leaving it to each one's conscience to read or to lay by, till after the year 800, is observed already by Padre Paolo, the great unmasker of the Trentine Council.⁷ After which time the Popes of Rome, engrossing what they pleased of political rule into their own hands, extended their dominion over men's eyes, as they had before over their judgments, burning and prohibiting to be read what they fancied not; yet sparing in their censures, and the books not many which they so dealt with: till Martin the Fifth, by his bull, not only prohibited, but was the first that excommunicated the reading of heretical books; for about that time Wycliffe and Huss⁸ growing terrible, were they who first drove the papal court to a stricter policy of prohibiting. Which course Leo the Tenth and his successors followed, until the Council of Trent and the Spanish Inquisition engendering together brought forth, or perfected, those catalogues and expurging indexes,⁹ that rake through the entrails of many an old good author with a violation worse than any could

4. Epicurus (4th and 3rd centuries B.C.) thought the gods had no influence on human affairs, but he did not deny their existence; therefore he was free of censorship. Aristippus of Cyrene, the pupil of Socrates, was like Epicurus in making pleasure the end of life. His school was known, from the Greek word for "pleasure," as the school of Hedonism; but, like Epicurus, he is misunderstood as a sensualist. Diogenes was the most famous of the Cynics, who often affected a rude and truculent disposition ("Cynic impudence"). All these philosophers flourished in and about the 4th century B.C.

5. That Plato told Dionysius, tyrant of Syracuse, to read Aristophanes is an ancient tradition. St. John Chrysostom, archbishop of Constantinople in the 4th century, is said to have hated the stage plays of his own day but profited from a constant perusal of Aristophanes.

6. After working his way through the various cities of Greece and the meager records of Roman censorship, Milton takes his readers to the ages of primitive Christianity, where he finds no positive censorship, merely an occasional recommendation of certain books to be read or not to be read.

7. Father Paolo Sarpi (d. 1623) was a Venetian historian who opposed papal claims to secular authority. His History of the Council of Trent was favorite reading matter for Protestants, since it described in graphic detail the "plots and packing" which went on behind the scenes of the Counter-Reformation. See Milton's sonnet On the New Forcers of Conscience, line 14.

8. John Wycliffe (d. 1384) was an English church reformer and translator of the Bible; John Huss (burned at the stake in 1415) was a Bohemian reformer of similar tendencies.

9. Literally from the Latin, indices expurgatorii, lists of books forbidden to Catholics.

be offered to his tomb.

Nor did they stay in matters heretical, but any subject that was not to their palate, they either condemned in a Prohibition, or had it straight into the new purgatory of an Index. To fill up the measure of encroachment, their last invention was to ordain that no book, pamphlet, or paper should be printed (as if St. Peter had bequeathed them the keys of the press also out of paradise) unless it were approved and licensed under the hands of two or three glutton friars. For example:¹

Let the Chancellor Cini be pleased to see if in this present work be contained aught that may withstand the printing.

Vincent Rabatta, Vicar of Florence.

I have seen this present work, and find nothing athwart the Catholic faith and good manners: in witness whereof I have given, etc.

Nicolò Cini, Chancellor of Florence.

Attending the precedent relation, it is allowed that this present work of Davanzati may be printed.

Vincent Rabatta, etc.

It may be printed, July 15.

Friar Simon Mompci d'Amelia, Chancellor of the holy office in Florence.

Sure they have a conceit,² if he of the bottomless pit had not long since broke prison, that this quadruple exorcism would bar him down. I fear their next design will be to get into their custody the licensing of that which they say Claudius intended,³ but went not through with. Vouchsafe to see another of their forms, the Roman stamp:

Imprimatur, If it seem good to the reverend master of the holy palace.

Belcastro, Viccgerent.

Imprimatur, Friar Nicolò Rodolphi, Master of the holy palace.

Sometimes five Imprimaturs are seen together dialogue-wise in the piazza of one title page, complimenting and ducking each to other with their shaven reverences, whether the author, who stands by in perplexity at the foot of his epistle, shall to the press or to the sponge.⁴ These are the pretty responsories, these are the dear antiphonies, that so bewitched of late our prelates and their chaplains

1. Milton's examples come from a book on The English Schism, translated by Bernardo Davanzati from the original of an English Jesuit.

2. Notion.

3. The Roman historian Suetonius says that Claudius once planned to tax the act of breaking wind. Milton's note refers to this impractical scheme in the decent obscurity of a learned language.

4. I.e., the eraser. In the next sentence, "responsories" and "antiphonies" are ecclesiastical services after the pattern of a dialogue.

with the goodly echo they made; and besotted us to the gay imitation of a lordly Imprimatur, one from Lambeth House, another from the west end of Paul's;⁵ so apishly Romanizing, that the word of command still was set down in Latin; as if the learned grammatical pen that wrote it would cast no ink without Latin; or perhaps, as they thought, because no vulgar tongue was worthy to express the pure conceit of an Imprimatur; but rather, as I hope, for that our English, the language of men ever famous and foremost in the achievements of liberty, will not easily find servile letters enow to spell such a dictatory presumption English.⁶ * * *

Good and evil we know in the field of this world grow up together almost inseparably; and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil, and in so many cunning resemblances hardly to be discerned, that those confused seeds which were imposed on Psyche as an incessant labor to cull out and sort asunder,⁷ were not more intermixed. It was from out the rind of one apple tasted, that the knowledge of good and evil, as two twins cleaving together, leaped forth into the world. And perhaps this is that doom which Adam fell into of knowing good and evil, that is to say of knowing good by evil.

As therefore the state of man now is, what wisdom can there be to choose, what continence to forbear without the knowledge of evil? He that can apprehend and consider vice with all her baits and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish, and yet prefer that which is truly better, he is the true wayfaring⁸ Christian. I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race where that immortal garland⁹ is to be run for, not without dust and heat. Assuredly we bring not innocence into the world, we bring impurity much rather; that which purifies us is trial, and trial is by what is contrary. That virtue therefore which is but a youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an excremental¹ whiteness; which was the reason why our sage and serious poet Spenser (whom I dare be known to think a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas),²

5. Lambeth House is the Archbishop of Canterbury's London home. "Paul's" is St. Paul's Cathedral, headquarters of the Bishop of London. Under the prerogative government of Charles, these were the two chief censors.

6. Having finished with the history of censorship, Milton proceeds to argue more generally that the institution itself is evil and unchristian. As God left man free to choose among the many physical foods of this world, urging only temperance, so he left him free to pick and choose among ideas.

7. Angry at her son Cupid's love for Psyche, Venus set Psyche to sorting out a vast mound of mixed seeds; but the ants took pity on her, and did the work. See Apuleius, The Golden Ass.

8. There has been debate whether this word should be read "wayfaring" or "warfaring," but in the image of Christian life as a pilgrimage, a crusade, the two ideas are united.

9. The crown of righteousness, the garland of virtue.

1. Exterior (like a whited sepulcher, covering corruption within).

2. Duns Scotus and Thomas Aquinas, taken as types of the Scholastic theo-describing true temperance under the person of Guyon, brings him in with his palmer through the cave of Mammon and the bower of earthly bliss, that he might see and know, and yet abstain.

Since therefore the knowledge and survey of vice is in this world so necessary to the constituting of human virtue, and the scanning of error to the confirmation of truth, how can we more safely, and with less danger, scout into the regions of sin and falsity than by reading all manner of tractates and hearing all manner of reason? And this is the benefit which may be had of books promiscuously read.

But of the harm that may result hence, three kinds are usually reckoned. First, is feared the infection that may spread; but then all human learning and controversy in religious points must remove out of the world, yea, the Bible itself; for that oftentimes relates blasphemy not nicely,³ it describes the carnal sense of wicked men not unelegantly, it brings in holiest men passionately murmuring against Providence through all the arguments of Epicurus:⁴ in other great disputes it answers dubiously and darkly to the common reader: and ask a Talmudist what ails the modesty of his marginal Keri, that Moses and all the prophets cannot persuade him to pronounce the textual Chetiv.⁵ For these causes we all know the Bible itself put by the papist into the first rank of prohibited books. The ancientest Fathers must be next removed, as Clement of Alexandria, and that Eusebian book of evangelic preparation, transmitting our ears through a hoard of heathenish obscenities to receive the Gospel.⁶ Who finds not that Irenaeus, Epiphanius, Jerome, and others discover⁷ more heresies than they well confute, and that oft for heresy which is the truer opinion?⁸ * * *

Impunity and remissness, for certain, are the bane of a commonwealth; but here the great art lies, to discern in what the law is to bid restraint and punishment, and in what things persuasion only is to work. If every action which is good or evil in man at ripe years were to be under pittance⁹ and prescription and compulsion, what were virtue but a name, what praise could be then due to logian. The passage of Spenser referred to is Faerie Queene II.vii.

3. Daintily.

4. See the Book of Ecclesiastes.

5. "Keri" are the marginal comments of rabbinical scholars on the "Chetiv" of the Bible, the text itself. When the text was too free-spoken for later commentators, Keri was sometimes read in place of Chetiv.

6. Eusebius' Preparatio Evangelica, like many early Christian books of polemic, describes heathen wickedness in fascinating detail, as an encouragement to Christian faith. St. Irenaeus, St. Epiphanius, St. Jerome, and even that ancient and edifying convert, Clement of Alexandria, are all subject to this charge.

7. Describe (and so preserve, report).

8. Milton now argues that books cannot pervert men unless they are given force and vitality by a teacher, who, if he is a good teacher, needs no books. A fool, he urges, can find material for his folly in the best books, and a wise man material for his wisdom in the worst. Plato, indeed, recommended censorship in his Republic; but in real life one cannot censor books without censoring ballads, fiddlers, clothing, conversation, and social life as a whole.

9. Rationing.

well-doing, what gramercy¹ to be sober, just, or continent?

Many there be that complain of Divine Providence for suffering Adam to transgress; foolish tongues! when God gave him reason, he gave him freedom to choose, for reason is but choosing; he had been else a mere artificial Adam, such an Adam as he is in the motions.² We ourselves esteem not of that obedience, or love, or gift, which is of force: God therefore left him free, set before him a provoking object, ever almost in his eyes; herein consisted his merit, herein the right of his reward, the praise of his abstinence. Wherefore did he create passions within us, pleasures round about us, but that these rightly tempered are the very ingredients of virtue? They are not skillful considerers of human things, who imagine to remove sin by removing the matter of sin; for, besides that it is a huge heap increasing under the very act of diminishing, though some part of it may for a time be withdrawn from some persons, it cannot from all, in such a universal thing as books are; and when this is done, yet the sin remains entire. Though ye take from a covetous man all his treasure, he has yet one jewel left, ye cannot bereave him of his covetousness. Banish all objects of lust, shut up all youth into the severest discipline that can be exercised in any hermitage, ye cannot make them chaste that came not thither so: such great care and wisdom is required to the right managing of this point.

Suppose we could expel sin by this means; look how much we thus expel of sin, so much we expel of virtue: for the matter of them both is the same; remove that, and ye remove them both alike. This justifies the high providence of God, who, though he commands us temperance, justice, continence, yet pours out before us, even to a profuseness, all desirable things, and gives us minds that can wander beyond all limit and satiety. Why should we then affect a rigor contrary to the manner of God and of nature, by abridging or scanting those means, which books freely permitted are, both to the trial of virtue and the exercise of truth?³ * * *

Well knows he who uses to consider, that our faith and knowledge thrives by exercise, as well as our limbs and complexion.⁴ Truth is compared in Scripture to a streaming fountain; if her waters flow not in a perpetual progression, they sicken into a muddy pool of conformity and tradition. A man may be a heretic in the truth; and if he believe things only because his pastor says so, or the Assembly so determines, without knowing other reason, though his

1. Reward, thanks.

2. Puppet shows.

3. Censorship, Milton urges, is a vulgar, mechanical job; no man of intelligence will undertake it, and a dunderhead will make serious blunders. Finally, to put stupid men in authority over intelligent ones will discourage the pursuit of learning on every hand, except so far as censorship, by giving authority to banned books, will encourage men to seek out and cling to perverse opinions.

4. Constitution, regarded as the proper mingling of certain qualities in one's body.

belief be true, yet the very truth he holds becomes his heresy. There is not any burden that some would gladlier post off to another than the charge and care of their religion. There be, who knows not that there be, of Protestants and professors⁵ who live and die in as arrant an implicit faith as any lay papist of Loretto.⁶ A wealthy man, addicted to his pleasure and to his profits, finds religion to be a traffic so entangled, and of so many piddling accounts, that of all mysteries he cannot skill⁷ to keep a stock going upon that trade. What should he do? Fain he would have the name to be religious, fain he would bear up with his neighbors in that. What does he therefore, but resolves to give over toiling, and to find himself out some factor,⁸ to whose care and credit he may commit the whole managing of his religious affairs; some divine of note and estimation that must be. To him he adheres, resigns the whole warehouse of his religion, with all the locks and keys, into his custody; and indeed makes the very person of that man his religion; esteems his associating with him a sufficient evidence and commendatory of his own piety. So that a man may say his religion is now no more within himself, but is become a dividual⁹ movable, and goes and comes near him, according as that good man frequents the house. He entertains him, gives him gifts, feasts him, lodges him; his religion comes home at night, prays, is liberally supped, and sumptuously laid to sleep, rises, is saluted, and after the malmsey, or some well-spiced brewage, and better breakfasted than He whose morning appetite would have gladly fed on green figs between Bethany and Jerusalem,¹ his religion walks abroad at eight, and leaves his kind entertainer in the shop trading all day without his religion.

Another sort there be who, when they hear that all things shall be ordered, all things regulated and settled, nothing written but what passes through the custom-house of certain publicans that have the tonnage and poundaging² of all free-spoken truth, will straight give themselves up into your hands, make 'em and cut 'em out what religion ye please: there be delights, there be recreations and jolly pastimes that will fetch the day about from sun to sun, and rock the tedious year as in a delightful dream. What need they torture their heads with that which others have taken so strictly and so unalterably into their own purveying? These are the fruits which a dull ease and cessation of our knowledge will bring forth among the people. How goodly and how to be wished were

5. "Professors" in this context are people professing the Protestant faith.

6. A famous Catholic shrine.

7. Trades he cannot manage.

8. Agent.

9. I.e., separate or separable. Milton is describing the common institution of the household chaplain.

1. Mark xi.12-13. Jesus, hungry, found nothing but leaves on the fig tree, for the time of the figs was not yet.

2. "Publicans": tax collectors. Tonnage and poundage were excise taxes levied illegally by the king before 1641, and therefore specially odious to Milton's readers.

such an obedient unanimity as this, what a fine conformity would it starch us all into! Doubtless a staunch and solid piece of framework, as any January could freeze together.³ * * *

Truth indeed came once into the world with her Divine Master, and was a perfect shape most glorious to look on: but when he ascended, and his apostles after him were laid asleep, then straight arose a wicked race of deceivers, who, as that story goes of the Egyptian Typhon with his conspirators, how they dealt with the good Osiris,⁴ took the virgin Truth, hewed her lovely form into a thousand pieces, and scattered them to the four winds. From that time ever since, the sad friends of Truth, such as durst appear, imitating the careful search that Isis made for the mangled body of Osiris, went up and down gathering up limb by limb, still as they could find them. We have not yet found them all, Lords and Commons, nor ever shall do, till her Master's second coming; he shall bring together every joint and member, and shall mold them into an immortal feature of loveliness and perfection. Suffer not these licensing prohibitions to stand at every place of opportunity, forbidding and disturbing them that continue seeking, that continue to do our obsequies to the torn body of our martyred saint. We boast our light; but if we look not wisely on the sun itself, it smites us into darkness. Who can discern those planets that are oft combust,⁵ and those stars of brightest magnitude that rise and set with the sun, until the opposite motion of their orbs bring them to such a place in the firmament where they may be seen evening or morning? The light which we have gained was given us, not to be ever staring on, but by it to discover onward things more remote from our knowledge. It is not the unfrocking of a priest, the unmitering of a bishop, and the removing him from off the Presbyterian shoulders, that will make us a happy nation. No, if other things as great in the church, and in the rule of life both economical⁶ and political, be not looked into and reformed, we have looked so long upon the blaze that Zwinglius⁷ and Calvin hath beaconed up to us, that we are stark blind.

There be who perpetually complain of schisms and sects, and make it such a calamity that any man dissents from their maxims. 'Tis their own pride and ignorance which causes the disturbing, who neither will hear with meekness, nor can convince; yet all must be suppressed which is not found in their syntagma.⁸ They are the

3. To set barriers in the way of fresh truths implies that a nation has all the truth it needs; but this, Milton argues, is far from the case. England has no grounds for sinugness; the nation needs every bit of truth it can discover.

4. Plutarch tells, in his Isis and Osiris, of Typhon's scattering the fragments of his brother Osiris, and of Isis' efforts to recover them.

5. Literally, burned up; in astrology, so close to the sun as not to be visible.

6. Domestic.

7. Zwingli and Calvin, both radical Swiss reformers, were mainstays of the Presbyterian cause, which Milton was already feeling to be a little narrow.

8. Compilation of beliefs, creed.

troublers, they are the dividers of unity, who neglect and permit not others to unite those dissevered pieces which are yet wanting to the body of Truth. To be still searching what we know not by what we know, still closing up truth to truth as we find it (for all her body is homogeneous and proportional), this is the golden rule in theology as well as in arithmetic, and makes up the best harmony in a church; not the forced and outward union of cold and neutral and inwardly divided minds.

Lords and Commons of England, consider what nation it is whereof ye are, and whereof ye are the governors: a nation not slow and dull, but of a quick, ingenious and piercing spirit, acute to invent, subtle and sinewy to discourse, not beneath the reach of any point, the highest that human capacity can soar to. Therefore the studies of learning in her deepest sciences have been so ancient and so eminent among us, that writers of good antiquity and ablest judgment have been persuaded that even the school of Pythagoras and the Persian wisdom took beginning from the old philosophy of this island.⁹ And that wise and civil Roman, Julius Agricola, who governed once here for Caesar, preferred the natural wits of Britain before the labored studies of the French. Nor is it for nothing that the grave and frugal Transylvanian sends out yearly from as far as the mountainous borders of Russia, and beyond the Hercynian wilderness, not their youth, but their staid men, to learn our language and our theologic arts.

Yet that which is above all this, the favor and the love of heaven, we have great argument¹ to think in a peculiar manner propitious and propending towards us. Why else was this nation chosen before any other, that out of her, as out of Zion,² should be proclaimed and sounded forth the first tidings and trumpet of Reformation to all Europe? And had it not been the obstinate perverseness of our prelates against the divine and admirable spirit of Wycliffe, to suppress him as a schismatic and innovator, perhaps neither the Bohemian Huss and Jerome,³ no, nor the name of Luther or of Calvin, had been ever known: the glory of reforming all our neighbors had been completely ours. But now, as our obdurate clergy have with violence demeaned⁴ the matter, we are become hitherto the latest and backwardest scholars of whom God offered to have made us the teachers. Now once again by all concurrence of signs, and by the general instinct of holy and devout men, as they daily

9. So far as it concerns Pythagoras and the Persians, this sentence is better patriotism than it is intellectual history. Agricola's opinion of the British intellect (referred to next), is found in Tacitus' Life of Agricola: "civil" means "cultured, civilized." The Transylvanians, being Protestants, did sometimes come to England from "beyond the Hercynian wilderness" (the Harz mountains) to study.

1. Reason. "Propending": inclining. favorable.

2. Mt. Zion, in Jerusalem, the site of the temple, the holy of holies.

3. Jerome of Prague (martyred in 1416) was a follower of Huss and so of Wycliffe.

4. Conducted.

and solemnly express their thoughts, God is decreeing to begin some new and great period in his church, even to the reforming of Reformation itself; what does he then but reveal himself to his servants, and as his manner is, first to his Englishmen? I say, as his manner is, first to us, though we mark not the method of his counsels, and are unworthy. Behold now this vast city: a city of refuge, the mansion house of liberty, encompassed and surrounded with his protection; the shop of war hath not there more anvils and hammers waking, to fashion out the plates⁵ and instruments of armed justice in defense of beleaguered truth, than there be pens and heads there, sitting by their studious lamps, musing, searching, revolving new notions and ideas wherewith to present, as with their homage and their fealty, the approaching Reformation: others as fast reading, trying all things, assenting to the force of reason and conviction.

What could a man require more from a nation so pliant and so prone to seek after knowledge? What wants there to such a towardly⁶ and pregnant soil, but wise and faithful laborers, to make a knowing people, a nation of prophets, of sages, and of worthies? We reckon more than five months yet to harvest; there need not be five weeks; had we but eyes to lift up, the fields are white already.⁷ Where there is much desire to learn, there of necessity will be much arguing, much writing, many opinions; for opinion in good men is but knowledge in the making. Under these fantastic terrors of sect and schism we wrong the earnest and zealous thirst after knowledge and understanding which God hath stirred up in this city.

What some lament of, we rather should rejoice at, should rather praise this pious forwardness among men, to reassume the ill-deputed care of their religion into their own hands again. A little generous prudence, a little forbearance of one another, and some grain of charity might win all these diligences to join, and unite into one general and brotherly search after truth; could we but forgo this prelatical tradition of crowding free consciences and Christian liberties into canons and precepts of men. I doubt not, if some great and worthy stranger should come among us, wise to discern the mold and temper of a people, and how to govern it, observing the high hopes and aims, the diligent alacrity of our extended thoughts and reasonings in the pursuance of truth and freedom, but that he would cry out as Pyrrhus did, admiring the Roman docility and courage: "If such were my Epirots, I would not despair the greatest design that could be attempted, to make a church or kingdom happy."⁸ Yet these are the men cried out against for schismat-

5. Plate mail, armor plate.

6. Favorable.

7. Milton is paraphrasing Christ's words to the disciples (John iv.35).

8. Though King Pyrrhus of Epirus beat the Roman armies at Heraclea in 280 B.C., he was much impressed by their discipline.

ics and sectaries;⁹ as if, while the temple of the Lord was building, some cutting, some squaring the marble, others hewing the cedars, there should be a sort of irrational men, who could not consider there must be many schisms and many dissections¹ made in the quarry and in the timber, ere the house of God can be built. And when every stone is laid artfully together, it cannot be united into a continuity, it can but be contiguous in this world; neither can every piece of the building be of one form; nay rather the perfection consists in this, that out of many moderate varieties and brotherly dissimilitudes that are not vastly disproportional, arises the goodly and the graceful symmetry that commends the whole pile and structure. Let us therefore be more considerate builders, more wise in spiritual architecture, when great reformation is expected. For now the time seems come, wherein Moses the great prophet may sit in heaven rejoicing to see that memorable and glorious wish of his fulfilled, when not only our seventy elders, but all the Lord's people, are become prophets.² * * *

Methinks I see in my mind a noble and puissant nation rousing herself like a strong man after sleep, and shaking her invincible locks: methinks I see her as an eagle mewing³ her mighty youth, and kindling her undazzled eyes at the full midday beam; purging and unscaling her long-abused sight at the fountain itself of heavenly radiance; while the whole noise of timorous and flocking birds, with those also that love the twilight, flutter about, amazed at what she means, and in their envious gabble would prognosticate a year of sects and schisms.⁴ * * *

1644

9. Sectarians, dividers of the church.

1. Milton puns on the literal meanings of "schisms" and "dissections" ("split" and "cut up") to press the image of the church as a temple built of believers.

2. In Numbers xi.29, Moses expressed the wish that all the Lord's people (not just the council of "seventy," or Sanhedrin) were prophets.

3. Molting, shaking off. Or the word may be "newing," i.e., renewing.

4. With this vigorous expression of idealistic optimism, Milton's argument subsides into a few last repetitions and afterthoughts. In practical terms, it was not a successful argument; the ordinance against which it protested was not repealed, though it was never effectively enforced, being, in effect, unenforceable. In time, Milton himself became, temporarily, a licenser of news sheets under Cromwell. But this biographical fact need not and must not be taken as a retraction or limitation of the position assumed in Areopagitica, which moves throughout on a plane of policy far removed from mundane considerations of practical politics.

Your sarcasm might not be justified. The best spot from which to fight censorship is ~~from~~ that of held censor.

Paradise Lost The entry into Paradise Lost is easy—deceptively so. Carried along by the impetus of Satan's tremendous adventures, readers are apt to forget there is any other part to the poem. Indeed, while we are getting acclimated to the Miltonic world, there is no reason to hold back our sympathy with Satan, our admiration for his heroic energy. It is energy in a bad cause, clearly; but it is energy, it is heroically exercised, and there is as yet no source of virtuous power to oppose or offset it. With the appearance of Christ the Son, at the opening of Book III, we begin to see in heavenly Love the counterpoise of Satan's hellish Hate; and in Book IV, as we are introduced not only to Adam and Eve but to Paradise, our sympathies gradually shift. Satan is no longer a glamorous underdog, fighting his adventurous way through the universe against enormous odds; he is a menacing vulture, a cormorant, a toad, a snake. He is not only dangerous, he is dull; whatever richness and variety he discovers in the universe serve only to produce in him envious hatred and destructiveness. His sin is incestuous, as the allegory of Sin and Death points out; it breeds out of itself ever fresh occasions of sin. Adam and Eve, who are weaker, less active, and less spectacular in every way, finally outweigh Satan in our interest and sympathy simply because they can respond to life, and to the terrifying experience of guilt, more vigorously than Satan can.

Seen overall—from above, as it were—Paradise Lost is a vast but delicately balanced structure. The adventure of Satan in Books I–III balances the history of mankind in Books X–XII. Book IV, the entry of Satan (and the reader) into Paradise, balances Book IX, describing the loss of Paradise. Books V and VI, describing the destructive war in Heaven, balance as on a fulcrum against Books VII and VIII, which describe the Creation and deal with the problems of understanding it.

Within the poem's larger structure, there are all sorts of secondary balances which the knowing reader will recognize for himself. The consult in Hell (Book II) is paralleled by a consult in Heaven (Book III); the Heavenly Trinity of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost is paralleled by a diabolic trinity of Satan, Sin, and Death. Satan's fall parallels Adam's fall, and the parallel is prolonged into that extended series of falls and recoveries which is the history of mankind. Moloch contrasts with Mammon; the Son's mercy with the Father's justice; Raphael's affability with Michael's severity; and so on, almost without limit.

The structure of the poem is at once massive and delicate; its language is also both rich and strong. Milton's range of classical reference and gift for epithet are undoubtedly staggering at first view, and his long, complexly subordinated sentences are sometimes hard to follow. Footnotes, alas, provide the only proper solution to this problem. But one need not equal, or even follow, all Milton's learning in order to appreciate his poem, especially at a first reading. The poem progresses as through a garden of metaphor and reference which stretches away on either side of one, as far as the eye can see; on a first tour, it is enough to get the general prospect clear, without learning the name of each particular blossom. Ultimately, the reader who is experienced in the poem comes to appreciate its details—epic similes like Leviathan the seabest (I.201), no less than the one-eyed Arimaspians and the gryphon (II.944)—its epithets and circumlocutions like Mulciber (I.740), who is Vulcan, and Amram's son (I.339) who is Moses—without sense of strain or strangeness. Milton himself moved securely through the literatures of half a dozen languages and as many cultures; it is one of the supreme rewards of literary study to be able to follow him with an equivalent security.

Paradise Lost is at once a deeply traditional and a boldly original poem. Milton takes pains to fulfill the traditional prescriptions of the epic form; he gives us love, war, supernatural characters, a descent into Hell, a catalogue of warriors, all the conventional items of epic machinery. Yet no poem in which the climax of the central action is a woman eating a piece of fruit can be a conventional epic. Similarly, Milton himself defined his own moral purpose as being to "justify the ways of God to man." This seems no more than conventionally meek. Yet we cannot even think of equating the message of Milton's poem with Pope's injunction to "submit" because "whatever is is right." The way of life which Adam and Eve take up as the poem ends is that of the Christian pilgrimage through this world. Paradise was no place or condition in which to exercise Christian heroism as Milton conceives it. Expelled from Eden, our first "grand parents" pick up the burdens of humanity as we know them, sustained by a faith which we also know, and go forth to seek a blessing which we do not know yet. They are to become wayfaring, warfaring Christians, like John Milton; and in this condition, with its weaknesses and strivings and inevitable defeats, there is a glory that no devil can ever understand. Thus Milton strikes, humanly as well as artistically, a grand resolving chord. It is the careful, triumphant balancing and tempering of this conclusion which makes Milton's poem the noble architecture it is; and which makes of the end a richer, if not a more exciting, experience than the beginning.

From PARADISE LOST

Book I

*The Argument*¹

This first book proposes, first in brief, the whole subject, man's disobedience, and the loss thereupon of Paradise, wherein he was placed: then touches the prime cause of his fall, the serpent, or rather Satan in the serpent; who, revolting from God, and drawing to his side many legions of angels, was, by the command of God, driven out of Heaven, with all his crew, into the great deep. Which action passed over, the poem hastens into the midst of things;² presenting Satan, with his angels, now fallen into Hell—described here not in the center (for heaven and earth may be supposed as yet not made, certainly not yet accursed), but in a place of utter darkness, fitliest called Chaos. Here Satan with his angels lying on the burning lake, thunderstruck and astonished, after a certain space recovers, as from confusion; calls up him who, next in order and dignity, lay by him: they confer of their miserable fall. Satan awakens all his legions, who lay till then in the same manner confounded. They rise: their numbers; array of battle; their

1. Paradise Lost appeared originally without any sort of prose aid to the reader; but, since many readers found the poem hard going, the printer asked Milton for some prose "Arguments" or summary explanations of the action in the various books, and prefixed them to later issues of the poem. We reprint those for the first three books and the ninth.

2. Adapted from Horace's prescription that the epic poet should start "in medias res."

chief leaders named, according to the idols known afterwards in Canaan and the countries adjoining. To these Satan directs his speech; comforts them with hope yet of regaining Heaven; but tells them, lastly, of a new world and new kind of creature to be created, according to an ancient prophecy, or report, in Heaven; for that angels were long before this visible creation was the opinion of many ancient fathers.³ To find out the truth of this prophecy, and what to determine⁴ thereon, he refers to a full council. What his associates thence attempt. Pandemonium, the palace of Satan, rises, suddenly built out of the deep: the infernal peers there sit in council.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit⁵
 Of that forbidden tree whose mortal⁶ taste
 Brought death into the world, and all our woe,
 With loss of Eden, till one greater Man⁷
 Restore us, and regain the blissful seat,
 Sing, Heavenly Muse,⁸ that, on the secret top
 Of Oreb, or of Sinai, didst inspire
 That shepherd who first taught the chosen seed
 In the beginning how the Heavens and Earth
 Rose out of Chaos: or, if Sion hill⁹
 Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook that flowed
 Fast¹ by the oracle of God, I thence Invoke thy aid to my adventurous song,
 That with no middle flight intends to soar
 Above th' Aonian mount,² while it pursues
 Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.
 And chiefly thou, O Spirit,³ that dost prefer
 Before all temples th' upright heart and pure,
 Instruct me, for thou know'st; thou from the first
 Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread,
 Dovelike sat'st brooding⁴ on the vast abyss,

3. I.e., Church Fathers, the Christian writers of the first three centuries of the church.

4. I.e., what action to take upon their information.

5. Eve's apple, of course; but also all the consequences of eating it.

6. Deadly; but also "to mortals" (i.e., human beings).

7. Christ, the second Adam.

8. In Greek mythology, Urania, Muse of astronomy and epic poetry; but here identified, by references to Oreb and Sinai, with the Holy Spirit of the Bible, which inspired Moses. ("that shepherd") to write Genesis and the other four books of the Pentateuch for the instruction of the Jews ("the chosen seed").

9. The hill of Sion and the brook of Siloa are two features of the landscape around Jerusalem likely to appeal to a Muse, whose natural haunts are springs and mountains (see Lycidas, line 15). Milton's aim is to show that poetry is everywhere recognized as an inspiration close to that of religion.

1. Close.

2. Helicon, home of the classical Muses; Milton is deliberately courting comparison with Homer and Virgil.

3. The Spirit is an impulse or voice of God, by which the Hebrew prophets were directly inspired.

4. A composite of phrases and ideas from Genesis 1.2 ("And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters"); Matthew iii.16 ("and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him"); and Luke iii.22 ("and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him"). Milton's mind as he wrote was impregnated with expressions from the King James Bible, only a few of which can be indicated in the notes.

And mad'st it pregnant: what in me is dark
 Illumine; what is low, raise and support;
 That, to the height of this great argument,⁵
 I may assert Eternal Providence,
 And justify the ways of God to men.

25

Say first (for Heaven hides nothing from thy view, Nor the deep tract of Hell), say first what cause
 Moved our grand⁶ parents, in that happy state,
 Favored of Heaven so highly, to fall off
 From their Creator, and transgress his will For⁷ one restraint, lords of the world besides?⁸
 Who first seduced them to that foul revolt?

30

Th' infernal serpent; he it was, whose guile,
 Stirred up with envy and revenge, deceived
 The mother of mankind, what time⁹ his pride
 Had cast him out from Heaven, with all his host
 Of rebel angels, by whose aid, aspiring
 To set himself in glory above his peers,¹
 He trusted to have equaled the Most High,
 If he opposed; and with ambitious aim
 Against the throne and monarchy of God,
 Raised impious war in Heaven and battle proud,
 With vain attempt. Him the Almighty Power
 Hurl'd headlong flaming from th' ethereal sky,
 With hideous ruin and combustion, down
 To bottomless perdition, there to dwell
 In adamant chains and penal fire,
 Who durst defy th' Omnipotent to arms.

35

40

45

Nine times the space that measures day and night
 To mortal men, he with his horrid crew,
 Lay vanquished, rolling in the fiery gulf,
 Confounded though immortal. But his doom
 Reserved him to more wrath; for now the thought
 Both of lost happiness and lasting pain
 Torments him; round he throws his baleful² eyes,
 That witnessed huge affliction and dismay,
 Mixed with obdurate pride and steadfast hate.
 At once, as far as angels ken,³ he views
 The dismal situation waste and wild:
 A dungeon horrible, on all sides round,
 As one great furnace flamed; yet from those flames
 No light,⁴ but rather darkness visible

50

55

60

= Lucifer

Oxygon

5. Theme.

6. First in importance; by implication, in time also.

7. Because of.

8. In every other respect.

9. I.e., at the time when.

1. His equals. The sentence mimics Satan's action, piling clause loosely upon clause, and building ever higher, till "with vain attempt" (line 44) brings the whole structure crashing down. It is a dramatic entry into "the midst of things," where epics begin. Book VI will recount more largely the war in Heaven, in the full narrative form which Aeneas used to tell Dido of the last days of Troy.

2. Malignant, as well as suffering.

3. As far as angels can see.

4. Omitting the verb conveys abruptly the paradox: fire-without-light.

Served only to discover sights of woe,
 Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace 65
 And rest can never dwell, hope never comes
 That comes to all,⁵ but torture without end
 Still urges,⁶ and a fiery deluge, fed
 With ever-burning sulphur unconsumed.
 Such place Eternal Justice had prepared 70
 For those rebellious; here their prison ordained
 In utter⁷ darkness, and their portion set,
 As far removed from God and light of Heaven
 As from the center⁸ thrice to th' utmost pole.
 O how unlike the place from whence they fell!
 There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelmed 75
 With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
 He soon discerns; and, weltering by his side,
 One next himself in power, and next in crime,
 Long after known in Palestine, and named 80
 Beëlzebub.⁹ To whom th' arch-enemy,
 And thence in Heaven called Satan,¹ with bold words
 Breaking the horrid silence, thus began:
 "If thou beest he—but O how fallen! how changed
 From him who, in the happy realms of light 85
 Clothed with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
 Myriads, though bright! if he whom mutual league,
 United thoughts and counsels, equal hope
 And hazard in the glorious enterprise,
 Joined with me once, now misery hath joined 90
 In equal ruin; into what pit thou seest²
 From what height fallen, so much the stronger proved
 He with his thunder:³ and till then who knew
 The force of those dire arms? Yet not for those,
 Nor what the potent Victor in his rage 95
 Can else inflict, do I repent, or change,
 Though changed in outward luster, that fixed mind,
 And high disdain from sense of injured merit,

5. The phrase echoes an expression in Dante ("All hope abandon, ye who enter here"), but Milton expresses it as a logical absurdity. Hope comes to "all" but not to Hell-dwellers; they are not included in "all."

6. Afflicts.

7. "Complete" but also "outer."

8. The earth. Milton makes use in Paradise Lost of two images of the cosmos: (1) the earth is the center of the created (Ptolemaic) cosmos of nine concentric spheres; but (2) the earth and the whole created cosmos are a mere appendage, hanging from Heaven by a golden chain, in the larger, aboriginal, and less shapely cosmos. In the present passage, the fall from Heaven to Hell (through the aboriginal universe) is described as thrice as far as the distance (in the created universe) from the center (earth) to the outermost sphere.

9. A Phoenician deity, or Baal (the name means "Lord of flies"); traditionally, a prince of devils and enemy of Jehovah. The Phoenician Baal, a sun god, had many aspects and so many names; most Baals were nature deities. But in the poem's time scheme all this lies in the future; Beëlzebub's angelic name, whatever it was, has been erased from the Book of Life, and as he has not yet got another one, he must be called by the name he will have later on.

1. In Hebrew, the name means "Adversary."

2. Satan's syntax, like that of a man recovering from a stunning blow, is not of the clearest.

3. God with his thunderbolts.

That with the Mightiest raised me to contend,
 And to the fierce contentions brought along 100
 Innumerable force of spirits armed,
 That durst dislike his reign, and, me preferring,
 His utmost power with adverse power opposed
 In dubious battle on the plains of Heaven,
 And shook his throne. What though the field be lost? 105
 All is not lost: the unconquerable will,
 And study⁴ of revenge, immortal hate,
 And courage never to submit or yield:
 And what is else not to be overcome?⁵
 That glory never shall his wrath or might 110
 Extort from me. To bow and sue for grace
 With suppliant knee, and deify his power⁶
 Who, from the terror of this arm, so late
 Doubt'd his empire⁷—that were low indeed;
 That were an ignominy and shame beneath 115
 This downfall; since, by fate, the strength of gods,⁸
 And this empyreal substance, cannot fail;
 Since, through experience of this great event;
 In arms not worse, in foresight much advanced,
 We may with more successful hope resolve 120
 To wage by force or guile eternal war,
 Irreconcilable to our grand Foe,
 Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy
 Sole reigning holds the tyranny⁹ of Heaven.”
 So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain, 125
 Vaunting aloud, but racked with deep despair;
 And him thus answered soon his bold compeer:¹
 “O prince, O chief of many thronéd powers,
 That led th' embattled seraphim² to war
 Under thy conduct, and, in dreadful deeds 130
 Fearless, endangered Heaven's perpetual King,
 And put to proof his high supremacy,
 Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate!³
 Too well I see and rue the dire event⁴

4. Pursuit.

5. I.e., what else does it mean not to be beaten? “That glory” is the glory of hearing Satan confess himself overcome.

6. I.e., deify the power of him who. Milton sometimes writes English as if it were an inflected language.

7. I.e., doubted whether he could maintain his empire. In the next line, “ignominy” is pronounced “ignomy.”

8. The essence of Satan's fault is his claim to the position of a god, subject to fate but to nothing else. His substance is “empyrean” (heavenly, from the empyrean), and cannot be destroyed; but, as he learns in the poem, it can be confounded by God's greater power and weakened by its own corruption and self-contradictions.

“Fail”: cease to exist.

9. The accusation is bold, but one of the aims of the poem is to show that Satan is a tyrant and God is not. The next two lines start this dramatic process by suggesting that Satan's brave exterior is merely a front.

1. Comrade and equal.

2. According to tradition, there were nine orders of angels—seraphim, cherubim, thrones, dominions, virtues, powers, principalities, archangels, and angels; but Milton does not use these systematic categories systematically.

3. The devils can conceive of any reason for God's continuing rule, except goodness and justice.

4. Outcome.

That with sad overthrow and foul defeat 135
 Hath lost us Heaven, and all this mighty host
 In horrible destruction laid thus low,
 As far as gods and heavenly essences
 Can perish: for the mind and spirit remains
 Invincible, and vigor soon returns, 140
 Though all our glory extinct, and happy state
 Here swallowed up in endless misery.
 But what if he our Conqueror (whom I now
 Of force⁵ believe almighty, since no less
 Than such could have o'erpowered such force as ours) 145
 Have left us this our spirit and strength entire,
 Strongly to suffer and support our pains,
 That we may so suffice⁶ his vengeful ire,
 Or do him mightier service as his thralls
 By right of war, what'er his business be, 150
 Here in the heart of Hell to work in fire,
 Or do his errands in the gloomy deep?
 What can it then avail though yet we feel Strength undiminished, or eternal being
 To undergo eternal punishment?" 155
 Whereto with speedy words th' arch-fiend⁷ replied:
 "Fallen cherub, to be weak is miserable,
 Doing or suffering:⁸ but of this be sure,
 To do aught good never will be our task,
 But ever to do ill our sole delight, 160
 As being the contrary to his high will Whom we resist. If then his providence
 Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
 Our labor must be to pervert that end,
 And out of good still to find means of evil; 165
 Which oft times may succeed, so as perhaps Shall grieve him, if I fail not,⁹ and disturb
 His inmost counsels from their destined aim.
 But see! the angry Victor hath recalled
 His ministers of vengeance and pursuit 170
 Back to the gates of Heaven; the sulphurous hail,
 Shot after us in storm, o'erblown hath laid
 The fiery surge that from the precipice
 Of Heaven received us falling; and the thunder,
 Winged with red lightning and impetuous rage, 175
 Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
 To bellow through the vast and boundless deep.
 Let us not slip¹ th' occasion, whether scorn
 Or satiate fury yield it from our Foe.
 Seest thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild, 180
 The seat of desolation, void of light,

5. Perforce, necessarily.

6. Satisfy.

7. A fiend is an enemy, one who hates; the word is an antonym of "friend."

8. Whether one is active or passive.

9. "Unless I'm mistaken" (direct from the Latin, nisi fallor).

1. I.e., let slip.

Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
 Casts pale and dreadful? Thither let us tend
 From off the tossing of these fiery waves;
 There rest, if any rest can harbor there; 185
 And, reassembling our afflicted powers,²
 Consult how we may henceforth most offend
 Our enemy, our own loss how repair,
 How overcome this dire calamity,
 What reinforcement we may gain from hope, 190
 If not, what resolution from despair."³

Thus Satan, talking to his nearest mate,
 With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
 That sparkling blazed; his other parts besides,
 Prone on the flood, extended long and large, 195
 Lay floating many a rood,⁴ in bulk as huge
 As whom⁵ the fables name of monstrous size,
 Titanian or Earth-born, that warred on Jove,
 Briareos or Typhon,⁶ whom the den
 By ancient Tarsus held, or that sea beast 200
 Leviathan,⁷ which God of all his works
 Created hugest that swim th' ocean-stream.
 Him, haply, slumbering on the Norway foam,
 The pilot of some small night-foundered⁸ skiff,
 Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell, 205
 With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
 Moors by his side under the lee, while night
 Invests⁹ the sea, and wished morn delays.
 So stretched out huge in length the arch-fiend lay,
 Chained on the burning lake; nor ever thence 210
 Had risen or heaved his head, but that the will
 And high permission of all-ruling Heaven
 Left him at large to his own dark designs,
 That with reiterated crimes he might
 Heap on himself damnation, while he sought 215
 Evil to others, and enraged might see
 How all his malice served but to bring forth
 Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy shown
 On man by him seduced, but on himself

2. Stricken armies.

3. Of the last nine lines of Satan's speech, no less than five rhyme. Milton may have felt the need for something like the couplet with which blank-verse dramatists cut off their scenes.

4. An old unit of measure, between six and eight yards.

5. I.e., as those whom.

6. Both the Titans, led by Briareos, and the earth-born Giants, represented by Typhon (who lived in Cilicia near Tarsus), fought with Jove. Briareos was said to have a hundred hands, and Typhon a hundred heads; and both were said, by different authors, to have been punished for their rebellion (like Satan for his) by being thrown into the underworld. Briareos and Typhon are still heard grumbling from time to time under Mt. Etna.

7. The great sea monster of Isaiah xxvii.1 or Job xli; for Milton and us, simply a whale, but scaly (line 206).

8. Overtaken by darkness.

9. Wraps, covers. The story of sailors mooring to whales was an old one, but the reference to Norway suggests that Milton was thinking of a recently translated version by Olaus Magnus, the Swedish historian.

Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance poured.

220

Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
His mighty stature; on each hand the flames
Driven backward slope their pointing spires,¹ and, rolled
In billows, leave i' th' midst a horrid² vale.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight

225

Aloft, incumbent on³ the dusky air,

That felt unusual weight; till on dry land

He lights, if it were land that ever burned

With solid, as the lake with liquid fire,

And such appeared in hue; as when the force

230

Of subterranean wind transports a hill

Torn from Pelorus,⁴ or the shattered side

Of thundering Etna, whose combustible

And fueled entrails, thence conceiving fire,

Sublimed⁵ with mineral fury, aid the winds,

235

And leave a singéd bottom all involved⁶

With stench and smoke. Such resting found the sole

Of unblest feet. Him followed his next mate,

Both glorying to have 'scaped the Stygian⁷ flood

As gods, and by their own recovered strength,

240

Not by the sufferance⁸ of supernal power.

"Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,"

Said then the lost archangel, "this the seat

That we must change for Heaven? this mournful gloom

For that celestial light? Be it so, since he 245

Who now is sovereign can dispose and bid

What shall be right: farthest from him is best,

Whom reason hath equaled, force hath made supreme

Above his equals.⁹ Farewell, happy fields,

Where joy forever dwells! Hail, horrors! hail,

250

Infernal world! and thou, profoundest Hell,

Receive thy new possessor, one who brings

A mind not to be changed by place or time.

The mind is its own place, and in itself

Can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of Heaven.¹

255

What matter where, if I be still the same,

And what I should be, all but less² than he Whom thunder hath made greater? Here at least

We shall be free; th' Almighty hath not built

Here for his envy, will not drive us hence:

260

Here we may reign secure; and, in my choice,

1. Points of flame.

2. Not simply "ghastly," but in the Latin sense, "bristling."

3. Resting upon.

4. Pelorus and Etna are volcanic mountains in Sicily, which Milton pictures as exploding under pressure of underground winds.

5. Vaporized.

6. Wrapped.

7. Of the river Styx, i.e., demonic, hellish.

8. Permission.

9. Satan likes to think that by "reason" he is God's equal; this only shows how far he is from "right reason."

1. Satan's heroic resolution here, where he is converting Hell into a kind of plastic Heaven, takes another turn when in Book IV we find him bringing the Hell of his own mind into Paradise.

2. Second only to. The expression "all but less than" telescopes "all but equal to" and "only less than."

To reign is worth ambition, though in Hell:
Better to reign in Hell than serve in Heaven.
 But wherefore let we then our faithful friends,
 Th' associates and copartners of our loss,
 Lie thus astonished³ on th' oblivious pool,
 And call them not to share with us their part
 In this unhappy mansion, or once more
 With rallied arms to try what may be yet
 Regained in Heaven, or what more lost in Hell?"

265

270

275

280

285

290

295

300

So Satan spake; and him Beëlzebub
 Thus answered: "Leader of those armies bright
 Which, but th' Omnipotent, none could have foiled!
 If once they hear that voice, their liveliest pledge
 Of hope in fears and dangers, heard so oft
 In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge⁴
 Of battle, when it raged, in all assaults
 Their surest signal, they will soon resume
 New courage and revive, though now they lie
 Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire,
 As we erewhile, astounded and amazed;
 No wonder, fallen such a pernicious height!"

He scarce had ceased when the superior fiend
 Was moving toward the shore; his ponderous shield,
 Ethereal temper,⁵ massy, large, and round,
 Behind him cast. The broad circumference
 Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb
 Through optic glass the Tuscan artist⁶ views
 At evening, from the top of Fesolè,
 Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands,
 Rivers, or mountains, in her spotty globe.
 His spear, to equal which the tallest pine
 Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
 Of some great admiral,⁷ were but a wand,
 He walked with, to support uneasy steps
 Over the burning marl,⁸ not like those steps
 On Heaven's azure; and the torrid clime
 Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire.
 Nathless⁹ he so endured, till on the beach
 Of that inflaméd¹ sea he stood, and called
 His legions, angel forms, who lay entranced,
 Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
 In Vallombrosa,² where th' Etrurian shades

3. Stunned. The epithet "oblivious" is transferred from the fallen angels to the pool in which they have fallen.

4. Not the fringe of battle but the front line (Latin acies).

5. With the qualities of ether, which, being the fifth element, is not subject to change, corruption, or decay.

6. Galileo, who looked through a telescope ("optic glass") from the hill town of Fiesole outside Florence in the Val d'Arno, is the only contemporary mentioned by Milton in Paradise Lost.

7. Not the naval commander, but his flagship, usually the biggest of the fleet.

8. Soil.

9. A compressed, archaic form of "not the less."

1. Flaming, of course, but also fevered.

2. "Shady Valley," high in the Apennines about twenty miles from Florence. "Etruria" is Etruscan land, i.e., Tuscany.

High over-arched embower;³ or scattered sedge
 Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion armed 305
 Hath vexed the Red-Sea coast, whose waves o'erthrew
 Busiris and his Memphian chivalry,
 While with perfidious hatred they pursued
 The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
 From the safe shore their floating carcasses
 And broken chariot wheels.⁴ So thick bestrown, 310
 Abject and lost, lay these, covering the flood,
 Under amazement of their hideous change.
 He called so loud that all the hollow deep
 Of Hell resounded: "Princes, potentates, 315
 Warriors, the flower of Heaven, once yours, now lost,
 If such astonishment as this can seize Eternal spirits! or have ye chosen this place
 After the toil of battle to repose
 Your wearied virtue,⁵ for the ease you find 320
 To slumber here, as in the vales of Heaven?
 Or in this abject posture have ye sworn
 To adore the Conqueror, who now beholds
 Cherub and seraph rolling in the flood
 With scattered arms and ensigns,⁶ till anon 325
 His swift pursuers from Heaven-gates discern
 Th' advantage, and descending tread us down
 Thus drooping, or with linkéd thunderbolts
 Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf?
 Awake, arise, or be forever fallen!" 330
 They heard, and were abashed, and up they sprung
 Upon the wing, as when men wont to watch
 On duty, sleeping found by whom they dread,
 Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake.
 Nor did they not perceive⁷ the evil plight 335
 In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel;
 Yet to their general's voice they soon obeyed
 Innumerable. As when the potent rod
 Of Amram's son,⁸ in Egypt's evil day,
 Waved round the coast, up called a pitchy cloud 340
 Of locusts, warping⁹ on the eastern wind,
 That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
 Like night, and darkened all the land of Nile;

3. I.e., form bowers by enclosing space.

4. Orion is a constellation, visible chiefly in late summer and autumn, hence associated with storms; in the Red Sea, where sedge grows thick, these storms result in much floating seaweed. This reminds Milton of how the sea must have looked after the Israelites ("sojourners of Goshen") passed through it while escaping from Egypt, when it was covered with the littered corpses of Pharaoh ("Busiris") and his pursuing horsemen ("Memphian chivalry").

5. Strength, but Satan's sarcasm makes use of the other connotation too.

6. Standards, battle flags.

7. The double negatives make a positive: they did indeed perceive both plight and pains. (Latin, neque non, "nor . . . not," "and.")

8. Moses, who drew down a plague of locusts on Egypt (Exodus x.12-15). Milton's learned locution is designed to keep Moses out of Hell, as well as from appearing too often in the poem (cf. above, 307-11).

9. Swarming (a technical term from bee-culture).

So numberless were those bad angels seen
 Hovering on wing under the cope¹ of Hell, 345
 'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires;
 Till, as a signal given, th' uplifted spear
 Of their great sultan² waving to direct
 Their course, in even balance down they light
 On the firm brimstone, and fill all the plain: 350
 A multitude like which the populous North³
 Poured never from her frozen loins to pass
 Rhene or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
 Came like a deluge on the South, and spread
 Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands. 355
 Forthwith, from every squadron and each band,
 The heads and leaders thither haste where stood
 Their great commander; godlike shapes, and forms
 Excelling human; princely dignities,
 And powers that erst in Heaven sat on thrones, 360
 Though of their names in Heavenly records now
 Be no memorial, blotted out and rased⁴
 By their rebellion from the Books of Life.
 Nor had they yet among the sons of Eve
 Got them new names, till, wandering o'er the Earth, 365
 Through God's high sufferance for the trial of man,
 By falsities and lies the greatest part
 Of mankind they corrupted to forsake
 God their Creator, and th' invisible
 Glory of him that made them to transform 370
 Oft to the image of a brute, adorned
 With gay religions⁵ full of pomp and gold,
 And devils to adore for deities.
 Then were they known to men by various names,
 And various idols through the heathen world. 375
 Say, Muse, their names then known, who first, who last,⁶
 Roused from the slumber on that fiery couch,
 At their great emperor's call, as next in worth
 Came singly⁷ where he stood on the bare strand,
 While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof. 380
 The chief were those who, from the pit of Hell
 Roaming to seek their prey on Earth, durst fix
 Their seats, long after, next the seat of God,⁸

1. Roof.

2. A first use of the image, which will be reinforced later, of Satan as an Oriental despot.

3. The barbarian invasions of falling Rome began with crossings of the Rhine ("Rhene") and Danube ("Danaw") Rivers, and spread across Spain, via Gibraltar, to North Africa.

4. Erased. See above, line 81. Though reluctant to state the view strongly, Milton believed all the pagan deities had been devils in disguise.

5. Ceremonies.

6. The catalogue of gods here is an epic convention; Homer catalogues ships, Virgil warriors.

7. One at a time. The diabolical aristocrats rally round Satan, while the "promiscuous crowd," the vulgar gods, stand apart.

8. The first group of devils come from the Near East, close neighbors and intimate enemies of Jehovah at Jerusalem.

Their altars by his altar, gods adored
 Among the nations round, and durst abide 385
 Jehovah thundering out of Sion, throned
 Between the cherubim; yea, often placed
 Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,
 Abominations; and with curséd things
 His holy rites and solemn feasts profaned, 390
 And with their darkness durst affront his light.
 First, Moloch,⁹ horrid king, besmeared with blood
 Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
 Though, for the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
 Their children's cries unheard, that passed through fire 395
 To his grim idol. Him the Ammonite¹
 Worshiped in Rabba and her watery plain,
 In Argob and in Basan, to the stream
 Of utmost Arnon. Nor content with such Audacious neighborhood, the wisest heart 400
 Of Solomon he led by fraud to build
 His temple right against the temple of God
 On that opprobrious hill,² and made his grove
 The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
 And black Gehenna called, the type of Hell. 405
 Next Chemos,³ th' obscene dread of Moab's sons,
 From Aroar to Nebo and the wild
 Of southmost Abarim; in Hesebon
 And Horonaim, Seon's realm, beyond
 The flowery dale of Sibma clad with vines,
 And Eleale to th' Asphaltic pool: 410
 Peor⁴ his other name, when he enticed
 Israel in Sittim, on their march from Nile,
 To do him wanton rites, which cost them woe.
 Yet thence his lustful orgies he enlarged 415
 Even to that hill of scandal, by the grove
 Of Moloch homicide,⁵ lust hard by hate,
 Till good Josiah drove them thence to Hell.
 With these came they who, from the bordering flood
 Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts 420

9. A sun god, sometimes represented as a roaring bull or with a calf's head, within whose brazen image living children were often burned as sacrifices (for a lurid fictional account, see Flaubert's Salammbô). "Timbrels": tambourines.

1. The Ammonites lived east of the Jordan, and Milton uses uncouth place names ("Rabba," "Argob," "Basan," "utmost Arnon") to suggest wildness.

2. The rites of Moloch on "that opprobrious hill" (the Mount of Olives) right opposite the Jewish temple, and in the valley of Hinnom, so polluted these places that they were turned into the refuse dump of Jerusalem. Thus they became "types" (analogies) of Hell, under the names "Tophet" and "Gehenna."

3. Chemos or Chemosh was another name for Moloch, used in Moab, a nation lying south and east of the Dead Sea ("th' Asphaltic pool"). Many of the geographical names clustered here come from Isaiah xv-xvi.

4. For the story of how Peor seduced "Israel in Sittim," see Numbers xxv.

5. An epithet was often joined to a god's name as a surname (e.g., Jupiter Tonans, Jove the Thunderer); Milton's epithet involves almost a parody, Moloch the Mankiller. The story of "good Josiah" and his campaign against pagan gods is told in II Kings xxiii and in II Chronicles xxxiv.

Egypt from Syrian ground,⁶ had general names
 Of Baalim and Ashtaroth, those male,
 These feminine.⁷ For spirits, when they please,
 Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
 And uncompounded is their essence pure, 425
 Not tied or manacled with joint or limb,
 Nor founded on the brittle strength of bones,
 Like cumbrous flesh; but, in what shape they choose,
 Dilated or condensed, bright or obscure,
 Can execute their airy purposes, 430
 And works of love or enmity fulfill.
 For those the race of Israel oft forsook
 Their Living Strength,⁸ and unfrequented left
 His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
 To bestial gods; for which their heads as low 435
 Bowed down in battle, sunk before the spear
 Of despicable foes. With these in troop
 Came Astoreth, whom the Phoenicians called
 Astarté, queen of heaven, with crescent horns;
 To whose bright image nightly by the moon 440
 Sidonian virgins⁹ paid their vows and songs;
 In Sion also not unsung, where stood
 Her temple on th' offensive mountain,¹ built
 By that uxorious king² whose heart, though large,
 Beguiled by fair idolatresses, fell 445
 To idols foul. Thammuz³ came next behind,
 Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
 The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
 In amorous ditties all a summer's day,
 While smooth Adonis⁴ from his native rock 450
 Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
 Of Thammuz yearly wounded: the love tale
 Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
 Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
 Ezekiel⁵ saw, when, by the vision led, 455
 His eye surveyed the dark idolatries
 Of alienated Judah. Next came one
 Who mourned in earnest, when the captive ark

6. Palestine lies between the Euphrates and "the brook Besor" (I Samuel xxx.10).

7. I.e., plural forms, masculine and feminine respectively, for Baal and Astarte. As Baals were aspects of the sun god, Astartes (Ishtars) were manifestations of the moon goddess.

8. The Jews lost battles, Milton says, when they neglected Jehovah.

9. Sidon and Tyre were the chief cities of Phoenicia.

1. The Mount of Olives again (see above, lines 403 and 416).

2. Solomon, who "loved many strange women" (I Kings xi.1-8).

3. A Syrian god, who was supposed to have been killed by a boar in Lebanon; annual festivals mourned his death and celebrated his revival, imitating the cycle of vegetable life. In his Greek form he was Adonis, god of the solar year.

4. A Lebanese river, named after the deity because every spring it turned blood-red with sedimentary mud.

5. Ezekiel complained that the Jewish women of his day were worshiping Thammuz (Ezekiel viii.14).

Maimed his brute image, head and hands lopped off,
 In his own temple, on the grunsel-edge,⁶ 460
 Where he fell flat, and shamed his worshipers:
 Dagon his name, sea monster, upward man
 And downward fish; yet had his temple high
 Reared in Azotus, dreaded through the coast
 Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon, 465
 And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.⁷
 Him followed Rimmon, whose delightful seat
 Was fair Damascus, on the fertile banks
 Of Abbana and Pharphar, lucid streams.
 He also 'gainst the house of God was bold:
 A leper once he lost, and gained a king, 470
 Ahaz,⁸ his sottish conqueror, whom he drew
 God's altar to disparage and displace
 For one of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
 His odious offerings, and adore the gods 475
 Whom he had vanquished. After these appeared
 A crew who, under names of old renown,
 Osiris, Isis, Orus,⁹ and their train,
 With monstrous shapes¹ and sorceries abused
 Fanatic Egypt and her priests to seek 480
 Their wandering gods disguised in brutish forms
 Rather than human. Nor did Israel 'scape
 Th' infection, when their borrowed gold composed
 The calf in Oreb;² and the rebel king
 Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan, 485
 Likening his Maker to the grazéd ox³—
 Jehovah, who, in one night, when he passed
 From Egypt marching, equaled⁴ with one stroke
 Both her first-born and all her bleating gods.
 Belial⁵ came last; than whom a spirit more lewd 490
 Fell not from Heaven, or more gross to love
 Vice for itself. To him no temple stood
 Or altar smoked; yet who more oft than he

6. When the Philistines stole the ark of God, they tried to store it in the temple of their sea god, Dagon; but in the morning the mutilated statue of Dagon was found on the threshold ("grunsel-edge"). See I Samuel v.1-5.

7. Milton names the five chief cities of the Philistines as places where Dagon was worshiped.

8. A Syrian general, Naaman, was cured of leprosy and converted from worship of Rimmon by the waters of the Jordan (II Kings v). King Ahaz, on the other hand, an Israelite monarch who conquered Damascus, was converted there to worship of Rimmon (II Kings xvi).

9. The second group of devils includes those from Egypt, driven in terror from heaven by the revolt of the giants (so Ovid tells us in Metamorphoses V), and forced to wander through Egypt in animal disguises.

1. Monstrous, because often represented with animals' heads.

2. Aaron made a golden calf in the wilderness (Exodus xxxii); Milton thought it an idol of the Egyptian god Apis because the gold of which it was made had been borrowed from the Egyptians.

3. Jeroboam, "the rebel king," doubled Aaron's sin by making two golden calves (I Kings xii.28-30).

4. Leveled. See Exodus xii.12 for Jehovah's vengeance on the first-born of Egypt and their gods.

5. Belial was never worshiped as a god; his name was originally an abstract noun meaning "wickedness"; hence used mainly in set phrases like "sons of Belial." He comes last, because weak and slothful.

again excess

In temples and at altars, when the priest
 Turns atheist, as did Eli's sons,⁶ who filled 495
 With lust and violence the house of God?
 In courts and palaces he also reigns,
 And in luxurious cities, where the noise
 Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers,
 And injury and outrage; and, when night 500
 Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
 Of Belial, flown⁷ with insolence and wine.
 Witness the streets of Sodom,⁸ and that night
 In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
 Exposed a matron, to avoid worse rape. 505

These were the prime in order and in might;
 The rest were long to tell, though far renowned,
 Th' Ionian gods, of Javan's issue held
 Gods, yet confessed later than Heaven and Earth,
 Their boasted parents;⁹ Titan, Heaven's first-born, 510
 With his enormous brood, and birthright seized
 By younger Saturn; he from mightier Jove,
 His own and Rhea's son, like measure found;
 So Jove usurping reigned.¹ These, first in Crete
 And Ida known, thence on the snowy top 515
 Of cold Olympus ruled the middle air,
 Their highest heaven; or on the Delphian cliff,
 Or in Dodona, and through all the bounds
 Of Doric land; or who with Saturn old
 Fled over Adria to th' Hesperian fields, 520
 And o'er the Celtic roamed the utmost isles.

All these and more came flocking; but with looks
 Downcast and damp,² yet such wherein appeared
 Obscure some glimpse of joy, to have found their chief
 Not in despair, to have found themselves not lost 525
 In loss itself; which on his countenance cast
 Like doubtful hue.³ But he, his wonted pride
 Soon recollecting, with high words, that bore
 Semblance of worth, not substance, gently raised
 Their fainting courage, and dispelled their fears: 530
 Then straight commands that, at the warlike sound

6. The misdeeds of Eli's sons, and the epithet "sons of Belial" applied to them, will be found in I Samuel ii. 12-17.

7. Flushed.

8. In Sodom and Gibeah ancient outrages befell, described in Genesis xix and Judges xix.

9. Though considered ancient by the Greeks ("Javan's issue," i.e., offspring of Javan, son of Japhet, son of Noah) and worshiped as the first children of "Heaven" (Uranus) and "Earth" (Ge), the Titans, Milton says, were actually confessed to be of a later age.

1. Cronos or Saturn, one of the Titans, deposed his elder brother, married his sister Rhea, and ruled until Zeus, who had been reared in secret on Mt. Ida in Crete, overthrew his own father and came to rule on Mt. Olympus. Zeus was also worshiped in Delphi, Dodona, and throughout the "Doric (Grecian) land." Meanwhile Saturn (lines 519-21), after his downfall, fled across the Adriatic Sea ("Adria") to Italy ("th' Hesperian fields"), crossed "the Celtic" (fields) of France, and finally reached Britain ("the utmost isles").

2. Depressed.

3. Their comfort is the chilly one of finding themselves not completely annihilated; and at first it is reflected in Satan's face.

Of trumpets loud and clarions,⁴ be upreared
 His mighty standard. That proud honor claimed
 Azazel⁵ as his right, a cherub tall:
 Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled
 Th' imperial ensign; which, full high advanced,
 Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind,
 With gems and golden luster rich emblazed,
 Seraphic arms and trophies; all the while
 Sonorous metal⁶ blowing martial sounds—
 At which the universal host up sent
 A shout that tore Hell's concave,⁷ and beyond
 Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.⁸
 All in a moment through the gloom were seen
 Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
 With orient⁹ colors waving: with them rose
 A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
 Appeared, and serried¹ shields in thick array
 Of depth immeasurable. Anon they move
 In perfect phalanx to the Dorian² mood
 Of flutes and soft recorders; such as raised
 To height of noblest temper heroes old
 Arming to battle, and instead of rage
 Deliberate valor breathed, firm, and unmoved
 With dread of death to flight or foul retreat;
 Nor wanting power to mitigate and svage³
 With solemn touches troubled thoughts, and chase
 Anguish and doubt and fear and sorrow and pain
 From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they,
 Breathing united force with fixed thought,
 Moved on in silence to soft pipes that charmed
 Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil. And now
 Advanced in view they stand, a horrid⁴ front
 Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
 Of warriors old, with ordered spear and shield,
 Awaiting what command their mighty chief
 Had to impose. He through the armed files
 Darts his experienced eye, and soon traverse⁵
 The whole battalion views, their order due,
 Their visages and stature as of gods;
 Their number last he sums. And now his heart
 Distends with pride, and hardening in his strength
 Glories; for never, since created man,⁶
 Met such embodied force as, named with these,

4. Small, shrill, treble trumpets.

5. Among the historians of angels and devils, a traditional diabolic leader.

6. Reverberant trumpets.

7. Vault.

8. Disorder and darkness, the first materials of the cosmos, still maintain a kingdom between Heaven and Hell.

9. Lustrous, like the colors of a pearl.

1. Locked together.

2. Severe, simple. The shrill trumpet, which first roused the courage of the devils, now gives way to firm, martial tones, played on instruments of softer timbre, in the Spartan manner.

3. Assuage.

4. Bristling.

5. Across. Satan glances, like a reviewing officer, down the files and columns.

6. I.e., since the creation of man.

Could merit more than that small infantry 575
 Warred on by cranes:⁷ though all the giant brood
 Of Phlegra with th' heroic race were joined
 That fought at Thebes and Ilium, on each side
 Mixed with auxiliar⁸ gods; and what resounds
 In fable or romance of Uther's son, 580
 Begirt with British and Armoric knights;
 And all who since, baptized or infidel,
 Jousted in Aspramont, or Montalban,
 Damasco, or Marocco, or Trebisond;
 Or whom Biserta sent from Afric shore 585
 When Charlemagne with all his peerage fell
 By Fontarabbia.⁹ Thus far these beyond
 Compare of mortal prowess, yet observed¹
 Their dread commander. He, above the rest
 In shape and gesture proudly eminent, 590
 Stood like a tower. His form had yet not lost
 All her² original brightness, nor appeared
 Less than archangel ruined, and th' excess
 Of glory obscured: as when the sun new-risen
 Looks through the horizontal³ misty air 595
 Shorn of his beams, or from behind the moon,
 In dim eclipse,⁴ disastrous twilight sheds
 On half the nations, and with fear of change
 Perplexes monarchs. Darkened so, yet shone
 Above them all th' archangel; but his face 600
 Deep scars of thunder had entrenched, and care
 Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
 Of dauntless courage, and considerate⁵ pride
 Waiting revenge. Cruel his eye, but cast
 Signs of remorse and passion,⁶ to behold 605
 The fellows of his crime, the followers rather (Far other once beheld in bliss), condemned
 Forever now to have their lot in pain;
 Millions of spirits for his fault amerced⁷
 Of Heaven, and from eternal splendors flung 610

7. The pygmies had periodic fights with the cranes, which (according to Pliny) they won by riding to battle on pigs and goats. This would make them cavalry; but Milton wanted the pun on "infants." His idea is that, compared with the devils, all other armies that ever were would look puny.

8. Allied.

9. The Giants of Greek mythology were born at Phlegra (line 577); Milton imagines them joined with the Seven who fought against Thebes, and the whole Greek host that besieged Troy ("Ilium"), plus the various gods who helped on both sides. He even adds the knights "British or Armoric" (from Brittany) who fought with King Arthur ("Uther's son"), and includes a list of proper names taken from the cycles of romance and suggesting vast, remote armies. Fontarabbia, the best known, was reputed to be the scene of Roland's last stand in the Chanson de Roland; Milton thus mingles the fall of Charlemagne with that of his best-known knight.

1. Obeyed.

2. Forma, in Latin, is feminine; hence "her."

3. The rays of the sun, as it first rises over the horizon, are almost horizontal.

4. Time of ill omen. "Disastrous": threatening disaster.

5. Thoughtful, conscious.

6. Compassion.

7. Deprived.

For his revolt; yet faithful how they stood,
 Their glory withered; as, when Heaven's fire
 Hath scathed the forest oaks or mountain pines,
 With singéd top their stately growth, though bare,
 Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepared 615
 To speak; whereat their doubled ranks they bend
 From wing to wing, and half enclose him round
 With all his peers: attention held them mute.
 Thrice he essayed, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
 Tears, such as angels weep, burst forth: at last 620
 Words interwove with sighs found out their way:

"O myriads of immortal spirits! O powers
 Matchless, but with th' Almighty!—and that strife
 Was not inglorious, though th' event⁸ was dire,
 As this place testifies, and this dire change, 625
 Hateful to utter. But what power of mind,
 Foreseeing or presaging, from the depth
 Of knowledge past or present, could have feared
 How such united force of gods, how such
 As stood like these, could ever know repulse? 630
 For who can yet believe, though after loss,
 That all these puissant⁹ legions, whose exile
 Hath emptied Heaven, shall fail to reascend,
 Self-raised, and repossess their native seat?
 For me, be witness all the host of Heaven, 635
 If counsels different,¹ or danger shunned
 By me, have lost our hopes. But he who reigns
 Monarch in Heaven, till then as one secure
 Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute,
 Consent or custom, and his regal state 640
 Put forth at full, but still his strength concealed,
 Which tempted our attempt,² and wrought our fall.
 Henceforth his might we know, and know our own,
 So as not either to provoke, or dread
 New war provoked: our better part remains 645
 To work in close design,³ by fraud or guile,
 What force effected not; that he no less
 At length from us may find, who overcomes
 By force hath overcome but half his foe.
 Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife 650
 There went a fame⁴ in Heaven that he ere long
 Intended to create, and therein plant
 A generation whom his choice regard
 Should favor equal to the sons of Heaven.
 Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps 655
 Our first eruption—thither, or elsewhere;

8. Outcome, result.

9. Potent, powerful.

1. Contradictory or even selfish, but also, in an obsolete sense, delaying.

2. Satan is an inveterate punster and player on words.

3. I.e., our best choice is to achieve by secret schemes.

4. Rumor. "Rife": common.

For this infernal pit shall never hold
 Celestial spirits in bondage, nor th' abyss
 Long under darkness cover. But these thoughts
 Full counsel must mature. Peace is despaired,
 For who can think submission? War, then, war
 Open or understood,⁵ must be resolved."

660

He spake; and, to confirm his words, outflow
 Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
 Of mighty cherubim; the sudden blaze
 Far round illumined Hell. Highly they raged
 Against the Highest, and fierce with grasped arms
 Clashed on their sounding shields the din of war,⁶ Hurling defiance toward the vault of Heaven.

665

There stood a hill not far, whose grisly⁷ top
 Belched fire and rolling smoke; the rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf,⁸ undoubted sign
 That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
 The work of sulphur.⁹ Thither, winged with speed,
 A numerous brigade hastened: as when bands
 Of pioneers,¹ with spade and pickax armed,
 Forerun the royal camp, to trench a field,
 Or cast a rampart. Mammon led them on,
 Mammon, the least erected² spirit that fell
 From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts
 Were always downward bent, admiring more
 The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
 Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed
 In vision beatific. By him first
 Men also, and by his suggestion taught,
 Ransacked the center, and with impious hands
 Rifled the bowels of their mother Earth
 For treasures better hid. Soon had his crew
 Opened into the hill a spacious wound,
 And digged out ribs³ of gold. Let none admire
 That riches grow in Hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. And here let those Who boast in mortal things, and wondering tell
 Of Babel, and the works of Memphian kings,
 Learn how their greatest monuments of fame
 And strength, and art, are easily outdone
 By spirits reprobate,⁴ and in an hour
 What in an age they, with incessant toil
 And hands innumerable, scarce perform.

670

675

680

685

690

695

5. Agreed-upon, tacit, hence secret.

6. Like Roman legionaries, the fallen angels applaud by beating swords on shields.

7. Horrible.

8. Crust.

9. Sulphur and mercury were considered the basic substances of all metals.

1. Sappers, engineers.

2. Elevated. Mammon is not a god but an abstract word meaning "wealth"; cf. Belial.

3. Bars, of course, but also with a hit at Eve, who was a "precious bane" (sweet poison) dug out of Adam's side. "Admire": wonder.

4. The tower of Babel and the Pyramids of Egypt ("works of Memphian kings") are easily outdone by the devils ("spirits reprobate").

Nigh on the plain, in many cells prepared, 700
 That underneath had veins of liquid fire
 Sluiced from the lake, a second multitude
 With wondrous art founded the massy ore,
 Severing each kind, and scummed the bullion-dross.
 A third as soon had formed within the ground 705
 A various mold, and from the boiling cells
 By strange conveyance filled each hollow nook;⁵
 As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
 To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes.
 Anon out of the earth a fabric huge 710
 Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
 Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet,
 Built like a temple, where pilasters⁶ round
 Were set, and Doric pillars⁷ overlaid
 With golden architrave; nor did there want 715
 Cornice or frieze, with bossy⁸ sculptures graven;
 The roof was fretted⁹ gold. Not Babylon
 Nor great Alcairo such magnificence
 Equaled in all their glories,¹ to enshrine
 Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat 720
 Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
 In wealth and luxury. Th' ascending pile
 Stood fixed² her stately height; and straight the doors,
 Opening their brazen folds, discover, wide
 Within, her ample spaces o'er the smooth 725
 And level pavement: from the archéd roof,
 Pendent by subtle magic, many a row
 Of starry lamps and blazing cressets,³ fed
 With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
 As from a sky. The hasty multitude 730
 Admiring entered; and the work some praise,
 And some the architect. His hand was known
 In Heaven by many a towered structure high,
 Where sceptered angels held their residence,
 And sat as princes, whom the súpreme King 735
 Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
 Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright.
 Nor was his name unheard or unadored
 In ancient Greece; and in Ausonian land
 Men called him Mulciber;⁴ and how he fell

5. After melting the gold with fire from the lake and pouring it into molds, the devils cause their building to rise by a sort of spiritual-musical magic.
 6. Columns set in a wall.
 7. Doric pillars are severe and plain.
 8. Embossed.
 9. Patterned.

1. At Babylon in Assyria there were temples to "Belus" or Baal; at Alcairo (modern Cairo, ancient Memphis) in Egypt, they were to Osiris, one of whose names was Serapis (here, but not ordinarily, accented on the first syllable).

 2. Complete; "straight": straightway.
 3. Basketlike lamps, hung from the ceiling.
 4. Hephaestus, or Vulcan, was sometimes known in "Ausonian land" (Italy) by the secondary epithet of "Mulciber." The story of Jove's tossing him out of Heaven is told, to the accompaniment of much Homeric laughter, in Iliad I. Milton calls him by a secondary name because he is a little uneasy at having to put a "good" Greek deity in Hell.

From Heaven they fabled, thrown by angry Jove
 Sheer o'er the crystal battlements: from morn
 To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
 A summer's day, and with the setting sun
 Dropped from the zenith, like a falling star, 745
 On Lemnos, th' Aegean isle. Thus they relate,
 Erring;⁵ for he with this rebellious rout
 Fell long before; nor aught availed him now
 To have built in Heaven high towers; nor did he 'scape
 By all his engines, but was headlong sent, 750
 With his industrious crew, to build in Hell.
 Meanwhile the wingéd heralds, by command
 Of sovereign power, with awful ceremony
 And trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim
 A solemn council forthwith to be held 755
 At Pandemonium,⁶ the high capital
 Of Satan and his peers.⁷ Their summons called
 From every band and squaréd regiment
 By place or choice the worthiest; they anon
 With hundreds and with thousands trooping came 760
 Attended. All access was thronged, the gates
 And porches wide, but chief the spacious hall
 (Though like a covered field, where champions bold
 Wont ride in armed, and at the soldan's⁸ chair
 Defied the best of paynim chivalry 765
 To mortal combat, or carcer with lance),
 Thick swarmed, both on the ground and in the air,
 Brushed with the hiss of rustling wings. As bees
 In springtime, when the sun with Taurus⁹ rides,
 Pour forth their populous youth about the hive 770
 In clusters; they among fresh dews and flowers
 Fly to and fro, or on the smoothéd plank,
 The suburb of their straw-built citadel,
 New rubbed with balm, expatiate, and confer¹
 Their state-affairs: so thick the airy crowd 775
 Swarmed and were straitened; till, the signal given,
 Behold a wonder! They but now who seemed
 In bigness to surpass Earth's giant sons,
 Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
 Throng numberless—like that pygmean race 780
 Beyond the Indian mount;² or faery elves,
 Whose midnight revels, by a forest side
 Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,

5. Milton tells the story, and gives it six lines of splendid poetry (740-46), but in the end condemns it as a corrupt version of the Biblical truth.

6. "Pandemonium" (a Miltonic coinage) means literally "All-Demons"; an inversion of Pantheon, "All-Gods."

7. Nobility.

8. Sultan's. "Paynim": pagan.

9. The sun is in the Zodiacal sign of Taurus from April 19 to May 20.

1. Spread out and discuss, bring together. The simile of bees prepares for the sudden contraction of the devils' size; they can shrink or dilate at will.

2. The pygmies were supposed to live beyond the Himalayas, "the Indian mount."

Or dreams he sees, while overhead the Moon
 Sits arbitress,³ and nearer to the Earth
 Wheels her pale course; they, on their mirth and dance
 Intent, with jocund⁴ music charm his ear;
 At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds.
 Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms
 Reduced their shapes immense, and were at large,
 Though without number still, amidst the hall
 Of that infernal court. But far within,
 And in their own dimensions like themselves,
 The great seraphic lords and cherubim
 In close recess and secret conclave sat,
 A thousand demigods on golden seats,
 Frequent and full.⁵ After short silence then,
 And summons read, the great consult began.

785

790

795

Book II

The Argument

The consultation begun, Satan debates whether another battle be to be hazarded for the recovery of Heaven: some advise it, others dissuade. A third proposal is preferred, mentioned before by Satan—to search the truth of that prophecy or tradition in Heaven concerning another world, and another kind of creature, equal or not much inferior to themselves, about this time to be created. Their doubt who shall be sent on this difficult search: Satan, their chief, undertakes alone the voyage; is honored and applauded. The council thus ended, the rest betake them several ways and to several employments, as their inclinations lead them, to entertain¹ the time till Satan return. He passes on his journey to Hell-gates; finds them shut, and who sat there to guard them; by whom at length they are opened, and discover² to him the great gulf between Hell and Heaven. With what difficulty he passes through, directed by Chaos, the power of that place, to the sight of this new world which he sought.

High on a throne of royal state, which far
 Outshone the wealth of Ormus³ and of Ind,
 Or where the gorgeous East with richest hand
 Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold,
 Satan exalted sat, by merit raised
 To that bad eminence; and, from despair

5

3. Witness.

4. Merry.

5. Crowded ("frequent") and in full complement ("full"); all present and accounted for.

1. Pass.

2. Disclose.

3. An island in the Persian Gulf, modern Hormuz, famous for pearls. "Ind": India.

Thus high uplifted beyond hope, aspires
Beyond thus high, insatiate to pursue
Vain war with Heaven; and, by success⁴ untaught,
His proud imaginations thus displayed: 10

"Powers and dominions, deities of Heaven!
For since no deep within her gulf can hold
Immortal vigor, though oppressed and fallen,
I give not Heaven for lost: from this descent
Celestial virtues rising will appear 15

More glorious and more dread than from no fall,
And trust themselves to fear no second fate.

Me though just right, and the fixed laws of Heaven
Did first create your leader, next, free choice,
With what besides, in council or in fight, 20

Hath been achieved of merit, yet this loss
Thus far at least recovered, hath much more
Established in a safe unenvied throne

Yielded with full consent.⁵ The happier state
In Heaven, which follows dignity, might draw
Envy from each inferior; but who here 25

Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim,
Your bulwark, and condemns to greatest share
Of endless pain? Where there is then no good 30

For which to strive, no strife can grow up there
From faction; for none sure will claim in Hell
Precédence, none, whose portion is so small
Of present pain, that with ambitious mind 35

Will covet more. With this advantage then
To union, and firm faith, and firm accord,
More than can be in Heaven, we now return
To claim our just inheritance of old, 40

Surer to prosper than prosperity
Could have assured us;⁶ and by what best way,
Whether of open war or covert guile,
We now debate; who can advise, may speak."

He ceased, and next him Moloch, sceptered king,
Stood up, the strongest and the fiercest spirit
That fought in Heaven, now fiercer by despair. 45

His trust was with th' Eternal to be deemed Equal in strength, and rather than be less
Cared not to be at all; with that care lost
Went all his fear: of God, or Hell, or worse

He recked⁷ not, and these words thereafter spake: 50

4. Outcome, result; experience of either sort, good or bad.

5. He lays claim to the throne by just right, fixed laws, free choice—and the fact that no one else will want such a dangerous job.

6. Note the play on "sure—prosper—prosperity—assured." An Elizabethan critic famous for his picturesque terminology, George Puttenham, calls this figure "epanalepsis, or the echo sound, otherwise the slow return." It is a favorite device of Milton's.

7. Cared.

"My sentence⁸ is for open war: of wiles,
 More unexpert,⁹ I boast not: them let those Contrive who need, or when they need, not now.
 For while they sit contriving, shall the rest,
 Millions that stand in arms, and longing wait 55
 The signal to ascend, sit lingering here
 Heaven's fugitives, and for their dwelling place
 Accept this dark opprobrious den of shame,
 The prison of his tyranny who reigns
 By our delay? No! let us rather choose, 60
 Armed with Hell-flames and fury, all at once
 O'er Heaven's high towers to force resistless way,
 Turning our tortures into horrid arms
 Against the Torturer; when to meet the noise
 Of his almighty engine¹ he shall hear 65
 Infernal thunder, and for lightning see
 Black fire and horror shot with equal rage
 Among his angels, and his throne itself
 Mixed with Tartarean² sulphur, and strange fire,
 His own invented torments. But perhaps 70
 The way seems difficult and steep to scale
 With upright wing against a higher foe.
 Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench³
 Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
 That in our proper motion⁴ we ascend 75
 Up to our native seat; descent and fall
 To us is adverse. Who but felt of late,
 When the fierce foe hung on our broken rear
 Insulting,⁵ and pursued us through the deep,
 With what compulsion and laborious flight 80
 We sunk thus low? Th' ascent is easy then;
 Th' event⁶ is feared: should we again provoke
 Our stronger,⁷ some worse way his wrath may find
 To our destruction; if there be in Hell
 Fear to be worse destroyed! What can be worse 85
 Than to dwell here, driven out from bliss, condemned
 In this abhorréd deep to utter woe;
 Where pain of unextinguishable fire
 Must exercise us without hope of end,
 The vassals⁸ of his anger, when the scourge 90
 Inexorably, and the torturing hour,
 Calls us to penance? More destroyed than thus,
 We should be quite abolished, and expire.
 What fear we then? what⁹ doubt we to incense

8. Judgment.

9. Inexperienced. Moloch never had to be clever, and is proud of it.

1. The thunderbolt.

2. Tartarus is a classical name for Hell.

3. A draught of physic, as for animals; hence, used contemptuously here.

4. Natural impulse.

5. With the Latin sense of stamping or dancing on.

6. Outcome.

7. The word "enemy" is understood.

8. Servants, underlings; but perhaps also—or alternatively—"vessels."

9. Why.

His utmost ire? Which, to the height enraged, 95
 Will either quite consume us, and reduce
 To nothing this essential,¹ happier far
 Than miserable to have eternal being!
 Or if our substance be indeed divine,
 And cannot cease to be, we are at worst 100
 On this side nothing;² and by proof we feel
 Our power sufficient to disturb his Heaven,
 And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
 Though inaccessible, his fatal throne:
 Which, if not victory, is yet revenge.” 105

He ended frowning, and his look denounced
 Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous
 To less than gods.³ On th’ other side up rose
 Belial, in act more graceful and humane;
 A fairer person lost not Heaven; he seemed 110
 For dignity composed, and high exploit.
 But all was false and hollow; though his tongue
 Dropped manna,⁴ and could make the worse appear
 The better reason, to perplex and dash
 Maturest counsels: for his thoughts were low, 115
 To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds
 Timorous and slothful: yet he pleased the ear,
 And with persuasive accent thus began:

“I should be much for open war, O peers,
 As not behind in hate, if what was urged 120
 Main reason to persuade immediate war,
 Did not dissuade me most, and seem to cast
 Ominous conjecture on the whole success;⁵
 When he who most excels in fact of arms,
 In what he counsels, and in what excels 125
 Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
 And utter dissolution, as the scope
 Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.
 First, what revenge? The towers of Heaven are filled
 With armed watch, that render all access 130
 Impregnable; oft on the bordering deep
 Encamp their legions, or with obscure wing
 Scout far and wide into the realm of Night,
 Scorning surprise. Or could we break our way
 By force, and at our heels all Hell should rise 135
 With blackest insurrection, to confound
 Heaven’s purest light, yet our great enemy
 All incorruptible would on his throne

1. Essence.

2. I.e., we are now as badly off as we can be without being nothing, and so need have no fear.

3. Only gods could have withstood Moloch.

4. His tongue was honeyed. To “make the worse appear / The better reason” was characteristic of Sophists—hollow, mercenary logic-choppers of ancient Greece. “Dash”: confuse.

5. As above, line 9, outcome. “Fact”: feat.

Sit unpolluted, and th' ethereal mold⁶
 Incapable of stain would soon expel
 Her-mischief, and purge off the baser fire,
 Victorious. Thus repulsed, our final hope
 Is flat-despair: we must exasperate
 Th' almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
 And that must end us, that must be our cure,
 To be no more. Sad cure! for who would lose,
 Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
 Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
 To perish rather, swallowed up and lost
 In the wide womb of uncreated Night,
 Devoid of sense and motion? And who knows,
 Let this be good,⁷ whether our angry Foe
 Can give it, or will ever? How he can
 Is doubtful; that he never will is sure.
 Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
 Belike⁸ through impotence, or unaware,
 To give his enemies their wish, and end
 Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
 To punish endless? 'Wherefore cease we then?'
 Say they who counsel war, 'we are decreed,
 Reserved and destined to eternal woe;
 Whatever doing, what can we suffer more,
 What can we suffer worse?' Is this then worst,
 Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms?
 What when we fled amain,⁹ pursued and strook
 With Heaven's afflicting thunder, and besought
 The deep to shelter us? this Hell then seemed
 A refuge from those wounds. Or when we lay
 Chained on the burning lake? that sure was worse.
 What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,
 Awaked, should blow them into sevenfold rage,
 And plunge us in the flames? or from above
 Should intermitted¹ vengeance arm again
 His red right hand to plague us? What if all
 Her² stores were opened; and this firmament
 Of Hell should spout her cataracts of fire,
 Impendent³ horrors, threatening hideous fall
 One day upon our heads; while we perhaps
 Designing or exhorting glorious war,
 Caught in a fiery tempest shall be hurled,
 Each on his rock transfixed, the sport and prey
 Of racking whirlwinds, or forever sunk
 Under yon boiling ocean, wrapped in chains;

6. Substance. "Ethereal" substance, derived from "ether," is thought to be incorruptible.

7. I.e., suppose it is good to be destroyed.

8. Ironically, in the sense of "I dare say."

9. Headlong. "Strook": struck.

1. Momentarily suspended.

2. Those of Hell.

3. In the Latin sense, hanging down, threatening.

There to converse with everlasting groans,
 Unrespited, unpitied, unreprieved, 185
 Ages of hopeless end! This would be worse.
 War therefore, open or concealed, alike
 My voice dissuades; for what can force or guile⁴
 With him, or who deceive his mind; whose eye
 Views all things at one view? He from Heaven's height 190
 All these our motions⁵ vain, sees and derides,
 Not more almighty to resist our might
 Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
 Shall we then live thus vile, the race of Heaven
 Thus trampled, thus expelled to suffer here 195
 Chains and these torments? Better these than worse,
 By my advice; since fate inevitable
 Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
 The Victor's will. To suffer, as to do,
 Our strength is equal,⁶ nor the law unjust 200
 That so ordains: this was at first resolved,
 If we were wise, against so great a foe
 Contending, and so doubtful what might fall.
 I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
 And venturous, if that fail them, shrink and fear 205
 What yet they know must follow, to endure
 Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain,
 The sentence of their Conqueror. This is now
 Our doom; which if we can sustain and bear,
 Our supreme Foe in time may much remit 210
 His anger, and perhaps, thus far removed,
 Not mind us not offending, satisfied
 With what is punished;⁷ whence these raging fires
 Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.
 Our purer essence then will overcome 215
 Their noxious vapor, or inurcd⁸ not feel,
 Or changed at length, and to the place conformed
 In temper and in nature, will receive
 Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain;
 This horror will grow mild, this darkness light; 220
 Besides what hope the never-ending flight
 Of future days may bring, what chance, what change
 Worth waiting, since our present lot appears
 For happy though but ill, for ill not worst,⁹
 If we procure not to ourselves more woe." 225
 Thus Belial, with words clothed in reason's garb,

4. The verb "accomplish" or "achieve" is omitted.

5. Proposals, plots.

6. I.e., passive endurance and active energy are both in the devils' power. Belial points out, with dangerous good sense, that they must have known from the beginning that they might have to exercise both (lines 201-3).

7. A Latinism, quod punitum est; God will be satisfied with the punishment that has been inflicted.

8. Accustomed.

9. I.e., from the point of view of happiness, the devils are but ill off; from the point of view of evil, they could be worse. This is diabolic relativism.

Counseled ignoble ease and peaceful sloth,
Not peace; and after him thus Mammon spake:

"Either to disenthroned the King of Heaven

We war, if war be best, or to regain

230

Our own right lost: him to unthroned we then

May hope, when everlasting Fate shall yield

To fickle Chance, and Chaos judge the strife.

The former, vain to hope, argues¹ as vain

The latter; for what place can be for us.

235

Within Heaven's bound, unless Heaven's Lord supreme

We overpower? Suppose he should relent

And publish grace to all, on promise made

Of new subjection; with what eyes could we Stand in his presence humble, and receive

240

Strict laws imposed, to celebrate his throne

With warbled hymns, and to his Godhead sing

Forced Halleluiahs; while he lordly sits

Our envied Sovereign, and his altar breathes

Ambrosial odors and ambrosial flowers,

245

Our servile offerings? This must be our task

In Heaven, this our delight; how wearisome

Eternity so spent in worship paid

To whom we hate! Let us not then pursue,

By force impossible, by leave obtained

250

Unacceptable, though in Heaven, our state

Of splendid vassalage;² but rather seek

Our own good from ourselves, and from our own

Live to ourselves, though in this vast recess,

Free, and to none accountable, preferring

255

Hard liberty before the easy yoke

Of servile pomp. Our greatness will appear

Then most conspicuous, when great things of small,

Useful of hurtful, prosperous of adverse,

We can create, and in what place soc'er

260

Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain

Through labor and endurance. This deep world

Of darkness do we dread? How oft amidst

Thick clouds and dark doth Heaven's all-ruling Sire

Choose to reside, his glory unobscured,

265

And with the majesty of darkness round

Covers his throne; from whence deep thunders roar,

Mustering their rage, and Heaven resembles Hell!

As he our darkness, cannot we his light

Imitate when we please? This desert soil

270

Wants³ not her hidden luster, gems, and gold;

Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise

Magnificence; and what can Heaven show more?

1. Proves.

2. Servitude.

3. Lacks. Mammon proposes a tawdry

imitation-Heaven in Hell; this is the ultimate in diabolic degradation.

Our torments also may in length of time
 Become our elements, these piercing fires 275
 As soft as now severe, our temper changed
 Into their temper; which must needs remove
 The sensible⁴ of pain. All things invite
 To peaceful counsels, and the settled state
 Of order, how in safety best we may 280
 Compose our present evils, with regard
 Of what we are and where, dismissing quite
 All thoughts of war. Ye have what I advise."

He scarce had finished, when such murmur filled
 Th' assembly, as when hollow rocks retain 285
 The sound of blustering winds, which all night long
 Had roused the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
 Seafaring men o'erwatched,⁵ whose bark by chance,
 Or pinnacle, and anchors in a craggy bay
 After the tempest: such applause was heard 290
 As Mammon ended, and his sentence pleased,
 Advising peace; for such another field
 They dreaded worse than Hell; so much the fear
 Of thunder and the sword of Michaël⁶
 Wrought still within them; and no less desire 295
 To found this nether empire, which might rise
 By policy, and long process of time,
 In emulation opposite to Heaven.

Which when Beëlzebub perceived, than whom,
 Satan except, none higher sat, with grave 300
 Aspect he rose, and in his rising seemed
 A pillar of state; deep on his front⁷ engraven
 Deliberation sat and public care;
 And princely counsel in his face yet shone,
 Majestic though in ruin. Sage he stood 305
 With Atlantean⁸ shoulders fit to bear
 The weight of mightiest monarchies; his look
 Drew audience and attention still as night
 Or summer's noontide air, while thus he spake:

"Thrones and imperial powers, offspring of Heaven, 310
 Ethereal virtues; or these titles now
 Must we renounce, and, changing style, be called Princes of Hell? For so the popular vote
 Inclines, here to continue, and build up here
 A growing empire—Doubtless! while we dream, 315
 And know not that the King of Heaven hath doomed
 This place our dungeon, not our safe retreat
 Beyond his potent arm, to live exempt
 From Heaven's high jurisdiction, in new league

4. Sense, sensation.

5. Tired out with watching.

6. The warrior angel, chief stay of the angelic armies.

7. Forehead, brow.

8. Worthy of Atlas, one of the Titans, who as a punishment for rebellion was condemned to stand in North Africa and hold up the heavens.

Banded against his throne, but to remain 320
 In strictest bondage, though thus far removed,
 Under th' inevitable curb, reserved
 His captive multitude. For he, be sure,
 In height or depth, still first and last will reign
 Sole King, and of his kingdom lose no part 325
 By our revolt, but over Hell extend
 His empire, and with iron scepter rule
 Us here, as with his golden those in Heaven.
 What⁹ sit we then projecting peace and war?
 War hath determined us,¹ and foiled with loss 330
 Irreparable; terms of peace yet none
 Vouchsafed or sought; for what peace will be given
 To us enslaved, but custody severe,
 And stripes; and arbitrary punishment
 Inflicted? and what peace can we return, 335
 But, to our power,² hostility and hate,
 Untamed reluctancc,³ and revenge, though slow,
 Yct ever plotting how the Conqueror least
 May reap his conquest; and may least rejoice
 In doing what we most in suffering feel?⁴ 340
 Nor will occasion want, nor shall we need
 With dangerous expedition to invade
 Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
 Or ambush from the deep. What if we find
 Some easier enterprise? There is a place 345
 (If ancient and prophetic fame⁵ in Heaven
 Err not), another world, the happy seat
 Of some new race called Man, about this time
 To be created like to us,⁶ though less
 In power and excellence, but favored more 350
 Of him who rules above; so was his will Pronounced among the gods, and by an oath,
 That shook Heaven's whole circumference, confirmed.
 Thither let us bend all our thoughts, to learn
 What creatures there inhabit, of what mold, 355
 Or substance, how endued,⁷ and what their power,
 And where their weakness, how attempted⁸ best,
 By force or subtlety. Though Heaven be shut,
 And Heaven's high Arbitrator sit secure
 In his own strength, this place may lie exposed, 360
 The utmost border of his kingdom, left
 To their defense who hold it;⁹ here, perhaps,

9. Why.

1. I.e., war has decided the question for (but also, limited) us.

2. I.e., to the best of our power.

3. Resistance (in the Latin sense, struggling back).

4. How God may get least pleasure from our pain—a devil's view of the deity.

5. Report, rumor.

6. The created (Ptolemaic) cosmos came into existence only after the fall of Satan, and the fallen angels, being otherwise occupied, could not know of it.

7. Endowed.

8. Attacked, but also "tempted."

9. To be defended by the occupants.

Some advantageous act may be achieved
 By sudden onset: either with Hell-fire
 To waste¹ his whole creation, or possess 365
 All as our own, and drive, as we were driven,
 The puny habitants; or if not drive,
 Seduce them to our party, that their God
 May prove their foe, and with repenting hand
 Abolish his own works. This would surpass 370
 Common revenge, and interrupt his joy
 In our confusion, and our joy upraise
 In his disturbance; when his darling sons,
 Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
 Their frail original,² and faded bliss, 375
 Faded so soon! Advise if this be worth
 Attempting, or to sit in darkness here
 Hatching vain empires." Thus Beëlzebub
 Pleaded his devilish counsel, first devised
 By Satan, and in part proposed; for whence, 380
 But from the author of all ill could spring
 So deep a malice, to confound³ the race
 Of mankind in one root, and Earth with Hell
 To mingle and involve, done all to spite
 The great Creator? But their spite still serves 385
 His glory to augment. The bold design
 Pleas'd highly those infernal states, and joy
 Sparkled in all their eyes; with full assent
 They vote: whereat his speech he thus renews:
 "Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate, 390
 Synod of gods, and, like to what ye are,
 Great things resolv'd; which from the lowest deep
 Will once more lift us up, in spite of Fate,
 Nearer our ancient scat; perhaps in view
 Of those bright confines, whence with neighboring arms 395
 And opportune excursion we may chance
 Re-enter Heaven; or else in some mild zone
 Dwell not unvisited of Heaven's fair light,
 Secure, and at the brightening orient beam
 Purge off this gloom; the soft delicious air, 400
 To heal the scar of these corrosive fires,
 Shall breathe her balm. But first, whom shall we send
 In search of this new world? whom shall we find Sufficient? who shall tempt⁴ with wandering feet
 The dark, unbottomed, infinite abyss, 405
 And through the palpable obscure⁵ find out Synesthesia
 His uncouth way, or spread his airy flight
 Upborn with indefatigable wings

1. Lay waste.

2. Originator, parent; or, perhaps, "their original condition."

3. Destroy, ruin. Adam, the first man, is the "root" of mankind.

4. Try, attempt (from Latin temptare).

5. Darkness so thick it can be felt.

"Uncouth": strange, new.

Over the vast abrupt,⁶ ere he arrive
 The happy isle?⁷ What strength, what art, can then 410
 Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe
 Through the strict senteries⁸ and stations thick
 Of angels watching round? Here he had need
 All circumspection, and we now no less
 Choice in our suffrage;⁹ for on whom we send 415
 The weight of all, and our last hope, relies.”
 This said, he sat; and expectation held
 His look suspense,¹ awaiting who appeared
 To second, or oppose, or undertake
 The perilous attempt; but all sat mute, 420
 Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each
 In others' countenance read his own dismay,
 Astonished. None among the choice and prime
 Of those Heaven-warring champions could be found
 So hardy as to proffer or accept 425
 Alone the dreadful voyage; till at last
 Satan, whom now transcendent glory raised
 Above his fellows, with monarchical pride
 Conscious of highest worth, unmoved thus spake:
 “O progeny of Heaven, empyreal thrones! 430
 With reason hath deep silence and demur²
 Seized us, though undismayed. Long is the way
 And hard, that out of Hell leads up to light;
 Our prison strong, this huge convex³ of fire,
 Outrageous to devour, immures us round 435
 Ninefold,⁴ and gates of burning adamant,
 Barred over us, prohibit all egress.
 These passed, if any pass, the void profound
 Of unessential⁵ Night receives him next,
 Wide gaping, and with utter loss of being 440
 Threatens him, plunged in that abortive gulf.
 If thence he 'scape into whatever world,
 Or unknown region, what remains him less⁶
 Than unknown dangers and as hard escape?
 But I should ill become this throne, O peers, 445
 And this imperial sovereignty, adorned
 With splendor, armed with power, if aught proposed
 And judged of public moment,⁷ in the shape
 Of difficulty or danger, could deter
 Me from attempting. Wherefore do I assume 450

6. Chaos; a striking example of sound imitating sense.

7. Wherever man is (for the fallen angels do not yet know of Earth).

8. Old spelling of sentries, necessary here for the meter.

9. Care in our voting.

1. I.e., everyone sat waiting in suspense.

2. Delay.

3. Vault.

4. Walls us in with nine thicknesses. See below, lines 645 ff.

5. Without real being, darkness being merely the absence of light. The “abortive gulf” expresses again this completely negative quality of Chaos and Night.

6. I.e., what awaits him except.

7. Importance.

These royalties,⁸ and not refuse to reign,
 Refusing to accept as great a share
 Of hazard as of honor, due alike
 To him who reigns, and so much to him due
 Of hazard more, as he above the rest
 High honored sits?⁹ Go therefore, mighty powers,
 Terror of Heaven, though fallen; intend¹ at home,
 While here shall be our home, what best may ease
 The present misery, and render Hell
 More tolerable; if there be cure or charm
 To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
 Of this ill mansion; intermit no watch
 Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad
 Through all the coasts of dark destruction seek Deliverance for us all: this enterprise
 None shall partake with me." Thus saying, rose
 The monarch, and prevented² all reply;
 Prudent, lest, from his resolution raised,³
 Others among the chief might offer now
 (Certain to be refused) what erst they feared,
 And, so refused, might in opinion stand
 His rivals, winning cheap the high repute
 Which he through hazard huge must earn. But they Dreaded not more th' adventure than his voice
 Forbidding; and at once with him they rose;
 Their rising all at once was as the sound
 Of thunder heard remote. Towards him they bend
 With awful⁴ reverence prone; and as a god
 Extol him equal to the Highest in Heaven.
 Nor failed they to express how much they praised,
 That for the general safety he despised
 His own; for neither do the spirits damned
 Lose all their virtue; lest bad men should boast
 Their specious deeds on Earth, which glory excites,
 Or close ambition varnished o'er with zeal.⁵
 Thus their doubtful consultations dark
 Ended, rejoicing in their matchless chief:
 As when from mountain tops the dusky clouds
 Ascending, while the north wind sleeps, o'erspread
 Heaven's cheerful face, the lowering element
 Scowls o'er the darkened landscape snow or shower;
 If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet
 Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,

8. Insignia of royalty. "Refusing": i.e., if I refuse.

9. Satan's argument, simple though entangled in rhetoric, is that rulers must share in the dangers as well as the rewards of an enterprise.

1. Undertake, endeavor.

2. Forestalled, anticipated.

3. After their courage had been raised by his resolution.

4. Full of respect and awe.

5. The sense is that damned spirits still retain some virtues; lest bad men boast of good deeds they have done out of glory and ambition, Milton has shown us that devils do just as much. "Specious": pretending virtue. "Close": secret.

The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
 Attest their joy, that hill and valley rings. 495
 O shame to men! Devil with devil damned
 Firm concord holds, men only disagree
 Of creatures rational, though under hope
 Of heavenly grace; and, God proclaiming peace,⁶
 Yet live in hatred, enmity, and strife 500
 Among themselves, and levy cruel wars,
 Wasting the earth, each other to destroy:
 As if (which might induce us to accord)
 Man had not hellish foes enow⁷ besides,
 That day and night for his destruction wait! 505
 The Stygian council thus dissolved; and forth
 In order came the grand infernal peers.
 Midst came their mighty paramount,⁸ and seemed Alone th' antagonist of Heaven, nor less
 Than Hell's dread emperor, with pomp supreme, 510
 And godlike imitated state; him round
 A globe⁹ of fiery seraphim enclosed
 With bright emblazonry,¹ and horrent arms.
 Then of their session ended they bid cry
 With trumpets' regal sound the great result: 515
 Toward the four winds four speedy cherubim
 Put to their mouths the sounding alchemy²
 By herald's voice explained; the hollow abyss
 Heard far and wide, and all the host of Hell
 With deafening shout, returned them loud acclaim. 520
 Thence more at ease their minds and somewhat raised
 By false presumptuous hope, the rangéd³ powers
 Disband; and, wandering, each his several way
 Pursues, as inclination or sad choice
 Leads him perplexed where he may likeliest find 525
 Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
 The irksome hours, till his great chief return.
 Part on the plain, or in the air sublime,⁴
 Upon the wing, or in swift race contend,
 As at th' Olympian games or Pythian fields;⁵ 530
 Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
 With rapid wheels, or fronted brigades form.
 As when, to warn proud cities, war appears
 Waged in the troubled sky, and armies rush
 To battle in the clouds;⁶ before each van 535
 Prick forth the airy knights, and couch their spears

6. I.e., though God proclaims peace.
 7. I.e., enough; the old plural emphatic form.
 8. Champion, chief.
 9. Band or crowd.
 1. Decorated shields. "Horrent": bristling.
 2. I.e., resonant trumpets (made of the alloy brass by a marriage of metals which Milton associates with alchemy).

3. Arrayed in ranks.
 4. Aloft, uplifted (the adjective modifies the flyer, not the air).
 5. The Olympic games were held at Olympia, the Pythian games at Delphi. To "shun the goal" is to drive a chariot as close as possible around a column without hitting it.
 6. Warfare in the skies at night, portending trouble on earth. "Prick": spur.

Till thickest legions close; with feats of arms
 From either end of Heaven the welkin⁷ burns.
 Others with vast Typhoean⁸ rage more fell
 Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air 540
 In whirlwind; Hell scarce holds the wild uproar.
 As when Alcides, from Oechalia crowned
 With conquest, felt th' envenomed robe, and tore
 Through pain up by the roots Thessalian pines,
 And Lichas from the top of Oeta threw 545
 Into th' Euboic sea.⁹ Others more mild,
 Retreated in a silent valley, sing
 With notes angelical to many a harp
 Their own heroic deeds and hapless fall
 By doom of battle; and complain that Fate 550
 Free Virtue should enthrall to Force or Chance.
 Their song was partial,¹ but the harmony
 (What could it less when spirits immortal sing?)
 Suspended² Hell, and took with ravishment
 The thronging audience. In discourse more sweet 555
 (For eloquence the soul, song charms the sense)
 Others apart sat on a hill retired,
 In thoughts more elevate, and reasoned high
 Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate,
 Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute, 560
 And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.
 Of good and evil much they argued then,
 Of happiness and final misery,
 Passion and apathy,³ and glory and shame,
 Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy!⁴ 565
 Yet with a pleasing sorcery could charm
 Pain for a while or anguish, and excite
 Fallacious hope, or arm th' obduréd⁵ breast
 With stubborn patience as with triple steel.
 Another part, in squadrons and gross⁶ bands, 570
 On bold adventure to discover wide
 That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
 Might yield them easier habitation, bend
 Four ways their flying march, along the banks
 Of four infernal rivers that disgorge 575

7. Sky.

8. Like that of Typhon, the hundred-headed Titan. See above, I.199.

9. Hercules, returning in triumph from Oechalia, prepared to sacrifice to the gods on top of Mt. Oeta, and sent to his wife Dejanira for a new robe. She had been told by the dying Nessus, a centaur whom Hercules had killed, that centaur's blood would preserve her husband's love. So she sent Hercules a robe anointed with the blood of Nessus. The "envenomed robe" tortured him into a frenzy, and before he died, he threw Lichas, who had brought it, together with a good part of Mt. Oeta itself, into the sea of Euboea.

1. Prejudiced.

2. Held in suspense.

3. Feeling and lack of feeling; the angels are dabbling in Stoicism.

4. Milton means, not that the subjects themselves are vain (he himself, in the present poem, has a good deal to say on these topics), but that the very premises with which devils start are bound to land them in error.

5. Hardened.

6. Solid, dense.

Into the burning lake their baleful streams:⁷
 Abhorred Styx, the flood of deadly hate;
 Sad Acheron of sorrow, black and deep;
 Cocytus, named of lamentation loud
 Heard on the rueful stream; fierce Phlegethon 580
 Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
 Far off from these a slow and silent stream,
 Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
 Her watery labyrinth, whereof who drinks
 Forthwith his former state and being forgets, 585
 Forgets both joy and grief, pleasure and pain.
 Beyond this flood a frozen continent
 Lies dark and wild, beat with perpetual storms
 Of whirlwind and dire hail, which on firm land
 Thaws not, but gathers heap,⁸ and ruin seems. 590
 Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice,
 A gulf profound as that Serbonian bog⁹
 Betwixt Damiata and Mount Casius old,
 Where armies whole have sunk: the parching air
 Burns frore;¹ and cold performs th' effect of fire. 595
 Thither by harpy-footed² Furies haled,
 At certain revolutions³ all the damned
 Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
 Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce,
 From beds of raging fire to starve⁴ in ice 600
 Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
 Immovable, infixed, and frozen round
 Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire.
 They ferry over this Lethæan sound
 Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment, 605
 And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach
 The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose
 In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe,
 All in one moment, and so near the brink;
 But Fate withstands, and to oppose th' attempt 610
 Medusa⁵ with Gorgonian terror guards
 The ford, and of itself the water flies
 All taste of living wight, as once it fled
 The lips of Tantalus.⁶ Thus roving on
 In confused march forlorn, th' adventurous bands 615

7. The four rivers are traditional in hellish geography; Milton takes pains to distinguish them by the original meanings of their Greek names (Styx means "hateful," Acheron "woeful," etc.). Lethe is "far off" and very different from the others, oblivion being relatively a blessed state in hell.

8. In a heap, so that it looks like the ruin of an old building ("ancient pile").

9. Lake Serbonis, once famous for its quicksands but today dried up, used to lie on the coast of Egypt, just east of the Nile, between Damiata and Mt.

Cassius.

1. Frosty.

2. With hooked claws.

3. I.e., of time.

4. Benumb.

5. One of the three Gorgons, women with snaky hair, scaly bodies, and boar's tusks, the very sight of whose faces changed men to stone.

6. Tantalus, afflicted with a raging thirst, stood in the middle of a lake, the water of which always eluded his grasp (hence, "tantalize").

With shuddering horror pale, and eyes aghast
 Viewed first their lamentable lot, and found
 No rest. Through many a dark and dreary vale
 They passed, and many a region dolorous,
 O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp,⁷ 620
 Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death,
 A universe of death, which God by curse
 Created evil, for evil only good,
 Where all life dies, death lives, and Nature breeds,
 Reverse, all monstrous; all prodigious things, 625
 Abominable, unutterable, and worse
 Than fables yet have feigned, or fear conceived,
 Gorgons, and Hydras, and Chimeras⁸ dire.
 Meanwhile the adversary of God and man,
 Satan with thoughts inflamed of highest design, 630
 Puts on swift wings,⁹ and toward the gates of Hell
 Explores his solitary flight; sometimes
 He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left;
 Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars
 Up to the fiery concave¹ towering high. 635
 As when far off at sea a fleet descried
 Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
 Close sailing from Bengala,² or the isles
 Of Ternate and Tidore,³ whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs; they on the trading flood 640
 Through the wide Ethiopian⁴ to the Cape
 Ply stemming nightly toward the pole: so seemed Far off the flying fiend. At last appear
 Hell bounds, high reaching to the horrid roof,
 And thrice threefold the gates; three folds were brass, 645
 Three iron, three of adamant rock,
 Impenetrable, impaled with circling fire,
 Yet unconsumed. Before the gates there sat
 On either side a formidable shape;⁵
 The one seemed woman to the waist; and fair, 650
 But ended foul in many a scaly fold
 Voluminous and vast, a serpent armed
 With mortal sting. About her middle round
 A cry⁶ of Hellhounds never-ceasing barked

7. A "fiery alp" is a volcano.

8. The Hydra was a serpent with nine heads, which was slain by Hercules; the Chimera was a fire-breathing creature, part lion, part dragon, part goat. They exemplify abominations of nature.

9. Satan does not fasten on his wings; he takes swiftly to wing.

1. Vault.

2. An old form of "Bengal."

3. Two of the Molucca or "Spice" Islands, modern Indonesia.

4. The Indian Ocean, east of Africa. "The Cape" is of course the Cape of Good Hope; "the pole," the South Pole.

5. The allegorical figures of Sin and Death are founded on James i.15:

"Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." But the incestuous relations of Sin and Death are Milton's own invention. Physically, Sin is modeled on Virgil's or Ovid's Scylla, with some touches adopted from Spenser's Error; Death is a traditional figure, vague and vast.

6. Pack.

With wide Cerberean⁷ mouths full loud, and rung 655
 A hideous peal; yet, when they list, would creep,
 If aught disturbed their noise, into her womb,
 And kennel there, yet there still barked and howled
 Within unseen. Far less abhorred than these Vexed Scylla,⁸ bathing in the sea that parts 660
 Calabria from the hoarse Trinacrian shore;
 Nor uglier follow the night-hag,⁹ when, called
 In secret, riding through the air she comes,
 Lured with the smell of infant blood, to dance
 With Lapland witches, while the laboring moon 665
 Eclipses at their charms. The other shape,
 If shape it might be called that shape had none
 Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb,
 Or substance might be called that shadow seemed,
 For each seemed either; black it stood as night, 670
 Fierce as ten Furies, terrible as Hell,
 And shook a dreadful dart; what seemed his head
 The likeness of a kingly crown had on.
 Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
 The monster moving onward came as fast, 675
 With horrid strides; Hell trembled as he strode.
 Th' undaunted fiend what this might be admired,¹
 Admired, not feared; God and his Son except,
 Created thing nought valued he nor shunned;
 And with disdainful look thus first began: 680
 "Whence and what art thou, execrable shape,
 That dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance
 Thy miscreated front² athwart my way
 To yonder gates? Through them I mean to pass,
 That be assured, without leave asked of thee. 685
 Retire, or taste thy folly, and learn by proof,
 Hell-born, not to contend with spirits of Heaven."
 To whom the goblin, full of wrath, replied:
 "Art thou that traitor angel, art thou he,
 Who first broke peace in Heaven, and faith, till then 690
 Unbroken, and in proud rebellious arms
 Drew after him the third part of Heaven's sons
 Conjured³ against the Highest, for which both thou
 And they, outcast from God, are here condemned
 To waste eternal days in woe and pain? 695
 And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of Heaven,
 Hell-doomed, and breath'st defiance here and scorn,
 Where I reign king, and, to enrage thee more,

7. Like Cerberus, the traditional hound of Hell.

8. Circe out of jealousy threw poison into the water where Scylla bathed, in the straits between Calabria and Sicily ("Trinacria"); as a result of the poisons, Scylla developed a ring of barking, snapping dogs around her waist.

9. Hecate, goddess of sorcery. She attends the orgies of witches in the home of all witchcraft, Lapland, whither she is drawn by the blood of babies sacrificed for the occasion.

1. Wondered.

2. Misshapen forehead, or face.

3. Sworn together by an oath.

Thy king and lord? Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive, and to thy speed add wings, 700
Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
Thy ling'ring, or with one stroke of this dart
Strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt before."

So spake the grisly terror, and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold 705
More dreadful and deform. On th' other side,
Incensed with indignation, Satan stood
Unterrified, and like a comet burned
That fires the length of Ophiucus⁴ huge
In th' Arctic sky, and from his horrid hair
Shakes pestilence and war. Each at the head 710
Levied his deadly aim; their fatal hands
No second stroke intend,⁵ and such a frown
Each cast at th' other, as when two black clouds,
With Heaven's artillery fraught,⁶ come rattling on 715
Over the Caspian,⁷ then stand front to front
Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow
To join their dark encounter in mid-air:

So frowned the mighty combatants, that Hell
Grew darker at their frown; so matched they stood; 720
For never but once more was either like
To meet so great a foe.⁸ And now great deeds
Had been achieved, whereof all Hell had rung,
Had not the snaky sorceress that sat
Fast by Hell-gate, and kept the fatal key, 725
Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rushed between.

"O father, what intends thy hand," she cried,
"Against thy only son?"⁹ What fury, O son,
Possesses thee to bend that mortal dart
Against thy father's head? and know'st for whom? 730
For Him who sits above and laughs the while
At thee ordained his drudge, to execute
Whate'er his wrath, which he calls Justice, bids;
His wrath which one day will destroy ye both!"

She spake, and at her words the hellish pest 735
Forbore, then these to her Satan returned:

"So strange thy outcry, and thy words so strange
Thou interposest, that my sudden hand,
Prevented,¹ spares to tell thee yet by deeds
What it intends, till first I know of thee, 740
What thing thou art, thus double-formed, and why,
In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st

4. A vast Northern constellation, "The Serpent-Holder" (also called "Serpentarius"). Satan will soon appear as a snake; and, like a comet, he portends "pestilence and war."

5. I.e., the first stroke will do the business.

6. Loaded with thunderbolts.

7. The Caspian is a particularly stormy area.

8. I.e., the Son of God.

9. Sin, Death, and Satan, in their various interrelations, parody obscenely the relations between God and the Son, Adam and Eve.

1. Forestalled.

Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son?
 I know thee not, nor ever saw till now
 Sight more detestable than him and thee."

745

T' whom thus the portress of Hell-gate replied:

"Hast thou forgot me then, and do I seem
 Now in thine eye so foul? once deemed so fair
 In Heaven, when at th' assembly, and in sight
 Of all the seraphim with thee combined
 In bold conspiracy against Heaven's King,
 All on a sudden miserable pain

750

Surprised thee; dim thine eyes, and dizzy swum
 In darkness, while thy head flames thick and fast
 Threw forth, till on the left side opening wide,
 Likest to thee in shape and countenance bright,
 Then shining heavenly-fair, a goddess armed
 Out of thy head I sprung.² Amazement seized
 All th' host of Heaven; back they recoiled afraid
 At first, and called me Sin, and for a sign
 Portentous held me; but, familiar grown,
 I pleased, and with attractive graces won

755

The most averse, thee chiefly, who full oft
 Thyself in me thy perfect image viewing
 Becam'st enamored;³ and such joy thou took'st
 With me in secret, that my womb conceived
 A growing burden. Meanwhile war arose,
 And fields were fought in Heaven; wherein remained (For what could else?) to our almighty Foe

760

Clear victory, to our part loss and rout
 Through all the empyrean. Down they fell,
 Driven headlong from the pitch⁴ of Heaven, down
 Into this deep, and in the general fall

770

I also; at which time this powerful key
 Into my hand was given, with charge to keep
 These gates forever shut, which none can pass
 Without my opening. Pensive here I sat

775

Alone, but long I sat not, till my womb
 Pregnant by thee, and now excessive grown,
 Prodigious motion felt and rueful throes.

780

At last this odious offspring whom thou seest,
 Thine own begotten, breaking violent way,
 Tore through my entrails, that, with fear and pain
 Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew

Transformed; but he, my inbred enemy,
 Forth issued, brandishing his fatal dart,

785

Made to destroy. I fled, and cried out Death!
 Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sighed
 From all her caves, and back resounded Death!

2. As Athena sprang full-grown from the head of Zeus.

3. Sin looks attractive at first, being a lovely woman at the top of her body; but she is a serpent below, and ends in a "mortal sting," i.e., death. See James i.14, "when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."

4. Peak.

I fled; but he pursued (though more, it seems, 790
 Inflamed with lust than rage) and, swifter far,
 Me overtook, his mother, all dismayed,
 And in embraces forcible and foul
 Engendering with me, of that rape begot
 These yelling monsters, that with ceaseless cry 795
 Surround me, as thou sawest, hourly conceived
 And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
 To me; for when they list, into the womb
 That bred them they return, and howl, and gnaw
 My bowels, their repast; then, bursting forth 800
 Afresh, with conscious terrors vex me round,
 That rest or intermission none I find.
 Before mine eyes in opposition sits
 Grim Death, my son and foe, who sets them on,
 And me his parent would full soon devour 805
 For want of other prey, but that he knows
 His end with mine involved; and knows that I
 Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane,
 Whenever that shall be; so Fate pronounced.
 But thou, O father, I forewarn thee, shun 810
 His deadly arrow; neither vainly hope
 To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
 Though tempered heavenly; for that mortal dint,
 Save he who reigns above, none can resist.”⁵
 She finished, and the subtle fiend his lore 815
 Soon learned, now milder, and thus answered smooth:
 “Dear daughter, since thou claimest me for thy sire,
 And my fair son here show’st me, the dear pledge
 Of dalliance had with thee in Heaven, and joys
 Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire change 820
 Befallen us unforeseen, unthought of; know
 I come no enemy, but to set free
 From out this dark and dismal house of pain,
 Both him and thee, and all the Heavenly host
 Of spirits that, in our just pretenses⁶ armed, 825
 Fell with us from on high. From them I go
 This uncouth errand sole,⁷ and one for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
 Th’ unfounded deep, and through the void immense
 To search with wandering quest a place foretold 830
 Should be, and, by concurring signs, ere now
 Created vast and round, a place of bliss
 In the purlieus⁸ of Heaven, and therein placed
 A race of upstart creatures, to supply
 Perhaps our vacant room, though more removed, 835
 Lest Heaven, surcharged⁹ with potent multitude,

5. I.e., only God is immune to death.

6. Grievances.

7. Alone on a desolate journey.

8. Outskirts, suburbs.

9. Too full. “Broils”: controversies.

Might hap to move new broils. Be this, or aught
 Than this more secret, now designed, I haste
 To know; and, this once known, shall soon return,
 And bring ye to the place where thou and Death 840
 Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
 Wing silently the buxom¹ air, embalmed
 With odors: there ye shall be fed and filled
 Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey."
 He ceased, for both seemed highly pleased, and Death 845
 Grinned horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
 His famine² should be filled, and blessed his maw
 Destined to that good hour. No less rejoiced
 His mother bad, and thus bespake her sire:
 "The key of this infernal pit, by due 850
 And by command of Heaven's all-powerful King
 I keep, by him forbidden to unlock
 These adamantine gates; against all force
 Death ready stands to interpose his dart,
 Fearless to be o'ermatched by living might. 855
 But what owe I to his commands above
 Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down
 Into this gloom of Tartarus profound,
 To sit in hateful office here confined,
 Inhabitant of Heaven and heavenly-born, 860
 Here in perpetual agony and pain,
 With terrors and with clamors compassed round
 Of mine own brood that on my bowels feed?
 Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
 My being gav'st me; whom should I obey 865
 But thee? whom follow? Thou wilt bring me soon
 To that new world of light and bliss, among
 The gods who live at ease, where I shall reign
 At thy right hand voluptuous,³ as beseems
 Thy daughter and thy darling, without end." 870
 Thus saying, from her side the fatal key,
 Sad instrument of all our woe, she took;
 And, towards the gate rolling her bestial train,⁴
 Forthwith the huge portcullis high up-drew,
 Which but herself not all the Stygian powers⁵ 875
 Could once have moved; then in the keyhole turns
 Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
 Of massy iron or solid rock with ease
 Unfastens: on a sudden open fly
 With impetuous recoil and jarring sound 880
 Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate

1. Yielding. "Embalmed": made fragrant, but also with a thought of the process associated with death.

2. Hunger, belly.

3. As the Son sits at God's right hand, Sin will sit at Satan's; a blasphemous parody of the Creed, showed up by the word "voluptuous."

4. I.e., accompanied by her yelping offspring.

5. The powers of Hell.

Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
 Of Erebus.⁶ She opened, but to shut
 Excelled⁷ her power; the gates wide open stood,
 That with extended wings a bannered host, 885
 Under spread ensigns⁸ marching, might pass through
 With horse and chariots ranked in loose array;
 So wide they stood, and like a furnace-mouth
 Cast forth redounding⁹ smoke and ruddy flame.
 Before their eyes in sudden view appear 890
 The secrets of the hoary deep, a dark
 Illimitable ocean, without bound,
 Without dimension; where length, breadth, and height,
 And time and place are lost; where eldest Night
 And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold 895
 Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
 Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.
 For Hot, Cold, Moist, and Dry, four champions fierce Strive: here for mastery, and to battle bring
 Their embryon atoms;¹ they around the flag 900
 Of each his faction, in their several clans,
 Light-armed or heavy, sharp, smooth, swift, or slow,
 Swarm populous, unnumbered as the sands
 Of Barca or Cyrene's torrid soil,²
 Levied to side with warring winds, and poise³ 905
 Their lighter wings: To whom these most adhere,
 He rules a moment; Chaos⁴ umpire sits,
 And by decision more embroils the fray
 By which he reigns: next him, high arbiter,
 Chance governs all. Into this wild abyss, 910
 The womb of Nature and perhaps her grave,
 Of neither sea, nor shore, nor air, nor fire,
 But all these in their pregnant causes⁵ mixed
 Confusedly, and which thus must ever fight,
 Unless th' Almighty Maker them ordain 915
 His dark materials to create more worlds,⁶
 Into this wild abyss the wary fiend
 Stood on the brink of Hell and looked awhile,
 Pondering his voyage; for no narrow frith⁷
 He had to cross. Nor was his ear less pealed⁸ 920
 With noises loud and ruinous (to compare
 Great things with small) than when Bellona⁹ storms,

6. Another classical name for Hell.

7. Exceeded. That Sin cannot shut Hell gate, though she can open it, is symbolical.

8. Standards, flags.

9. Billowing.

1. The four elements, fire, earth, water, and air, struggle endlessly in Chaos. "Embryon": embryo, unformed.

2. Barca and Cyrene were cities built on the shifting sands of North Africa.

3. Give weight to.

4. Chaos is both the place where confusion reigns and personified confusion itself.

5. Chaos is not organized to the point of being matter; it is the seeds of all forms of matter.

6. God must impose order on Chaos to create worlds from it.

7. Channel, frith.

8. Rung.

9. Goddess of war.

With all her battering engines bent to raze
 Some capital city; or less than if this frame
 Of Heaven were falling, and these elements 925
 In mutiny had from her axle torn
 The steadfast Earth. At last his sail-broad vans¹
 He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke
 Uplifted spurns the ground; thence many a league,
 As in a cloudy chair ascending, rides 930
 Audacious; but that seat soon failing, meets
 A vast vacuity: all unawares,
 Fluttering his pennons² vain, plumb down he drops
 Ten thousand fathom deep, and to this hour
 Down had been falling, had not by ill chance 935
 The strong rebuff³ of some tumultuous cloud,
 Instinct⁴ with fire and niter, hurried him
 As many miles aloft; that fury stayed,
 Quenched in a boggy Syrtis,⁵ neither sea,
 Nor good dry land, nigh foundered on he fares, 940
 Treading the crude consistence, half on foot,
 Half flying; behoves⁶ him now both oar and sail.
 As when a gryphon through the wilderness
 With winged course o'er hill or moory dale,
 Pursues the Arimaspians, who by stealth 945
 Had from his wakeful custody purloined
 The guarded gold:⁷ so eagerly the fiend
 O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare,
 With head, hands, wings, or feet pursues his way,
 And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies. 950
 At length a universal hubbub wild
 Of stunning sounds and voices all confused
 Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
 With loudest vehemence. Thither he plies
 Undaunted, to meet there whatever power 955
 Or spirit of the nethermost abyss
 Might in that noise reside, of whom to ask
 Which way the nearest coast of darkness lies
 Bordering on light; when straight behold the throne
 Of Chaos, and his dark pavilion spread 960
 Wide on the wasteful deep! With him enthroned
 Sat sable-vested Night, eldest of things,
 The consort of his reign; and by them stood
 Orcus and Ades,⁸ and the dreaded name

1. Wings.

2. Pennons, from Latin pennae, "wings."

3. Puff or blast.

4. Filled. "Niter"; saltpeter.

5. Quicksand, from the North African gulfs, famous for their shifting sand-bars.

6. Befits.

7. Gryphons, fabulous creatures, half-eagle, half-dragon, lived in northern

Europe, and were said to hoard gold. When it was stolen from them by the one-eyed Arimaspians, they pursued these curious malefactors, hopping, flapping, and squawking. The story is a piece of moralized natural history, directed against the love of money.

8. Latin and Greek names of Pluto, god of Hell.

Of Demogorgon;⁹ Rumor next and Chance, 965
And Tumult and Confusion all embroiled,
And Discord with a thousand various mouths.

T' whom Satan, turning boldly, thus: "Ye powers
And spirits of this nethermost abyss,
Chaos and ancient Night, I come no spy, 970
With purpose to explore or to disturb
The secrets of your realm; but by constraint
Wandering this darksome desert, as my way
Lies through your spacious empire up to light,
Alone and without guide, half lost, I seek 975
What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds
Confine with¹ Heaven; or if some other place
From your dominion won, th' Ethereal King
Possesses lately, thither to arrive
I travel this profound:² Direct my course: 980
Directed, no mean recompense it brings
To your behoof,³ if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expelled, reduce
To their original darkness and your sway
(Which is my present journey⁴), and once more 985
Erect the standard there of ancient Night.
Yours be th' advantage all, mine the revenge!"

Thus Satan; and him thus the anarch⁵ old,
With faltering speech and visage incomposed,⁶
Answered: "I know thee, stranger, who thou art, 990
That mighty leading angel, who of late
Made head against Heaven's King, though overthrown.
I saw and heard; for such a numerous host
Fled not in silence through the frightened deep
With run upon ruin, rout on rout, 995
Confusion worse confounded; and Heaven-gates
Poured out by millions her victorious bands,
Pursuing. I upon my frontiers here
Keep residence; if all I can will serve,
That little which is left so to defend 1000
Encroached on still through our intestine broils⁷
Weakening the scepter of old Night: first Hell,
Your dungeon, stretching far and wide beneath;
Now lately Heaven and Earth,⁸ another world
Hung o'er my realm, linked in a golden chain 1005
To that side Heaven from whence your legions fell.
If that way be your walk, you have not far;

9. A mysterious subdeity, stronger than Fate itself, first invented by Boccaccio. Cf. Shelley's Prometheus Unbound.

1. Border on.

2. Deep pit.

3. On your behalf.

4. I.e., the purpose of my present journey.

5. Chaos is not "monarch" of his realm, but "anarch," i.e., nonruler.

6. Disturbed.

7. I.e., our territory is continually shrinking because of our civil wars ("intestine broils").

8. Our human world and its sky have been carved out of Chaos. The sky is distinguished from "Heaven" as used in line 1006, meaning the abode of the blessed, the Empyrean.

So much the nearer danger. Go, and speed!
Havoc and spoil and ruin are my gain."

He ceased; and Satan stayed not to reply,
But, glad that now his sea should find a shore,
With fresh alacrity and force renewed
Springs upward, like a pyramid of fire,
Into the wild expanse, and through the shock
Of fighting elements, on all sides round
Environed, wins his way; harder beset
And more endangered, than when Argo⁹ passed
Through Bosphorus betwixt the jostling rocks;
Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunned
Charybdis, and by th' other whirlpool steered:
So he with difficulty and labor hard
Moved on: with difficulty and labor he;
But, he once past, soon after when man fell,
Strange alteration! Sin and Death amain,¹
Following his track (such was the will of Heaven),
Paved after him a broad and beaten way
Over the dark abyss, whose boiling gulf
Tamely endured a bridge of wondrous length
From Hell continued reaching th' utmost orb²
Of this frail world; by which the spirits perverse
With easy intercourse pass to and fro
To tempt or punish mortals, except whom
God and good angels guard by special grace.
But now at last the sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of Heaven
Shoots far into the bosom of dim Night
A glimmering dawn. Here Nature first begins
Her farthest verge,³ and Chaos to retire,
As from her outmost works a broken foe
With tumult less and with less hostile din;
That⁴ Satan with less toil, and now with ease
Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light,
And, like a weather-beaten vessel, holds⁵
Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle torn;
Or in the emptier waste, resembling air,
Weighs his spread wings, at leisure to behold
Far off th' empyreal Heaven, extended wide
In circuit, undetermined⁶ square or round,

9. Jason and his fifty Argonauts, sailing through the Bosphorus to the Black Sea in pursuit of the Golden Fleece, had to pass through the Symplegades, or clashing rocks. Ulysses also had a tight squeeze to pass between Scylla and Charybdis, where Italy almost touches Sicily. Charybdis was a whirlpool, but Scylla, the dog-monster who ate alive six of Ulysses' best men, is called by Milton "th' other whirlpool."

1. At full speed, vigorously.

2. The world is surrounded by nine spheres, the whole construction comprising the created universe. The bridge built by Sin and Death ends on the outermost of these spheres.

3. Threshold. The end of Chaos is the beginning of (created) Nature.

4. So that.

5. Makes for.

6. Heaven is so vast that simply by looking at it one cannot tell its shape. Of course it is really round, the circle being an emblem of perfection.

With opal towers and battlements adorned
 Of living sapphire, once his native seat;
 And fast by, hanging in a golden chain,
 This pendant world,⁷ in bigness as a star
 Of smallest magnitude close by the moon.
 Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
 Accurs'd, and in a curs'd hour, he hies.

Book III

The Argument

God sitting on his throne sees Satan flying towards this world, then newly created; shows him to the Son who sat at his right hand; foretells the success of Satan in perverting mankind; clears his own justice and wisdom from all imputation; having created man free and able enough to have withstood his tempter; yet declares his purpose of grace towards him, in regard he fell not of his own malice, as did Satan, but by him seduced. The Son of God renders praises to his Father for the manifestations of his gracious purpose towards man; but God again declares, that Grace cannot be extended towards man without the satisfaction of divine justice; man hath offended the majesty of God by aspiring to godhead, and therefore with all his progeny devoted to death must die, unless some one can be found sufficient to answer for his offense, and undergo his punishment. The Son of God freely offers himself a ransom for man: the Father accepts him, ordains his incarnation, pronounces his exaltation above all names in Heaven and earth; commands all the angels to adore him; they obey, and hymning to their harps in full choir, celebrate the Father and the Son. Meanwhile Satan alights upon the bare convex of this world's outermost orb; where wandering he first finds a place since called the Limbo of Vanity; what persons and things fly up thither; thence comes to the gate of Heaven, described ascending by stairs, and the waters above the firmament that flow about it: His passage thence to the orb of the sun; he finds there Uriel the regent of that orb, but first changes himself into the shape of a meaner angel; and pretending a zealous desire to behold the new creation and man whom God placed here, inquires of him the place of his habitation, and is directed; alights first on mount Niphates.

Hail, holy Light, offspring of Heaven first-born!
 Or of th' Eternal coeternal beam,
 May I express thee unblamed?¹ since God is light,

7. Homer first showed the world as hanging from Heaven by a golden chain (Iliad VIII). As Milton uses the image, it has a symbolic meaning as well; earth is dependent on Heaven. The world which hangs from Heaven is not just our earth, but earth and all its nine spheres, the created cosmos, as described by Ptolemy.

1. Milton feels some hesitation at calling Light coeternal with God himself; his reasons follow.

And never but in unapproachéd light
 Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee, 5
 Bright effluence of bright essence increate!²
 Or hear'st thou rather³ pure ethereal stream,
 Whose fountain who shall tell? Before the sun,
 Before the heavens, thou wert, and at the voice
 Of God, as with a mantle, didst invest⁴ 10
 The rising world of waters dark and deep,
 Won from the void and formless infinite!
 Thee I revisit now with bolder wing,
 Escaped the Stygian pool, though long detained
 In that obscure sojourn, while in my flight, 15
 Through utter and through middle darkness⁵ borne,
 With other notes than to th' Orphean lyre⁶
 I sung of Chaos and eternal Night;
 Taught by the Heavenly Muse⁷ to venture down
 The dark descent, and up to reascend, 20
 Though hard and rare. Thee I revisit safe,
 And feel thy sovereign vital lamp; but thou
 Revisit'st not these eyes, that roll in vain
 To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn;
 So thick a drop serene⁸ hath quenched their orbs, 25
 Or dim suffusion veiled. Yet not the more
 Cease I to wander where the Muses haunt
 Clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill,
 Smit with the love of sacred song;⁹ but chief
 Thee, Sion,¹ and the flowery brooks beneath, 30
 That wash thy hallowed feet, and warbling flow,
 Nightly I visit: nor sometimes forget²
 Those other two equaled with me in fate,³
 So were I equaled with them in renown,
 Blind Thamyris and blind Maconides, 35
 And Tiresias and Phineus, prophets old:⁴
 Then feed on thoughts that voluntary move
 Harmonious numbers; as the wakeful bird⁵
 Sings darkling, and, in shadiest covert hid,
 Tunes her nocturnal note. Thus with the year 40

2. Uncreated, i.e., eternal.

3. I.e., would you rather be called. The construction is a Latinism.

4. Occupy.

5. Hell and Chaos.

6. One of the so-called Orphean Hymns is To Night. But Milton's darkness, being Christian, is deeper and wider.

7. Urania.

8. One medical theory about blindness attributed it to a gutta serena, another to a suffusio nigra.

9. The phrase is Virgilian, "[Musarum] ingenti percussus amore" (Georgics 11.476), but the adjective "sacred" is Milton's own reservation.

1. The mountain of Scriptural inspiration, with its brooks Siloa and Kidron.

2. I.e., and never forget: therefore always remember.

3. Blind like me.

4. Thamyris was a blind Thracian poet, who lived before Homer. "Maconides" is an epithet of Homer, either as a son of Macon or as a native of Maconia. Tiresias was the blind prophet of Thebes (cf. Oedipus Rex); Phineus was another blind prophet and soothsayer (Aeneid III). For Milton poetry and prophesy were intimately joined; blindness of the outer eye rendered more acute the sight of the inner eye; and the very thought of these matters moved him, as he says, spontaneously to verse.

5. The nightingale. "Darkling": at night.

Seasons return; but not to me returns
 Day, or the sweet approach of even or morn,
 Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose,
 Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine;
 But cloud instead and ever-during dark 45
 Surrounds me, from the cheerful ways of men
 Cut off, and, for the book of knowledge fair,
 Presented with a universal blank
 Of Nature's works, to me expunged and rased,⁶
 And wisdom at one entrance quite shut out. 50
 So much the rather thou, Celestial Light,
 Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers
 Irradiate; there plant eyes; all mist from thence Purge and disperse, that I may see and tell
 Of things invisible to mortal sight. 55
 Now had th' Almighty Father from above,
 From the pure empyrean where he sits
 High throned above all height, bent down his eye,
 His own works and their works at once to view:
 About him all the sanctities of Heaven 60
 Stood thick as stars, and from his sight⁷ received
 Beatitude past utterance; on his right
 The radiant image of his glory sat,
 His only Son. On Earth he first beheld
 Our two first parents, yet the only two 65
 Of mankind, in the happy garden placed,
 Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love,
 Uninterrupted joy, unrivaled love,
 In blissful solitude. He then surveyed
 Hell and the gulf between, and Satan there 70
 Coasting the wall of Heaven on this side Night,
 In the dun air sublime,⁸ and ready now
 To stoop, with wearied wings and willing feet,
 On the bare outside of this world, that seemed Firm land embosomed without firmament, 75
 Uncertain which, in ocean or in air.
 Him God beholding from his prospect high,
 Wherein past, present, future, he beholds,
 Thus to his only Son foreseeing spake:
 "Only-begotten Son, seest thou what rage 80
 Transports our adversary? whom no bounds
 Prescribed, no bars of Hell, nor all the chains
 Heaped on him there, nor yet the main abyss
 Wide interrupt,⁹ can hold; so bent he seems
 On desperate revenge, that shall redound 85

6. Shaved off (like a Roman tablet), erased.

7. From sight of him.

8. From the aspect of God's radiance the air is "dun," i.e., dusky; Satan is literally "sublime" in it, i.e., lifted up, aloft. But from where Satan hangs, outside the world's outer shell, he cannot be sure the world and its nine concentric spheres are not a single solid (line 75). The points of view are precisely distinguished.

9. Dividing, in between.

Upon his own rebellious head. And now,
 Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
 Not far off Heaven, in the precincts of light,
 Directly towards the new-created world,
 And man there placed, with purpose to essay 90
 If him by force he can destroy, or, worse,
 By some false guile pervert: and shall pervert;
 For man will hearken to his glozing¹ lies,
 And easily transgress the sole command,
 Sole pledge of his obedience; so will fall 95
 He and his faithless progeny. Whose fault?
 Whose but his own? Ingrate, he had of me
 All he could have; I made him just and right,
 Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall.
 Such I created all th' ethereal powers 100
 And spirits, both them who stood and them who failed:
 Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
 Not free, what proof could they have given sincere²
 Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
 Where only what they needs must do appeared, 105
 Not what they would? What praise could they receive,
 What pleasure I, from such obedience paid,
 When Will and Reason (Reason also is Choice),
 Useless and vain, of freedom both despoiled,
 Made passive both, had served Necessity, 110
 Not me? They, therefore, as to right belonged,
 So were created, nor can justly accuse
 Their Maker, or their making, or their fate,
 As if predestination overruled
 Their will, disposed by absolute decree 115
 Or high foreknowledge. They themselves decreed
 Their own revolt, not I. If I foreknew,
 Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
 Which had no less proved certain unforeknown³
 So without least impulse or shadow of fate, 120
 Or aught by me immutably foreseen,
 They trespass, authors to themselves in all,
 Both what they judge and what they choose; for so
 I formed them free, and free they must remain
 Till they enthrall themselves: I else must change 125
 Their nature, and revoke the high decree
 Unchangeable, eternal, which ordained
 Their freedom; they themselves ordained their fall.
 The first sort⁴ by their own suggestion fell,
 Self-tempted, self-depraved; man falls, deceived 130
 By the other first: man, therefore, shall find grace;

1. Flattering.

2. The delayed modifier is a favorite stylistic device of Milton's. "Sincere" goes with "proof."

3. I.e., if I had not foreknown it.

4. The bad angels, Satan and his crew.

The other, none. In mercy and justice both,⁵
 Through Heaven and Earth, so shall my glory excel;
 But mercy, first and last, shall brightest shine.”
 Thus while God spake ambrosial fragrance filled 135
 All Heaven, and in the blessed spirits elect
 Sense of new joy ineffable diffused.
 Beyond compare the Son of God was seen
 Most glorious; in him all his Father shone
 Substantially expressed;⁶ and in his face 140
 Divine compassion visibly appeared,
 Love without end, and without measure grace;
 Which uttering, thus he to his Father spake:
 “O Father, gracious was that word which closed
 Thy sovereign sentence, that man should find grace;
 For which both Heaven and Earth shall high extol 145
 Thy praises, with th’ innumerable sound
 Of hymns and sacred songs, wherewith thy throne
 Encompassed shall resound thee ever blest.
 For, should man finally be lost, should man, 150
 Thy creature late so loved, thy youngest son,
 Fall circumvented thus by fraud, though joined
 With his own folly? That be from thee far,
 That far be from thee, Father, who art judge
 Of all things made, and judgest only right! 155
 Or shall the adversary⁷ thus obtain
 His end, and frustrate thine? shall he fulfill
 His malice, and thy goodness bring to naught
 Or proud return, though to his heavier doom,
 Yet with revenge accomplished, and to Hell 160
 Draw after him the whole race of mankind,
 By him corrupted? Or wilt thou thyself
 Abolish thy creation, and unmake,
 For him, what for thy glory thou hast made?
 So should thy goodness and thy greatness both 165
 Be questioned and blasphemed without defense.”
 To whom the great Creator thus replied:
 “O Son, in whom my soul hath chief delight,
 Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
 My word, my wisdom, and effectual might, 170
 All hast thou spoken as my thoughts are, all
 As my eternal purpose hath decreed.⁸
 Man shall not quite be lost, but saved who will;
 Yet not of will in him, but grace in me
 Freely vouchsafed: Once more I will renew 175

5. Mercy and justice are two key terms in the poem. Their personifications here are separate: God is justice (he claims to be merciful, but his speech does not have this tone at all), the Son is mercy; but by Book XII Milton intends to show their identity.

6. God himself cannot be directly apprehended, except through the Son.

7. “Satan” in Hebrew means “Adversary.”

8. The Lord’s speech is notably rhythmic and even rhymed.

His lapséd powers, though forfeit, and enthralled
 By sin to foul exorbitant desires:
 Upheld by me, yet once more he shall stand
 On even ground against his mortal foe,
 By me upheld,⁹ that he may know how frail 180
 His fallen condition is, and to me owe
 All his deliverance, and to none but me.
 Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
 Elect above the rest; so is my will:
 The rest shall hear me call, and oft be warned 185
 Their sinful state,¹ and to appease betimes
 Th' incenséd Deity, while offered grace
 Invites; for I will clear their senses dark
 What may suffice,² and soften stony hearts
 To pray, repént, and bring obedience due. 190
 To prayer, repentance, and obedience due,
 Though but endeavored with sincere intent,
 Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut.
 And I will place within them as a guide
 My umpire Conscience; whom if they will hear, 195
 Light after light well used they shall attain,³
 And to the end persisting, safe arrive.
 This my long sufferance, and my day of grace,
 They who neglect and scorn shall never taste;
 But hard be hardened, blind be blinded more, 200
 That they may stumble on, and deeper fall;
 And none but such from mercy I exclude.
 But yet all is not done. Man, disobeying,
 Disloyal, breaks his fealty, and sins
 Against the high supremacy of Heaven, 205
 Affecting⁴ godhead, and so, losing all,
 To expiate his treason hath naught left,
 But, to destruction sacred and devote,⁵
 He with his whole posterity must die;
 Die he or Justice must; unless for him 210
 Some other, able and as willing,⁵ pay
 The rigid satisfaction, death for death.
 Say, heavenly powers, where shall we find such love?
 Which of ye will be mortal, to redeem
 Man's mortal crime,⁶ and just, th' unjust to save? 215
 Dwells in all Heaven charity so dear?"
 He asked, but all the heavenly choir stood mute,⁷

9. Note the ambiguity: the second "by me upheld" (line 180) may modify either "he" (line 178) or "his mortal foe" (line 179). Both divine and hellish energy are ultimately divine.

1. I.e., warned about their sinful state.

2. I.e., as much as need be.

3. By using light well, they will reach even more light, and, in the end, salvation.

4. Pretending to. "Devote": dedicated, given up to.

5. I.e., able to pay, and as willing as he is able.

6. Note that "mortal" means "human" (line 214) but "deadly" (line 215).

7. The silence of the good angels in face of a difficult task parallels that of the devils in the "great consult" (II. 420-26).

And silence was in Heaven: on man's behalf
 Patron or intercessor none appeared,
 Much less that durst upon his own head draw 220
 The deadly forfeiture, and ransom set.
 And now without redemption all mankind
 Must have been lost, adjudged to Death and Hell
 By doom severe, had not the Son of God,
 In whom the fullness dwells of love divine, 225
 His dearest mediation⁸ thus renewed:
 "Father, thy word is passed, man shall find grace;
 And shall Grace not find means, that finds her way,
 The speediest of thy wingéd messengers,
 To visit all thy creatures, and to all 230
 Comes unprevented,⁹ unimplored, unsought?
 Happy for man, so coming! He her aid
 Can never seek, once dead in sins and lost;
 Atonement for himself, or offering meet,
 Indebted and undone, hath none to bring. 235
 Behold me, then: me for him, life for life,
 I offer; on me let thine anger fall;
 Account me man: I for his sake will leave
 Thy bosom, and this glory next to thee
 Freely put off, and for him lastly die 240
 Well pleased; on me let Death wreak all his rage.
 Under his gloomy power I shall not long
 Lie vanquished. Thou hast given me to possess
 Life in myself forever; by thee I live;
 Though now to Death I yield, and am his due, 245
 All that of me can die, yet, that debt paid,
 Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave
 His prey, nor suffer my unspotted soul
 Forever with corruption there to dwell;
 But I shall rise victorious, and subdue 250
 My vanquisher, spoiled of his vaunted spoil.
 Death his death's wound shall then receive, and stoop¹
 Inglorious, of his mortal sting disarmed;
 I through the ample air in triumph high
 Shall lead Hell captive maugre² Hell, and show 255
 The powers of darkness bound. Thou, at the sight
 Pleased, out of Heaven shalt look down and smile,
 While, by thee raised, I ruin³ all my foes,
 Death last, and with his carcass glut the grave;
 Then, with the multitude of my redeemed, 260
 Shall enter Heaven, long absent, and return,
 Father, to see thy face, wherein no cloud
 Of anger shall remain, but peace assured

8. Intercession.

9. Unforested.

1. Be humbled, fall.

2. In spite of (French, malgré). The Son's triumph is represented in a series of fantastic paradoxes—a vanquisher vanquished, a spoiler spoiled, death dead, Hell captured in all Hell's despite.

 3. In the Latin sense, throw down.

And reconciliation: wrath shall be no more
 Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire." 265
 His words here ended; but his meek aspect
 Silent yet spake, and breathed immortal love
 To mortal men, above which only shone
 Filial obedience: as a sacrifice
 Glad to be offered, he attends the will 270
 Of his great Father. Admiration⁴ seized
 All Heaven, what this might mean, and whither tend,
 Wondering; but soon th' Almighty thus replied:
 "O thou in Heaven and Earth the only peace
 Found out for mankind under wrath,⁵ O thou 275
 My sole complacence!⁶ well thou know'st how dear
 To me are all my works; nor man the least,
 Though last created, that for him I spare.
 Thee from my bosom and right hand, to save,
 By losing thee a while, the whole race lost! 280
 Thou, therefore, whom thou only canst redeem,
 Their nature also to thy nature join;⁷
 And be thyself man among men on Earth,
 Made flesh, when time shall be, of virgin seed,
 By wondrous birth; be thou in Adam's room 285
 The head of all mankind, though Adam's son.⁸
 As in him perish all men, so in thee,
 As from a second root, shall be restored
 As many as are restored; without thee, none.
 His crime makes guilty all his sons;⁹ thy merit, 290
 Imputed, shall absolve them who renounce
 Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds,¹
 And live in thee transplanted, and from thee
 Receive new life. So man, as is most just,
 Shall satisfy for man, be judged and die, 295
 And dying rise, and; rising, with him raise
 His brethren, ransomed with his own dear life.
 So heavenly love shall outdo hellish hate,
 Giving to death, and dying to redeem,
 So dearly to redeem, what hellish hate 300
 So easily destroyed, and still destroys
 In those who, when they may, accept not grace.

4. Wonder, curiosity.

5. The Lord is looking to the future, when mankind will be under his wrath.

6. Contentment.

7. I.e., join the nature of those people (mankind) whom you alone can save to your own nature; in other words, "Become a man and suffer the pains of mortality." The antecedent of "whom" is, loosely construed, the "their" which follows it.

8. Adam is, properly, the "Old Adam"; Christ is the Second Adam (there was an old tradition that the Forbidden Tree and the Cross of Christ stood on the same spot). The Son of God, who long antedates the creation of Adam, and who is actually the first created being (III.383), is historical Jesus Christ in one sense, an eternal spiritual principle in another.

9. The intense legalism of the Deity is apparent.

1. I.e., the merit of Christ, imputed to men, frees from original sin those who renounce their own deeds both good and bad and hope to be saved by faith.

Nor shalt thou, by descending to assume Man's nature, lessen or degrade thine own.
 Because thou hast, though throned in highest bliss 305
 Equal to God, and equally enjoying Godlike fruition,² quitted all to save
 A world from utter loss, and hast been found
 By merit more than birthright Son of God,³
 Found worthiest to be so by being good, 310
 Far more than great or high; because in thee
 Love hath abounded more than glory abounds;
 Therefore thy humiliation shall exalt
 With thee thy manhood also to this throne:
 Here shalt thou sit incarnate, here shalt reign 315
 Both God and man, Son both of God and man,
 Anointed⁴ universal King. All power
 I give thee; reign forever, and assume Thy merits; under thee, as Head Supreme,
 Thrones, principedoms, powers, dominions, I reduce: 320
 All knees to thee shall bow of them that bide
 In Heaven, or Earth, or under Earth in Hell.
 When thou, attended gloriously from Heaven,
 Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
 The summoning archangels to proclaim 325
 Thy dread tribunal, forthwith from all winds⁵
 The living, and forthwith the cited dead
 Of all past ages, to the general doom
 Shall hasten; such a peal shall rouse their sleep.
 Then, all thy saints assembled, thou shalt judge 330
 Bad men and angels; they arraigned shall sink
 Beneath thy sentence; Hell, her numbers full,
 Thenceforth shall be forever shut. Meanwhile
 The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
 New Heaven and Earth, wherein the just shall dwell,⁶ 335
 And, after all their tribulations long,
 See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds,
 With Joy and Love triúmphing, and fair Truth.
 Then thou thy regal scepter shalt lay by;
 For regal scepter then no more shall need;⁷ 340
 God shall be all in all. But all ye gods,⁸
 Adore him who, to compass all this, dies;
 Adore the Son, and honor him as me.”
 No sooner had th' Almighty ceased, but all
 The multitude of angels, with a shout 345

2. Godlike pleasures, rewards.

3. An audacious doctrine, that Christ was Son of God by merit. Satan, one notes, was sultan of Hell on the same principle.

4. "The Anointed," in Hebrew, is the Messiah.

5. From all directions. "Cited": summoned.

6. The burning of the earth is based on II Peter iii. 12, 13.

7. Be needed.

8. In addressing the angels as gods, the Lord is merely indicating their share in his divinity; the word is not literal.

Loud as from numbers without number, sweet
 As from blest voices, uttering joy, Heaven rung⁹
 With jubilee, and loud hosannas filled
 Th' eternal regions. Lowly reverent
 Towards either throne¹ they bow, and to the ground 350
 With solemn adoration down they cast
 Their crowns, inwove with amarant² and gold;
 Immortal amarant, a flower which once
 In Paradise, fast by the Tree of Life,
 Began to bloom, but soon for man's offense 355
 To Heaven removed, where first it grew, there grows
 And flowers aloft, shading the Fount of Life,
 And where the River of Bliss through midst of Heaven
 Rolls o'er Elysian³ flowers her amber stream.
 With these, that never fade, the spirits clect 360
 Bind their resplendent locks, enwreathed with beams.
 Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
 Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
 Empurpled with celestial roses smiled.
 Then, crowned again, their golden harps they took, 365
 Harps ever tuned, that glittering by their side
 Like quivers hung; and with preamble sweet
 Of charming symphony they introduce
 Their sacred song, and waken raptures high:
 No voice exempt,⁴ no voice but well could join 370
 Melodious part; such concord is in Heaven.
 Thee, Father, first they sung, Omnipotent,
 Immutable, Immortal, Infinite,⁵
 Eternal King; thee, Author of all being,
 Fountain of light, thyself invisible 375
 Amidst the glorious brightness where thou sitt'st
 Throned inaccessible, but when thou shad'st
 The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud
 Drawn round about thee like a radiant shrine
 Dark with excessive bright thy skirts appear,⁶ 380
 Yet dazzle Heaven, that brightest seraphim
 Approach not, but with both wings veil their eyes.
 Thee next they sang, of all creation first,

9. "Multitude" (line 345) is subject of the sentence, "rung" the verb, and "Heaven" the object.

1. Those of God and the Son.

2. Or "amaranth"; in Greek, "unwithering"—an unfading flower and hence a type of immortality, which could not continue on earth after man became subject to death.

3. Milton draws freely, and with no sense of incongruity, on pagan properties for his Christian Heaven. "Amber": not "yellow," but "clear." Milton's epithets are not always visually strong.

4. Abstaining.

5. Joshua Sylvester, in translating the long, pedestrian poem of Du Bartas on the creation, makes use of this line. It is the only example, and not a very striking one, of Milton's paralleling an English predecessor for ten consecutive syllables.

6. In this hymn, for the first time, we get a sense of the majesty and mystery of the Godhead; hitherto, he has been rather querulous and legalistic.

Begotten Son, divine similitude,
 In whose conspicuous countenance, without cloud 385
 Made visible, th' Almighty Father shines,
 Whom else⁷ no creature can behold: on thee
 Impressed th' effulgence of his glory abides;
 Transfused on thee his ample spirit rests.
 He Heaven of Heavens, and all the powers therein, 390
 By thee created; and by thee threw down
 Th' aspiring dominations.⁸ Thou that day
 Thy Father's dreadful thunder didst not spare,
 Nor stop thy flaming chariot wheels, that shook
 Heaven's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks 395
 Thou drov'st of warring angels disarrayed.
 Back from pursuit, thy powers with loud acclaim
 Thee only extolled, Son of thy Father's might,
 To execute fierce vengeance on his foes.
 Not so on man: him, through their malice fallen, 400
 Father of mercy and grace, thou didst not doom
 So strictly, but much more to pity incline.
 No sooner did thy dear and only Son
 Perceive thee purposed not to doom frail man
 So strictly, but much more to pity inclined,⁹ 405
 He, to appease thy wrath, and end the strife
 Of mercy and justice in thy face discerned,
 Regardless of the bliss wherein he sat
 Second to thee, offered himself to die
 For man's offense. O unexampled love! 410
 Love nowhere to be found less than divine!
 Hail, Son of God, Savior of men! Thy name
 Shall be the copious matter of my¹ song
 Henceforth, and never shall my harp thy praise
 Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin! 415
 Thus they in Heaven, above the starry sphere,
 Their happy hours in joy and hymning spent.
 Meanwhile, upon the firm opacous globe
 Of this round world, whose first convex divides
 The luminous inferior orbs, enclosed 420
 From chaos and th' inroad of darkness old,
 Satan alighted walks.² A globe far off
 It seemed; now seems a boundless continent,

7. Except for whom (if it were not for the Son, no creature could see God).

8. I.e., the rebel angels.

9. A "than" or "but" is understood at the end of line 405. The repetition (lines 402, 405) suggests the choral nature of the psalm. Note in 407 the re-emphasis on a conflict of mercy and justice.

1. Either the angels are singing as a single chorus, or Milton wishes to associate himself with them; possibly both. The change of pronoun is deliberate and striking.

2. Satan is not on the earth's surface but on the outermost of the nine concentric spheres that make up the created cosmos. This sphere is "opacous" (opaque) by contrast with the inner eight (containing seven planets and the fixed stars), which are crystalline and transparent.

Dark, waste, and wild, under the frown of night
 Starless exposed, and ever-threatening storms 425
 Of chaos blustering round, inclement sky,
 Save on that side which from the wall of Heaven,
 Though distant far, some small reflection gains
 Of glimmering air less vexed with tempest loud.
 Here walked the fiend at large in spacious field. 430
 As when a vulture, on Imaus bred,
 Whose snowy ridge the roving Tartar bounds,³
 Dislodging from a region scarce of prey,
 To gorge the flesh of lambs or veanling⁴ kids
 On hills where flocks are fed, flies toward the springs 435
 Of Ganges or Hydaspes, Indian streams,
 But in his way lights on the barren plains
 Of Sericana, where Chineses drive
 With sails and wind their cany wagons light;⁵
 So, on this windy sea of land, the fiend 440
 Walked up and down alone, bent on his prey:
 Alone, for other creature in this place,
 Living or lifeless, to be found was none;—
 None yet; but store hereafter from the earth
 Up hither like aerial vapors flew 445
 Of all things transitory and vain, when sin
 With vanity had filled the works of men—
 Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
 Built their fond hopes of glory or lasting fame,
 Or happiness in this or th' other life.⁶ 450
 All who have their reward on earth, the fruits
 Of painful superstition and blind zeal,
 Naught seeking but the praise of men, here find
 Fit retribution, empty as their deeds;
 All th' unaccomplished works of nature's hand, 455
 Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly⁷ mixed,
 Dissolved on earth, fleet hither, and in vain,
 Till final dissolution, wander here—
 Not in the neighboring moon, as some have dreamed:
 'Those argent fields more likely habitants,'⁸ 460

3. Imaus, a ridge of mountains beyond the modern Himalayas, is described by Pliny (Natural History, VI.17), and shown in Mercator's Atlas, as running north through Asia from modern Afghanistan to the Arctic Circle.

4. Newborn.

5. Both the Ganges and Hydaspes (a tributary of the river Indus) rise from the mountains of northern India; Sericana is an area (known only vaguely to Milton through the Pilgrimage of Purchas the traveler) in what is now Sinkiang province, in China. Milton got his memory of wind-driven land-carts from Peter Heylyn's Cosmography.

6. Milton's Paradise of Fools (named in line 496) was probably inspired by Ariosto's equivalent valley on the moon (Orlando Furioso, Canto 34; see below, line 459); it serves much the same function as Dante's Limbo, to dispose of those who deserve neither salvation nor damnation. But, instead of indifferents, Milton's region is reserved for deluded victims of misplaced devotion, chiefly Roman Catholics.

7. Against "kind," against their own natures.

8. Argent: silver. The moon Milton imagines, though only briefly, as a kind of middle Paradise.

Translated saints, or middle spirits hold,
 Betwixt th' angelical and human kind.
 Hither, of ill-joined sons and daughters born,
 First from the ancient world those giants came,
 With many a vain exploit, though then renowned:⁹ 465
 The builders next of Babel on the plain
 Of Sennaar,¹ and still with vain design
 New Babels, had they wherewithal, would build:
 Others came single; he who, to be deemed
 A god, leaped fondly into Etna flames, 470
 Empedocles, and he who, to enjoy
 Plato's Elysium, leaped into the sea,
 Cleombrotus;² and many more, too long,
 Embryos and idiots, eremites and friars,
 White, black, and gray, with all their trumpery.³ 475
 Here pilgrims roam, that strayed so far to seek
 In Golgotha him dead who lives in Heaven;
 And they who, to be sure of paradise,
 Dying put on the weeds of Dominic,
 Or in Franciscan think to pass disguised.⁴ 480
 They pass the planets seven, and pass the fixed,
 And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
 The trepidation talked, and that first moved;⁵
 And now Saint Peter at heaven's wicket seems
 To wait them with his keys, and now at foot 485
 Of heaven's ascent they lift their feet, when, lo!
 A violent cross wind from either coast
 Blows them transverse ten thousand leagues awry,
 Into the devious air. Then might ye see
 Cows, hoods, and habits, with their wearers, tossed 490
 And fluttered into rags; then relics, beads,
 Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,⁶
 The sport of winds: all these, upwhirled aloft,
 Fly o'er the backside of the world far off

9. The "giants in the earth," born of unnatural marriages between the sons of God and the daughters of men, are creatures "unkindly mixed," therefore sent to the Paradise of Fools, "though then renowned," as Genesis vi.4 tells us.

1. Shinär, the plain of Babel, as in Genesis xi. 2-9. Babel for Milton is an emblem of human pride and folly

2. Both Empedocles and Cleombrotus carried piety to the point of folly and suicide. Hell is reserved for the wilfully malicious, the Paradise of Fools for the merely misguided.

3. Unnatural mixtures produce embryos and idiots; Milton adds to them hermits and friars (the white are Carmelites, the black Dominicans, and the gray Franciscans); he thinks they exemplify unnatural piety, frustrated by its very nature.

4. Pilgrims also are unnatural in their piety, since they worship the relic and forget the spirit; so are those who try to trick God into granting them salvation by wearing religious garb on their deathbeds.

5. Milton follows their souls through the spheres of the seven then-known planets, that of the fixed stars, and through the outermost sphere responsible for what astronomers call "the trepidation," a periodic corrective shudder of the cosmos. This is, or is right next to, the prime mover, or primum mobile—the next step seems to be the pearly gates themselves.

6. All that Milton considered the "trumpery", that is, the exterior and legal manifestations, of ecclesiasticism, is here cast aside as vanity. Milton certainly means "backside" (line 494) to have its vulgar connotation.

Into a limbo large and broad, since called 495
 The Paradise of Fools; to few unknown
 Long after, now unpeopled and untrod.

All this dark globe the fiend found as he passed;
 And long he wandered, till at last a gleam
 Of dawning light turned thitherward in haste 500

His traveled steps. Far distant he descries,
 Ascending by degrees magnificent
 Up the wall of Heaven, a structure high;

At top whereof, but far more rich, appeared
 The work as of a kingly palace-gate, 505
 With frontispiece⁷ of diamond and gold

Embellished; thick with sparkling orient gems
 The portal shone, inimitable on earth
 By model, or by shading pencil drawn.

The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw 510
 Angels ascending and descending, bands
 Of guardians bright, when he from Esau fled

To Padan-Aram, in the field of Luz
 Dreaming by night under the open sky,
 And waking cried, This is the gate of Heaven. 515

Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood
 There always, but drawn up to heaven sometimes
 Viewless;⁸ and underneath a bright sea flowed

Of jasper, or of liquid pearl, whereon
 Who after came from earth sailing arrived 520
 Wafted by angels, or flew o'er the lake

Rapt in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds.
 The stairs were then let down, whether to dare
 The fiend by easy ascent, or aggravate

His sad exclusion from the doors of bliss.⁹ 525
 Direct against which opened from beneath,
 Just o'er the blissful seat of paradise,

A passage down to th' earth—a passage wide;
 Wider by far than that of after-times
 Over Mount Sion, and, though that were large, 530

Over the promised land to God so dear,
 By which, to visit oft those happy tribes,
 On high behests his angels to and fro
 Passed frequent,¹ and his eye with choice regard

7. Façade.

8. Invisible. The story of Jacob's vision is summarized from Genesis xxviii.1-19. The stairs of the ladder were meant "mysteriously"—each represented a stage of spiritual growth.

9. In either case, Milton implies, heavenly authorities were aware of Satan's approach.

1. The crystalline spheres would be impenetrable if there weren't passages, or holes, in them, through which heavenly—and, alas, diabolic—spirits could make their way. The visiting angels "act as" his eye and "keep a" close regard on the chosen people. Cf., below, lines 650 and 660.

From Paneas, the fount of Jordan's flood, 535
 To Beersaba, where the holy land
 Borders on Egypt and the Arabian shore.²
 So wide the opening seemed, where bounds were set
 To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave.
 Satan from hence, now on the lower stair, 540
 That scaled by steps of gold to heaven-gate,
 Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
 Of all this world at once. As when a scout,
 Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
 All night, at last by break of cheerful dawn 545
 Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill,
 Which to his eye discovers unaware
 The goodly prospect of some foreign land
 First seen, or some renowned metropolis
 With glistering spires and pinnacles adorned, 550
 Which now the rising sun gilds with his beams;
 Such wonder seized, though after heaven seen,
 The spirit malign, but much more envy seized,
 At sight of all this world beheld so fair.
 Round he surveys (and well might, where he stood 555
 So high above the circling canopy
 Of night's extended shade) from eastern point
 Of Libra to the fleecy star that bears
 Andromeda far off Atlantic seas³
 Beyond th' horizon; then from pole to pole 560
 He views in breadth,—and, without longer pause,
 Down right into the world's first region throws
 His flight precipitant, and winds with ease
 Through the pure marble air his oblique way⁴
 Amongst innumerable stars, that shone 565
 Stars distant, but nigh-hand seemed other worlds.
 Or other worlds they seemed, or happy isles,
 Like those Hesperian gardens famed of old,
 Fortunate fields, and groves, and flowery vales;⁵
 Thrice happy isles! But who dwelt happy there 570
 He stayed not to inquire: above them all
 The golden sun, in splendor likest heaven,
 Allured his eye. Thither his course he bends,
 Through the calm firmament (but up or down,
 By center or eccentric, hard to tell, 575

2. From Paneas (or Dan) in northern Palestine to Beersaba, or Beersheba, near the Egyptian border—the whole land.

3. In the zodiac, Libra or the Scales are diametrically opposite the Ram ("the fleecy star"), which seems to carry the constellation Andromeda on its back.

4. "Marble" derives from the Greek word for "shining", but there's also a sense of solidity in the adjective to contrast with Satan's "oblique" approach.

5. The gardens of the Hesperides and the "fortunate isles" of Greek mythology lay far out in the Atlantic, almost like separate miniature worlds.

Or longitude)⁶ where the great luminary,
 Aloof the vulgar constellations thick,
 That from his lordly eye keep distance due,
 Dispenses light from far. They, as they move
 Their starry dance in numbers that compute 580
 Days, months, and years, towards his all-cheering lamp
 Turn swift their various motions, or are turned
 By his magnetic beam, that gently warms
 The universe, and to each inward part
 With gentle penetration, though unseen, 585
 Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep;⁷
 So wondrously was set his station bright.
 There lands the fiend, a spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucent orb
 Through his glazed optic tube yet never saw.⁸ 590
 The place he found beyond expression bright,
 Compared with aught on earth,⁹ metal or stone—
 Not all parts like, but all alike informed
 With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire.
 If metal, part seemed gold, part silver clear; 595
 If stone, carbuncle most or chrysolite,
 Ruby or topaz, to the twelve that shone
 In Aaron's breast-plate,¹ and a stone besides,
 Imagined rather oft than elsewhere seen—
 That stone, or like to that, which here below 600
 Philosophers in vain so long have sought;
 In vain, though by their powerful art they bind
 Volatile Hermes, and call up unbound
 In various shapes old Proteus from the sea,
 Drained through a limbec to his native form.² 605
 What wonder then if fields and regions here
 Breathe forth elixir pure, and rivers run
 Potable gold, when, with one virtuous touch,
 Th' arch-chemic sun, so far from us remote,

6. Milton is cautious about saying whether the sun or the earth is at the center of the created cosmos. Like any educated man of his day, he knew that the earth goes around the sun, not vice versa, but poetically it was better for him to leave the option open.

7. "Virtue" in the sense of "influence," "strength": it was commonly thought that the "influence" of the sun caused seeds of gold to grow in the depths of the earth (see below, lines 608–612).

8. Galileo had discovered sun-spots in 1609; the possibility that the telescope might lead to an actual sighting of devils or angels was not yet extinct in Milton's day.

9. Strictly speaking, Satan has not been to the earth yet, but Milton cannot lose sight of the reader, who's been nowhere else.

1. Exodus xxviii lists the twelve precious stones in the breastplate of Aaron, the high-priest; "to" means "comparable to" or "to the number of."

2. The philosopher's stone had been sought by "binding" or fixing mercury ("volatile Hermes," i.e., quicksilver) or calling up Proteus to catch him in a limbec (alembic) in order to reduce both changeable deities to their natural forms. "Proteus" here stands for the gold which alchemists supposed to be hidden, in dilute form, within all other matter; their art aimed at extracting it.

Produces, with terrestrial humor mixed, 610
 Here in the dark so many precious things
 Of color glorious and effect so rare?³
 Here matter new to gaze the devil met
 Undazzled. Far and wide his eye commands;
 For sight no obstacle found here, nor shade, 615
 But all sunshine, as when his beams at noon
 Culminate from th' equator, as⁴ they now
 Shot upward still direct, whence no way round
 Shadow from body opaque can fall; and the air,
 Nowhere so clear, sharpened his visual ray 620
 To objects distant far, whereby he soon
 Saw within ken a glorious angel stand,
 The same whom John saw also in the sun.⁵
 His back was turned, but not his brightness hid;
 Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar⁶ 625
 Circled his head, nor less his locks behind
 Illustrious⁷ on his shoulders fledged with wings
 Lay waving round: on some great charge employed
 He seemed, or fixed in cogitation deep.
 Glad was the spirit impure, as now in hope 630
 To find who might direct his wandering flight
 To paradise, the happy seat of man,
 His journey's end, and our beginning woe.
 But first he casts to change his proper shape,
 Which else might work him danger or delay: 635
 And now a stripling cherub he appears,
 Not of the prime, yet such as in his face
 Youth smiled celestial, and to every limb
 Suitable grace diffused; so well he feigned.
 Under a coronet his flowing hair 640
 In curls on either cheek played; wings he wore
 Of many a colored plume sprinkled with gold,
 His habit fit for speed succinct,⁸ and held
 Before his decent steps a silver wand.
 He drew not nigh unheard; the angel bright, 645
 Ere he drew nigh, his radiant visage turned,
 Admonished by his ear, and straight was known
 Th' archangel Uriel—one of the seven
 Who in God's presence, nearest to his throne,

3. Milton argues that if the sun can cause gold to grow in mines, it must be itself full of "virtue" (power) to produce chemical changes—it is the "arch-chemic."

4. The sense of the passage will be clearer if for this second "as" we read "so." Satan, standing in the sun itself, can neither cast a shadow nor see one.

5. John of Patmos, author of the book of Revelation, saw an angel standing in the sun (xix.17).

6. Tiara, crown.

7. Lustrous and illuminated. "Fledged": fledged, feathered.

8. From the Latin succingere, "to draw in, tuck up." Satan, in disguise, wears some sort of light cloak that can be gathered up to leave his legs (and wings) free for speed.

Stand ready at command, and are his eyes 650
 That run through all the heavens, or down to th' earth
 Bear his swift errands over moist and dry,
 O'er sea and land. Him Satan thus accosts:—
 "Uriel! for thou of those seven spirits that stand
 In sight of God's high throne, gloriously bright, 655
 The first art wont his great authentic will Interpreter through highest heaven to bring,
 Where all his sons thy embassy attend,
 And here art likeliest by supreme decree
 Like honor to obtain, and as his eye 660
 To visit oft this new creation round—
 Unspeakable desire to see and know
 All these his wondrous works, but chiefly man,
 His chief delight and favor, him for whom
 All these his works so wondrous he ordained, 665
 Hath brought me from the choirs of cherubim⁹
 Alone thus wandering. Brightest seraph, tell
 In which of all these shining orbs hath man
 His fixed seat—or fixed seat hath none,
 But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell— 670
 That I may find him, and with secret gaze
 Or open admiration him behold
 On whom the great creator hath bestowed
 Worlds, and on whom hath all these graces poured;
 That both in him and all things, as is meet, 675
 The universal maker we may praise;
 Who justly hath driven out his rebel foes
 To deepest hell, and, to repair that loss,
 Created this new happy race of men
 To serve him better: wise are all his ways!" 680
 So spake the false dissembler unperceived;
 For neither man nor angel can discern
 Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
 Invisible, except to God alone,
 By his permissive will, through Heaven and earth;¹ 685
 And oft, though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
 At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
 Resigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill.
 Where no ill seems: which now for once beguiled
 Uriel, though regent of the sun, and held 690
 The sharpest-sighted spirit of all in heaven;
 Who to the fraudulent imposter foul,

9. Uriel is one of the seraphim, the first order of angelic beings; cherubim would be of the second rank.

1. God has two wills—one active, by which he does, perforce, only good things, the other permissive, by which he allows things to take their course, whether for good or for evil.

In his uprightness, answer thus returned:—

“Fair angel, thy desire, which tends to know

The works of God, thereby to glorify 695

The great work-master, leads to no excess

That reaches blame, but rather merits praise

The more it seems excess, that led thee hither

From thy empyreal mansion thus alone,

To witness with thine eyes what some perhaps, 700

Contented with report, hear only in Heaven:

For wonderful indeed are all his works,

Pleasant to know, and worthiest to be all

Had in remembrance always with delight!

But what created mind can comprehend 705

Their number, or the wisdom infinite

That brought them forth, but hid their causes deep?

I saw when, at his word, the formless mass,

This world's material mould, came to a heap:

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar 710

Stood ruled, stood vast infinitude confined;

Till, at his second bidding, darkness fled,

Light shone, and order from disorder sprung.

Swift to their several quarters hasted then

The cumbrous elements—earth, flood, air, fire; 715

And this ethereal quintessence of Heaven

Flew upward, spirited² with various forms,

That rolled orbicular, and turned to stars

Numberless, as thou seest, and how they move:

Each had his place appointed, each his course; 720

The rest in circuit walls this universe.³

Look downward on that globe, whose hither side

With light from hence, though but reflected, shines:

That place is earth, the seat of man; that light

His day, which else, as th' other hemisphere, 725

Night would invade, but there the neighboring moon

(So call that opposite fair star) her aid

Timely interposes and, her monthly round

Still ending, still renewing, through mid-heaven,

With borrowed light her countenance triform⁴ 730

Hence fills and empties, to enlighten th' earth,

And in her pale dominion checks the night.

That spot to which I point is paradise,

Adam's abode; those lofty shades his bower.

2. Informed with spiritual energy.

3. The rest of the stars became fixed in the outermost sphere, that which walls off the created universe from the immensity of Chaos outside.

4. Though the moon's cycle is divided into quarters, there are, strictly, only three of them: crescent, full, and waning (the dark of the moon, when it's invisible, is the fourth quarter); in addition, the moon has three classical names—Luna, Diana, and Hecate.

Thy way thou canst not miss; me mine requires." 735
 Thus said, he turned; and Satan, bowing low,
 As to superior spirits is wont in Heaven,
 Where honor due and reverence none neglects,
 Took leave, and toward the coast of earth beneath,
 Down from th' ecliptic, sped with hoped success, 740
 Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel,
 Nor stayed, till on Niphates⁵ top he lights.

From Book IV

[Satan's Entry into Paradise]

O for that warning voice, which he who saw
 Th' Apocalypse heard cry in Heaven aloud,
 Then when the dragon, put to second rout,
 Came furious down to be revenged on men,
 Woe to the inhabitants on Earth!¹ that now; 5
 While time was, our first parents had been warned
 The coming of their secret foe, and scaped,
 Haply so scaped, his mortal snare!² For now
 Satan, now first inflamed with rage, came down,
 The tempter, ere th' accuser; of mankind, 10
 To wreak on innocent frail man his loss
 Of that first battle, and his flight to hell.
 Yet not rejoicing in his speed, though bold
 Far off and fearless, nor with cause to boast,
 Begins his dire attempt; which, nigh the birth 15
 Now rolling, boils in his tumultuous breast,
 And like a devilish engine back recoils
 Upon himself. Horror and doubt distract
 His troubled thoughts, and from the bottom stir
 The Hell within him; for within him Hell 20
 He brings, and round about him, nor from Hell
 One step, no more than from himself, can fly
 By change of place.³ Now conscience wakes despair
 That slumbered; wakes the bitter memory
 Of what he was, what is, and what must be 25
 Worse; of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue.

5. Mt. Niphates lies in the northwest corner of modern Iran, not far from the Turkish border—it was an ideal spot from which to spy on Paradise, which lay in the plain below, between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers.

1. John of Patmos, in Revelation xii, describes a war in heaven between dragon and angels, in the course of which a voice cries from heaven, "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea!"

2. "Haply": by good luck, happily. "Mortal": deadly. "First" in line 9 refers back to "second" in line 3; Milton wants us to remember that his story was the first of all the Bible stories, and is, as it were, their root.

3. Satan's proud statement that "the mind is its own place" (I, 254) finds here its bitter ironic echo.

Sometimes towards Eden, which now in his view
 Lay pleasant, his grieved look he fixes sad;
 Sometimes towards heaven and the full-blazing sun,
 Which now sat high in his meridian tower:⁴ 30
 Then, much revolving, thus in sighs began:—
 “O thou that, with surpassing glory crowned,
 Look'st from thy sole dominion like the god
 Of this new world—at whose sight all the stars
 Hide their diminished heads—to thee I call, 35
 But with no friendly voice, and add thy name,
 O sun, to tell thee how I hate thy beams,
 That bring to my remembrance from what state
 I fell, how glorious once above thy sphere,
 Till pride and worse ambition threw me down, 40
 Warring in Heaven against Heaven's matchless king!
 Ah, wherefore? He deserved no such return
 From me, whom he created what I was
 In that bright eminence, and with his good
 Upbraided none;⁵ nor was his service hard. 45
 What could be less than to afford him praise,
 The easiest recompense, and pay him thanks,
 How due! Yet all his good proved ill in me,
 And wrought but malice. Lifted up so high,
 I disdain'd⁶ subjection, and thought one step higher 50
 Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
 The debt immense of endless gratitude,
 So burdensome, still paying, still to owe;
 Forgetful what from him I still received;
 And understood not that a grateful mind 55
 By owing owes not, but still pays, at once
 Indebted and discharged—what burden then?
 Oh, had his powerful destiny ordained
 Me some inferior angel, I had stood
 Then happy; no unbounded hope had raised
 Ambition. Yet why not? Some other power 60
 As great might have aspired, and me, though mean,
 Drawn to his part. But other powers as great Fell not, but stand unshaken, from within
 Or from without to all temptations armed! 65
 Hadst thou⁷ the same free will and power to stand?
 Thou hadst. Whom hast thou then, or what, to accuse,
 But Heaven's free love dealt equally to all?

4. Midday, the height of noon. Milton's nephew Edward Phillips tells us that the speech which follows was the first part of the poem that existed, when Milton still thought of making it into the drama of “Adam Unparadised.”

5. Demanded no return for his benefits; the phrase echoes James i.5.

6. Disdained. “Quit”: acquit, pay off.

7. Satan addresses himself directly, as Adam will do under parallel circumstances in Book X, line 758.

Be then his love accursed, since, love or hate,
 To me alike it deals eternal woe. 70
 Nay, cursed be thou; since against his thy will Chose freely what it now so justly rues.
 Me miserable!⁸ which way shall I fly
 Infinite wrath and infinite despair?
 Which way I fly is Hell; myself am Hell; 75
 And, in the lowest deep, a lower deep
 Still threatening to devour me opens wide,
 To which the Hell I suffer seems a Heaven.
 O, then, at last relent! Is there no place
 Left for repentance, none for pardon left? 80
 None left but by submission; and that word
 Disdain forbids me, and my dread of shame
 Among the spirits beneath, whom I seduced
 With other promises and other vaunts
 Than to submit, boasting I could subdue 85
 Th' omnipotent. Ay me! they little know
 How dearly I abide that boast so vain,
 Under what torments inwardly I groan.
 While they adore me on the throne of Hell,
 With diadem and scepter high advanced, 90
 The lower still I fall, only supreme
 In misery: such joy ambition finds!
 But say I could repent, and could obtain,
 By act of grace,⁹ my former state, how soon
 Would height-recall high thoughts, how soon unsay 95
 What feigned submission swore! Ease would recant
 Vows made in pain, as violent and void
 For never can true reconciliation grow
 Where wounds of deadly hate have pierced so deep;
 Which would but lead me to a worse relapse 100
 And heavier fall: so should I purchase dear
 Short intermission, bought with double smart.
 This knows my punisher; therefore as far
 From granting he, as I from begging, peace.
 All hope excluded thus, behold, instead 105
 Of us, outcast, exiled, his new delight,
 Mankind, created, and for him this world!
 So farewell hope, and, with hope, farewell fear,
 Farewell remorse! All good to me is lost;
 Evil, be thou my good: by thee at least 110
 Divided empire with Heaven's king I hold,
 By thee, and more than half perhaps will reign;

8. "Me miserable!": an exact Latinism, "me miserum!" "Myself am hell" makes brilliantly clear what can be meant by

"The mind is its own place," I.254.

9. The correct technical term for a formal pardon is an "act of grace."

As man ere long, and this new world, shall know."

Thus while he spake, each passion dimmed his face,
Thrice changed with pale—ire, envy, and despair; 115
Which marred his borrowed visage, and betrayed
Him counterfeit, if any eye beheld:

For heavenly minds from such distempers foul
Are ever clear. Whereof he soon aware
Each perturbation smoothed with outward calm, 120
Artificer of fraud; and was the first
That practiced falsehood under saintly show,
Deep malice to conceal, couched with revenge:
Yet not enough had practiced to deceive
Uriel, once warned; whose eye pursued him down 125
The way he went, and on th' Assyrian mount
Saw him disfigured, more than could befall
Spirit of happy sort: his gestures fierce
He marked and mad demeanor, then alone,
As he supposed, all unobserved, unseen. 130

So on he fares, and to the border comes.
Of Eden, where delicious Paradise,
Now nearer, crowns with her enclosure green,
As with a rural mound, the champaign¹ head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides 135
With thicket overgrown, grotesque² and wild,
Access denied; and overhead up grew
Insuperable height of loftiest shade,
Cedar, and pine, and fir, and branching palm,
A sylvan scene, and, as the ranks ascend 140
Shade above shade, a woody theater³
Of stateliest view. Yet higher than their tops
The verdurous wall of Paradise up sprung;
Which to our general sire⁴ gave prospect large
Into his nether empire neighboring round. 145
And higher than that wall a circling row
Of goodliest trees, laden with fairest fruit,
Blossoms and fruits at once of golden hue,
Appeared, with gay enameled colors mixed;
On which the sun more glad impressed his beams 150
Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,⁵
When God hath showered the earth: so lovely seemed That landscape. And of pure now purer air⁶

1. From French champs, open countryside. Paradise is an open garden on top of a hill straddling a river in the east of Eden. (YACALLING) (2017)

2. One of the earliest uses of the word in English to mean "romantic" or "picturesque."

3. As if in a Greek amphitheater, the trees are set row on row.

4. Adam.

5. The rainbow: There is a thick wall of trees around Paradise, which "access denied"; then above them, the shaggy sides of Paradise itself ("the verdurous wall"), and above it the garden of fruit trees.

6. After breathing pure air, Satan now breathes even purer.

Meets his approach, and to the heart inspires
 Vernal delight and joy, able to drive⁷ 153
 All sadness but despair. Now gentle gales,
 Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
 Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
 Those balmy spoils. As when to them who sail
 Beyond the Cape of Hope, and now are past 160
 Mozambic, off at sea northeast winds blow
 Sabeian odors from the spicy shore
 Of Araby the Blest,⁸ with such delay
 Well pleased they slack their course, and many a league
 Cheered with the grateful smell old Occan smiles; 165
 So entertained those odorous sweets the fiend
 Who came their bane, though with them better pleased
 Than Asmodæus with the fishy fume
 That drove him, though enamored, from the spouse
 Of Tobit's son,⁹ and with a vengeance sent 170
 From Media post to Egypt, there fast bound.
 Now to th' ascent of that steep savage¹ hill
 Satan had journeyed on, pensive and slow;
 But further way found none; so thick entwined,
 As one continued brake, the undergrowth 175
 Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplexed
 All path of man or beast that passed that way.
 One gate there only was, and that looked east
 On th' other side. Which when th' arch-felon saw,
 Due entrance he disdained, and, in contempt, 180
 At one slight bound high overlaped all bound²
 Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. As when a prowling wolf,
 Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,
 Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve, 185
 In hurdled cotes³ amid the field secure,
 Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold;
 Or as a thief, bent to unhoard the cash
 Of some rich burgher, whose substantial doors,
 Cross-barred and bolted fast, fear no assault, 190
 In at the window climbs, or o'er the tiles;

7. Scatter.

8. Coasting up East Africa after doubling the Cape of Good Hope, Milton supposes off "Mozambic" (Mozambique) one might meet "Sabeian" (i.e., as from Sheba) odors coming from "Araby the Blest" (Arabia Felix). This is the fantasy of a man who learned his geography from medieval atlases and Diodorus Siculus, for the distance between Mozambique and Arabia is close to 2,000 miles.

9. Milton retells briefly here the story of Tobias, Tobit's son, who married Sara and was saved from the fate of her seven previous husbands by the advice of Raphael, who showed him how to make a fishy smell that would drive away the devil Asmodeus. See the Book of Tobit among the Apocrypha.

1. Wooded, entangled (from Latin, sil-vaticus, through Italian selvaggio, andFrench sauvage).

2. Satan enters Paradise, not only illegally, but with a contemptuous pun.

3. Pens made of woven reeds.

So clomb⁴ this first grand thief into God's fold:
 So since into his church lewd hirelings⁵ climb.
 Thence up he flew, and on the Tree of Life,
 The middle tree and highest there that grew, 195
 Sat like a cormorant; yet not true life
 Thereby regained, but sat devising death
 To them who lived; nor on the virtue thought
 Of that life-giving plant, but only used
 For prospect,⁶ what, well used, had been the pledge 200
 Of immortality. So little knows
 Any, but God alone, to value right
 The good before him, but perverts best things
 To worst abuse, or to their meanest use.
 Beneath him, with new wonder, now he views, 205
 To all delight of human sense exposed,
 In narrow room Nature's whole wealth; yea, more,
 A Heaven on Earth; for blissful Paradise
 Of God the garden was, by him in the east
 Of Eden planted. Eden stretched her line 210
 From Auran eastward to the royal towers
 Of great Seleucia, built by Grecian kings,
 Or where the sons of Eden long before
 Dwelt in Telassar.⁷ In this pleasant soil
 His far more pleasant garden God ordained. 215
 Out of the fertile ground he caused to grow
 All trees of noblest kind for sight, smell, taste;
 And all amid them stood the Tree of Life,
 High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
 Of vegetable gold; and next to life, 220
 Our death, the Tree of Knowledge, grew fast by—
 Knowledge of good, bought dear by knowing ill.
 Southward through Eden went a river large;
 Nor changed his course, but through the shaggy hill
 Passed underneath engulfed; for God had thrown 225
 That mountain, as his garden-mold,⁸ high raised
 Upon the rapid current, which, through veins
 Of porous earth with kindly⁹ thirst up drawn,

4. Old past tense of "climb," but used with a special feeling of ungainly energy. The whole metaphor, of God as a rich citizen hoarding Adam and Eve from Satan the second-story-man, is instinct with comic feeling. On the devil as a thief, see John x.1.

5. Base men interested only in money; Milton felt strongly that churchmen should be unsalaried to insure the purity of their motives.

6. Perspective, lookout.

7. By suggesting alternate boundaries of Eden, Milton invokes a hazy sense of the richness, vastness, and antiquity of the Middle East. "Auran" is an area in Syria, to the south of Damascus; "Seleucia" lies near modern Bagdad, a powerful city founded by one of Alexander's generals (hence, "built by Grecian kings"); and "Telassar" is another Near Eastern kingdom, this one probably on the east bank of the Euphrates.

8. The mountain is God's topsoil, out of which grows Paradise. The river (traditionally Tigris) flowed under the hill.

9. Natural.

Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill
 Watered the garden; thence united fell 230
 Down the steep glade, and met the nether flood,
 Which from his darksome passage now appears,
 And now, divided into four main streams,
 Runs diverse, wandering many a famous realm
 And country, whereof here needs no account;¹
 But rather to tell how, if art could tell, 235
 How, from that sapphire fount the crisped² brooks,
 Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
 With mazy error³ under pendant shades
 Ran nectar, visiting each plant, and fed 240
 Flowers worthy of Paradise; which not nice⁴ art
 In beds and curious knots, but Nature boon⁵
 Poured forth profuse on hill, and dale, and plain,
 Both where the morning sun first warmly smote
 The open field, and where the unpierced shade 245
 Embrowned⁶ the noontide bowers. Thus was this place,
 A happy rural seat of various view:⁷
 Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balm;
 Others whose fruit, burnished with golden rind,
 Hung amiable⁸—Hesperian fables true, 250
 If true, here only—and of delicious taste.
 Betwixt them lawns, or level downs, and flocks
 Grazing the tender herb, were interposed,
 Or palmy hillock; or the flowery lap
 Of some irriguous⁹ valley spread her store, 255
 Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose.¹
 Another side, umbrageous² grots and caves
 Of cool recess, o'er which the mantling vine
 Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps
 Luxuriant; meanwhile murmuring waters fall 260
 Down the slope hills dispersed, or in a lake,
 That to the fringed bank with myrtle crowned
 Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams.
 The birds their choir apply;³ airs, vernal airs,
 Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune 265
 The trembling leaves, while universal Pan,⁴

1. Milton has in mind Genesis ii.10; but the expression "whereof here needs no account" dodges many questions about the correct translation of this passage.

2. Wavy, ruffled.

3. From Latin errare, "wandering."

4. Particular, careful.

5. Liberal, bounteous.

6. Darkened.

7. Aspect.

8. Lovely. These were real golden apples like those said to have existed in the Hesperides, fabulous islands of the Western Ocean; Paradise was the only place where the fable of the Hesperides was literally true.

9. Well-watered.

1. Figuratively and literally, there was no need for thorns in Paradise.

2. Shady.

3. Practice their song. "Airs" may be either "breezes" or "melodies," and probably are both.

4. The god of all nature. "Pan" in Greek means "all" but it is also the name of the goat-legged nature god.

Knit with the Graces and the Hours in dance,
 Led on th' eternal spring.⁵ Not that fair field
 Of Enna, where Proserpin gathering flowers,
 Herself a fairer flower, by gloomy Dis 270
 Was gathered, which cost Ceres all that pain.
 To seek her through the world; nor that sweet grove
 Of Daphne,⁶ by Orontes and th' inspired
 Castalian spring, might with this Paradise
 Of Eden strive; nor that Nyseian isle, 275
 Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham,
 Whom Gentiles Ammon call and Libyan Jove,
 Hid Amalthea, and her florid son,
 Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye;⁷
 Nor, where Abassin kings their issue guard, 280
 Mount Amara⁸ (though this by some supposed True Paradise) under the Ethiop line
 By Nilus' head, enclosed with shining rock,
 A whole day's journey high, but wide remote
 From this Assyrian garden, where the fiend 285
 Saw undelighted all delight, all kind
 Of living creatures, new to sight and strange.
 Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
 Godlike erect,⁹ with native honor clad
 In naked majesty, seemed lords of all, 290
 And worthy seemed; for in their looks divine,
 The image of their glorious Maker, shone
 Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure—
 Severe, but in true filial freedom¹ placed,
 Whence true authority in men; though both 295
 Not equal, as their sex not equal seemed.
 For contemplation he and valor formed,

5. The god of nature dances with the Graces and Hours, an image of perfect harmony.

6. Milton is comparing Paradise with the famous beauty spots of antiquity. Enna in Sicily was a lovely meadow from which "Proserpin" was kidnapped by "gloomy Dis" (i.e., Pluto); her mother Ceres sought her throughout the world. The grove of Daphne, near Antioch and the Orontes river in the Near East, had a spring called "Castalia" in imitation of the Muses' fountain near Delphi.

7. The isle of Nysa in the river Triton in Tunisia was where Ammon hid Bacchus, his bastard child by Amalthea, from the eye of his wife Rhea. "Florid" (wine-flushed) Bacchus, when he grew up, received the name of Dionysus in honor of his birthplace. The identification of the Egyptian god Ammon or Hammon with Cham or Ham, the son of Noah, is a piece of comparative anthropology on Milton's part.

8. Finally, Paradise ("this Assyrian garden," line 285) is finer than the palaces atop Mt. Amara, where the "Abassin" (Abyssinian) kings had a splendid palace. Milton's authority for this exotic scene was Peter Heylyn (Cosmographie IV.ixiv), from whom he took several phrases direct. His passage then had a continuing influence on the names and phrasings of Coleridge's Kubla Khan.

9. By emphasizing the word "erect," Milton means to distinguish man from the beasts of the field, who went "prone."

1. Though almost a paradox, the phrase suggests Milton's idea that true freedom always involves respect for authority and hierarchy. Cf. Eve's foolish question, "For, inferior, who is free?" (IX.825).

For softness she and sweet attractive grace;
 He for God only, she for God in him.²
 His fair large front³ and eye sublime declared
 Absolute rule; and hyacinthine⁴ locks 300
 Round from his parted forelock manly hung
 Clustering, but not beneath his shoulders broad:
 She, as a veil down to the slender waist,
 Her unadornéd golden tresses wore 305
 Disheveled, but in wanton ringlets waved
 As the vine curls her tendrils,⁵ which implied
 Subjection, but required with gentle sway,
 And by her yielded, by him best received,
 Yielded with coy⁶ submission, modest pride, 310
 And sweet, reluctant, amorous delay.
 Nor those mysterious parts were then concealed;
 Then was not guilty shame. Dishonest shame
 Of Nature's works, honor dishonorable,
 Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind 315
 With shows instead, mere shows of seeming pure,
 And banished from man's life his happiest life,
 Simplicity and spotless innocence!
 So passed they naked on, nor shunned the sight
 Of God or angel; for they thought no ill; 320
 So hand in hand they passed, the loveliest pair
 That ever since in love's embraces met:
 Adam the goodliest man of men since born
 His sons; the fairest of her daughters Eve.⁷
 Under a tuft of shade that on a green 325
 Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain-side,
 They sat them down; and, after no more toil
 Of their sweet gardening labor than sufficed
 To recommend cool Zephyr,⁸ and make ease 330
 More easy, wholesome thirst and appetite
 More grateful, to their supper fruits they fell,
 Nectarine fruits, which the compliant boughs
 Yielded them, sidelong as they sat recline
 On the soft downy bank damasked with flowers.
 The savory pulp they chew, and in the rind, 335
 Still as they thirsted scoop the brimming stream;
 Nor gentle purpose,⁹ nor endearing smiles

2. Milton's ideas on the relations between the sexes were strict for his day, though not as strict as they now appear.

3. Forehead.

4. A classical metaphor, often applied to hair, and implying "brown" or perhaps "flowing," but actually not very definite in its import.

5. Eve's hair is curly, abundant, uncontrolled; like the vegetation in Paradise, it clings seductively about a severe and masculine virtue.

6. Shy.

7. Logically these constructions are absurd; Adam was not born since his day, Eve was not one of her own daughters. Milton combines comparative with superlative forms for emphatic effect.

8. I.e., to make a cool breeze welcome.

9. Conversation. "Wanted": lacked.

Wanted, nor youthful dalliance, as beseems
 Fair couple linked in happy nuptial league,
 Alone as they. About them frisking played 340
 All beasts of th' earth, since wild, and of all chase¹
 In wood or wilderness, forest or den.
 Sporting the lion ramped,² and in his paw
 Dandled the kid; bears, tigers, ounces, pards,³
 Gamboled before them; th' unwieldy elephant, 345
 To make them mirth, used all his might, and wreathed
 His lithe proboscis; close the serpent sly,
 Insinuating,⁴ wove with Gordian twine
 His braided train,⁵ and of his fatal guile
 Gave proof unheeded. Others on the grass 350
 Couch'd and now fill'd with pasture, gazing sat,
 Or bedward ruminating;⁶ for the sun,
 Declined, was hasting now with prone career
 To th' ocean isles,⁷ and in th' ascending scale
 Of Heaven the stars that usher evening rose: 355
 When Satan, still in gaze as first he stood,
 Scarce thus at length fail'd speech recovered sad:⁸
 "O Hell! what do mine eyes with grief behold?
 Into our room of bliss thus high advanced
 Creatures of other mold, Earth-born perhaps, 360
 Not spirits, yet to heavenly spirits bright
 Little inferior; whom my thoughts pursue
 With wonder, and could love; so lively shines
 In them divine resemblance, and such grace
 The hand that form'd them on their shape hath pour'd.⁹ 365
 Ah! gentle pair; ye little think how nigh
 Your change approaches, when all these delights
 Will vanish, and deliver ye to woe,
 More woe, the more your taste is now of joy:
 Happy, but for so happy¹ ill secured 370
 Long to continue, and this high seat, your Heaven,
 Ill fenced for Heaven to keep out such a foe
 As now is enter'd; yet no purposed foe
 To you, whom I could pity thus forlorn,
 Though I unpitied. League with you I seek, 375
 And mutual amity, so strait, so close,
 That I with you must dwell, or you with me,

1. Who lurk in every sort of cover.

2. Reared up.

3. Lynxes and leopards.

4. Writhing and twisting, but with a glance at the Tempter's rhetorical techniques.

5. Checkered body. "Gordian twine": knots, like the Gordian knot, cut by Alexander the Great.

6. The animals are chewing their cuds before bedtime; in Paradise, where the animal kingdom is not yet subject to death, they are perforce vegetarians.

7. The Azores.

8. The choked, laborious line mirrors Satan's heavy, congested mind.

9. Though Satan's moral values are topsy-turvy ("Evil, be thou my Good," he has said in the first part of Book IV), his aesthetic values are strictly orthodox.

1. Such happiness.

Henceforth.² My dwelling, haply, may not please,
 Like this fair Paradise, your sense; yet such Accept your Maker's work; he gave it me,
 Which I as freely give. Hell shall unfold, 380
 To entertain you two, her widest gates,
 And send forth all her kings; there will be room,
 Not like these narrow limits, to receive
 Your numerous offspring; if no better place, 385
 Thank him who puts me, loath, to this revenge
 On you, who wrong me not, for him who wronged.³
 And, should I at your harmless innocence
 Melt, as I do, yet public reason just—
 Honor and empire with revenge enlarged
 By conquering this new world—compels me now 390
 To do what else, though damned, I should abhor.”⁴

So spake the fiend, and with necessity,
 The tyrant's plea; excused his devilish deeds.
 Then from his lofty stand on that high tree
 Down he alights among the sportful herd 395
 Of those four-footed kinds, himself now one,
 Now other, as their shape served best his end
 Nearer to view his prey, and unespied,
 To mark what of their state he more might learn
 By word or action marked. About them round 400
 A lion now he stalks with fiery glare;
 Then as a tiger, who by chance hath spied
 In some purlieu⁵ two gentle fawns at play,
 Straight couches close; then, rising, changes oft
 His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground, 405
 Whence rushing he might surest seize them both Griped in each paw * * *

2. Though it starts in simple admiration, Satan's friendship for mankind is, at the end, rather grisly and sardonic. The turning point seems to be "though I unpitied" (line 375)—the reaction of a spoiled child.

3. I.e., it is not my fault; Satan's favorite phrase.

4. Satan's final reason for destroying

Adam and Eve is thoroughly Satanic; it is ragione di stato, reason of state, the public interest.

5. The outskirts of a forest. Note that Satan can and does enter any animal he wants; it is only for the special purposes of the temptation that he finds the serpent specially convenient.

Summary By eavesdropping on Adam and Eve, Satan learns of the prohibited Tree of Knowledge; this weakness he resolves to exploit. Meanwhile Uriel, rendered suspicious by Satan's fierce demeanor outside Paradise, reports to Gabriel, the angel specially assigned to guard mankind, that a diabolic intruder may be near. Gabriel promises to search him out. After Adam and Eve say their evening prayers and retire, Gabriel divides his night watch into groups, assigning Ithuriel and Zephon to guard closely the bower of Adam and Eve. They find Satan whispering in the ear of the sleeping Eve, and bring him before Gabriel. A battle impends, but is averted by a heavenly signal, and Satan flees out of Paradise.

Book V

Summary In the morning, Eve is distressed by her dreams of the previous night, which she relates to Adam; he comforts her. Meanwhile God dispatches Raphael to warn man of the approaching danger. Adam sees him in the distance, and while Eve readies more lunch for her guest, goes forth to meet the heavenly visitant.

[The Full and Ordered Universe]

* * * So to the sylvan lodge
 They came, that like Pomona's arbor¹ smiled
 With flowerets decked and fragrant smells; but Eve,
 Undecked save with herself, more lovely fair 380
 Than wood nymph or the fairest goddess feigned
 Of three that on Mount Ida naked strove,²
 Stood t' entertain her guest from Heaven; no veil
 She needed, virtue-proof, no thought infirm
 Altered her cheek. On whom the Angel "Hail" 385
 Bestowed, the holy salutation used
 Long after to blessed Mary, second Eve.
 "Hail mother of mankind, whose fruitful womb
 Shall fill the world more numerous with thy sons
 Than with these various fruits the trees of God 390
 Have heaped this table." Raised of grassy turf
 Their table was, and mossy seats had round,
 And on her ample square from side to side
 All autumn piled, though spring and autumn here
 Danced hand in hand. A while discourse they hold— 395
 No fear lest dinner cool—when thus began
 Our author.³ "Heavenly stranger, please to taste
 These bounties which our nourisher, from whom
 All perfect good, unmeasured-out, descends,
 To us for food and for delight hath caused 400
 The earth to yield;⁴ unsavory food perhaps
 To spiritual natures; only this I know,
 That one celestial Father gives to all."
 To whom the Angel: "Therefore what he gives (Whose praise be ever sung) to man in part 405
 Spiritual, may of purest spirits be found
 No ungrateful food;⁵ and food alike those pure

1. Pomona, Roman goddess of fruits and flowers, dwelt in an orchard.

2. Aphrodite, Hera, and Athena were judged for their beauty on Mount Ida by Paris, son of Priam. Milton reminds us that the goddesses were only "feigned," i.e., not true in the sense that the Christian god is true.

3. Our creator (i.e., Adam).

4. I.e., please to taste these bounties which God ("our nourisher") has caused the earth to yield to us for food and for delight.

5. I.e., food that is proper for man, who is partly spiritual, will be proper also for the very purest spirits. The idea that within the hierarchical universe higher powers include and comprehend lower powers is the key to the entire passage that follows.

Intelligent substances require
 As doth your rational; and both contain
 Within them every lower faculty 410
 Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste,
 Tasting concoct,⁶ digest, assimilate,
 And corporeal to incorporeal turn.
 For know, whatever was created needs
 To be sustained and fed; of elements 415
 The grosser feeds the purer, earth the sea,
 Earth and the sea feed air, the air those fires
 Ethereal, and as lowest first the moon—
 Whence in her visage round those spots, unpurged
 Vapors not yet into her substance turned.⁷ 420
 Nor doth the moon no nourishment exhale
 From her moist continent to higher orbs.
 The sun, that light imparts to all, receives
 From all his alimental recompense
 In humid exhalations, and at even 425
 Sups with the ocean.⁸ Though in Heaven the trees
 Of life ambrosial⁹ fruitage bear, and vines
 Yield nectar, though from off the boughs each morn
 We brush mellifluous dew, and find the ground
 Covered with pearly grain, yet God hath here 430
 Varied his bounty so with new delights
 As may compare with Heaven; and to taste
 Think not I shall be nice."¹ So down they sat,
 And to their viands fell, nor seemingly
 The Angel, nor in mist (the common gloss 435
 Of theologians),² but with keen dispatch
 Of real hunger and concoctive heat
 To transubstantiate;³ what redounds, transpires
 Through spirits with ease: nor wonder: if by fire
 Of sooty coal, the empiric alchemist 440
 Can turn, or holds it possible to turn,
 Metals of drossiest ore to perfect gold
 As from the mine. Meanwhile, at table Eve

6. Make ready by heat, warm up.

7. Spots on the moon, which we now know to be extinct volcanic craters or the marks of large meteorites, were hard for early astronomers to explain; Milton's notion is that they are still-undigested food drawn up from the inferior planet, earth.

8. The phenomenon of evaporation Milton interprets as the sun dining off the moisture exhaled from oceans.

9. Ambrosia and nectar are the traditional diet of angelic creatures.

1. Scrupulous, finicky.

2. Theologians intent on maintaining the pure spirituality of angels say they experience only the likeness of eating or loving—seemingly, or in a mist; Milton will have none of this evasion: the angel ate with real hunger.

3. In common theological use, transubstantiation is the Roman Catholic doctrine that the bread and wine of the eucharist really become the body and blood of Christ; Milton would vigorously have denied that doctrine as it applied to the sacrament, but says that here, by transforming material food to spiritual substance, the angel performed an act of true transubstantiation. The excess ("what redounds") is exhaled through spiritual pores.

Ministered naked, and their flowing cups
 With pleasant liquors crowned. O innocence 445
 Deserving paradise! if ever, then,
 Then had the sons of God excuse t' have been Enamored at that sight; but in those hearts
 Love unlibidinous reigned, nor jealousy
 Was understood, the injured lover's hell. 450

Thus when with meats and drinks they had sufficed,
 Not burdened nature, sudden mind arose
 In Adam, not to let th' occasion pass
 Giv'n him by this great conference to know 455
 Of things above his world, and of their being
 Who dwell in Heaven, whose excellence he saw
 Transcend his own so far, whose radiant forms
 Divine effulgence,⁴ whose high power so far
 Exceeded human, and his wary speech
 Thus to th' empyreal⁵ minister he framed. 460

"Inhabitant with God, now know I well
 Thy favor in this honor done to man,
 Under whose lowly roof thou hast vouchsafed
 To enter and these earthly fruits to taste, 465
 Food not of angels, yet accepted so
 As that more willingly thou couldst not seem
 At Heav'n's high feasts t' have fed: yet what compare?"

To whom the wingéd hierarch replied:
 "O Adam, one Almighty is, from whom 470
 All things proceed and up to him return,
 If not depraved from good, created all:
 Such to perfection, one first matter all,
 Endued with various forms, various degrees
 Of substance, and in things that live, of life,⁶
 But more refined, more spiritous, and pure, 475
 As nearer to him placed or nearer tending,
 Each in their several active spheres assigned,
 Till body up to spirit work, in bounds
 Proportioned to each kind. So from the root
 Springs lighter the green stalk, from thence the leaves 480
 More airy, last the bright consummate flower
 Spirits odorous breathes:⁷ flowers and their fruit,
 Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublimed,⁸

4. A verb to the general effect of "diffused" or "radiated" is omitted.

5. A minister from the empyrean, the highest or fiery level of heaven; with a perhaps accidental touch on "imperial," as well.

6. Behind Raphael's speech lies the traditional division of natural things into inanimate objects, vegetable, animal, human, and angelic natures; they all derive from one matter, created by God, but are differentiated by Him into distinct levels of purity.

7. As the flower is the consummation of a plant's existence, its odors are efflorescences analogous to man's spiritual life, the consummation of his existence.

8. Purified.

To vital spirits aspire, to animal,
 To intellectual—give both life and sense, 485
 Fancy⁹ and understanding, whence the soul
 Reason receives, and reason is her being,
 Discursive or intuitive;¹ discourse
 Is ofttest yours, the latter most is ours,
 Differing but in degree, of kind the same. 490
 Wonder not then, what God for you saw good
 If I refuse not,² but convert, as you,
 To proper substance; time may come when men
 With angels may participate, and find
 No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare; 495
 And from these corporal nutriments perhaps
 Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
 Improved by tract of time, and winged ascend,
 Ethereal as we,³ or may at choice
 Here or in heavenly paradises dwell; 500
 If ye be found obedient, and retain Unalterably firm his love entire Whose progeny you are. Meanwhile, enjoy
 Your fill what happiness this happy state
 Can comprehend, incapable of more.” 505

9. Imagination.

1. For Milton, discursive human reason, which must be learned by rules and study, is quite different from the intuitive reason planted from the beginning in the essential being of angels.

2. I.e., don't be surprised if I accept ("refuse not") what God thought would be good for you.

3. Raphael is talking to unfallen man, who in time might very well turn all to spirit; Milton's views on the ultimate perfectibility of man on earth altered considerably during his lifetime, and must be carefully calculated in the light of the dramatic situation.

Summary After this mingled explanation and warning, Raphael, by way of emphasizing the danger that threatens Adam and Eve, enters upon the story of Satan's revolt and fall. Satan, pretending that God's exaltation of the Son was an offense to angelic dignity, persuaded a host of his fellow angels to withdraw their allegiance to God and set up a camp in the north. When open war on God was declared, however, one of these angels was able to repent. The seraph Abdiel, though scorned by his fellow rebels, denounced the rebellion, and returned, heroically alone, to the ranks of God's followers.

Book VI. Summary Continuing the story of the war in Heaven, Raphael describes the assembling of the armies and a first skirmish in which Satan is both insulted and wounded by Abdiel. After the first day's battle, the evil angels retire discomfited; but overnight Satan invents cannon with which, on the second day, the good angels are put to some disorder. In the fury of the fight, however, they pull up mountains by the roots and bury the cannon beneath them; thus the issue remains inconclusive. On the third day, God withdraws all his armies and sends the Son alone into battle; the Son drives his enemies irresistibly over the wall of Heaven, and after falling nine days through Chaos they are swallowed up in Hell.

From Book VII

[The Invocation]¹

Descend from Heaven, Urania, by that name
If rightly thou art called,² whose voice divine
Following, above th' Olympian hill I soar,
Above the flight of Pegasean wing!³
The meaning, not the name I call: for thou
Nor of the Muses nine, nor on the top
Of old Olympus dwell'st, but heavenly born,
Before the hills appeared, or fountain flowed,
Thou with eternal Wisdom didst converse,
Wisdom thy sister, and with her didst play
In presence of th' Almighty Father,⁴ pleased
With thy celestial song. Up led by thee
Into the Heaven of Heavens I have presumed,
An earthly guest, and drawn empyreal air,
Thy tempering;⁵ with like safety guided down,
Return me to my native element:
Lest from this flying steed unreined (as once Bellerophon,⁶ though from a lower climb),
Dismounted, on th' Aleian field I fall,
Erroneous⁷ there to wander and forlorn.
Half yet remains unsung, but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere;
Standing on Earth, not rapt above the pole,

1. To start the second half of his poem, Milton must counterbalance the destruction of the war in Heaven with the creation by God of a new universe, centering on the Earth. Book VII is devoted to this topic; and to approach so vast a subject, Milton once more invokes his Muse.

2. Milton has only the names of classical Muses with which to invoke the spiritual principles of Christian theology. Properly the Muse of astronomy, Urania is also the symbol of heavenly love and of divine wisdom; Milton here renews the invocation he made in Book I.

3. Pegasus, the flying horse of poetry, suggests (in connection with Bellerophon, line 18) Milton's sense of his own perilous audacity in writing so vast a poem.

4. In Proverbs viii.30, Wisdom is made to speak of "playing always before God" previous even to the Creation. Milton makes his Muse coeval with divine wisdom.

5. Tempered (i.e., mixed and softened) by thee.

6. Bellerophon tried to explore the stars astride Pegasus the flying horse; but Zeus sent a gadfly to sting Pegasus, and his rider, after falling onto the Aleian plain in Lycia, wandered about there till he died.

7. From Latin errare, "to wander," as well as "to be mistaken."

More safe I sing with mortal voice, unchanged
 To hoarse or mute, though fall'n on evil days, 25
 On evil days though fall'n, and evil tongues;
 In darkness, and with dangers compassed round,
 And solitude; yet not alone, while thou
 Visit'st my slumbers nightly, or when morn
 Purples the east:⁸ still govern thou my song, 30
 Urania, and fit audience find, though few.
 But drive far off the barbarous dissonance
 Of Bacchus and his revelers, the race
 Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard⁹
 In Rhodope, where woods and rocks had ears 35
 To rapture, till the savage clamor drowned
 Both harp and voice; nor could the Muse defend
 Her son. So fail not thou, who thee implores:
 For thou art heavenly, she an empty dream.

8. Milton composed mostly at night or very early in the morning.

9. The Thracian Bacchantes, female worshipers of Bacchus, tore Orpheus to pieces in Rhodope, though even the rocks and trees were so impressed with his music that they refused to be used against the poet. See Lycidas, lines 58-63. Orpheus was son of Calliope, the epic Muse.

Summary At Adam's request, Raphael continues his narration and describes how God, to replace the fallen angels, created the world, its creatures, and finally man, in the course of six days; the story of the creation concludes, on the seventh day, with a chorus of thanksgiving by the angels.

Book VIII. Summary Adam asks Raphael why so many and such splendid stars seem to be at the service of the earth, which appears smaller and less noble than they; at this point Eve leaves her husband and his guest to continue the discussion alone. Raphael proposes various astronomical possibilities but gives no conclusive answer to Adam's question, urging him instead to confine his curiosity to more practical matters. Adam now, at Raphael's request, describes his own recollections of his creation, as well as his first meeting and marriage with Eve. In the course of the story, he shows a somewhat exaggerated deference for Eve, which the angel rebukes; Adam is to be the head of the family, and follow his own judgment, not his wife's. Repeating his admonitions to beware of temptation, Raphael departs.

Book IX

The Argument

Satan, having compassed the Earth, with meditated guile returns as a mist by night into Paradise; enters into the serpent sleeping. Adam and Eve in the morning go forth to their labors, which Eve proposes to divide in several places, each laboring apart: Adam consents not, alleging the danger lest that enemy of whom they were forewarned should attempt her found alone. Eve, loath to be thought not circumspect or firm enough, urges her going apart, the rather desirous to make trial of her strength; Adam at last yields. The serpent finds her alone: his subtle approach; first gazing, then speaking, with much flattery extolling Eve above all other creatures. Eve, wondering to hear the serpent speak, asks how he attained to human speech and such understanding not till now; the serpent answers that by tasting of a certain tree in the garden he attained both to speech and reason, till then void of both. Eve requires him to bring her to that tree, and finds it to be the Tree of Knowledge forbidden: the serpent, now grown bolder, with many wiles and arguments induces her at length to eat. She, pleased with the taste, deliberates a while whether to impart thereof to Adam or not; at last brings him of the fruit; relates what persuaded her to eat thereof. Adam, at first amazed, but perceiving her lost, resolves, through vehemence of love, to perish with her, and, extenuating¹ the trespass, eats also of the fruit. The effects thereof in them both; they seek to cover their nakedness; then fall to variance and accusation of one another.

No more of talk where God² or angel guest
 With man, as with his friend, familiar used
 To sit indulgent, and with him partake
 Rural repast, permitting him the while Venial³ discourse unblamed. I now must change 5
 Those notes to tragic; foul distrust, and breach
 Disloyal, on the part of man, revolt
 And disobedience; on the part of Heaven,
 Now alienated, distance and distaste,
 Anger and just rebuke, and judgment given, 10
 That brought into this world a world of woe,
 Sin and her shadow Death, and Misery,
 Death's harbinger. Sad task! yet argument
 Not less but more heroic than the wrath
 Of stern Achilles on his foe pursued 15
 Thrice fugitive about Troy wall; or rage
 Of Turnus for Lavinia dispossessed;
 Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long
 Perplexed the Greek, and Cytherea's son:⁴

1. Not "diminishing" or "excusing" as in customary English usage, but carrying further, drawing out.

2. God, of course, has not been lunching with Adam; but since man is about to fall, the age is now over when such an occasion could be contemplated.

3. Permissible.

4. In the Iliad (XXII), Achilles pursues Hector three times around Troy wall before catching him. In the Aeneid, Aeneas must fight with Turnus for the hand of Lavinia. Neptune (or Poseidon) was unfriendly to Odysseus (the Greek); Juno (or Hera) to Aeneas, who was Cytherea's, i.e., Aphrodite's, son by Anchises.

If answerable style I can obtain 20
 Of my celestial Patroness,⁵ who deigns
 Her nightly visitation unimplored,
 And dictates to me slumbering, or inspires
 Easy my unpremeditated verse,⁶
 Since first this subject for heroic song 25
 Pleased me, long choosing and beginning late,⁷
 Not sedulous by nature to indite
 Wars, hitherto the only argument
 Heroic deemed, chief mastery to dissect⁸
 With long and tedious havoc fabled knights 30
 In battles feigned (the better fortitude
 Of patience and heroic martyrdom
 Unsung), or to describe races and games,
 Or tilting furniture,⁹ emblazoned shields,
 Impresses quaint, caparisons and steeds, 35
 Bases and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
 At joust and tournament; then marshaled feast
 Served up in hall with sewers and seneschals:¹
 The skill of artifice or office mean;
 Not that which justly gives heroic name 40
 To person or to poem. Me, of these Nor skilled nor studious, higher argument
 Remains,² sufficient of itself to raise
 That name,³ unless an age too late, or cold
 Climate, or years, damp my intended wing 45
 Depressed; and much they may if all be mine,
 Not hers who brings it nightly to my ear.
 The sun was sunk, and after him the star
 Of Hesperus, whose office is to bring Twilight upon the Earth, short arbiter 50
 "Twixt day and night, and now from end to end
 Night's hemisphere had veiled the horizon round,
 When Satan, who late fled before the threats
 Of Gabriel out of Eden,⁴ now improved
 In meditated fraud and malice, bent 55
 On man's destruction, mauler what might hap
 Of heavier on himself,⁵ fearless returned.

5. The muse, Urania.

6. Milton, we are told by his nephew Edward Phillips, used to wake up in the morning with lines of poetry full-formed in his head; he would then dictate them to an amanuensis.

7. Milton's early plans for epics, preserved in manuscript, did center on national heroes; his choice of a sacred subject is a novelty within the epic tradition. "Sedulous": eager.

8. I.e., in describing wars one's chief task is to dissect; dissect, in its strict Latin sense of "cut apart," but perhaps also with a comic overtone from the anatomy table.

9. The equipment of tournaments; "impresses quaint": elaborate devices on shields; "bases": trappings for horses.

1. Waiters and stewards, who also dissect.

2. I.e., for me, when these things are set aside which I neither can nor want to do, there remains a higher argument.

3. I.e., the name heroic poet. "Age too late": not Milton's age, but the age of the world. Milton felt a "cold climate," by forcing people to keep their mouths shut and mumble, was inimical to epic poetry. "Damp": stupefy, benumb.

4. At the end of Book IV.

5. Despite the peril of heavier (punishments).

By night he fled, and at midnight returned
 From compassing the Earth—cautious of day
 Since Uriel, regent of the sun, descried 60
 His entrance, and forewarned the Cherubim
 That kept their watch.⁶ Thence, full of anguish, driven,
 The space of seven continued nights he rode
 With darkness; thrice the equinoctial line⁷
 He circled, four times crossed the car of Night 65
 From pole to pole, traversing each colure;
 On the eighth returned, and on the coast averse
 From entrance or cherubic watch by stealth
 Found unsuspected way. There was a place 70
 (Now not, though sin, not time, first wrought the change)
 Where Tigris, at the foot of Paradise,
 Into a gulf shot under ground, till part
 Rose up a fountain by the Tree of Life.
 In with the river sunk, and with it rose, 75
 Satan, involved in rising mist; then sought
 Where to lie hid. Sea he had searched and land
 From Eden over Pontus, and the pool
 Maeotis, up beyond the river Ob;⁸
 Downward as far antarctic; and, in length, 80
 West from Orontes to the ocean barred
 At Darien, thence to the land where flows
 Ganges and Indus.⁹ Thus the orb he roamed
 With narrow search, and with inspection deep
 Considered every creature, which of all 85
 Most opportune might serve his wiles, and found
 The serpent subtlest beast of all the field.¹
 Him, after long debate, irresolute
 Of thoughts revolved,² his final sentence chose
 Fit vessel, fittest imp³ of fraud, in whom 90
 To enter, and his dark suggestions hide
 From sharpest sight; for in the wily snake
 Whatever sleights none would suspicious mark,
 As from his wit and native subtlety
 Proceeding, which, in other beasts observed, 95
 Doubt⁴ might beget of diabolic power
 Active within beyond the sense of brute.

6. At the beginning of Book IV. These connections with Book IV not only bridge the intervening narration, but emphasize a balancing of the whole epic; see the headnote.

7. The equator. The colures are the two great circles of the celestial sphere which intersect at the poles. By circling the globe, either from east to west or over the north and south poles, Satan can remain continually hidden in darkness.

8. Pontus is the Black Sea, the pool Maeotis the swamps of the Sea of Azov; the river Ob flows north through Siberia into the Arctic Ocean.

9. Flying west from Orontes in Syria, Satan crossed the Atlantic to the Isthmus of Panama (Darien), then the Pacific and southeast Asia to India.

1. Genesis iii.1 describes the serpent as the subtlest beast of the field.

2. I.e., unable to decide among his revolving thoughts. "Sentence": decision.

3. Graft, offshoot.

4. Suspicion.

Thus he resolved, but first from inward grief
His bursting passion into plaints thus poured:

"O Earth, how like to Heaven, if not preferred
More justly, seat worthier of Gods, as built 100

With second thought, reforming what was old!
For what God, after better, worse would build?

Terrestrial Heaven, danced round by other Heavens,
That shine, yet bear their bright officious lamps, 105

Light above light, for thee alone, as seems,
In thee concent'ring all their precious beams

Of sacred influence!⁵ As God in Heaven
Is center, yet extends to all, so thou

Cent'ring receiv'st from all those orbs; in thee,
Not in themselves, all their known virtue appears, 110

Productive in herb, plant, and nobler birth
Of creatures animate with gradual life

Of growth, sense, reason,⁶ all summed up in man.
With what delight could I have walked thee round,

If I could joy in aught; sweet interchange
Of hill and valley, rivers, woods, and plains, 115

Now land, now sea, and shores with forest crowned,
Rocks, dens, and caves! But I in none of these

Find place or refuge; and the more I see
Pleasures about me, so much more I feel 120

Torment within me, as from the hateful siege⁷
Of contraries; all good to me becomes

Bane,⁸ and in Heaven much worse would be my state.
But neither here seek I, no, nor in Heaven,

To dwell, unless by mastering Heaven's Supreme;
Nor hope to be myself less miserable 125

By what I seek, but others to make such
As I, though thereby worse to me redound.

For only in destroying I find ease
To my relentless thoughts, and him⁹ destroyed, 130

Or won to what may work his utter loss,
For whom all this was made, all this¹ will soon

Follow, as to him linked in woe or woe:
In woe then, that destruction wide may range!

To me shall be the glory sole among
The infernal Powers, in one day to have marred 135

What he, Almighty styled, six nights and days
Continued making, and who knows how long

Before had been contriving? though perhaps
Not longer than since I in one night freed 140

5. Satan, like Adam in Book VIII, is impressed that so many heavenly bodies center on (and "serve") the earth—as the old Ptolemaic astronomy taught that they did. "Officious": dutiful.

6. Life on earth is gradual, or graduated, from the herb which merely grows, to the animal which grows and feels, to man, who grows, feels, and thinks.

7. Conflict.

8. Poison. This is exactly what he willed in IV.110.

9. I.e., man.

1. I.e., the created cosmos.

From servitude inglorious well-nigh half
 Th' angelic name, and thinner left the throng
 Of his adorers. He, to be avenged,
 And to repair his numbers thus impaired,
 Whether such virtue,² spent of old, now failed 145
 More angels to create (if they at least
 Are his created),³ or to spite us more,
 Determined to advance into our room
 A creature formed of earth, and him endow,
 Exalted from so base original, 150
 With heavenly spoils, our spoils. What he decreed
 He effected; man he made, and for him built
 Magnificent this World, and Earth his seat,
 Him lord pronounced, and, O indignity!
 Subjected to his service angel-wings 155
 And flaming ministers, to watch and tend
 Their earthly charge. Of these the vigilance
 I dread, and to elude, thus wrapt in mist
 Of midnight vapor, glide obscure, and pry
 In every bush and brake, where hap may find 160
 The serpent sleeping, in whose mazy folds
 To hide me, and the dark intent I bring.
 O foul descent! that I, who erst contended
 With Gods to sit the highest, am now constrained
 Into a beast, and, mixed with bestial slime, 165
 This essence to incarnate and imbrute,⁴
 That to the height of deity aspired!
 But what will not ambition and revenge
 Descend to? Who aspires must down as low
 As high he soared, obnoxious,⁵ first or last, 170
 To basest things. Revenge, at first though sweet,
 Bitter ere long back on itself recoils.
 Let it; I reck not, so it light well aimed,
 Since higher I fall short, on him who next
 Provokes my envy, this new favorite 175
 Of Heaven, this man of clay, son of despite,
 Whom, us the more to spite,⁶ his Maker raised
 From dust: spite then with spite is best repaid."
 So saying, through each thicket, dank or dry,
 Like a black mist low-creeping, he held on 180
 His midnight search, where soonest he might find
 The serpent. Him fast sleeping soon he found,
 In labyrinth of many a round self-rolled,
 His head the midst, well stored with subtle wiles:
 Not yet in horrid shade or dismal den, 185

2. Strength, energy.

3. Satan never raises this question, whether angels are created or independent beings, without hesitating over it.

4. Satan's incarnation in a snake is a grotesque parody of the Son of God's incarnation in Christ.

5. Subject to.

6. Satan sees God in his own image, as a spiteful creature.

Nor nocent ⁷ yet, but on the grassy herb,
 Fearless, unfeared, he slept. In at his mouth
 The devil entered, and his brutal sense,
 In heart or head, possessing soon inspired
 With act intelligential; but his sleep
 Disturbed not; waiting close ⁸ th' approach of morn. 190

Now, whenas sacred light began to dawn
 In Eden on the humid flowers, that breathed
 Their morning incense, when all things that breathe
 From th' Earth's great altar send up silent praise 195
 To the Creator, and his nostrils fill
 With grateful smell, forth came the human pair,
 And joined their vocal worship to the choir
 Of creatures wanting voice; that done, partake
 The season, ⁹ prime for sweetest scents and airs; 200
 Then commune how that day they best may ply
 Their growing work; for much their work outgrew
 The hands' dispatch of two gardening so wide:
 And Eve first to her husband thus began:

"Adam, well may we labor still ¹ to dress 205
 This garden, still to tend plant, herb, and flower,
 Our pleasant task enjoined; but, till more hands
 Aid us, the work under our labor grows,
 Luxurious by restraint: what we by day
 Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind, 210
 One night or two with wanton growth derides,
 Tending to wild. Thou, therefore, now advise,
 Or hear what to my mind first thoughts present.
 Let us divide our labors; thou where choice
 Leads thee, or where most needs, whether to wind 215
 The woodbine round this arbor, or direct
 The clasping ivy where to climb; while I
 In yonder spring ² of roses intermixed
 With myrtle find what to redress till noon.
 For, while so near each other thus all day 220
 Our task we choose, what wonder if so near Looks intervene and smiles, or objects new Casual discourse draw on, which intermits
 Our day's work, brought to little, though begun
 Early, and th' hour of supper comes unearned!" 225

To whom mild answer Adam thus returned:
 "Sole Eve, associate sole, to me beyond
 Compare above all living creatures dear!
 Well hast thou motioned, ³ well thy thoughts employed
 How we might best fulfil the work which here 230
 God hath assigned us, nor of me shalt pass

7. Harmful.

8. In secret.

9. I.e., go forth into the morning air.

"Prime": the best.

1. Continually.

2. Growth.

3. Suggested.

Unpraised; for nothing lovelier can be found
 In woman than to study household good,
 And good works in her husband to promote.⁴
 Yet not so strictly hath our Lord imposed 235
 Labor as to debar us when we need
 Refreshment, whether food or talk between,
 Food of the mind, or this sweet intercourse
 Of looks and smiles; for smiles from reason flow,
 To brute denied, and are of love the food, 240
 Love, not the lowest end of human life.
 For not to irksome toil, but to delight,
 He made us, and delight to reason joined.
 These paths and bowers doubt not but our joint hands
 Will keep from wilderness with ease, as wide 245
 As we need walk, till younger hands ere long Assist us. But, if much converse perhaps
 Thee satiate, to short absence I could yield;
 For solitude sometimes is best society,
 And short retirement urges sweet return. 250
 But other doubt possesses me, lest harm
 Befall thee, severed from me; for thou know'st
 What hath been warned us, what malicious foe,
 Envyng our happiness, and of his own
 Despairing, seeks to work us woe and shame 255
 By sly assault, and somewhere nigh at hand
 Watches, no doubt, with greedy hope to find
 His wish and best advantage, us asunder,⁵
 Hopeless to circumvent us joined, where each
 To other speedy aid might lend at need. 260
 Whether his first design be to withdraw
 Our fealty from God, or to disturb
 Conjugal love, than which perhaps no bliss
 Enjoyed by us excites his envy more;
 Or this, or worse,⁶ leave not the faithful side 265
 That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects.
 The wife, where danger or dishonor lurks,
 Safest and seemliest by her husband stays,
 Who guards her, or with her the worst endures.”
 To whom the virgin ⁷ majesty of Eve, 270
 As one who loves, and some unkindness meets,
 With sweet austere composure thus replied:
 “Offspring of Heaven and Earth, and all Earth's lord!
 That such an enemy we have, who seeks
 Our ruin, both by thee informed I learn, 275
 And from the parting angel overheard,

4. Proverbs xxxi is devoted to the praise of a good wife, and Milton doubtless had it in mind here.

5. I.e., to find us apart, which will answer his wishes and serve his advantage.

 6. I.e., whether this or something worse be his intent.

7. Unspotted.

As in a shady nook I stood behind,
 Just then returned at shut of evening flowers.
 But that thou shouldst my firmness therefore doubt
 To God or thee, because we have a foe 280
 May tempt it, I expected not to hear.
 His violence thou fear'st not, being such
 As we, not capable of death or pain,
 Can either not receive; or can repel.
 His fraud is, then, thy fear; which plain infers 285
 Thy equal fear that my firm faith and love
 Can by his fraud be shaken or seduced:
 Thoughts, which how found they harbor in thy breast,
 Adam, misthought of her to thee so dear?"⁸
 To whom, with healing words, Adam replied: 290
 "Daughter of God and man, immortal Eve,
 For such thou art, from sin and blame entire;⁹
 Not diffident of thee do I dissuade
 Thy absence from my sight, but to avoid
 Th' attempt itself; intended by our foe. 295
 For he who tempts, though in vain, at least asperses¹
 The tempted with dishonor foul, supposed
 Not incorruptible of faith, not proof
 Against temptation. Thou thyself with scorn
 And anger wouldst resent the offered wrong, 300
 Though ineffectual found; misdeem not, then,
 If such affront I labor to avert
 From thee alone, which on us both at once
 The enemy, though bold, will hardly dare;
 Or, daring, first on me th' assault shall light. 305
 Nor thou his malice and false guile contemn—
 Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
 Angels—nor think superfluous others' aid.
 I from the influence of thy looks receive
 Access² in every virtue; in thy sight 310
 More wise; more watchful, stronger, if need were
 Of outward strength; while shame, thou looking on,
 Shame to be overcome or overreached,³
 Would utmost vigor raise, and raised unite.
 Why shouldst not thou like sense within thee feel 315
 When I am present, and thy trial choose
 With me, best witness of thy virtue tried?"
 So spake domestic Adam in his care
 And matrimonial love; but Eve, who thought
 Less⁴ attributed to her faith sincere, 320

8. I.e., these thoughts were misthought of (misapplied to) her to thee so dear (me).

9. "Entire" is from Latin integer, untouched. "Diffident": the usual English meaning is "shy," "timid"; Milton emphasizes the Latin roots, dis + fides = mistrustful.

1. The word is from Latin spargere, to sprinkle, with overtones from English "aspersion," an ugly insinuation.

2. Extra strength.

3. Overpowered or outwitted.

4. Too little.

Thus her reply with accent sweet renewed:

“If this be our condition, thus to dwell
In narrow circuit straitened by a foe,
Subtle or violent, we not endued
Single with like defence wherever met, 325
How are we happy, still in fear of harm?
But harm precedes not sin: only our foe
Tempting affronts us with his foul esteem
Of our integrity: his foul esteem
Sticks no dishonor on our front,⁵ but turns 330
Foul on himself; then wherefore shunned or feared
By us, who rather double honor gain
From his surmise proved false, find peace within,
Favor from Heaven, our witness, from th’ event?
And what is faith, love, virtue, unassayed 335
Alone, without exterior help sustained?
Let us not then suspect our happy state
Left so imperfect by the Maker wise
As not secure to single or combined.
Frail is our happiness, if this be so; 340
And Eden were no Eden, thus exposed.”

To whom thus Adam fervently replied:
“O woman, best are all things as the will
Of God ordained them; his creating hand
Nothing imperfect or deficient left 345
Of all that he created, much less man,
Or aught that might his happy state secure,
Secure from outward force. Within himself
The danger lies, yet lies within his power;
Against his will he can receive no harm. 350
But God left free the will; for what obeys
Reason is free; and reason he made right,
But bid her well beware, and still erect,⁶
Lest, by some fair appearing good surprised,
She dictate false, and misinform the will 355
To do what God expressly hath forbid.
Not then mistrust, but tender love, enjoins
That I should mind ⁷ thee oft; and mind thou me.
Firm we subsist, yet possible to swerve,
Since reason not impossibly may meet 360
Some specious object by the foe suborned;
And fall into deception unaware,
Not keeping strictest watch, as she was warned.
Seek not temptation, then, which to avoid
Were better, and most likely if from me 365

5. Forehead.
6. Remain alert.

7. Remind; in the next phrase, “mind” means “obey.”

Thou sever not: trial will come unsought.
 Wouldst thou approve thy constancy, approve ⁸
 First thy obedience; th' other who can know,
 Not seeing thee attempted, who attest?
 But if thou think trial unsought may find 370
 Us both securer^{8a} than thus warned thou seem'st,
 Go; for thy stay, not free, absents thee more.
 Go in thy native innocence; rely
 On what thou hast of virtue; summon all;
 For God towards thee hath done his part: do thine.' 375
 So spake the patriarch of mankind; but Eve
 Persisted; yet submit, though last, replied:
 "With thy permission,⁹ then, and thus forewarned,
 Chiefly by what thy own last reasoning words
 Touched only, that our trial, when least sought, 380
 May find us both perhaps far less prepared,
 The willing I go, nor much expect
 A foe so proud will first the weaker seek;
 So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse."
 Thus saying, from her husband's hand her hand 385
 Soft she withdrew, and like a wood nymph light,
 Oread or dryad, or of Delia's train,¹
 Betook her to the groves, but Delia's self
 In gait surpassed and goddesslike deport,
 Though not as she with bow and quiver armed, 390
 But with such gardening tools as art yet rude,
 Guiltless of fire² had formed, or angels brought.
 To Pales, or Pomona, thus adorned,
 Likest she seemed, Pomona when she fled
 Vertumnus, or to Ceres in her prime, 395
 Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove.³
 Her long with ardent look his eye pursued
 Delighted, but desiring more her stay.
 Oft he to her his charge of quick return
 Repeated; she to him as oft engaged 400
 To be returned by noon amid the bower,
 And all things in best order to invite
 Noontide repast, or afternoon's repose.
 O much deceived, much failing, hapless Eve,

8. Prove, give evidence of

8a. The Latin word securus can mean either "safe" or "free from care," i.e., "careless." Adam's warning is at once reassuring and ominous.

9. Eve takes a reluctant and extorted permission as free leave to do what she wants. Though apparently submissive, she gets the last word.

1. An "oread" is a nymph of the mountain, a "dryad" one of the wood. "Delia" is Diana or Artemis, goddess of the chase, who when she hunted was accompanied by a train of nymphs.

2. There was no need of fire in Paradise; but that fire is a possession which renders one guilty suggests an overtone of the Prometheus myth.

3. Pales is a Roman goddess of flocks, Pomona a Roman divinity of fruits and orchards. Pomona was wooed by Vertumnus, god of the turning year, who assumed all sorts of shapes to win her. Ceres, the Mother Nature of the ancients (hence, the word "cereal"), bore Proserpina to Jupiter. All three goddesses are patrons of agriculture, like Eve.

Of thy presumed return!⁴ Event perverse! 405
 Thou never from that hour in Paradise
 Found'st either sweet repast, or sound repose;
 Such ambush hid among sweet flowers and shades
 Waited with hellish rancor imminent⁵
 To intercept thy way, or send thee back 410
 Despoiled of innocence, of faith, of bliss.
 For now, and since first break of dawn, the fiend,
 Mere serpent in appearance, forth was come,
 And on his quest, where likeliest he might find
 The only two of mankind, but in them 415
 The whole included race, his purposed prey.
 In bower and field he sought, where any tuft
 Of grove or garden-plot more pleasant lay,
 Their tendance⁶ or plantation for delight;
 By fountain or by shady rivulet 420
 He sought them both, but wished his hap might find
 Eve separate; he wished, but not with hope
 Of what so seldom chanced; when to his wish,
 Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies,
 Veiled in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood, 425
 Half spied, so thick the roses bushing round
 About her glowed, oft stooping to support
 Each flower of slender stalk, whose head though gay
 Carnation, purple, azure, or specked with gold,
 Hung drooping unsustained, them she upstays 430
 Gently with myrtle band, mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flower,
 From her best prop so far, and storm so nigh.⁷
 Nearer he drew, and many a walk traversed
 Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm; 435
 Then voluble⁸ and bold, now hid, now seen
 Among thick-woven arborets⁹ and flowers
 Embordered on each bank, the hand of Eve:
 Spot more delicious than those gardens feigned
 Or of revived Adonis,¹ or renowned 440
 Alcinous, host of old Laertes' son,
 Or that, not mystic, where the sapient king²
 Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse.
 Much he the place admired, the person more.
 As one who long in populous city pent, 445

4. "Much deceived" carries over; Eve was "much deceived of" (about) her "presumed return."

5. Threatening.

6. Object of their tending.

7. The conceit of the flower-gatherer who is herself gathered is repeated here from IV.270, where it was applied to Proserpina.

8. Rolling (a Latinism).

9. Bushes. "Hand": handiwork.

1. The garden of Adonis was a heavenly bower where Venus' lover was supposed still to lie in secret, recovering from his wound received on earth (Venus would not allow him to die). Alcinous was king of the Phaeacians. His garden, visited by Odysseus ("old Laertes' son"), is described in the Odyssey.

2. Solomon; his "fair Egyptian spouse" is Pharaoh's daughter: Milton is referring to the Song of Solomon vi.2. The fact that it is "not mystic" (i.e., not mythical) distinguishes the Scriptural garden from the "feigned" (line 439) ones of classical legend.

Where houses thick and sewers annoy³ the air,
 Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe
 Among the pleasant villages and farms
 Adjoined, from each thing met conceives delight,
 The smell of grain, or tedded⁴ grass, or kine, 450
 Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound:
 If chance with nymphlike step fair virgin pass,⁵
 What pleasing seemed, for her now pleases more,
 She most, and in her look sums all delight.⁶
 Such pleasure took the serpent to behold 455
 This flowery plat,⁷ the sweet recess of Eve
 Thus early, thus alone; her heavenly form
 Angelic, but more soft, and feminine,
 Her graceful innocence, her every air
 Of gesture or least action overawed 460
 His malice, and with rapine⁸ sweet bereaved
 His fierceness of the fierce intent it brought:
 That space the evil one abstracted stood
 From his own evil, and for the time remained
 Stupidly good,⁹ of enmity disarmed, 465
 Of guile, of hate, of envy, of revenge.
 But the hot Hell that always in him burns,
 Though in mid Heaven, soon ended his delight,
 And tortures him now more, the more he sees
 Of pleasure not for him ordained: then soon 470
 Fierce hate he recollects, and all his thoughts
 Of mischief, gratulating,¹ thus excites:
 "Thoughts, whither have ye led me? with what sweet
 Compulsion thus transported to forget
 What hither brought us? hate, not love, nor hope 475
 Of Paradise for Hell, hope here to taste
 Of pleasure, but all pleasure to destroy,
 Save what is in destroying;² other joy
 To me is lost. Then let me not let pass
 Occasion which now smiles; behold alone 480
 The woman, opportune to all attempts,
 Her husband, for I view far round, not nigh,
 Whose higher intellectual more I shun,
 And strength, of courage haughty, and of limb
 Heroic built, though of terrestrial mold;³ 485
 Foe not formidable, exempt from wound,⁴
 I not; so much hath Hell debased, and pain

3. Make noisome, befoul.

4. Tossed and drying in the sun.

5. I.e., if it chance that with nymphlike step a fair virgin should pass.

6. I.e., in her look sums up, or epitomizes, all delight.

7. Plot.

8. It is a deliberate paradox that her sweetness can ravish his malice; the word is deliberately overviolent.

9. Without his evil, Satan (like many wicked people) is quite dull and ordinary. But at the moment he is stunned.

1. Exulting.

2. What brought Satan to Paradise was not hope of pleasure, but the wish to destroy all pleasure except the pleasure of destruction itself.

3. Made of earth.

4. Adam in the state of innocence is invulnerable.

Enfeebled me, to what I was in Heaven.

She fair, divinely fair, fit love for gods,
Not terrible, though terror be in love
And beauty, not approached by stronger hate,
Hate stronger, under show of love well feigned,
The way which to her ruin now I tend."⁵

490

So spake the enemy of mankind, enclosed
In serpent, inmate bad, and toward Eve
Addressed his way, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since, but on his rear,
Circular base of rising folds, that towered

495

Fold above fold a surging maze; his head
Crested aloft, and carbuncle⁶ his eyes;
With burnished neck of verdant gold, erect
Amidst his circling spires,⁷ that on the grass
Floated redundant. Pleasing was his shape,
And lovely; never since of serpent kind

500

Lovelier, not those that in Illyria changed
Hermione and Cadmus,⁸ or the god

505

In Epidaurus;⁹ nor to which transformed
Ammonian Jove, or Capitoline was seen,
He with Olympias, this with her who bore
Scipio, the height of Rome.¹ With tract oblique
At first, as one who sought access, but feared
To interrupt, sidelong he works his way.

510

As when a ship by skillful steersman wrought
Nigh river's mouth or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail:
So varied he, and of his tortuous train

515

Curled many a wanton wreath in sight of Eve,
To lure her eye: she busied heard the sound
Of rustling leaves, but minded not, as used
To such disport before her through the field,
From every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguised.²

520

He bolder now, uncalled before her stood:

But as in gaze admiring; oft he bowed

His turret crest, and sleek enameled neck,

525

Fawning, and licked the ground whereon she trod.

His gentle dumb expression turned at length

5. I.e., love and beauty are terrible unless counteracted by hate—as they are being counteracted in Satan, to the ruin of Eve.

6. Deep red, inflamed.

7. Coils. "Redundant": abundantly, to excess.

8. Ovid tells how Cadmus and Harmonia (Milton's "Hermione") were changed to serpents after they retired (in despair at the misfortunes of their children) to Illyria.

9. Asclepius, god of medicine, had a temple at Epidaurus, from which he sometimes emerged in the form of a serpent.

1. Jupiter Ammon ("Ammonian Jove"), in the form of a snake, was said to have consorted with Olympias to beget Alexander the Great; and in the same way, the Jupiter of the Roman capitol (Jove "Capitoline") was thought to have begotten Scipio Africanus, the savior and leader ("height") of Rome.

2. Circe, who enchanted men into the shape of swine, was attended by an obedient herd in the Odyssey.

The eye of Eve to mark his play: he, glad
 Of her attention gained, with serpent tongue
 Organic, or impulse of vocal air,³
 His fraudulent temptation thus began.

530

"Wonder not, sovereign mistress, if perhaps
 Thou canst, who art sole wonder; much less arm
 Thy looks, the heaven of mildness, with disdain,
 Displeased that I approach thee thus, and gaze
 Insatiate, I thus single, nor have feared
 Thy awful brow, more awful thus retired.
 Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair,
 Thee all things living gaze on, all things thine
 By gift, and thy celestial beauty adore
 With ravishment beheld, there best beheld
 Where universally admired: but here
 In this enclosure wild, these beasts among,
 Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
 Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
 Who sees thee?⁴ (and what is one?) who shouldst be seen
 A goddess among gods, adored and served
 By angels numberless, thy daily train."

535

540

545

So glozed⁵ the tempter, and his proem tuned;
 Into the heart of Eve his words made way,
 Though at the voice much marveling: at length,
 Not unamazed, she thus in answer spake.
 "What may this mean? Language of man pronounced
 By tongue of brute, and human sense expressed?

550

The first at least of these I thought denied
 To beasts, whom God on their creation-day
 Created mute to all articulate sound;
 The latter I demur,⁶ for in their looks
 Much reason, and in their actions oft appears.
 Thee, serpent, subtlest beast of all the field
 I knew, but not with human voice endued:⁷
 Redouble then this miracle, and say,
 How can'st thou speakable of mute,⁸ and how
 To me so friendly grown above the rest
 Of brutal kind, that daily are in sight?
 Say, for such wonder claims attention due."

555

560

565

To whom the guileful tempter thus replied:
 "Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve!
 Easy to me it is to tell thee all
 What thou command'st and right thou shouldst be obeyed:
 I was at first as other beasts that graze
 The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low,

570

3. I.e., Satan either used the actual tongue of the serpent or himself impressed the air with speech.

4. The beasts cannot see the beauty of Eve's soul, only Adam can. Satan's entire speech is couched in the extravagant phrases of the Petrarchan love convention.

5. Flattered. "Proem": introduction.

6. I.e., as to whether rational sense was denied to brutes, I am doubtful.

7. Endowed.

8. To have speech after being dumb.

As was my food, nor aught but food discerned
 Or sex, and apprehended nothing high:
 Till on a day, roving the field, I chanced 575
 A goodly tree far distant to behold
 Loaden with fruit of fairest colors mixed,
 Ruddy and gold; I nearer drew to gaze;
 When from the boughs a savory odor blown,
 Grateful to appetite, more pleased my sense 580
 Than smell of sweetest fennel,⁹ or the teats
 Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even,
 Unsucked of lamb or kid, that tend their play.
 To satisfy the sharp desire I had
 Of tasting those fair apples, I resolved 585
 Not to defer: hunger and thirst at once,
 Powerful persuaders, quickened at the scent
 Of that alluring fruit, urged me so keen.
 About the mossy trunk I wound me soon,
 For, high from ground, the branches would require 590
 Thy utmost reach, or Adam's: round the tree
 All other beasts that saw, with like desire
 Longing and envying stood, but could not reach.
 Amid the tree now got, where plenty hung
 Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill 595
 I spared not;¹ for such pleasure till that hour
 At feed or fountain never had I found.
 Sated at length, ere long I might perceive
 Strange alteration in me, to degree
 Of reason in my inward powers, and speech 600
 Wanted not long, though to this shape retained.²
 Thenceforth to speculations high or deep
 I turned my thoughts, and with capacious mind
 Considered all things visible in Heaven,
 Or Earth, or middle, all things fair and good: 605
 But all that fair and good in thy divine
 Semblance, and in thy beauty's heavenly ray
 United I beheld: no fair³ to thine
 Equivalent or second, which compelled
 Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come 610
 And gaze, and worship thee of right declared
 Sovereign of creatures, universal dame."
 So talked the spirited⁴ sly snake: and Eve
 Yet more amazed, unwary thus replied:
 "Serpent, thy overpraising leaves in doubt 615
 The virtue of that fruit, in thee first proved.
 But say, where grows the tree, from hence how far?

9. Milton learned probably from Pliny, the natural historian, that serpents were fond of fennel; popular superstition had it that they drank the milk of sheep and goats.

1. Refrained not.

2. His inward powers, his mental constitution and gift of speech, were changed; but he retained his exterior shape as before.

3. Beauty.

4. Possessed by a spirit, inspired.

For many are the trees of God that grow
 In Paradise, and various, yet unknown
 To us; in such abundance lies our choice, 620
 As leaves a greater store of fruit untouched,
 Still hanging incorruptible, till men
 Grow up to their provision, and more hands
 Help to disburden Nature of her bearth."⁵

To whom the wily adder, blithe and glad: 625
 "Empress, the way is ready, and not long,
 Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
 Fast by a fountain, one small thicket past
 Of blowing⁶ myrrh and balm: if thou accept
 My conduct, I can bring thee thither soon." 630

"Lead then," said Eve. He leading swiftly rolled
 In tangles, and made intricate seem straight,
 To mischief swift.⁷ Hope elevates, and joy
 Brightens his crest; as when a wandering fire
 Compact of unctuous vapor,⁸ which the night 635
 Condenses, and the cold environs round,
 Kindled through agitation to a flame
 (Which oft, they say, some evil spirit attends),
 Hovering and blazing with delusive light,
 Misleads th' amazed night-wanderer from his way 640
 To bogs and mires, and oft through pond or pool,
 There swallowed up and lost, from succor far:
 So glistered the dire snake, and into fraud
 Led Eve our credulous mother, to the tree
 Of prohibition,⁹ root of all our woe: 645

Which when she saw, thus to her guide she spake:
 "Serpent, we might have spared our coming hither,
 Fruitless to me, though fruit be here to excess,
 The credit of whose virtue rest with thee;¹
 Wondrous indeed, if cause of such effects! 650
 But of this tree we may not taste nor touch:
 God so commanded, and left that command
 Sole daughter of his voice;² the rest, we live
 Law to ourselves; our reason is our law."

To whom the Tempter guilefully replied: 655
 "Indeed? Hath God then said that of the fruit
 Of all these garden trees ye shall not eat,
 Yet lords declared of all in Earth or air?"

To whom thus Eve, yet sinless: "Of the fruit
 Of each tree in the garden we may eat, 660
 But of the fruit of this fair tree amidst

5. So spelled to pun on the idea of trees bearing fruit and thus in a way giving birth to young.

6. Blooming.

7. Milton's physical descriptions of the serpent often have distinct moral overtones, as here.

8. Composed of oily vapor; Milton's theory of the ignis fatuus, or will-o'-the-wisp, is strikingly material and "scientific."

9. Prohibited tree (a Hebraism).

1. I.e., you must remain the only evidence of the fruit's power.

2. His one injunction (a literal Hebraism). "The rest": in everything else.

The garden, God hath said, 'Ye shall not eat
Thereof, nor shall ye touch it, lest ye die.' "

She scarce had said, though brief, when now more bold,
The tempter, but with show of zeal and love 665
To man, and indignation at his wrong,

New part puts on, and as to passion moved,
Fluctuates disturbed, yet comely, and in act
Raised,³ as of some great matter to begin.
As when of old some orator renowned 670
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence

Flourished, since mute, to some great cause addressed,
Stood in himself collected, while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience ere the tongue,
Sometimes in height began, as no delay 675
Of preface brooking,⁴ through his zeal of right.

So standing, moving, or to height upgrown
The tempter all impassioned thus began:

"O sacred, wise, and wisdom-giving plant,
Mother of science!⁵ now I feel thy power 680
Within me clear, not only to discern
Things in their causes, but to trace the ways
Of highest agents, deemed however wise.

Queen of this universe! do not believe
Those rigid threats of death. Ye shall not die; 685
How should ye? By the fruit? it gives you life
To knowledge;⁶ by the Threatener? look on me,

Me who have touched and tasted, yet both live,
And life more perfect have attained than Fate
Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot. 690
Shall that be shut to man, which to the beast

Is open? Or will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass, and not praise
Rather your dauntless virtue, whom the pain
Of death denounced, whatever thing death be, 695
Deterred not from achieving what might lead

To happier life, knowledge of good and evil?
Of good, how just!⁷ Of evil, if what is evil
Be real, why not known, since easier shunned?
God therefore cannot hurt ye, and be just; 700
Not just, not God; not feared then, nor obeyed:

Your fear itself of death removes the fear.⁸
Why then was this forbid? Why but to awe,
Why but to keep ye low and ignorant,

His worshipers? He knows that in the day
Ye eat thereof, your eyes that seem so clear, 705

3. Poised in posture.

4. The orator, as if too much moved to be bothered with a preface, bursts into the middle of his speech.

5. Knowledge.

6. Life in addition to knowledge; or, life with which to enlarge your knowledge.

7. I.e., how just to have knowledge of good!

8. I.e., your fear of death removes your fear of God; since if God inflicts death,
he will not be just and hence not God.
The serpent's sophism is visible.

Yet are but dim, shall perfectly be then
 Opened and cleared, and ye shall be as gods,
 Knowing both good and evil, as they know.
 That ye should be as gods, since I as man, 710
 Internal man,⁹ is but proportion meet,
 I, of brute, human; ye, of human, gods.
 So ye shall die perhaps, by putting off
 Human, to put on gods:¹ death to be wished,
 Though threatened, which no worse than this can bring. 715
 And what are gods that man may not become
 As they, participating godlike food?
 The gods are first, and that advantage use
 On our belief, that all from them proceeds.
 I question it; for this fair Earth I see, 720
 Warmed by the sun; producing every kind,
 Them nothing: If they all things,² who enclosed
 Knowledge of good and evil in this tree,
 That whoso eats thereof forthwith attains
 Wisdom without their leave? And wherein lies 725
 Th' offense, that man should thus attain to know?
 What can your knowledge hurt him, or this tree
 Impart against his will if all be his?
 Or is it envy, and can envy dwell
 In heavenly breasts?³ These, these, and many more 730
 Causes import your need of this fair fruit.
 Goddess humane,⁴ reach then, and freely taste!"
 He ended, and his words, replete with guile,
 Into her heart too easy entrance won:
 Fixed on the fruit she gazed, which to behold 735
 Might tempt alone, and in her ears the sound
 Yet rung of his persuasive words, impregn'd⁵
 With reason, to her seeming, and with truth;
 Meanwhile the hour of noon drew on, and waked
 An eager appetite, raised by the smell 740
 So savory of that fruit, which with desire,
 Inclinal now grown to touch or taste,
 Solicited her longing eye;⁶ yet first
 Pausing a while, thus to herself she mused:
 "Great are thy virtues, doubtless, best of fruits, 745
 Though kept from man, and worthy to be admired,
 Whose taste, too long forborne, at first essay
 Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
 The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise:
 Thy praise he also who forbids thy use, 750

9. Man in intellectual powers.

1. The devil can quote scripture to his purpose, and here he is perverting Saint Paul, who told the Colossians (iii. 9-10) to put off the old man and put on the new. "Participating" (line 717): sharing.

2. The verb "produced" is understood. Satan is telling now, not about "God," but "the gods."

3. Adapted from Virgil, Aeneid I.15. "Import": imply, suggest.

4. Not so much "human goddess" (a Satanic paradox) as "kindly," "gracious" goddess.

5. Impregnated.

6. The five senses of Eve—sight, hearing, smell, taste, and touch—are all solicited by the fruit.

Conceals not from us,⁷ naming thee the Tree
 Of Knowledge, knowledge both of good and evil;
 Forbids us then to taste; but his forbidding
 Commends thee more, while it infers the good
 By thee communicated, and our want: 755
 For good unknown, sure is not had, or had
 And yet unknown, is as not had at all.⁸
 In plain then, what forbids he but to know?
 Forbids us good, forbids us to be wise!
 Such prohibitions bind not. But if Death 760
 Bind us with after-bands, what profits then
 Our inward freedom? In the day we eat
 Of this fair fruit, our doom is, we shall die.
 How dies the serpent? He hath eaten and lives,
 And knows, and speaks, and reasons, and discerns, 765
 Irrational till then. For us alone
 Was death invented? Or to us denied
 This intellectual food, for beasts reserved?
 For beasts it seems: yet that one beast which first
 Hath tasted, envies not, but brings with joy 770
 The good befallen him, author unsuspect,⁹
 Friendly to man, far from deceit or guile.
 What fear I then, rather what know to fear¹
 Under this ignorance of good and evil,
 Of God or death, of law or penalty? 775
 Here grows the cure of all, this fruit divine,
 Fair to the eye, inviting to the taste,
 Of virtue² to make wise: what hinders then
 To reach, and feed at once both body and mind?"
 So saying, her rash hand in evil hour, 780
 Forth reaching to the fruit, she plucked, she eat.³
 Earth felt the wound, and Nature from her seat⁴
 Sighing through all her works gave signs of woe,
 That all was lost. Back to the thicket slunk
 The guilty serpent, and well might, for Eve 785
 Intent now wholly on her taste, naught else
 Regarded; such delight till then, as seemed,
 In fruit she never tasted, whether true
 Or fancied so, through expectation high
 Of knowledge; nor was godhead from her thought.⁵ 790
 Greedily she engorged without restraint,
 And knew not eating death:⁶ satiate at length,
 And heightened as with wine, jocund and boon,⁷

7. God himself, by naming it, has called attention to the tree's magic powers.

8. An unknown good is like no good at all. "In plain": i.e., in plain language.

9. A witness beyond suspicion.

1. In her ignorance, Eve does not really know what to fear and what not to fear.

2. Power.

3. In the 17th century, an accepted past tense of "eat."

4. Wherever Nature is hidden, in the heart of things, she sighs.

5. She expected to achieve godhead immediately.

6. A grim pun. She is eating death and does not know it; but death is eating her too. Compare "eating cares" (L'Allegro, line 135).

7. Joyous and liberal.

Thus to herself she pleasingly began:

“O sovereign, virtuous, precious of all trees 795
In Paradise! of operation blest
To sapience,⁸ hitherto obscured, infamed,
And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end
Created; but henceforth my early care,
Not without song each morning, and due praise 800
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease
Of thy full branches offered free to all;
Till dieted by thee I grow mature
In knowledge, as the gods who all things know;
Though others⁹ envy what they cannot give: 805
For had the gift been theirs, it had not here
Thus grown. Experience, next to thee I owe,
Best guide; not following thee I had remained
In ignorance; thou open’st Wisdom’s way,
And giv’st access, though secret she retire. 810
And I perhaps am secret; Heaven is high,
High and remote to see from thence distinct
Each thing on Earth; and other care perhaps
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great Forbidder,¹ safe with all his spies 815
About him. But to Adam in what sort²
Shall I appear? Shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake
Full happiness with me, or rather not,
But keep the odds³ of knowledge in my power 820
Without copartner? so to add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love,
And render me more equal, and perhaps,
A thing not undesirable, sometime
Superior: for, inferior, who is free?⁴ 825
This may be well: but what if God have seen
And death ensue? Then I shall be no more,
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct;
A death to think. Confirmed then I resolve, 830
Adam shall share with me in bliss or woe:
So dear I love him, that with him all deaths
I could endure, without him live no life.”⁵
So saying, from the tree her step she turned,
But first low reverence done,⁶ as to the power 835

8. To wisdom, for the wise and those of good taste. (Latin sapere, to be wise, has its root in the verb “to taste.”) “Infamed”: without fear, but also defamed, i.e., maligned.

9. The gods, i.e., other gods. In saying that God did not give the tree, Eve is merely echoing a lesson learned from the serpent.

1. Now that Eve has fallen, God is a “great Forbidder,” and all his gifts in Paradise are forgotten.

2. Guise.

3. Balance.

4. Eve’s fatal foolishness implies that the only person in the world who can ever be free is an absolute tyrant.

5. Her affection is not unlike Satan’s (IV.374–385) in its destructiveness.

6. Eve’s first physical act after falling is idolatry.

That dwelt within, whose presence had infused
 Into the plant sciental⁷ sap, derived
 From nectar, drink of gods. Adam the while Waiting desirous her return, had wove
 Of choicest flowers a garland to adorn 840
 Her tresses, and her rural labors crown,
 As reapers oft are wont their harvest queen.
 Great joy he promised to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return, so long delayed:
 Yet oft his heart, divine⁸ of something ill, 845
 Misgave him; he the faltering measure⁹ felt;
 And forth to meet her went, the way she took
 That morn when first they parted. By the Tree
 Of Knowledge he must pass; there he her met,
 Scarce from the tree returning; in her hand 850
 A bough of fairest fruit that downy smiled,
 New gathered, and ambrosial smell diffused.
 To him she hastened, in her face excuse
 Came prologue, and apology to prompt,¹
 Which with bland words at will she thus addressed: 855
 "Hast thou not wondered, Adam, at my stay?
 Thee I have missed, and thought it long, deprived
 Thy presence, agony of love till now
 Not felt, nor shall be twice; for never more
 Mean I to try, what rash untried I sought, 860
 The pain of absence from thy sight. But strange
 Hath been the cause, and wonderful to hear:
 This tree is not as we are told, a tree
 Of danger tasted,² nor to evil unknown
 Opening the way, but of divine effect 865
 To open eyes, and make them gods who taste;
 And hath been tasted such. The serpent wise,
 Or not restrained as we, or not obeying,
 Hath eaten of the fruit, and is become,
 Not dead, as we are threatened, but thenceforth 870
 Endued with human voice and human sense,
 Reasoning to admiration,³ and with me
 Persuasively hath so prevailed, that I
 Have also tasted, and have also found
 Th' effects to correspond, opener mine eyes 875
 Dim crst, dilated spirits, ampler heart,
 And growing up to godhead;⁴ which for thee
 Chiefly I sought, without thee can despise.
 For bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss,
 Tedious, unshared with thee, and odious soon. 880
 Thou therefore also taste, that equal lot

7. Knowledge-giving.

8. Foreboding, suspicious.

9. I.e., of his pulse.

1. Her face had an excuse in it, as prologue to an apology which followed after.

2. If tasted.

3. Admirably. "Persuasively": by persuasion.

4. Everything that Eve says she feels is what Satan has told her she will feel.

May join us, equal joy, as equal love;
 Lest, thou not tasting, different degree⁵
 Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce
 Deity for thee, when Fate will not permit."⁶ 885

Thus Eve with countenance blithe her story told;
 But in her cheek distemper⁷ flushing glowed.
 On th' other side, Adam, soon as he heard
 The fatal trespass done by Eve, amazed,
 Astonied⁸ stood and blank, while horror chill 890
 Ran through his veins, and all his joints relaxed;
 From his slack hand the garland wreathed for Eve
 Down dropped, and all the faded roses shed.
 Speechless he stood and pale, till thus at length
 First to himself he inward silence broke: 895

"O fairest of creation, last and best
 Of all God's works, creature in whom excelled
 Whatever can to sight or thought be formed,
 Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet!
 How art thou lost, how on a sudden lost, 900
 Defaced, deflowered, and now to death devote?⁹
 Rather how hast thou yielded to transgress
 The strict forbiddance, how to violate
 The sacred fruit forbidden! Some curséd fraud
 Of enemy hath beguiled thee, yet unknown,¹ 905
 And me with thee hath ruined, for with thee
 Certain my resolution is to die.

How can I live without thee, how forgo
 Thy sweet converse and love so dearly joined,
 To live again in these wild woods forlorn?² 910
 Should God create another Eve, and I
 Another rib afford, yet loss of thee
 Would never from my heart; no, no! I feel
 The link of nature draw me: flesh of flesh,
 Bone of my bone thou art, and from thy state 915
 Mine never shall be parted, bliss or woe."

So having said, as one from sad dismay
 Recomforted, and after thoughts disturbed
 Submitting to what seemed remediless,
 Thus in calm mood his words to Eve he turned: 920

"Bold deed thou hast presumed, adventurous Eve
 And peril great provoked, who thus hath dared
 Had it been only coveting to eye
 That sacred fruit, sacred³ to abstinence,
 Much more to taste it, under ban to touch. 925

5. Differing rank in the hierarchy of creatures.

6. Contrast Eve's logic when she is alone (lines 817-825).

7. The proportion of Eve's humors—which, in the state of innocence, gave her perfect health—has been disturbed, and she is running a fever.

8. Astonished, perhaps even "petrified."
 "Blank": empty of mind.

9. Doomed.

1. "Yet unknown" modifies "enemy."

2. Without Eve, Paradise itself is wild and forlorn.

3. Devoted.

But past who can recall, or done undo?
 Not God omnipotent, nor Fate! Yet so
 Perhaps thou shalt not die, perhaps the fact⁴
 Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
 Profaned first by the serpent, by him first 930
 Made common and unhallowed ere our taste,
 Nor yet on him found deadly; he yet lives,
 Lives, as thou saidst, and gains to live as man
 Higher degree of life: inducement strong
 To us, as likely, tasting, to attain 935
 Proportional ascent, which cannot be
 But to be gods, or angels, demigods.⁵
 Nor can I think that God, Creator wise,
 Though threatening, will in earnest so destroy
 Us his prime creatures, dignified so high, 940
 Set over all his works, which in our fall,
 For us created, needs with us must fail,
 Dependent made; so God shall uncreate,
 Be frustrate, do, undo, and labor lose;
 Not well conceived of God,⁶ who, though his power 945
 Creation could repeat, yet would be loath
 Us to abolish, lest the adversary
 Triumph and say: 'Fickle their state whom God
 Most favors; who can please him long? Me first
 He ruined, now mankind; whom will he next?' 950
 Matter of scorn, not to be given the foe.
 However, I with thee have fixed my lot,
 Certain to undergo like doom: if death
 Consort with thee, death is to me as life;
 So forcible within my heart I feel 955
 The bond of nature draw me to my own,
 My own in thee, for what thou art is mine;
 Our state cannot be severed; we are one,
 One flesh; to lose thee were to lose myself."
 So Adam, and thus Eve to him replied: 960
 "O glorious trial of exceeding love,
 Illustrious evidence, example high!
 Engaging me to emulate; but short
 Of thy perfection, how shall I attain,
 Adam? from whose dear side I boast me sprung, 965
 And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
 One heart, one soul in both; whereof good proof
 This day affords, declaring thee resolved,
 Rather than death or aught than death more dread
 Shall separate us, linked in love so dear, 970
 To undergo with me one guilt, one crime,
 If any be, of tasting this fair fruit;

4. Act.

5. Note how Adam agrees first in Eve's harmless errors about the serpent, then in her sinful ambition to achieve a higher form of life.

6. I.e., not a proper conception of God (as making his actions dependent on those of an inferior).

Whose virtue (for of good still good proceeds,
 Direct, or by occasion⁷) hath presented
 This happy trial of thy love, which else 975
 So eminently never had been known.
 Were it I thought death menaced would ensue⁸
 This my attempt, I would sustain alone
 The worst, and not persuade thee, rather die
 Deserted, than oblige⁹ thee with a fact 980
 Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assured
 Remarkably so late of thy so true,
 So faithful love unequaled;¹ but I feel
 Far otherwise th' event; ² not death, but life
 Augmented, opened eyes, new hopes, new joys, 985
 Taste so divine, that what of sweet before
 Hath touched my sense, flat seems to this, and harsh.
 On my experience, Adam, freely taste,
 And fear of death deliver to the winds."

So saying, she embraced him, and for joy 990
 Tenderly wept, much won that he his love
 Had so ennobled, as of choice to incur
 Divine displeasure for her sake, or death.
 In recompense (for such compliance bad
 Such recompense best merits), from the bough 995
 She gave him of that fair enticing fruit
 With liberal hand; he scrupled not to eat,
 Against his better knowledge, not deceived,
 But fondly overcome with female charm.³
 Earth trembled from her entrails, as again 1000
 In pangs, and Nature gave a second groan,
 Sky lowered, and muttering thunder, some sad drops
 Wept at completing of the mortal sin
 Original; while Adam took no thought,
 Eating his fill, nor Eve to iterate 1005
 Her former trespass feared, the more to soothe
 Him with her loved society; that now
 As with new wine intoxicated both,
 They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
 Divinity within them breeding wings 1010
 Wherewith to scorn the Earth. But that false fruit
 Far other operation first displayed,
 Carnal desire inflaming; he on Eve
 Began to cast lascivious eyes, she him
 As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn, 1015
 Till Adam thus 'gan Eve to dalliance move:
 "Eve, now I see thou art exact⁴ of taste,

7. Indirectly.

8. Result from.

9. Render liable, involve.

1. Now that she knows Adam loves her, Eve has more misgivings than ever about involving him in her crime.

2. Result (of eating the apple).

3. See I Timothy ii.14: "And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression."

4. Exacting, demanding.

And elegant, of sapience⁵ no small part,
 Since to each meaning savor we apply,
 And palate call judicious. I the praise 1020
 Yield thee, so well this day thou hast purveyed.⁶
 Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstained
 From this delightful fruit, nor known till now
 True relish, tasting; if such pleasure be
 In things to us forbidden, it might be wished, 1025
 For this one tree had been forbidden ten.
 But come; so well refreshed, now let us play,
 As meet is, after such delicious fare;
 For never did thy beauty, since the day
 I saw thee first and wedded thee, adorned 1030
 With all perfections, so enflame my sense
 With ardor to enjoy thee, fairer now
 Than ever, bounty of this virtuous tree."

So said he, and forbore not glance or toy⁷
 Of amorous intent, well understood 1035
 Of⁸ Eve, whose eye darted contagious fire.
 Her hand he seized, and to a shady bank,
 Thick overhead with verdant roof embowered
 He led her, nothing loath; flowers were the couch,
 Pansies, and violets, and asphodel, 1040
 And hyacinth, Earth's freshest, softest lap.
 There they their fill of love and love's disport
 Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal,
 The solace of their sin, till dewy sleep
 Oppressed them, wearied with their amorous play. 1045

Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit,
 That with exhilarating vapor bland
 About their spirits had played, and inmost powers
 Made err, was now exhaled, and grosser sleep
 Bred of unkindly fumes,⁹ with conscious dreams 1050
 Encumbered, now had left them, up they rose
 As from unrest, and each the other viewing,
 Soon found their eyes how opened, and their minds
 How darkened. Innocence, that as a veil
 Had shadowed them from knowing ill, was gone; 1055
 Just confidence, and native righteousness,
 And honor from about them, naked left
 To guilty Shame; he covered, but his robe
 Uncovered more.¹ So rose the Danite strong,
 Herculean Samson, from the harlot-lap 1060
 Of Philistean Dalilah, and waked
 Shorn of his strength;² they destitute and bare

5. Wisdom, but the word comes from Latin sapere, "to taste," which gives rise, via another etymology, to the word "savor." Adam's sentence plays rather heavily on these two meanings of sapere.

6. Provided for us, provisioned us.

7. Caress.

8. By.

9. Unnatural vapors.

1. They were covered with shame, which made them conscious of their nakedness as they had never been before.

2. See the story of Samson and Delilah, Judges xvi.4-20.

Of all their virtue. Silent, and in face
 Confounded, long they sat, as stricken mute;
 Till Adam, though not less than Eve abashed, 1065
 At length gave utterance to these words constrained:
 "O Eve, in evil hour³ thou didst give ear
 To that false worm,⁴ of whomsoever taught
 To counterfeit man's voice, true in our fall,
 False in our promised rising; since our eyes 1070
 Opened we find indeed, and find we know
 Both good and evil, good lost, and evil got:
 Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
 Which leaves us naked thus, of honor void,
 Of innocence, of faith, of purity, 1075
 Our wonted ornaments now soiled and stained,
 And in our faces evident the signs
 Of foul concupiscence; whence evil store,⁵
 Even shame, the last of evils; of the first
 Be sure then.⁶ How shall I behold the face 1080
 Henceforth of God or angel, erst with joy
 And rapture so oft beheld? Those heavenly shapes
 Will dazzle now this earthly⁷ with their blaze
 Insufferably bright. O might I here
 In solitude live savage, in some glade 1085
 Obscured, where highest woods, impenetrable
 To star or sunlight, spread their umbrage broad,
 And brown⁸ as evening! Cover me, ye pines,
 Ye cedars, with innumerable boughs
 Hide me, where I may never see them more!⁹ 1090
 But let us now, as in bad plight, devise
 What best may for the present serve to hide
 The parts of each from other, that seem most
 To shame obnoxious,¹ and unseemliest seen;
 Some tree whose broad smooth leaves together sewed, 1095
 And girded on our loins, may cover round
 Those middle parts, that this newcomer, Shame,
 There sit not, and reproach us as unclean."
 So counseled he, and both together went Into the thickest wood; there soon they chose 1100
 The figtree,² not that kind for fruit renowned,
 But such as at this day, to Indians known,
 In Malabar or Deccan³ spreads her arms

3. Even in his misery, Adam cannot resist the word-play on Eve-evil.

4. Serpent, with a connotation of disgust. "Of": by.

5. A store of evil.

6. I.e., since we now feel shame, the last and worst of evils, we shall soon experience the first and lesser ones.

7. The noun "eyes" or "vision" is understood.

8. Dark.

9. Cf. Revelation vi.16: "And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

1. Vulnerable, liable.

2. The banyan, or Indian fig. It has, in fact, small leaves, but Milton's knowledge of it came from Gerard's Herball, where all the details of lines 1104-10 may be found.

3. Sections of southern India.

Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
 The bended twigs take root, and daughters grow 1105
 About the mother tree, a pillared shade
 High overarched, and echoing walks between;
 There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
 Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
 At loopholes cut through thickest shade. Those leaves 1110
 They gathered, broad as Amazonian targe,⁴
 And with what skill they had, together sewed,
 To gird their waist; vain covering, if to hide
 Their guilt and dreaded shame! O how unlike
 To that first naked glory! Such of late 1115
 Columbus found th' American, so girt
 With feathered cincture,⁵ naked else and wild
 Among the trees on isles and woody shores.
 Thus fenced, and, as they thought, their shame in part
 Covered, but not at rest or ease of mind, 1120
 They sat them down to weep; nor only tears
 Rained at their eyes, but high winds worse within Began to rise, high passions, anger, hate,
 Mistrust, suspicion, discord, and shook sore
 Their inward state of mind, calm region once 1125
 And full of peace, now tossed and turbulent:
 For Understanding ruled not, and the Will Heard not her lore, both in subjection now
 To sensual Appetite, who, from beneath
 Usurping over sovereign Reason, claimed 1130
 Superior sway.⁶ From thus distempered breast,
 Adam, estranged in look and altered style,
 Speech intermitted thus to Eve renewed:
 "Would thou hadst hearkened to my words, and stayed
 With me, as I besought thee, when that strange 1135
 Desire of wandering, this unhappy morn,
 I know not whence possessed thee! we had then
 Remained still happy, not as now, despoiled
 Of all our good, shamed, naked, miserable.
 Let none henceforth seek needless cause to approve⁷ 1140
 The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek Such proof, conclude, they then begin to fail."
 To whom, soon moved with touch of blame, thus Eve:
 "What words have passed thy lips, Adam severe?
 Imput'st thou that to my default, or will 1145
 Of wandering, as thou call'st it, which who knows
 But might as ill have happened, thou being by,
 Or to thyself perhaps? Hadst thou been there,
 Or here th' attempt, thou couldst not have discerned

4. Shield. The Amazons, mythical female warriors, carried large crescent-shaped shields.

5. Belt.

6. The psychology of the Fall is made explicit here. The higher faculties of reason, represented by the brain, are in subjection to the lower faculties of appetite, represented by sensuality. Moreover, Adam has lost his superiority over Eve.

7. Test, prove. "Owe": own.

Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake; 1150
 No ground of enmity between us known,
 Why he should mean me ill, or seek to harm?
 Was I to have never parted from thy side?
 As good have grown there still a lifeless rib.
 Being as I am, why didst not thou, the head,⁸ 1155
 Command me absolutely not to go,
 Going into such danger, as thou saidst?
 Too facile⁹ then, thou didst not much gainsay,
 Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss.
 Hadst thou been firm and fixed in thy dissent, 1160
 Neither had I transgressed, nor thou with me."
 To whom, then first incensed, Adam replied:
 "Is this the love, is this the recompense
 Of mine to thee, ingrateful Eve, expressed
 Immutable¹ when thou were lost, not I, 1165
 Who might have lived and joyed immortal bliss,
 Yet willingly chose rather death with thee?
 And am I now upbraided as the cause
 Of thy transgressing? not enough severe,
 It seems, in thy restraint! What could I more? 1170
 I warned thee, I admonished thee, foretold
 The danger, and the lurking enemy
 That lay in wait; beyond this had been force,
 And force upon free will hath here no place.
 But confidence then bore thee on, secure 1175
 Either to meet no danger, or to find
 Matter of glorious trial; and perhaps
 I also erred in overmuch admiring
 What seemed in thee so perfect, that I thought
 No evil durst attempt thee! but I rue 1180
 That error now, which is become my crime,
 And thou th' accuser. Thus it shall befall
 Him who, to worth in women overtrusting,
 Lets her will rule; restraint she will not brook,²
 And, left to herself, if evil thence ensue, 1185
 She first his weak indulgence will accuse."
 Thus they in mutual accusation spent
 The fruitless hours, but neither self-condemning;³
 And of their vain contest appeared no end.

8. Head of the family, but also the rational director, as the head is to the rest of the body. Cf. I Corinthians xi.3, "the head of the woman is the man."

9. Easy, permissive.

1. Shown to be unchangeable.

2. Accept.

3. Sterile recrimination is an early fruit of the forbidden tree; only self-condemnation can turn the fall from a mind-closing to a mind-opening event.

From Book X

Summary When it is known in Heaven that man has fallen, God sends his Son to pass judgment on the sinners: Having found them in the garden, he hears their confession and passes instant sentence, cursing the serpent, condemning Eve to the pains of childbirth and Adam to those of daily toil; but in mercy he clothes the human couple both outwardly with the skins of beasts and inwardly with his righteousness. Meanwhile Sin and Death, sitting by Hell-gate, feel new strength, and pass across Chaos, leaving a great bridge behind them. On their way they meet with their parent, Satan, learn of his success on earth, and press eagerly forward in hopes of destroying man altogether. Satan, on the other hand, continues his flight back toward Hell, where he is to report to his constituents.

[Consequences of the Fall]

* * * Th' other way Satan went down
 The causey¹ to Hell-gate; on either side 415
 Disparted Chaos overbuilt exclaimed,
 And with rebounding surge the bars assailed,
 'That scorned his indignation.² Through the gate,
 Wide open and unguarded, Satan passed,
 And all about found desolate; for those 420
 Appointed to sit there³ had left their charge,
 Flown to the upper world; the rest were all
 Far to the inland retired, about the walls
 Of Pandemonium, city and proud seat
 Of Lucifer, so by allusion called 425
 Of that bright star to Satan paragoned.⁴
 There kept their watch the legions, while the Grand
 In council sat, solicitous what chance
 Might intercept their emperor sent; so he Departing gave command, and they observed. 430
 As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
 By Astracan, over the snowy plains,
 Retires, or Bactrian Sophi, from the horns
 Of Turkish crescent, leaves all waste beyond
 The realm of Aladule, in his retreat 435

1. Causeway.

2. Chaos, as the instinctive enemy of order, is hostile to the bridge built across its gulf by Sin and Death, even though it means an increase in the kingdom of Chaos itself.

3. I.e., Sin and Death.

4. Satan is called Lucifer, the light-bringer, because bright as the morning star (before he fell). The Grand (line 427) are the superior angels. "Grandee" was a new word in English, adapted from Spanish; it implied a man of large, undefined economic and social power.

To Tauris or Casbeen;⁵ so these, the late
 Heaven-banished host, left desert utmost Hell
 Many a dark league, reduced in careful watch
 Round their metropolis, and now expecting 440
 Each hour their great adventurer from the search
 Of foreign worlds. He through the midst unmarked,
 In show plebeian angel militant⁶
 Of lowest order, passed, and, from the door
 Of that plutonian hall, invisible
 Ascended his high throne, which, under state⁷ 445
 Of richest texture spread, at th' upper end
 Was placed in regal luster. Down a while
 He sat, and round about him saw, unseen.
 At last, as from a cloud, his fulgent⁸ head
 And shape star-bright appeared, or brighter, clad 450
 With what permissive glory since his fall
 Was left him, or false glitter. All amazed
 At that so sudden blaze, the Stygian throng
 Bent their aspect, and whom they wished beheld,
 Their mighty chief returned: loud was th' acclaim. 455
 Forth rushed in haste the great consulting peers,
 Raised from their dark divan,⁹ and with like joy
 Congratulant approached him, who with hand
 Silence, and with these words attention, won:
 "Thrones, Dominations, Princedoms, Virtues, Powers! 460
 For in possession such, not only of right,¹
 I call ye, and declare ye now, returned,
 Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
 Triumphant out of this infernal pit
 Abominable, accursed, the house of woe, 465
 And dungeon of our tyrant! Now possess,
 As lords, a spacious world, to our native Heaven
 Little inferior, by my adventure hard
 With peril great achieved. Long were to tell
 What I have done, what suffered, with what pain 470
 Voyaged th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
 Of horrible confusion, over which
 By Sin and Death a broad way now is paved

5. The comparison is with the Persians and Tartars retreating across the Eastern wastes before the attacking Turks. "Bactrian": Persian, "Tauris," "Casbeen": Tabriz, Kazvin. Milton wants his simile to convey a mingled sense of barbaric Oriental splendor, cruelty, and desolation in Hell.

6. Literally, an angelic footsoldier or private, but with an ironic overtone from the phrase "church militant."

7. Canopy.

8. Glittering, refulgent.

9. The Turkish council of state; the Oriental theme continues.

1. Satan makes a distinction much in men's minds since the days of Cromwell and Charles I; a kingdom could be claimed either by right (in law, de jure) or in fact (by possession, de facto). The devils now have both claims to their titles. "Returned" (line 462) modifies "I" at the beginning of the line: "now that I have returned."

To expedite your glorious march; but I
 Toiled out my uncouth passage, forced to ride 475
 Th' untractable abyss, plunged in the womb
 Of unoriginal² night and chaos wild,
 That, jealous of their secrets, fiercely opposed
 My journey strange, with clamorous uproar
 Protesting fate supreme; thence how I found 480
 The new-created world, which fame in Heaven
 Long had foretold, a fabric wonderful,
 Of absolute perfection; therein man
 Placed in a paradise, by our exile
 Made happy. Him by fraud I have seduced 485
 From his creator, and, the more to increase
 Your wonder, with an apple! He,³ thereat
 Offended—worth your laughter!—hath given up
 Both his beloved man and all his world
 To Sin and Death a prey, and so to us, 490
 Without our hazard, labor, or alarm,
 To range in, and to dwell, and over man
 To rule, as over all he should have ruled.
 True is, me also he hath judged; or rather
 Me not, but the brute serpent, in whose shape 495
 Man I deceived. That which to me belongs
 Is enmity, which he will put between
 Me and mankind: I am to bruise his heel;
 His seed (when, is not set) shall bruise my head.⁴
 A world who would not purchase with a bruise, 500
 Or much more grievous pain? Ye have th' account
 Of my performance; what remains, ye gods,
 But up and enter now into full bliss?"

So having said, a while he stood, expecting
 Their universal shout and high applause 505
 To fill his ear; when, contrary, he hears,
 On all sides, from innumerable tongues
 A dismal universal hiss, the sound
 Of public scorn. He wondered, but not long
 Had leisure, wondering at himself now more. 510
 His visage drawn he felt to sharp and spare,
 His arms clung to his ribs, his legs entwining
 Each other, till, supplanted,⁵ down he fell,

2. Without source or origin, primeval.

3. God.

4. Satan seems to have overheard or understood the curse pronounced by God on the serpent, even though he was not present at the time.

5. The word is used with its Latin force of "tripped up by the heels." Ovid (Metamorphosis IV. 575 ff.), Lucan (Pharsalia IX. 700 ff.), and Dante (In- ferno XXV) had made set pieces about people being transformed into serpents. This whole scene has been the occasion of much critical dispute. A. J. A. Waldock (Paradise Lost and Its Critics) denounced it as a "cartoon scene" in which Milton's editorial hand is much too heavily felt; various defenders have propounded alternative justifications.

A monstrous serpent on his belly prone,
 Reluctant,⁶ but in vain; a greater power 515
 Now ruled him, punished in the shape he sinned,
 According to his doom. He would have spoke,
 But hiss for hiss returned with forkéd tongue
 To forkéd tongue; for now were all transformed
 Alike, to serpents all, as accessories 520
 To his bold riot.⁷ Dreadful was the din
 Of hissing through the hall, thick-swarming now
 With complicated monsters, head and tail—
 Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbaena dire,⁸
 Cerastes horned, hydrus, and ellops drear, 525
 And dipsas (not so thick swarmed once the soil
 Bedropped with blood of Gorgon, or the isle
 Ophiusa); but still greatest he the midst,
 Now dragon grown, larger than whom the sun
 Engendered in the Pythian vale on slime, 530
 Huge Python;⁹ and his power no less he seemed Above the rest still to retain. They all
 Him followed, issuing forth to th' open field,
 Where all yet left of that revolted rout,
 Heaven-fallen, in station or just array, 535
 Sublime¹ with expectation when to see
 In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief.
 They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
 Of ugly serpents. Horror on them fell,
 And horrid sympathy; for what they saw 540
 They felt themselves now changing. Down their arms,
 Down fell both spear and shield; down they as fast,
 And the dire hiss renewed, and the dire form
 Caught by contagion, like in punishment
 As in their crime. Thus was th' applause they meant 545
 Turned to exploding hiss, triumph to shame
 Cast on themselves from their own mouths. There stood
 A grove hard by, sprung up with this their change,
 His will who reigns above,² to aggravate
 Their penance, laden with fair fruit, like that 550

6. The Latin sense is felt again, "struggling against the change."

7. Revolt.

8. "Complicated": again a Latinism, meaning "twined together." The "amphisbaena" was alleged to have a head at each end of its body; "cerastes" was a horned snake, "hydrus" a water-snake, "ellops" perhaps the swordfish, and "dipsas" a snake whose bite was supposed to create outrageous thirst. When Perseus flew over Libya with the head of the snaky-haired Gorgon, the drops of her blood fell to the ground and became serpents. The "isle Ophiusa" is Snake Island, in the Balearics.

9. Python was a gigantic mythological serpent engendered by Apollo, the sun god, from the slime left by Deucalion's flood, and slain by Apollo in a great contest.

1. On tiptoes. The ordinary devils are standing in ranks outside Pandemonium, trying to catch a glimpse of Satan.

2. "By the will of him who reigns above."

Which grew in paradise, the bait of Eve
 Used by the tempter. On that prospect strange
 Their earnest eyes they fixed, imagining
 For one forbidden tree a multitude
 Now risen, to work them further woe or shame;³ 555
 Yet, parched with scalding thirst and hunger fierce,
 Though to delude them sent, could not abstain,
 But on they rolled in heaps, and, up the trees
 Climbing, sat thicker than the snaky locks
 That curled Megaera.⁴ Greedily they plucked 560
 The fruitage fair to sight, like that which grew
 Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flamed;⁵
 This, more delusive, not the touch, but taste
 Deceived; they, fondly⁶ thinking to allay
 Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit 565
 Chewed bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
 With spattering noise rejected. Oft they assayed,
 Hunger and thirst constraining: drugged as oft,
 With hatefulest disrelish writhed their jaws
 With soot and cinders filled: so oft they fell 570
 Into the same illusion, not as man
 Whom they triumphed once lapsed.⁷ Thus were they plagued,
 And worn with famine long, and ceaseless hiss,
 Till their lost shape, permitted, they resumed—
 Yearly enjoined, some say, to undergo 575
 This annual humbling certain numbered days,
 To dash their pride, and joy for man seduced.⁸
 However, some tradition they dispersed
 Among the heathen of their purchase got,
 And fabled how the serpent, whom they called 580
 Ophion, with Eurynome (the wide-Encroaching Eve perhaps),⁹ had first the rule
 Of high Olympus, thence by Saturn driven
 And Ops, ere yet Dictæan¹ Jove was born.

3. The punishment of the devils not only fits the crime, it is the crime (the eating of forbidden fruit) repeated again and again, in disgust and loathing.

4. Megaera, like her sister Furies, had snakes instead of hair on her head.

5. Sodom apples grew (legend had it) on the spot where that accursed city once stood; though good to look at, they dissolved into ashes when plucked.

6. Foolishly. "Gust": taste.

7. They fell again and again into delusion, though they had felt superior to man, who fell just once.

8. There are many folktales about fairies, devils, incubi, and the like, who are forced periodically to take on the shape of some loathsome creature.

9. There is a mythological story about the Titan Ophion (the name means "snake") and his wife Eurynome ("the wide-reacher"), who ruled Olympus till Saturn and his wife Rhea (or Ops) drove them away. Milton feels this story may be a vague, pagan reminiscence of the real truth, the fall of Satan. But there is an unresolved suggestion here that Eve fell with Satan, becoming a kind of Proserpina to his role as Pluto, King of Hell.

1. Zeus was raised in a cave on Mount Dicte, in Crete; hence, "Dictæan Jove."

Summary Sin and Death proceed without further interruption to the earth, and enter into possession of it. God sees their arrival and declines to interfere, but prophesies that their triumph will be only temporary; in due course they will be forced back to hell again, and forever. Meanwhile, the angels are ordered to twist the earth on its axis, disorder the planets so their influence will in future be bad as well as good, and rearrange the cosmos generally. In consequence, the temperate climate of Paradise at once gives way to extremes of heat and cold, and furious winds begin to blow across the ruined planet.

* * * Thus began

Outrage from lifeless things; but Discord, first
 Daughter of Sin, among th' irrational,
 Death introduced through fierce antipathy:¹
 Beast now with beast 'gan war, and fowl with fowl,
 And fish with fish: to graze the herb² all leaving,
 Devoured each other; nor stood much in awe
 Of man, but fled him, or with countenance grim
 Glared on him passing. These were from without
 The growing miseries, which Adam saw 715
 Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
 To sorrow abandoned, but worse felt within,
 And in a troubled sea of passion tossed,
 Thus to disburden sought with sad complaint:
 "O miserable of happy!³ Is this the end 720
 Of this new glorious world, and me so late
 The glory of that glory? who now, become
 Accursed of blessed, hide me from the face
 Of God, whom to behold was then my height
 Of happiness! Yet well, if here would end 725
 The misery; I deserved it, and would bear
 My own deservings; but this will not serve.
 All that I eat or drink, or shall beget,
 Is propagated curse.⁴ O voice, once heard
 Delightfully, 'Increase and multiply,' 730
 Now death to hear! for what can I increase
 Or multiply, but curses on my head?
 Who, of all ages to succeed, but, feeling
 The evil on him brought by me, will curse
 My head: "Ill fare our ancestor impure!
 For this we may thank Adam!' but his thanks 735
 Shall be the execration;⁵ so, besides

1. "Discord" is the subject of the sentence, "Death" the object. "Th' irrational" are the beasts.

2. Grass.

3. I.e., change, to misery from happiness.

4. Whatever prolongs life extends the curse.

5. The only thanks for Adam will be mankind's curses.

Mine own that bide upon me, all from me
 Shall with a fierce reflux on me redound,
 On me, as on their natural center, light 740
 Heavy, though in their place.⁶ O fleeting joys
 Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woes!
 Did I request thee, Maker, from my clay
 To mold me man? Did I solicit thee
 From darkness to promote me, or here place 745
 In this delicious garden? As my will Concurred not to my being, it were but right
 And equal⁷ to reduce me to my dust,
 Desirous to resign and render back
 All I received, unable to perform 750
 Thy terms too hard, by which I was to hold
 The good I sought not. To the loss of that,
 Sufficient penalty, why hast thou added
 The sense of endless woes? Inexplicable
 Thy justice seems; yet, to say truth, too late 755
 I thus contest; then should have been refused
 Those terms whatever, when they were proposed.
 Thou⁸ didst accept them; wilt thou enjoy the good,
 Then cavil the conditions? And though God
 Made thee without thy leave, what if thy son 760
 Prove disobedient, and reprov'd, retort,
 'Wherefore didst thou beget me? I sought it not.'
 Wouldst thou admit for his contempt of thee
 That proud excuse? Yet him not thy election,⁹
 But natural necessity begot. 765
 God made thee of choice his own, and of his own
 To serve him; thy reward was of his grace;
 Thy punishment then justly is at his will.
 Be it so, for I submit; his doom is fair,
 That dust I am and shall to dust return. 770
 O welcome hour whenever! Why delays
 His hand to execute what his decree
 Fixed on this day? Why do I overlive?
 Why am I mocked with death, and lengthen'd out
 To deathless pain? How gladly would I meet 775
 Mortality, my sentence, and be earth
 Insensible! how glad would lay me down
 As in my mother's lap!¹ There I should rest
 And sleep secure; his dreadful voice no more

6. Adam plays with the notion that natural objects have weight only as long as they are above their "natural" positions; so all curses will flow naturally to him, but they will still be heavy when they have lighted.

7. Just.

8. "Thou," which referred to God in lines 753 and 755, here shifts as Adam suddenly addresses himself.

9. Choice.

1. Adam's lamentations owe a good deal to the Book of Job iii.

Would thunder in my ears; no fear of worse 780
 To me and to my offspring would torment me
 With cruel expectation. Yet one doubt
 Pursues me still, lest all I cannot die;²
 Lest that pure breath of life, the spirit of man
 Which God inspired, cannot together perish 785
 With this corporeal clod; then, in the grave,
 Or in some other dismal place, who knows
 But I shall die a living death? O thought
 Horrid, if true! Yet why? It was but breath
 Of life that sinned; what dies but what had life 790
 And sin? the body properly hath neither.
 All of me then shall die: let this appease
 The doubt, since human reach no further knows.³
 For though the Lord of all be infinite,
 Is his wrath also? Be it, man is not so, 795
 But mortal doomed. How can he exercise
 Wrath without end on man whom death must end?
 Can he make deathless death? That were to make Strange contradiction, which to God himself
 Impossible is held, as argument 800
 Of weakness, not of power.⁴ Will he draw out,
 For anger's sake, finite to infinite
 In punished man, to satisfy his rigor
 Satisfied never? That were to extend
 His sentence beyond dust and Nature's law; 805
 By which all causes else according still
 To the reception of their matter act,
 Not to th' extent of their own sphere.⁵ But say
 That death be not one stroke, as I supposed,
 Bercaving⁶ sense, but endless misery 810
 From this day onward, which I feel begun
 Both in me and without me, and so last
 To perpetuity—Ay me! that fear
 Comes thundering back with dreadful revolution
 On my defenseless head! Both death and I 815
 Am found eternal, and incorporate⁷ both:
 Nor I on my part single; in me all
 Posterity stands cursed. Fair patrimony

2. Direct from Horace, Odes III.xxx.6: non omnis moriar.

3. Adam convinces himself, as Milton was apparently convinced, that both soul and body die at death; the corollary is that they are resurrected together.

4. For a man in a state of nature, Adam displays a fine command of medieval theology. He holds that if God contradicts himself, it is a sign of weakness.

5. A maxim of 17th-century physics; all agents (other than God) act according to the capacity of the object, not to the extent of their inherent powers.

6. Taking away.

7. In the same body. Adam is appalled to find that he has become death incarnate; the grammar ("both death and I/Am") displays his shock.

That I must leave ye, sons! O, were I able
 To waste it all myself, and leave ye none! 820
 So disinherited, how would ye bless
 Me, now your curse! Ah, why should all mankind
 For one man's fault thus guiltless be condemned,
 If guiltless? But from me what can proceed,
 But all corrupt, both mind and will depraved, 825
 Not to do only, but to will the same
 With me?⁸ How can they then acquitted stand
 In sight of God? Him, after all disputes,
 Forced⁹ I absolve. All my evasions vain
 And reasonings, though through mazes, lead me still 830
 But to my own conviction: first and last
 On me, me only, as the source and spring
 Of all corruption, all the blame lights due;¹
 So might the wrath! Fond² wish! Couldst thou support
 That burden, heavier than the earth to bear; 835
 Than all the world much heavier, though divided
 With that bad woman? Thus, what thou desir'st,
 And what thou fear'st, alike destroys all hope
 Of refuge, and concludes thee miserable³
 Beyond all past example and future; 840
 To Satan only like, both crime and doom.
 O Conscience! into what abyss of fears
 And horrors hast thou driven me; out of which I find no way, from deep to deeper plunged!"
 Thus Adam to himself lamented loud 845
 Through the still night, not now, as ere man fell,
 Wholesome and cool and mild, but with black air
 Accompanied, with damps and dreadful gloom;
 Which to his evil conscience represented
 All things with double terror. On the ground 850
 Outstretched he lay, on the cold ground, and oft
 Cursed his creation; Death as oft accused
 Of tardy execution, since denounced
 The day of his offense. "Why comes not Death,"
 Said he, "with one thrice-acceptable stroke 855
 To end me? Shall Truth fail to keep her word,
 Justice divine not hasten to be just?
 But Death comes not at call; Justice divine
 Mends not her slowest pace for prayers or cries.
 O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales, and bowers! 860

8. Not only will men repeat Adam's sin; their will is corrupted and they will want to be fallen like Adam.

9. Perforce.

1. In this discovery that he alone must accept the guilt of mankind, Adam has chosen crucially to be like Christ and unlike Satan—at the very moment when he feels exactly the opposite.

2. Foolish.

3. Shows thee to be miserable.

With other echo late I taught your shades
 To answer, and resound far other song."
 Whom thus afflicted when sad Eve beheld,
 Desolate where she sat, approaching nigh,
 Soft words to his fierce passion she essayed; 865
 But her with stern regard he thus repelled:
 "Out of my sight, thou serpent! that name best
 Befits thee, with him leagued, thyself as false
 And hateful: nothing wants, but that thy shape,
 Like his, and color serpentine, may show 870
 Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
 Henceforth; lest that too heavenly form, pretended⁴
 To hellish falsehood, snare them. But for thee
 I had persisted happy, had not thy pride
 And wandering vanity, when least was safe, 875
 Rejected my forewarning, and disdained
 Not to be trusted, longing to be seen
 Though by the devil himself, him overweening⁵
 To overreach, but, with the serpent meeting,
 Fooled and beguiled; by him thou, I by thee, 880
 To trust thee from my side, imagined wise,
 Constant, mature, proof against all assaults;
 And understood not all was but a show
 Rather than solid virtue, all but a rib
 Crooked by nature—bent, as now appears, 885
 More to the part sinister⁶—from me drawn;
 Well if thrown out, as supernumerary
 To my just number found!⁷ Oh, why did God,
 Creator wise, that peopled highest Heaven
 With spirits masculine, create at last 890
 This novelty on earth, this fair defect
 Of nature, and not fill the world at once
 With men, as angels, without feminine;
 Or find some other way to generate
 Mankind?⁸ This mischief had not then befallen, 895
 And more that shall befall—innumerable
 Disturbances on earth through female snares,
 And strait conjunction⁹ with this sex. For either
 He never shall find out fit mate, but such
 As some misfortune brings him, or mistake; 900
 Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain,
 Through her perverseness, but shall see her gained
 By a far worse, or, if she love, withheld
 By parents, or his happiest choice too late

4. Serving as a mask.

5. Overconfident.

6. "On the left hand," as in Latin; also "unlucky."

7. Since men visibly have twelve ribs on both sides, it was supposed that Adam originally had thirteen ribs on his left side, so that he could give up one and still have twelve; an even ("just") number.

8. Ancient traditions of antifeminist thought lie behind these ungenerous speculations.

9. Close connections, i.e., matrimony.

Shall meet, already linked and wedlock-bound 905
To a fell¹ adversary, his hate or shame:
Which infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and household peace confound."

He added not, and from her turned; but Eve,
Not so repulsed, with tears that ceased not flowing, 910
And tresses all disordered, at his feet
Fell humble, and, embracing them, besought
His peace, and thus proceeded in her plaint:

"Forsake me not thus, Adam! witness Heaven
What love sincere and reverence in my heart 915
I bear thee, and unweeting² have offended,
Unhappily deceived! Thy suppliant³

I beg, and clasp thy knees; bereave me not,
Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel in this uttermost distress, 920
My only strength and stay: forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subsist?

While yet we live, scarce one short hour perhaps,
Between us two let there be peace; both joining,
As joined in injuries, one enmity 925

Against a foe by doom express assigned us,
That cruel serpent. On me exercise not
Thy hatred for this misery befallen;

On me already lost, me than thyself
More miserable. Both have sinned, but thou 930
Against God only; I against God and thee,
And to the place of judgement will return,
There with my cries importune Heaven, that all
The sentence, from thy head removed, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe, 935
Me, me only, just object of his ire."⁴

She ended weeping; and her lowly plight,
Immovable till peace obtained from fault
Acknowledged and deplored,⁵ in Adam wrought
Commiseration. Soon his heart relented 940
Towards her, his life so late and sole delight,
Now at his feet submissive in distress,

Creature so fair his reconciliation seeking,
His counsel, whom she had displeased, his aid;
As one disarmed, his anger all he lost, 945
And thus with peaceful words upraised her soon:

"Unwary, and too desirous, as before,
So now, of what thou know'st not,⁶ who desir'st

1. Bitter.

2. Unintentionally.

3. As a suppliant to thee.

4. Eve too now offers to accept the blame for the Fall; and the moral regeneration of man is henceforth possible.

5. Her suppliant posture ("lowly plight") would not be changed till she obtained forgiveness ("peace") from her admission of her fault, and repentance for it.

6. Adam's remark is rueful but affectionate; Eve is still looking for more trouble than she knows how to handle.

The punishment all on thyself! Alas!
 Bear thine own first, ill able to sustain 950
 His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part;⁷
 And my displeasure bear'st so ill. If prayers
 Could alter high decrees, I to that place
 Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
 That on my head all might be visited, 955
 Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiven,
 To me committed, and by me exposed.
 But rise; let us no more contend, nor blame
 Each other, blamed enough elsewhere, but strive
 In offices of love, how we may lighten 960
 Each other's burden in our share of woe;
 Since this day's death denounced, if aught I see,
 Will prove no sudden, but a slow-paced evil,
 A long day's dying to augment our pain,
 And to our seed (O hapless seed!) derived."⁸ 965

To whom thus Eve, recovering heart, replied:
 "Adam, by sad experiment I know
 How little weight my words with thee can find,
 Found so erroneous, thence by just event
 Found so unfortunate; nevertheless, 970
 Restored by thee, vile as I am, to place
 Of new acceptance, hopeful to regain
 Thy love, the sole contentment of my heart
 Living or dying, from thee I will not hide
 What thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen. 975
 Tending to some relief of our extremes,
 Or end, though sharp and sad, yet tolerable,
 As in our evils,⁹ and of easier choice.
 If care of our descent perplex us most,
 Which must be born to certain woe, devoured 980
 By Death at last—and miserable it is
 To be to others cause of misery,
 Our own begotten, and of our loins to bring Into this curséd world a woeful race
 That after wretched life must be at last 985
 Food for so foul a monster—in thy power
 It lies yet ere conception to prevent¹
 The race unblessed, to being yet unbegot.
 Childless thou art, childless remain: so Death
 Shall be deceived his glut, and with us two 990
 Be forced to satisfy his ravenous maw.
 But if thou judge it hard and difficult,
 Conversing, looking, loving, to abstain

7. I.e., ill able to sustain the full wrath of God—of whose wrath, so far, you have felt only the least part.

8. Handed down.

9. A Latinism. The English meaning is something like "given the evil plight in which we find ourselves."

1. Literally, in the Latin root, come before, forestall.

From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet,
 And with desire to languish without hope 995
 Before the present object² languishing
 With like desire, which would be misery
 And torment less than none of what we dread,
 Then both our selves and seed at once to free
 From what we fear for both, let us make short; 1000
 Let us seek Death, or he not found, supply
 With our own hands his office on ourselves.
 Why stand we longer shivering under fears
 That show no end but Death, and³ have the power,
 Of many ways to die the shortest choosing, 1005
 Destruction with destruction to destroy."

She ended here, or vehement despair
 Broke off the rest; so much of Death her thoughts
 Had entertained as dyed her cheeks with pale.
 But Adam, with such counsel nothing swayed, 1010
 To better hopes his more attentive mind
 Laboring had raised, and thus to Eve replied:

"Eve, thy contempt of life and pleasure seems
 To argue in thee something more sublime
 And excellent than what thy mind contemns;⁴ 1015
 But self-destruction therefore⁵ sought refutes
 That excellence thought in thee, and implies,
 Not thy contempt, but anguish and regret
 For loss of life and pleasure overloved.
 Or if thou covet Death as utmost end 1020
 Of misery, so thinking to evade
 The penalty pronounced, doubt not but God
 Hath wiselier armed his vengeful ire than so
 To be forestalled; much more I fear lest Death
 So snatched will not exempt us from the pain. 1025
 We are by doom to pay; rather such acts
 Of contumacy⁶ will provoke the Highest
 To make Death in us live. Then let us seek
 Some safer resolution, which methinks
 I have in view, calling to mind with heed 1030
 Part of our sentence, that thy seed shall bruise
 The serpent's head; piteous amends, unless
 Be meant, whom I conjecture, our grand foe
 Satan, who in the serpent hath contrived
 Against us this deceit. To crush his head 1035
 Would be revenge indeed, which will be lost
 By Death brought on ourselves or childless days
 Resolved, as thou proposeth; so our foe
 Shall 'scape his punishment ordained, and we

2. The present object is of course Eve herself, referring to herself obliquely because she is ashamed to admit that she would pine for Adam, as he for her.

3. I.e., when we.

4. Despises.

5. For this motive.

6. Contempt.

Instead shall double ours upon our heads. 1040
 No more be mentioned then of violence
 Against ourselves and willful barrenness,
 That cuts us off from hope, and savors only
 Rancor and pride, impatience and despite,
 Reluctance⁷ against God and his just yoke 1045
 Laid on our necks. Remember with what mild
 And gracious temper he both heard and judged
 Without wrath or reviling; we expected
 Immediate dissolution, which we thought
 Was meant by Death that day, when lo, to thee 1050
 Pains only in childbearing were foretold,
 And bringing forth, soon recompensed with joy,
 Fruit of thy womb. On me the curse aslope
 Glanced on the ground,⁸ with labor I must earn
 My bread. What harm? Idleness had been worse. 1055
 My labor will sustain me; and lest cold
 Or heat should injure us, his timely care
 Hath unbesought provided, and his hands
 Clothed us unworthy, pitying while he judged.
 How much more, if we pray him, will his ear 1060
 Be open and his heart to pity incline,
 And teach us further by what means to shun
 Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow,
 Which now the sky with various face begins
 To show us in this mountain, while the winds 1065
 Blow moist and keen, shattering the graceful locks
 Of these fair spreading trees—which bids us seek
 Some better shroud, some better warmth to cherish
 Our limbs benumbed, ere this diurnal star⁹
 Leave cold the night, how we his gathered beams, 1070
 Reflected, may with matter sere foment,
 Or by collision of two bodies grind
 The air attrite to fire,¹ as late the clouds,
 Justling or pushed with winds rude in their shock,
 Tine² the slant lightning, whose thwart flame driven down 1075
 Kindles the gummy bark of fir or pine,
 And sends a comfortable heat from far,
 Which might supply the sun. Such fire to use,
 And what may else be remedy or cure
 To evils which our own misdeeds have wrought, 1080
 He will instruct us praying, and of grace
 Beseeching him, so as we need not fear

7. From Latin, luctare, to struggle; here, to oppose (the will of God).

8. The curse, like a spear that almost missed its target, glanced aside and stuck in the ground.

9. The sun.

1. Adam is inventing the burning glass

("matter sere" is dry leaves, twigs, etc.) and the use of flint and steel to start fires. "Attrite": rubbed or worn down; in this sense, the word is more Latin than English.

2. Kindle, light.

To pass commodiously this life, sustained
By him with many comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home. 1085

“What better can we do than to the place
Repairing where he judged us, prostrate fall
Before him reverent, and there confess
Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air 1090
Frequenting,³ sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeigned, and humiliation meek?
Undoubtedly he will relent and turn
From his displeasure; in whose look serene,
When angry most he seemed and most severe, 1095
What else but favor, grace, and mercy shone?”

So spake our father penitent, nor Eve
Felt less remorse: they forthwith to the place
Repairing where he judged them, prostrate fell
Before him reverent, and both confessed 1100
Humbly their faults, and pardon begged, with tears
Watering the ground, and with their sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeigned, and humiliation meek.⁴

3. Filling.

4. The deliberate repetition of six consecutive lines, almost word for word, with only six lines in between, is a very strong mark of closure. Adam and Eve have reached most of the major decisions which will separate their fate from that of Satan.

Book XI. Summary The prayers of Adam and Eve prove acceptable to God. But while man may now hope for ultimate redemption, he may no longer dwell in Paradise; and Michael, the warrior archangel, is dispatched to explain the sentence, offer some hope for the future, and dismiss mankind from the happy garden. Adam is at first overcome with grief; but the angel encourages him, and while Eve is put in a trance, Adam is raised to the peak of a high hill and shown in a vision the future of the human race as far as the flood of Noah.

From Book XII

Summary Continuing his instruction of Adam, Michael relates the history of the world from the time of Noah through the coming of Christ, whose ascent into Heaven and triumph over Death after the Crucifixion he describes. The Church which Christ and his apostles leave behind, however, will not be free from troubles caused by greedy and ambitious men; it will require reform. But the reformers will be persecuted and their road will be hard, until at length, in the Last Judgment; Satan and his kingdom will be dissolved, and new heavens and new earths created to exist in eternal bliss.

[The Departure from Eden]

So spake th' archangel Michaël; then paused,
 As at the world's great period;¹ and our sire,
 Replete with joy and wonder, thus replied:
 "O goodness infinite, goodness immense!
 That all this good of evil shall produce, 470
 And evil turn to good; more wonderful
 Than that which by creation first brought forth
 Light out of darkness! Full of doubt I stand,
 Whether I should repent me now of sin
 By me done and occasioned, or rejoice 475
 Much more that much more good thereof shall spring;
 To God more glory, more good will to men
 From God, and over wrath grace shall abound.
 But say, if our Deliverer up to Heaven
 Must reascend, what will betide the few, 480
 His faithful, left among th' unfaithful herd,
 The enemies of truth? Who then shall guide
 His people, who defend? Will they not deal
 Worse with his followers than with him they dealt?"
 "Be sure they will," said th' angel; "but from Heaven 485
 He to his own a Comforter will send,
 The promise of the Father, who shall dwell,
 His Spirit, within them, and the law of faith,
 Working through love, upon their hearts shall write,
 To guide them in all truth, and also arm 490
 With spiritual armor, able to resist
 Satan's assaults, and quench his fiery darts,
 What² man can do against them, not afraid,
 Though to the death; against such cruelties
 With inward consolations recompensed, 495
 And oft supported so as shall amaze
 Their proudest persecutors.³ For the Spirit,
 Poured first on his Apostles, whom he sends
 To evangelize the nations, then on all
 Baptized, shall them with wondrous gifts endue⁴ 500
 To speak all tongues, and do all miracles,
 As did their Lord before them. Thus they win
 Great numbers of each nation to receive
 With joy the tidings brought from Heaven: at length,
 Their ministry performed, and race well run, 505
 Their doctrine and their story written left,

1. Conclusion.

2. As much as.

3. Milton briefly summarizes here the story of the Christian martyrs.

4. Endow.

They die; but in their room, as they forewarn,
 Wolves shall succeed for teachers, grievous wolves,⁵
 Who all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
 To their own vile advantages shall turn 510
 Of lucre and ambition, and the truth
 With superstitions and traditions taint,
 Left only in those written records pure,
 Though not but by the Spirit understood.
 Then shall they seek to avail themselves of names, 515
 Places, and titles,⁶ and with these to join
 Secular power, though feigning still to act
 By spiritual; to themselves appropriating
 The Spirit of God, promised alike and given
 To all believers; and, from that pretense, 520
 Spiritual laws by carnal⁷ power shall force
 On every conscience, laws which none shall find Left them enrolled, or what the Spirit within Shall on the heart engrave.⁸ What will they then,
 But force the Spirit of Grace itself, and bind 525
 His consort, Liberty? what but unbuild
 His living temples,⁹ built by faith to stand,
 Their own faith, not another's? for, on Earth,
 Who against faith and conscience can be heard
 Infallible? Yet many will presume: 530
 Whence heavy persecution shall arise
 On all who in the worship persevere
 Of Spirit and Truth; the rest, far greater part,
 Will deem in outward rites and specious¹ forms
 Religion satisfied; Truth shall retire 535
 Bestuck with slanderous darts, and works of faith
 Rarely be found. So shall the world go on,
 To good malignant, to bad men benign,
 Under her own weight groaning,² till the day
 Appear of respiration³ to the just 540
 And vengeance to the wicked, at return
 Of Him so lately promised to thy aid,
 The Woman's Seed,⁴ obscurely then foretold,
 Now amplier known thy Savior and thy Lord;
 Last in the clouds from Heaven to be revealed 545

5. To profit by religion was for Milton the lowest of crimes; he felt that priests should serve without pay. In addition, he regularly uses the wolf as an emblem of the Papacy; see Lycidas, line 128.

6. The name "Catholic," the place of court preacher, and the title of "bishop," for example.

7. Fleshly, i.e., secular, of this world.

8. I.e., the wolves will enforce laws which have no ancient authority or appeal to the conscience.

9. Individual believers. Milton's strict Protestant individualism speaks throughout this passage of protest against persecution.

1. Fair-seeming.

2. This passage, which in isolation appears to offer some justification for viewing the end of the poem as essentially pessimistic, should be set against Adam's earlier statement (lines 470-78) that the Fall was really a fortunate event, and gave rise to more good than evil.

3. Relief, refreshment.

4. Christ, whose Second Coming is here foreseen.

In glory of the Father, to dissolve
 Satan with his perverted world; then raise
 From the conflagr⁵ant mass, purged and refined,
 New Heavens, new Earth, ages of endless date
 Founded in righteousness and peace and love,
 To bring forth fruits, joy and eternal bliss." 550

He ended, and thus Adam last replied:
 "How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest,
 Measured this transient world, the race of Time,
 Till Time stand fixed! Beyond is all abyss, 555
 Eternity, whose end no eye can reach.
 Greatly instructed I shall hence depart,
 Greatly in peace of thought, and have my fill
 Of knowledge, what⁶ this vessel can contain;
 Beyond which was my folly to aspire. 560
 Henceforth I learn that to obey is best,
 And love with fear the only God, to walk
 As in his presence, ever to observe
 His providence, and on him sole depend,
 Merciful over all his works, with good 565
 Still overcoming evil, and by small
 Accomplishing great things, by things deemed weak
 Subverting worldly-strong, and worldly-wise
 By simply meek; that suffering for truth's sake
 Is fortitude to highest victory, 570
 And to the faithful, death the gate of life;
 Taught this by his example whom I now
 Acknowledge my Redeemer ever blest."

To whom thus also th' angel last replied:
 "This having learned, thou hast attained the sum⁷ 575
 Of wisdom; hope no higher, though all the stars
 Thou knew'st by name,⁸ and all th' ethereal powers,
 All secrets of the deep, all Nature's works,
 Or works of God in heaven, air, earth, or sea,
 And all the riches of this world enjoy'dst, 580
 And all the rule, one empire. Only add
 Deeds to thy knowledge answerable;⁹ add faith,
 Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love,
 By name to come called charity, the soul
 Of all the rest: then wilt thou not be loath 585
 To leave this Paradise, but shalt possess
 A Paradise within thee, happier far.
 Let us descend now, therefore, from this top
 Of speculation;¹ for the hour precise
 Exacts² our parting hence; and, see! the guards, 590
 By me encamped on yonder hill, expect

5. The burning world.

6. As much as.

7. Total.

8. Michael glances back at the rebuke administered by Raphael in Book VIII to Adam's astronomical curiosity.

9. Corresponding.

1. Hill of vision.

2. Requires.

Their motion, at whose front³ a flaming sword,
 In signal of remove, waves fiercely round.
 We may no longer stay. Go, waken Eve;
 Her also I with gentle dreams have calmed, 595
 Portending good, and all her spirits composed
 To meek submission: thou, at season fit,
 Let her with thee partake what thou hast heard;
 Chiefly what may concern her faith to know,
 The great deliverance by her seed to come 600
 (For by the Woman's Seed) on all mankind;
 That ye may live, which will be many days,⁴
 Both in one faith unanimous; though sad
 With cause for evils past, yet much more cheered
 With meditation on the happy end." 605

He ended, and they both descend the hill.
 Descended, Adam to the bower where Eve
 Lay sleeping ran before, but found her waked;
 And thus with words not sad she him received:
 "Whence thou return'st and whither went'st, I know; 610
 For God is also in sleep, and dreams advise,
 Which he hath sent propitious, some great good
 Presaging, since, with sorrow and heart's distress
 Wearied, I fell asleep. But now lead on;
 In me is no delay; with thee to go 615
 Is to stay here; without thee here to stay
 Is to go hence unwilling; thou to me
 Art all things under Heaven, all places thou,
 Who for my willful crime art banished hence.
 This further consolation yet secure 620
 I carry hence: though all by me is lost,
 Such favor I unworthy am vouchsafed,
 By me the Promised Seed shall all restore."

So spake our mother Eve; and Adam heard
 Well pleased, but answered not; for now too nigh 625
 Th' archangel stood, and from the other hill
 To their fixed station, all in bright array,
 The cherubim descended; on the ground
 Gliding meteorous, as evening mist
 Risen from a river o'er the marish⁵ glides, 630
 And gathers ground fast at the laborer's heel
 Homeward returning. High in front advanced,
 The brandished sword of God before them blazed,
 Fierce as a comet; which with torrid heat,
 And vapor as the Libyan air adust,⁶ 635
 Began to parch that temperate clime; whereat
 In either hand the hastening angel caught
 Our lingering parents, and to th' eastern gate
 Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast

3. Before whom.

4. Adam lived to be 930 (Genesis v.5).

5. Marsh (an old form).

6. The scorched climate of Libya, in North Africa, was proverbial.

To the subjected⁷ plain; then disappeared. 640
 They, looking back, all th' eastern side beheld
 Of Paradise, so late their happy seat,⁸
 Waved over by that flaming brand;⁹ the gate
 With dreadful faces thronged and fiery arms.
 Some natural tears they dropped, but wiped them soon; 645
 The world was all before them, where to choose
 Their place of rest, and Providence their guide.
 They, hand in hand, with wandering steps and slow,
 Through Eden took their solitary way.

1662-67

1667, 1674

7. Low-lying.

8. Home.

9. "Sword," with the extra overtone
of "burning."

Samson Agonistes The figure of Samson, as one finds him in the Book of Judges, does not seem at first glance particularly adaptable to the elevated mode of tragedy. He is a promiscuous, violent fellow, given to riddles and practical jokes—the last of which puts a gruesome end to himself and his enemies. His long shaggy hair, his name (Samson, in Hebrew Shimshun), which includes the Hebrew word for "sun," and a persistent association with fire, all suggest a connection with some primitive solar cult, such as can be seen behind the equivalent figure of Hercules. A burly, truculent, and not-very-clever giant, in short; one would not easily see in him the dignified and purifying figure of the tragic sufferer.

But though Samson's rude vigor and vengeful nature appealed to Milton on one level; the story of his fall through the treachery of a woman on another; and the fact of his blindness on still another; there was a last level on which he could in fact be represented as the type and precursor of the Christian hero. He suffered for his people; in the very pit of despair he was rendered suddenly capable of God's revivifying grace; long exercised in physical warfare, he gave evidence in his last heroic action of having learned the principles of spiritual warfare.

Milton approached the idea of tragedy with hesitations and misgivings; for a Puritan of his day, the very idea of a stage play was instinct with moral danger. But the example of the Greeks and of his much-admired Tasso prevailed; he wrote a "closet drama," a drama intended not for the actual stage but for reading. As a play, Dr. Johnson proclaimed it deficient; it had, he said, a beginning and an end but no proper middle. Modern criticism, dissenting as usual from Dr. Johnson and stimulated as usual by his judgment, has exercised itself to find in Samson's spiritual progression during the successive visits of Manoa, Dalila, and Harapha ample psychological movement to sustain both action and interest. This is beyond doubt a useful exercise; but it is useful also to reflect that Samson acts in the end by direction of an inward spirit, a private, intimate inspiration; and that for the coming of this spirit there is no sufficient preparation. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit" (John iii.8).

The story of Samson is told in Judges xiii-xvi. "Agonistes" means "in struggle" or "under trial"; it is a term derived from the Greek word for a wrestler and suggests not only that Samson is an athlete of the Lord but that he will wrestle with the pillars.

Samson Agonistes

A DRAMATIC POEM

Of That Sort of Dramatic Poem Which Is Called Tragedy

Tragedy, as it was anciently composed, hath been ever held the gravest, moralest, and most profitable of all other poems: therefore said by Aristotle to be of power, by raising pity and fear, or terror, to purge the mind of those and such-like passions, that is, to temper and reduce them to just measure with a kind of delight, stirred up by reading or seeing those passions well imitated.¹ Nor is Nature wanting in her own effects to make good his assertion; for so, in physic, things of melancholic hue and quality are used against melancholy, sour against sour, salt to remove salt humors.² Hence philosophers and other gravest writers, as Cicero, Plutarch, and others, frequently cite out of tragic poets, both to adorn and illustrate their discourse. The Apostle Paul himself thought it not unworthy to insert a verse of Euripides into the text of Holy Scripture, 1 Cor. xv. 33; and Paraeus, commenting on the Revelation, divides the whole book, as a tragedy, into acts, distinguished each by a chorus of heavenly harpings and song between.³ Heretofore men in highest dignity have labored not a little to be thought able to compose a tragedy. Of that honor Dionysius the elder was no less ambitious than before of his attaining to the tyranny.⁴ Augustus Caesar also had begun his Ajax, but unable to please his own judgment with what he had begun, left it unfinished. Seneca the philosopher is by some thought the author of those tragedies (at least the best of them) that go under that name. Gregory Nazianzen, a Father of the Church, thought it not unbecoming the sanctity of his person to write a tragedy, which he entitled Christ Suffering.⁵ This is mentioned to vindicate tragedy from the small esteem, or rather infamy, which in the account of many it undergoes at this

1. Milton is paraphrasing Aristotle's Poetics 6.

2. Italian critics like Minturno had applied notions of homeopathic medicine (like cures like) to tragedy; the idea is not Aristotelean. "Physic": medicine.

3. David Paraeus, a 17th-century German Calvinist.

4. Dionysius (4th century B.C.) won a prize at Athens for tragedy, after becoming tyrant of Syracuse.

5. Seneca the philosopher was indeed the author of tragedies; but Gregory Nazianzen, a Greek ecclesiastic of the 4th century, did not write the tragedy Christ Suffering, which scholarly opinion of Milton's day attributed to him.

day, with other common interludes—happening through the poet's error of intermixing comic stuff with tragic sadness and gravity, or introducing trivial and vulgar persons—which by all judicious hath been counted absurd, and brought in without discretion, corruptly to gratify the people. And, though ancient tragedy use no prologue,⁶ yet using sometimes, in case of self-defense or explanation, that which Martial calls an epistle,⁷ in behalf of this tragedy, coming forth after the ancient manner, much different from what among us passes for best, thus much beforehand may be epistled, that chorus is here introduced after the Greek manner, not ancient only, but modern, and still in use among the Italians.⁸ In the modeling therefore of this poem, with good reason, the ancients and Italians are rather followed, as of much more authority and fame. The measure of verse used in the chorus is of all sorts, called by the Greeks Monostrophic,⁹ or rather Apolelymenon,¹ without regard had to strophe, antistrophe, or epode, which were a kind of stanzas framed only for the music, then used with the chorus that sung; not essential to the poem, and therefore not material; or, being divided into stanzas or pauses, they may be called alloeostropha.² Division into act and scene, referring chiefly to the stage (to which this work never was intended), is here omitted.³

It suffices if the whole drama be found not produced⁴ beyond the fifth act. Of the style and uniformity, and that commonly called the plot, whether intricate or explicit—which is nothing indeed but such economy, or disposition of the fable, as may stand best with verisimilitude and decorum⁵—they only will best judge who are not unacquainted with Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, the three tragic poets unequaled yet by any, and the best rule to all who endeavor to write tragedy. The circumscription of time wherein the whole drama begins and ends is, according to ancient rule and best example, within the space of twenty-four hours.⁶

6. Prologues and epilogues were frequent on the Restoration stage; Milton sets himself apart from contemporary styles.

7. Martial, the Roman epigrammatist of the 1st century A.D., prefixed an epistle to his book of epigrams.

8. Tasso's tragedy Re Torrismondo was modeled closely on classical examples.

9. Not divided into strophe, antistrophe, and epode.

1. Free from stanzaic patterns altogether.

2. With various forms of strophe, irregular.

3. The reader who cares will not find Milton's drama hard to divide into the customary five acts, each ending with a chorus: Act I (Samson and chorus) lines 1–325; II (Samson and Manoa) 326–709; III (Samson and Dalila) 710–1060; IV (Samson and Harapha) 1061–1296; V (Catastrophe) 1297–the end.

4. Led along, drawn out.

5. Decorum, for a Renaissance writer, is not simply solemn or sedate behavior but the use of appropriate and suitable style, depending on speaker, subject, setting, genre, and so on.

6. The so-called "unity of time," limiting dramatic action to 24 hours, was derived from Aristotle's Poetics by the Renaissance critic Castelvetro.

The Argument

Samson, made captive, blind, and now in the prison at Gaza,⁷ there to labor as in a common workhouse, on a festival day, in the general cessation from labor, comes forth into the open air, to a place nigh, somewhat retired, there to sit a while and bemoan his condition. Where he happens at length to be visited by certain friends and equals of his tribe, which make the chorus, who seek to comfort him what they can; then by his old father, Manoa, who endeavors the like, and withal tells him his purpose to procure his liberty by ransom; lastly, that this feast was proclaimed by the Philistines as a day of thanksgiving for their deliverance from the hands of Samson—which yet more troubles him. Manoa then departs to prosecute his endeavor with the Philistian lords for Samson's redemption; who, in the meanwhile, is visited by other persons, and, lastly, by a public officer to require his coming to the feast before the lords and people, to play or show his strength in their presence. He at first refuses, dismissing the public officer with absolute denial to come; at length persuaded inwardly that this was from God, he yields to go along with him, who came now the second time with great threatenings to fetch him. The chorus yet remaining on the place, Manoa returns full of joyful hope to procure ere long his son's deliverance: in the midst of which discourse an Ebrew⁸ comes in haste, confusedly at first, and afterwards more distinctly, relating the catastrophe—what Samson had done to the Philistines, and by accident to himself; wherewith the tragedy ends.

The Persons

SAMSON	HARAPIIA of Gath
MANOA, the father of Samson	Public Officer Messenger
DALILA, his wife	Chorus of Danites ⁹

The Scene, before the Prison in Gaza.

SAMSON. A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To these dark steps, a little further on;
For yonder bank hath choice of sun or shade.
There I am wont to sit, when any chance
Relieves me from my task of servile toil,
Daily in the common prison else enjoined me,¹

5

7. The Philistines, warlike and commercial, lived in Southwest Palestine (the southern coast of modern Israel between, approximately, Tel Aviv and Gaza) in five great cities splendidly named Ashdod, Eshkol, Gaza, Gath, and Ashkalon. They were a wholly urban people as against the largely rural Israelites.

8. Milton follows an old English tradition in transliterating the name "Ebrew." 9. Hebrews of the tribe of Dan, Samson's tribe. When the land of Canaan was divided among the twelve tribes, they received the southern portion, adjacent to the Philistines.

1. The metrical pattern of this line, with its many unaccented syllables and careful placement of the strong word "else," merits careful study.

Where I, a prisoner chained, scarce freely draw
 The air, imprisoned also, close and damp,
 Unwholesome draught. But here I feel amends—
 The breath of heaven fresh blowing, pure and sweet, 10
 With day-spring² born; here leave me to respire.
 This day a solemn feast the people hold
 To Dagon,³ their sea-idol, and forbid
 Laborious works. Unwillingly this rest
 Their superstition yields me; hence, with leave 15
 Retiring from the popular noise, I seek
 This unfrequented place, to find some ease—
 Ease to the body some, none to the mind
 From restless thoughts, that, like a deadly swarm
 Of hornets armed, no sooner found alone 20
 But rush upon me thronging, and present
 Times past, what once I was, and what am now.
 Oh, wherefore was my birth from Heaven foretold
 Twice by an angel,⁴ who at last, in sight
 Of both my parents, all in flames ascended 25
 From off the altar where an offering burned,
 As in a fiery column charioting
 His godlike presence, and from some great act
 Or benefit revealed to Abraham's race?
 Why was my breeding ordered and prescribed 30
 As of a person separate to God,
 Designed for great exploits,⁵ if I must die
 Betrayed, captived, and both my eyes put out,
 Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
 To grind in brazen fetters under task 35
 With this heaven-gifted strength? O glorious strength,
 Put to the labor of a beast, debased
 Lower than bondslave! Promise was that I Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver;
 Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him 40
 Eyeless in Gaza, at the mill with slaves,
 Himself in bonds under Philistian yoke.
 Yet stay; let me not rashly call in doubt
 Divine prediction. What if all foretold
 Had been fulfilled but through mine own default? 45
 Whom have I to complain of but myself,
 Who this high gift of strength committed to me,
 In what part lodged, how easily bereft me,
 Under the seal of silence could not keep,⁶

2. Break of day.

3. Dagon's name comes from dag, fish, and he seems to have had a fishy shape. His would thus be a marine cult to correspond with that of the many Baals, or land gods of the Philistines. See Paradise Lost I.457–66.

4. Before Samson was born an angel foretold that he would begin the delivery of Israel from the Philistines (Judges xiii.5).

5. Samson was a Nazarite, member of an ascetic group specially dedicated to the service of God. See Numbers vi.

6. I.e., who could not keep silent about the high gift of strength committed to me, or about where it was located, or about how easily it could be taken from me.

But weakly to a woman must reveal it, 50
 O'ercome with importunity and tears?
 O impotence of mind in body strong!
 But what is strength without a double share
 Of wisdom? Vast, unwieldy, burdensome,
 Proudly secure,⁷ yet liable to fall 55
 By weakest subtleties; not made to rule,
 But to subserve where wisdom bears command.
 God, when he gave me strength, to show withal,
 How slight the gift was, hung it in my hair.
 But peace! I must not quarrel with the will 60
 Of highest dispensation,⁸ which herein
 Haply had ends above my reach to know.
 Suffices that to me strength is my bane,
 And proves the source of all my miseries—
 So many, and so huge, that each apart 65
 Would ask a life to wail. But, chief of all,
 O loss of sight, of thee I most complain!
 Blind among enemies! O worse than chains,
 Dungeon, or beggary, or decrepit age!
 Light, the prime work of God,⁹ to me is extinct, 70
 And all her various objects of delight
 Annulled, which might in part my grief have eased.
 Inferior to the vilest now become
 Of man or worm, the vilest here excel me:
 They creep, yet see; I, dark in light, exposed 75
 To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong,
 Within doors, or without, still as a fool,
 In power of others, never in my own—
 Scarce half I seem to live, dead more than half.
 O dark, dark, dark, amid the blaze of noon, 80
 Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse
 Without all hope of day!
 O first-created beam, and thou great Word,
 "Let there be light, and light was over all,"
 Why am I thus bereaved thy prime decree? ¹ 85
 The sun to me is dark
 And silent² as the moon,
 When she deserts the night,
 Hid in her vacant interlunar cave.³
 Since light so necessary is to life, 90
 And almost life itself, if it be true
 That light is in the soul,
 She all in every part,⁴ why was the sight

7. Confident, free from care (Latin, cura).

8. Providence.

9. God's first ("prime") act in creating the world was to say "Let there be light" (Genesis i.3), a phrase Milton paraphrases below.

1. I.e., why am I thus deprived of the first-created (and most important) thing?

2. Unperceived.

3. Ancient astronomers supposed that during the daytime the moon hid in a cave.

4. A famous formula of Plotinus (Ennead IV.ii.1) describes the soul as "all in all and all in every part."

To such a tender ball as th' eye confined,
 So obvious⁵ and so easy to be quenched, 95
 And not, as feeling, through all parts diffused,
 That she might look at will through every pore?
 Then had I not been thus exiled from light,
 As in the land of darkness, yet in light,
 To live a life half dead, a living death, 100
 And buried; but, O yet more miserable!
 Myself my sepulcher, a moving grave;
 Buried, yet not exempt,
 By privilege of death and burial,
 From worst of other evils, pains, and wrongs; 105
 But made hereby obnoxious⁶ more
 'To all the miseries of life,
 Life in captivity
 Among inhuman foes.
 But who are these? for with joint pace I hear 110
 The tread of many feet steering this way;
 Perhaps my enemies, who come to stare
 At my affliction, and perhaps to insult,
 Their daily practice to afflict me more.
 CHORUS. This, this is he; softly a while; 115
 Let us not break in upon him.
 O change beyond report, thought, or belief!
 See how he lies at random, carelessly diffused,⁷
 With languished head unpropped,
 As one past hope, abandoned, 120
 And by himself given over,
 In slavish habit, ill-fitted weeds⁸
 O'er-worn and soiled.
 Or do my eyes misrepresent? Can this be he,
 That heroic, that renowned, 125
 Irresistible Samson? whom, unarmed,
 No strength of man, or fiercest wild beast, could withstand:⁹
 Who tore the lion as the lion tears the kid;
 Ran on embattled armies clad in iron,
 And, weaponless himself, 130
 Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery¹
 Of brazen shield and spear, the hammered cuirass,
 Chalybean-tempered² steel, and frock of mail
 Adamantean proof;
 But safest he who stood aloof, 135
 When insupportably³ his foot advanced,
 In scorn of their proud arms and warlike tools,

5. Exposed.

6. Vulnerable, subject.

7. Literally, "poured forth," out-stretched.

8. Rags.

9. Judges xiv.5-6 tells the story of Samson ripping apart a lion with his bare hands.

1. Weapons of forged steel, but also fraudulent, exterior protections.

2. The Chalybes lived on the Black Sea and were famous ironworkers. "Adamantean proof": hard as adamant, i.e., diamond.

3. Irresistibly.

Spurned them to death by troops. The bold Ascalonite⁴
 Fled from his lion ramp; old warriors turned Their plated backs under his heel, 140
 Or groveling soiled their crested helmets in the dust.
 Then with what trivial weapon came to hand,
 The jaw of a dead ass, his sword of bone,
 A thousand foreskins fell, the flower of Palestine,
 In Ramath-lechi, famous to this day;⁵ 145
 Then by main force pulled up, and on his shoulders bore,
 The gates of Azza, post and massy bar,
 Up to the hill by Hebron, seat of giants old,
 No journey of a Sabbath day, and loaded so,
 Like whom the Gentiles feign to bear up Heaven.⁶ 150
 Which shall I first bewail,
 Thy bondage or lost sight,
 Prison within prison
 Inseparably dark?
 Thou art become (O worst imprisonment!) 155
 The dungeon of thyself; thy soul
 (Which men enjoying sight oft without cause complain),
 Imprisoned now indeed,
 In real darkness of the body dwells,
 Shut up from outward light 160
 To incorporate with gloomy night;
 For inward light, alas!
 Puts forth no visual beam.⁷
 O mirror of our fickle state,
 Since man on earth unparalleled!⁸ 165
 The rarer thy example stands,
 By how much from the top of wondrous glory,
 Strongest of mortal men,
 To lowest pitch of abject fortune thou art fallen!
 For him I reckon not in high estate 170
 Whom long descent of birth,
 Or the sphere⁹ of fortune, raises;
 But thee, whose strength, while virtue was her mate,
 Might have subdued the Earth,

4. A man from Ascalon, or Ashkalon, one of the five great Philistine cities. "Lion ramp": a lion in the act of attacking its prey, rampant.

5. On one occasion Samson killed a thousand Philistines (i.e., "foreskins", uncircumcised warriors), using the jawbone of an ass (Judges xv.15-17). Judges xvi.3 tells how Samson, to escape his enemies, picked up and carried off the gates of Gaza (Azza).

6. In Greek (or, as Milton calls it, Gentile) mythology, Atlas supports the heavens. From Gaza to Hebron would be about forty miles—no journey for the day of rest.

7. Renaissance physiologists supposed the eye saw by sending forth a "visual beam" which it directed at various objects.

8. I.e., no such example (has been seen) since man (was) on earth. "Fickle": changeable.

9. "Sphere": wheel. Fortune was described as possessing a wheel which merely by rotating automatically interchanged the highest and lowest social positions. Milton's definition of "high estate" is interior and spiritual; he has no interest in the old "Fall of Princes" theme. In fact, the play exactly reverses that theme.

- Universally crowned with highest praises. 175
- SAMSON. I hear the sound of words; their sense the air
Dissolves unjointed ere it reach my ear.
- CHORUS. He speaks: let us draw nigh. Matchless in might,
The glory late of Israel, now the grief! 180
We come, thy friends and neighbors not unknown,
From Eshtaol and Zora's fruitful vale,
To visit or bewail thee; or, if better,
Counsel or consolation we may bring,
Salve to thy sores: apt words have power to swage¹
The tumors of a troubled mind, 185
And are as balm to festered wounds.
- SAMSON. Your coming, friends, revives me; for I learn
Now of my own experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are who "friends"
Bear in their superscription (of the most 190
I would be understood). In prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head,
Not to be found, though sought. Ye see, O friends,
How many evils have enclosed me round;
Yet that which was the worst now least afflicts me, 195
Blindness; for, had I sight, confused with shame,
How could I once look up, or heave² the head,
Who, like a foolish pilot, have shipwrecked
My vessel trusted to me from above,
Gloriously rigged, and for a word, a tear, 200
Fool! have divulged the secret gift of God
To a deceitful woman? Tell me, friends,
Am I not sung and proverb'd for a fool
In every street? Do they not say, "How well
Are come upon him his deserts"? Yet why? 205
Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me; of wisdom nothing more than mean.³
This with the other should at least have paired;⁴
These two, proportioned ill, drove me transverse.⁵
- CHORUS. Tax not divine disposal. Wisest men 210
Have erred, and by bad women been deceived;
And shall again, pretend they ne'er so wise.⁶
Deject not, then, so overmuch thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides.
Yet, truth to say, I oft have heard men wonder 215
Why thou should'st wed Philistian women rather Than of thine own tribe fairer, or as fair,
At least of thy own nation, and as noble.
- SAMSON. The first I saw at Timna, and she pleased
Me, not my parents, that I sought to wed 220

1. Assuage.

2. Lift.

3. Average.

4. Been equal.

5. Off the true course.

6. I.e., intend they never so wisely.

The daughter of an infidel.⁷ They knew not
 That what I motioned⁸ was of God; I knew
 From intimate impulse, and therefore urged
 The marriage on, that, by occasion hence,⁹
 I might begin Israel's deliverance— 225
 The work to which I was divinely called.
 She proving false, the next I took to wife
 (O that I never had! fond wish too late!)
 Was in the vale of Sorec, Dálila,¹
 That specious monster, my accomplished snare. 230
 I thought it lawful from my former act
 And the same end, still watching to oppress
 Israel's oppressors. Of what now I suffer
 She was not the prime cause, but I myself,
 Who, vanquished with a peal of words (O weakness!), 235
 Gave up my fort of silence to a woman.

CHORUS. In seeking just occasion to provoke
 The Philistine, thy country's enemy,
 Thou never wast remiss, I bear thee witness;
 Yet Israel still serves with all his sons.² 240

SAMSON. That fault I take not on me, but transfer
 On Israel's governors and heads of tribes,
 Who, seeing those great acts which God had done
 Singly by me against their conquerors,
 Acknowledged not, or not at all considered 245
 Deliverance offered. I, on th' other side,
 Used no ambition to commend my deeds;³
 The deeds themselves, though mute, spoke loud the doer.
 But they persisted deaf, and would not seem
 To count them things worth notice, till at length 250
 Their lords, the Philistines, with gathered powers,
 Entered Judea seeking me, who then
 Safe to the rock of Etham was retired,
 Not flying, but forecasting in what place
 To set upon them, what advantaged best. 255
 Meanwhile the men of Judah, to prevent
 The harass of their land, beset me round;
 I willingly on some conditions came
 Into their hands, and they as gladly yield me
 To the uncircumcised⁴ a welcome prey, 260
 Bound with two cords. But cords to me were threads Touched with the flame: on their whole host I flew Unarmed, and with a trivial weapon felled
 Their choicest youth; they only lived who fled.⁵

7. Judges xiv.1-4 tells the story of Samson's first decision to marry outside his own tribe and nation.

8. Intended.

9. I.e., so that it might provide an occasion for me to begin Israel's deliverance.

1. Judges xvi.4.

2. I.e., Israel and the children of Israel are still in servitude.

3. I.e., sought for no testimonials to my actions.

4. Foreigners, the people outside the covenant of Abraham.

5. Judges xv.8-17 tells the tale of Samson's single-handed victory, using a "trivial weapon," the jawbone of an ass.

Had Judah that day joined, or one whole tribe,
They had by this⁶ possessed the towers of Gath,
And lorded over them whom now they serve. 265

But what more oft, in nations grown corrupt,
And by their vices brought to servitude,
Than to love bondage more than liberty,
Bondage with ease than strenuous liberty,⁷ 270

And to despise, or envy, or suspect,
Whom God hath of his special favor raised
As their deliverer? If he aught begin,
How frequent to desert him, and at last
To heap ingratitude on worthiest deeds! 275

CHORUS. Thy words to my remembrance bring
How Succoth and the fort of Penue!l
Their great deliverer contemned,
The matchless Gideon, in pursuit 280
Of Madian, and her vanquished kings;⁸

And how ingrateful Ephraim
Had dealt with Jephtha, who by argument,
Not worse than by his shield and spear,
Defended Israel from the Ammonite, 285

Had not his prowess quelled their pride
In that sore battle when so many died
Without reprieve, adjudged to death
For want of well pronouncing Shibboleth.⁹

SAMSON. Of such examples add me to the roll.
Me easily indeed mine¹ may neglect,
But God's proposed deliverance not so. 290

CHORUS. Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men,
Unless there be who think not God at all. 295

If any be, they walk obscure;
For of such doctrine never was there school,
But the heart of the fool,
And no man therein doctor but himself.²

Yet more there be who doubt his ways not just,
As to his own edicts found contradicting; 300
Then give the reins to wandering thought,
Regardless of his glory's diminution,

Till, by their own perplexities involved,
They ravel³ more, still less resolved,
But never find self-satisfying solution. 305

As if they would confine th' Interminable,⁴
And tie him to his own prescript,

6. By this time.

7. Milton obviously has in mind, not only early Israel, but also contemporary England.

8. Judges viii: Succoth and Penue!l refused aid to Gideon when he was pursuing the common foe, and he punished them.

9. Judges xi and xii.

1. My people.

2. Psalm xiv deals with the fool who says in his heart there is no God. "Doctor": teacher.

3. Become entangled.

4. Infinite.

Who made our laws to bind us, not himself,
And hath full right to exempt 310
Whomso it pleases him by choice
From national obstriction,⁵ without taint
Of sin, or legal debt;
For with his own laws he can best dispense.

He would not else, who never wanted means, 315
Nor in respect of the enemy just cause,
To set his people free,
Have prompted this heroic Nazarite,
Against his vow of strictest purity,
To seek in marriage that fallacious bride, 320
Unclean, unchaste.

Down, Reason, then; at least, vain reasonings down;
Though Reason here aver
That moral verdict quits her of unclean:
Unchaste was subsequent; her stain, not his.⁶ 325
But see! here comes thy reverend sire,
With careful step, locks white as down,⁷
Old Manoa: advise⁸

Forthwith how thou ought'st to receive him.

SAMSON. Ay me! another inward grief, awaked 330
With mention of that name, renews th' assault.

MANOA. Brethren and men: of Dan (for such ye seem,
Though in this uncouth⁹ place), if old respect,
As I suppose, towards your once gloried friend,
My son, now captive, hither hath informed¹ 335
Your younger feet, while mine, cast back with age,
Came lagging after, say if he be here.

CHORUS. As signal² now in low dejected state
As erst in highest, behold him where he lies.

MANOA. O miserable change! Is this the man, 340
That invincible Samson, far renowned,
The dread of Israel's foes, who with a strength
Equivalent to angels' walked their streets,
None offering fight; who, single combatant,
Dued their armies ranked in proud array, 345
Himself an army—now unequal match
To save himself against a coward armed
At one spear's length? O ever-failing trust
In mortal strength! and, oh, what not in man
Deceivable and vain? ³ Nay, what thing good 350

5. Obligation, i.e., the law against marrying Gentiles (Deuteronomy vii.3). The chorus here accepts Samson's argument that God had prompted him inexplicably to marry the woman of Timna.
6. The chorus, having accused the woman of Timna of being unclean (i.e., Gentile and taboo) and unchaste, now admits that since Samson married her at God's instigation she was not unclean to him; and that she was unchaste only after Samson left her. Reason is therefore puzzled.

7. "Careful": full of care; "down": swan's down.

8. Reflect, consider inwardly.

9. Unknown, unfamiliar.

1. Directed.

2. Notable, eminent.

3. I.e., what is there in man that is not deceivable and vain?

Prayed for, but often proves our woe, our bane?
 I prayed for children, and thought barrenness
 In wedlock a reproach; I gained a son,
 And such a son as all men hailed me happy:
 Who would be now a father in my stead? 355
 Oh, wherefore did God grant me my request,
 And as a blessing with such pomp adorned?
 Why are his gifts desirable, to tempt
 Our earnest prayers, then, given with solemn hand
 As graces, draw a scorpion's tail behind? 360
 For this did the angel twice descend?⁴ for this.
 Ordained thy nurture holy, as of a plant
 Select and sacred? glorious for a while,
 The miracle of men; then in an hour
 Ensnared, assaulted, overcome, led bound,
 Thy foes' derision, captive, poor and blind,
 Into a dungeon thrust, to work with slaves!
 Alas! methinks whom God hath chosen once
 To worthiest deeds, if he through frailty err,
 He should not so o'erwhelm, and as a thrall 370
 Subject him to so foul indignities,
 Be it but for honor's sake of former deeds.

SAMSON. Appoint not heavenly disposition,⁵ father.

Nothing of all these evils hath befallen me
 But justly; I myself have brought them on;
 Sole author I, sole cause.⁶ If aught seem vile; 375
 As vile hath been my folly, who have profaned
 The mystery of God, given me under pledge
 Of vow, and have betrayed it to a woman,
 A Canaanite, my faithless enemy. 380
 This well I knew, nor was at all surprised,
 But warned by oft experience. Did not she
 Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
 The secret wrested from me in her height
 Of nuptial love professed, carrying it straight 385
 To them who had corrupted her, my spies
 And rivals? ⁷ In this other was there found
 More faith, who, also in her prime of love,
 Spousal embraces, vitiated with gold,
 Though offered only, by the scent conceived,
 Her spurious first-born, treason against me? ⁸ 390
 Thrice she assayed, with flattering prayers and sighs,
 And amorous reproaches, to win from me

4. The angel who announced Samson's birth was sent a second time, in answer to Manoah's request, to give instructions concerning his education and training.

5. I.e., do not presume to control heaven's decisions.

6. Like Adam, Paradise Lost X, Samson proves his own resurgent virtue by accepting responsibility for his own faults.

7. Samson's first wife, the woman of Timna, revealed Samson's riddle to his enemies (Judges xiv.8-19).

8. At the mere scent of gold, Dalila conceived a bastard ("spurious") offspring for Samson—treason.

My capital secret,⁹ in what part my strength
 Lay stored, in what part summed, that she might know; 395
 Thrice I deluded her, and turned to sport
 Her importunity; each time perceiving
 How openly and with what impudence
 She purposed to betray me, and (which was worse Than undissembled hate) with what contempt 400
 She sought to make me traitor to myself.¹
 Yet, the fourth time, when, mustering all her wiles,
 With blandished parleys, feminine assaults,
 Tongue-batteries, she surceased² not day nor night
 To storm me, over-watched and wearied out, 405
 At times when men seek most repose and rest,
 I yielded, and unlocked her all my heart,
 Who, with a grain of manhood well resolved,
 Might easily have shook off all her snares;
 But foul effeminacy³ held me yoked 410
 Her bondslave. O indignity, O blot
 To honor and religion! servile mind
 Rewarded well with servile punishment!
 The base degree to which I now am fallen,
 These rags, this grinding, is not yet so base 415
 As was my former servitude, ignoble,
 Unmanly, ignominious, infamous,
 True slavery; and that blindness worse than this,
 That saw not how degenerately I served.

MANOA. I cannot praise thy marriage-choices, son, 420
 Rather approved them not; but thou didst plead
 Divine impulsion⁴ prompting how thou might'st
 Find some occasion to infest our foes.
 I state not that; this I am sure, our foes
 Found soon occasion thereby to make thee 425
 Their captive, and their triumph; thou the sooner
 Temptation found'st, or over-potent charms,
 To violate the sacred trust of silence
 Deposited within thee; which to have kept
 Tacit was in thy power. True; and thou bear'st 430
 Enough, and more, the burden of that fault;
 Bitterly hast thou paid, and still art paying,
 That rigid score.⁵ A worse thing yet remains:
 This day the Philistines a popular feast
 Here celebrate in Gaza, and proclaim 435
 Great pomp, and sacrifice, and praises loud,
 To Dagon, as their god who hath delivered
 Thee, Samson, bound and blind, into their hands—

9. The secret Dalila learned was of capital importance; also, it involved the hair on Samson's head (caput).

1. Judges xvi.5-20.

2. Forbore.

3. "Effeminacy": uxoriousness, overfondness, the fault of Adam.

4. Prudent Manoa mistrusts the inner impulse which is Samson's conscience and the first principle of his life. "Infest": attack.

5. Debt.

Them out of thine, who slew'st them many a slain.⁶
 So Dagon shall be magnified,⁷ and God,
 Besides whom is no god, compared with idols,
 Disglorified, blasphemed, and had in scorn
 By th' idolatrous rout amidst their wine;
 Which to have come to pass by means of thee,
 Samson, of all thy sufferings think the heaviest,
 Of all reproach the most with shame that ever
 Could have befallen thee and thy father's house.

440

445

SAMSON. Father, I do acknowledge and confess
 That I this honor, I this pomp, have brought
 To Dagon, and advanced his praises high
 Among the heathen round; to God have brought Dishonor, obloquy, and oped the mouths
 Of idolists and atheists; have brought scandal
 To Israel, diffidence⁸ of God, and doubt
 In feeble hearts, propense⁹ enough before
 To waver, or fall off and join with idols:
 Which is my chief affliction, shame and sorrow,
 The anguish of my soul, that suffers not
 Mine eye to harbor sleep, or thoughts to rest.
 This only hope relieves me, that the strife
 With me hath end. All the contést is now
 'Twixt God and Dagon. Dagon hath presumed,
 Me overthrown, to enter lists¹ with God,
 His deity comparing and preferring
 Before the God of Abraham. He, be sure,
 Will not connive,² or linger, thus provoked,
 But will arise, and his great name assert.
 Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
 Such a discomfit as shall quite despoil him
 Of all these boasted trophies won on me,
 And with confusion blank³ his worshipers.

450

455

460

465

470

MANOA. With cause this hope relieves thee; and these words
 I as a prophecy receive; for God
 (Nothing more certain) will not long defer
 To vindicate the glory of his name
 Against all competition, nor will long
 Endure it doubtful whether God be Lord
 Or Dagon. But for thee what shall be done?
 Thou must not in the meanwhile, here forgot,
 Lie in this miserable loathsome plight
 Neglected. I already have made way
 To some Philistian lords, with whom to treat
 About thy ransom. Well they may by this⁴
 Have satisfied their utmost of revenge,

475

480

6. I.e., who slew many a one for them.

7. Glorified.

8. Mistrust.

9. Inclined.

1. Jousting courts as in medieval tour-

neys.

2. Hesitate, palter.

3. Confound, turn pale.

4. By this time.

- By pains and slaveries, worse than death, inflicted. 485
 On thee, who now no more canst do them harm.
- SAMSON. Spare that proposal, father; spare the trouble
 Of that solicitation. Let me here,
 As I deserve, pay on my punishment,
 And expiate, if possible, my crime, 490
 Shameful garrulity. To have revealed
 Secrets of men, the secrets of a friend,
 How heinous had the fact been, how deserving Contempt and scorn of all; to be excluded
 All friendship, and avoided as a blab, 495
 The mark of fool set on his front! ⁵ But I
 God's counsel have not kept, his holy secret
 Presumptuously have published, impiously,
 Weakly at least and shamefully: a sin
 That Gentiles in their parables condemn 500
 To their abyss and horrid pains confined.⁶
- MANOA. Be penitent, and for thy fault contrite;
 But act not in thy own affliction, son.
 Repent the sin; but, if the punishment
 Thou canst avoid, self-preservation bids; 505
 Or th' execution leave to high disposal,
 And let another hand, not thine, exact
 Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Perhaps
 God will relent, and quit ⁷ thee all his debt;
 Who ever more approves and more accepts 510
 (Best pleased with humble and filial submission)
 Him who, imploring mercy, sues for life,
 Than who, self-rigorous, chooses death as due; ⁸
 Which argues over-just, and self-displeased
 For self-offense more than for God offended. 515
 Reject not, then, what offered means who knows
 But God hath set before us to return thee
 Home to thy country and his sacred house,
 Where thou may'st bring thy offerings, to avert
 His further ire, with prayers and vows renewed. 520
- SAMSON. His pardon I implore; but, as for life,
 To what end should I seek it? When in strength
 All mortals I excelled, and great in hopes,
 With youthful courage, and magnanimous thoughts
 Of birth from Heaven foretold and high exploits, 525
 Full of divine instinct, after some proof
 Of acts indeed heroic, far beyond
 The sons of Anak,⁹ famous now and blazed,
 Fearless of danger, like a petty god

5. Forehead.

6. In classical legend, Tantalus was condemned to hell and torment because he betrayed the secrets of the gods, and Prometheus was savagely punished for giving to mankind the secret of fire.

7. Cancel.

8. This is very similar to Adam's argument against suicide in Paradise Lost X.1013-30.

9. Giants, described in Numbers xiii.

- I walked about, admired of all, and dreaded
 On hostile ground, none daring my affront. 530
 Then, swoll'n with pride, into the snare I fell
 Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,¹
 Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life;
 At length to lay my head and hallowed pledge 535
 Of all my strength in the lascivious lap
 Of a deceitful concubine, who shore me,
 Like a tame wether,² all my precious fleece,
 Then turned me out ridiculous, despoiled,
 Shaven, and disarmed among my enemies. 540
- CHORUS. Desire of wine and all delicious drinks,
 Which many a famous warrior overturns,
 Thou could'st repress; nor did the dancing ruby,
 Sparkling out-poured, the flavor or the smell,
 Or taste, that cheers the heart of gods and men, 545
 Allure thee from the cool crystalline stream.
- SAMSON. Wherever fountain or fresh current flowed
 Against the eastern ray, translucent, pure
 With touch ethereal of Heaven's fiery rod,³
 I drank, from the clear milky juice allaying 550
 Thirst, and refreshed; nor envied them the grape
 Whose heads that turbulent liquor fills with fumes.
- CHORUS. O madness! to think use of strongest wines
 And strongest drinks our chief support of health,
 When God with these forbidden made choice to rear 555
 His mighty champion, strong above compare,
 Whose drink was only from the liquid brook! ⁴
- SAMSON. But what availed this temperance, not complete
 Against another object more enticing?
 What boots it at one gate to make defense, 560
 And at another to let in the foe,
 Effeminately vanquished? by which means,
 Now blind, disheartened, shamed, dishonored, quelled,
 To what can I be useful? wherein serve
 My nation, and the work from Heaven imposed? 565
 But to sit idle on the household hearth,
 A burdensome drone; to visitance a gaze,⁵
 Or pitied object; these redundant ⁶ locks,
 Robustious to no purpose, clustering down,
 Vain monument of strength; till length of years 570
 And sedentary numbness craze ⁷ my limbs
 To a contemptible old age obscure.

1. Sensual, sexual lures.

2. A castrated male sheep.

3. The rays of the sun. Samson is saying that wherever water was purest and cleanest, he drank of it—never of wine; "rod" intimates a parallel with Moses, who like Samson brought forth a spring in the middle of the desert.

4. Samson's calling as a Nazarite forbade him the use of wine.

5. A spectacle for visitors.

6. In its Latin sense, "redundant" means "flowing," in the English sense "unnecessary," "unemployed." "Robustious": strong.

7. Weaken, twist.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin, or the draff of servile food,⁸
Consume me, and oft-invoked death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. 575

MANOA. Wilt thou then serve the Philistines with that gift
Which was expressly given thee to annoy them?
Better at home lie bed-ridden, not only idle,
Inglorious, unemployed, with age outworn. 580
But God, who caused a fountain at thy prayer
From the dry ground to spring, thy thirst to allay
After the brunt of battle,⁹ can as easy
Cause light again within thy eyes to spring,
Wherewith to serve him better than thou hast. 585
And I persuade me so. Why else this strength
Miraculous yet remaining in those locks?
His might continues in thee not for naught,
Nor shall his wondrous gifts be frustrate thus.

SAMSON. All otherwise to me my thoughts portend, 590
That these dark orbs no more shall treat with light,
Nor th' other light of life continue long,
But yield to double darkness nigh at hand;
So much I feel my genial spirits¹ droop,
My hopes all flat: Nature within me seems 595
In all her functions weary of herself;
My race of glory run, and race of shame,
And I shall shortly be with them that rest.

MANOA. Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind, and humors black 600
That mingle with thy fancy.² I, however,
Must not omit a father's timely care
To prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom or how else: meanwhile be calm,
And healing words from these thy friends admit. 605

SAMSON. Oh, that torment should not be confined
To the body's wounds and sores,
With maladies innumerable
In heart, head, breast, and reins,
But must secret passage find 610
To th' inmost mind,
There exercise all his fierce accidents,³
And on her purest spirits prey,
As on entrails, joints, and limbs,
With answerable pains, but more intense, 615
Though void of corporal sense!

8. Garbage given to slaves as food.

9. The story of how Samson, with divine aid, created a spring in the desert after the battle with the ass's jawbone, is told in Judges xv.18-19.

1. Life forces, vital energy.

2. Black bile, the melancholy humor, was supposed to have specially ill effects on the imagination.

3. I.e., there put into effect all the fierce qualities (of torment).

My griefs not only pain me
 As a lingering disease,
 But, finding no redress, ferment and rage;
 Nor less than wounds immedicable
 Rankle, and fester, and gangrene,
 To black mortification.⁴ 620
 Thoughts, my tormentors, armed with daily stings,
 Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
 Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise
 Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb
 Or med'cinal liquor can assuage,
 Nor breath of vernal air from snowy Alp.
 Sleep hath forsook and given me o'er
 To death's benumbing opium as my only cure;
 Thence faintings, swoonings of despair,
 And sense of Heaven's desertion.⁵ 630

I was his nursling once and choice delight,
 His destined from the womb,
 Promised by heavenly message ⁶ twice descending.
 Under his special eye 635
 Abstemious I grew up and thrived amain;
 He led me on to mightiest deeds,
 Above the nerve ⁷ of mortal arm,
 Against the uncircumcised, our enemies:
 But now hath cast me off as never known,
 And to those cruel enemies,
 Whom I by his appointment had provoked,
 Left me, all helpless with th' irreparable loss
 Of sight, reserved alive to be repeated ⁸
 The subject of their cruelty or scorn. 645
 Nor am I in the list of them that hope;
 Hopeless are all my evils, all remediless.
 This one prayer yet remains, might I be heard,
 No long petition—speedy death,
 The close of all my miseries and the balm. 650

CHORUS. Many are the sayings of the wise,
 In ancient and in modern books enrolled,
 Extolling patience as the truest fortitude,
 And to the bearing well of all calamities,
 All chances incident to man's frail life, 655
 Consolatories writ
 With studied argument, and much persuasion sought,
 Lenient ⁹ of grief and anxious thought.
 But with th' afflicted in his pangs their sound
 Little prevails, or rather seems a tune 660

4. A medical term for decay.

5. Samson comes close here to suggesting that religious despair is the symptom of a physical condition; cf. Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy.

6. Messenger.

7. Sinew, hence, strength.

8. Repeatedly, continually.

9. Soothing (from Latin, leniens).

Harsh, and of dissonant mood ¹ from his complaint,
Unless he feel within
Some source of consolation from above,
Secret refreshings that repair his strength
And fainting spirits uphold.²

665

God of our fathers! what is man,
That thou towards him with hand so various—
Or might I say contrarious?—
Temper'st thy providence through his short course:
Not evenly, as thou rul'st
The angelic orders, and inferior creatures mute,
Irrational and brute?³

670

Nor do I name of men the common rout,
That, wandering loose about,
Grow up and perish as the summer fly,
Heads without name, no more remembered;
But such as thou hast solemnly elected,
With gifts and graces eminently adorned,
To some great work, thy glory,
And people's safety, which in part they effect.
Yet toward these, thus dignified, thou oft,
Amidst their height of noon,
Changest thy countenance and thy hand, with no regard
Of highest favors past

675

680

685

From thee on them, or them to thee of service.⁴
Nor only dost degrade them, or remit
To life obscured, which were a fair dismission,
But throw'st them lower than thou didst exalt them high,
Unseemly falls in human eye,
Too grievous for the trespass or omission;
Oft leav'st them to the hostile sword
Of heathen and profane, their carcasses
To dogs and fowls a prey, or else captived,
Or to the unjust tribunals, under change of times,
And condemnation of the ingrateful multitude.⁵
If these they 'scape, perhaps in poverty
With sickness and disease thou bow'st them down,
Painful diseases and deformed,
In crude ⁶ old age;
Though not disordinate,⁷ yet causeless suffering
The punishment of dissolute days. In fine,

690

695

700

1. The musical mode, or psychological mood, of the comforter jars on that of the sufferer.

2. Compare Job's answers to his comforters, especially xiv.

3. The chorus feels that the beings above and below man on the Great Chain of Being (the nine orders of angels above, the many mute beasts below) are ruled by a less capricious code than is man.

4. Manoa has already voiced this plaint, lines 368-72.

5. After the Restoration, many Puritan leaders were executed, jailed, or exiled, while even the corpses of some who were dead were exhumed, beheaded, and publicly exhibited.

6. Literally, "raw," but, figuratively, "premature."

7. I.e., though they have not been dissipated (disordinate). Milton resented having the gout, supposed to be a disease of the luxurious.

Just or unjust alike seem miserable,
For oft alike both come to evil end.

So deal not with this once thy glorious champion,
The image of thy strength, and mighty minister.⁸
What do I beg? how hast thou dealt already!
Behold him in this state calamitous, and turn
His labors, for thou canst, to peaceful end.

But who is this? what thing of sea or land—

Female of sex it seems—

That, so bedecked, ornate, and gay,

Comes this way sailing,

Like a stately ship

Of Tarsus, bound for th' isles

Of Javan or Cadire,⁹

With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,

Sails filled, and streamers waving,

Courted by all the winds that hold them play;

An amber¹ scent of odorous perfume

Her harbinger, a damsel train behind?

Some rich Philistian matron she may seem;

And now, at nearer view, no other certain

Than Dálila thy wife.²

SAMSON. My wife! my traitress! let her not come near me.

CHORUS. Yet on she moves; now stands and eyes thee fixed,

About t'have spoke; but now, with head declined,

Like a fair flower surcharged with dew, she weeps,

And words address'd seem into tears dissolved,

Wetting the borders of her silken veil.

But now again she makes address to speak.

DÁLILA. With doubtful feet and wavering resolution

I came, still dreading thy displeasure, Samson;

Which to have merited, without excuse,

I cannot but acknowledge. Yet, if tears

May expiate (though the fact more evil drew

In the perverse event than I foresaw),³

My penance hath not slackened, though my pardon

No way assured. But conjugal affection,

Prevailing over fear and timorous doubt,

Hath led me on, desirous to behold

Once more thy face, and know of thy estate,⁴

If aught in my ability may serve

To lighten what thou suffer'st, and appease

Thy mind with what amends is in my power—

8. Agent, but with a religious connotation as well.

9. Tarsus (the birthplace of St. Paul) is a trading city in modern Turkey; the isles of Javan are the isles of Greece, supposed to be populated by descendants of Javan, son of Noah's son Japhet. Cadire is modern Cadiz in Spain. Many of these geographical details are to be found in Isaiah II.lxvi, etc.

1. Ambergris.

2. The circling, mocking, derisive description of the chorus carefully holds Samson in suspense till the last minute.

3. I.e., my action turned out worse than I intended.

4. Condition.

Though late, yet in some part to recompense
My rash but more unfortunate misdeed.

SAMSON. Out, out, hyena! ⁵ These are thy wonted arts,
And arts of every woman false like thee,
To break all faith, all vows, deceive, betray; 750
Then, as repentant, to submit, beseech,
And reconciliation move with feigned remorse,
Confess, and promise wonders in her change—
Not truly penitent, but chief to try
Her husband, how far urged his patience bears, 755
His virtue or weakness which way to assail:
Then, with more cautious and instructed skill,
Again transgresses, and again submits;
That wisest and best men, full oft beguiled,
With goodness principled not to reject 760
The penitent, but ever to forgive,
Are drawn to wear out miserable days,
Entangled with a poisonous bosom-snake,
If not by quick destruction soon cut off,
As I by thee, to ages an example. 765

DALILA. Yet hear me, Samson, not that I endeavor
To lessen or extenuate my offense,
But that, on th' other side, if it be weighed
By itself, with aggravations not surcharged,
Or else with just allowance counterpoised, 770
I may, if possible, thy pardon find
The easier towards me, or thy hatred less.
First granting, as I do, it was a weakness
In me, but incident to all our sex,
Curiosity, inquisitive, importune 775
Of secrets, then with like infirmity
To publish them, both common female faults,
Was it not weakness also to make known,
For importunity, that is for naught,
Wherein consisted all thy strength and safety? 780
To what I did thou show'dst me first the way.
But I to enemies revealed, and should not!
Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty: ⁶
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel.
Let weakness, then, with weakness come to parle, ⁷ 785
So near related, or the same of kind;
Thine forgive mine, that men may censure thine
The gentler, if severely thou exact not
More strength from me than in thyself was found.

5. Apart from being an animal of odious habits and appearance, the hyena was a traditional beast of hypocrisy, supposed to entice men to destruction by its power of imitating the human voice.
6. Like Eve, who wore down Adam with importunity, then blamed him for giving in (Paradise Lost IX.1155-61)

Dalila blames Samson for doing what she herself has demanded.
7. Parley, agreement.

And what if love, which thou interpret'st hate,
 The jealousy of love, powerful of sway 790
 In human hearts, nor less in mine towards thee,
 Caused what I did? I saw thee mutable
 Of fancy; feared lest one day thou would'st leave me,
 As her at Timna; sought by all means, therefore, 795
 How to endear, and hold thee to me firmest:
 No better way I saw than by importuning
 To learn thy secrets, get into my power
 Thy key of strength and safety. Thou wilt say,
 "Why, then, revealed?" I was assured by those 800
 Who tempted me that nothing was designed
 Against thee but safe custody and hold.
 That made for me; I knew that liberty
 Would draw thee forth to perilous enterprises,
 While I at home sat full of cares and fears, 805
 Wailing thy absence in my widowed bed;
 Here I should still enjoy thee, day and night,
 Mine and love's prisoner, not the Philistines',
 Whole to myself, unhazarded abroad,
 Fearless at home of partners in my love. 810
 These reasons in love's law have passed for good,
 Though fond ⁸ and reasonless to some perhaps;
 And love hath oft, well meaning, wrought much woe,
 Yet always pity or pardon hath obtained.
 Be not unlike all others, not austere 815
 As thou art strong, inflexible as steel.
 If thou in strength all mortals dost exceed,
 In uncompassionate anger do not so.

SAMSON. How cunningly the sorceress displays
 Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine! 820
 That malice, not repentance, brought thee hither,
 By this appears. I gave, thou say'st, th' example,
 I led the way—bitter reproach, but true;
 I to myself was false ere thou to me.
 Such pardon, therefore, as I give my folly 825
 Take to thy wicked deed; which when thou seest
 Impartial, self-severe, inexorable,
 Thou wilt renounce thy seeking, and much rather Confess it feigned. Weakness is thy excuse,
 And I believe it, weakness to resist 830
 Philistian gold. If weakness may excuse,
 What murderer, what traitor, parricide,
 Incestuous, sacrilegious, but may plead it?
 All wickedness is weakness; that plea, therefore,
 With God or man will gain thee no remission. 835
 But love constrained thee! Call it furious rage
 To satisfy thy lust. Love seeks to have love;

My love how could'st thou hope, who took'st the way
To raise in me inexpressible⁹ hate,
Knowing, as needs I must, by thee betrayed?
In vain thou striv'st to cover shame with shame,
Or by evasions thy crime uncover'st more.

840

DALILA. Since thou determin'st weakness for no plea
In man or woman, though to thy own condemning,
Hear what assaults I had, what snares besides,
What sieges girt me round, ere I consented;
Which might have awed the best resolved of men,
The constantest, to have yielded without blame.
It was not gold, as to my charge thou lay'st,
That wrought with me.¹ Thou know'st the magistrates
And princes of my country came in person,
Solicited, commanded, threatened, urged,
Adjured by all the bonds of civil duty
And of religion—pressed how just it was,
How honorable, how glorious, to entrap
A common enemy, who had destroyed
Such numbers of our nation: and the priest
Was not behind, but ever at my ear,
Preaching how meritorious with the gods
It would be to ensnare an irreligious
Dishonorer of Dagon. What had I
To oppose against such powerful arguments?
Only my love of thee held long debate,
And combated in silence all these reasons
With hard contest. At length, that grounded maxim,
So rife and celebrated in the mouths
Of wisest men, that to the public good
Private respects must yield,² with grave authority
Took full possession of me, and prevailed;
Virtue, as I thought, truth, duty, so enjoining.

845

850

855

860

865

870

SAMSON. I thought where all thy circling wiles would end,
In feigned religion, smooth hypocrisy!
But, had thy love, still odiously pretended,
Been, as it ought, sincere, it would have taught thee
Far other reasonings, brought forth other deeds.
I, before all the daughters of my tribe
And of my nation, chose thee from among
My enemies, loved thee, as too well thou knew'st;
Too well; unbosomed all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpowered
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing;
Yet now am judged an enemy. Why, then,

875

880

9. Inextinguishable.

1. Judges xvi is very explicit that Dalila betrayed Samson for money—eleven hundred pieces of silver offered her by each one of the Philistine lords.

2. Reason of state, political expediency, was in Milton's eyes the worst of all possible motives for an action. Cf. Paradise Lost IV. 393–94.

Didst thou at first receive me for thy husband,
 Then, as since then, thy country's foe professed?
 Being once a wife, for me thou wast to leave 885
 Parents and country; nor was I their subject,
 Nor under their protection, but my own;
 Thou mine, not theirs.³ If aught against my life
 Thy country sought of thee, it sought unjustly,
 Against the law of nature, law of nations; 890
 No more thy country, but an impious crew
 Of men conspiring to uphold their state
 By worse than hostile deeds, violating the ends
 For which our country is a name so dear;
 Not therefore to be obeyed. But zeal moved thee; 895
 To please thy gods thou didst it! Gods unable To acquit themselves and prosecute their foes
 But by ungodly deeds, the contradiction
 Of their own deity, gods cannot be;
 Less therefore to be pleased, obeyed, or feared. 900
 These false pretexts and varnished colors failing,
 Bare in thy guilt, how foul must thou appear!

DALILA. In argument with men a woman ever
 Goes by the worse,⁴ whatever be her cause.

SAMSON. For want of words, no doubt, or lack of breath! 905
 Witness when I was worried with thy peals.

DALILA. I was a fool, too rash, and quite mistaken
 In what I thought would have succeeded best.
 Let me obtain forgiveness of thee, Samson;
 Afford me place to show what recompense 910
 Towards thee I intend for what I have misdone,
 Misguided. Only what remains past cure
 Bear not too sensibly,⁵ nor still insist

To afflict thyself in vain. Though sight be lost,
 Life yet hath many solaces, enjoyed 915
 Where other senses want not their delights—

At home, in leisure and domestic ease,
 Exempt from many a care and chance to which Eyesight exposes, daily, men abroad.

I to the lords will intercede, not doubting
 Their favorable ear, that I may fetch thee 920
 From forth this loathsome prison house, to abide

With me, where my redoubled love and care,
 With nursing diligence, to me glad office,

May ever tend about thee to old age, 925
 With all things grateful cheered, and so supplied

That what by me thou hast lost thou least shalt miss.
 SAMSON. No, no; of my condition take no care;

3. I.e., you were under my protection, not theirs.

4. Comes off second best.

5. "Too sensibly": with too great sensitivity.

It fits not; thou and I long since are twain;
 Nor think me so unwary or accursed ⁶ 930
 To bring my feet again into the snare
 Where once I have been caught. I know thy trains,
 Though dearly to my cost, thy gins, and toils.⁷
 Thy fair enchanted cup, and warbling charms,
 No more on me have power; their force is nulled; 935
 So much of adder's wisdom I have learned,
 To fence my ear against thy sorceries.⁸
 If in my flower of youth and strength, when all men
 Loved, honored, feared me, thou alone could hate me,
 Thy husband, slight me, sell me, and forgo me, 940
 How would'st thou use me now, blind, and thereby
 Deceivable, in most things as a child
 Helpless, thence easily contemned and scorned,
 And last neglected! How would'st thou insult,
 When I must live uxorious to thy will 945
 In perfect thralldom! how again betray me,
 Bearing my words and doings to the lords
 To gloss upon, and, censuring, frown or smile! ⁹
 This jail I count the house of liberty
 To thine, whose doors my feet shall never enter. 950

DALILA. Let me approach at least, and touch thy hand.
 SAMSON. Not for thy life, lest fierce remembrance wake
 My sudden rage to tear thee joint by joint.¹
 At distance I forgive thee, go with that;
 Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works 955
 It hath brought forth to make thee memorable
 Among illustrious women, faithful wives;
 Cherish thy hastened widowhood with the gold
 Of matrimonial treason: so farewell.

DALILA. I see thou art implacable, more deaf 960
 To prayers than winds and seas. Yet winds to seas
 Are reconciled at length, and sea to shore:
 Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
 Eternal tempest never to be calmed.
 Why do I humble thus myself, and, suing 965
 For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate,
 Bid go with evil omen,² and the brand
 Of infamy upon my name denounced?
 To mix with thy concerns I desist
 Henceforth, nor too much disapprove my own. 970

6. I.e., so neglectful or bewitched.

7. "Trains": tricks; "gins": snares; "toils": nets. The traditional images for female wiles are heightened by reference to an enchanting cup and warbled charms reminiscent of Homer's Circe (Odyssey, X).

8. Psalm lviii verses 4 and 5 describes the "deaf adder that stoppeth her ear; which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely."

9. Milton's libertarian hatred of censorship and managed liberty is very apparent.

1. What Samson might remember, at the touch of Dalila, which would lead him to tear her to pieces, is a problem in domestic psychology.

2. I.e., dismissed with threats of ill fame.

- Fame, if not double-faced, is double-mouthed,
 And with contrary blast proclaims most deeds;³
 On both his wings, one black, th' other white,
 Bears greatest names in his wild airy flight.
 My name, perhaps, among the circumcised 975
 In Dan, in Judah, and the bordering tribes,
 To all posterity may stand defamed,
 With malediction mentioned, and the blot
 Of falsehood most unconjugal traduced.
 But in my country, where I most desire, 980
 In Ecron, Gaza, Asdod, and in Gath,
 I shall be named among the famoussest
 Of women, sung at solemn festivals,
 Living and dead recorded, who to save
 Her country from a fierce destroyer chose 985
 Above the faith of wedlock bands; my tomb
 With odors⁴ visited and annual flowers;
 Not less renowned than in Mount Ephraim.
 Jael, who, with inhospitable guile,
 Smote Sisera sleeping,⁵ through the temples nailed. 990
 Nor shall I count it heinous to enjoy
 The public marks of honor and reward
 Conferred upon me for the piety
 Which to my country I was judged to have shown.
 At this whoever envies or repines, 995
 I leave him to his lot, and like my own.
- CHORUS. She's gone, a manifest serpent by her sting Discovered in the end, till now concealed.
- SAMSON. So let her go. God sent her to debase me,
 And aggravate my folly, who committed 1000
 To such a viper his most sacred trust
 Of secrecy, my safety, and my life.
- CHORUS. Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,
 After offense returning, to regain
 Love once possessed, nor can be easily 1005
 Repulsed, without much inward passion⁶ felt,
 And secret sting of amorous remorse.
- SAMSON. Love-quarrels oft in pleasing concord end;
 Not wedlock-treachery, endangering life.
- CHORUS. It is not virtue, wisdom, valor, wit, 1010
 Strength, comeliness of shape, or amplest merit.
 That woman's love can win, or long inherit;⁷
 But what it is hard is to say,
 Harder to hit,

3. The figure of Fame, in Milton's youthful poem On the Fifth of November, does indeed have a double tongue, one for truth and one for lies. Fame or Rumor was a favorite grotesque allegorical figure in classical poets like Ovid (Metamorphoses XII.43 ff.) and Virgil (Aeneid IV.173 ff.).

4. Perfumes.

5. Jael lured Sisera, who saw in her the wife of his ally and friend, into a tent, and there drove a large nail into his head (Judges iv.17-21).

6. Suffering.

7. Possess.

Which way soever men refer it
 (Much like thy riddle, Samson),⁸ in one day
 Or seven though one should musing sit.
 If any of these, or all, the Timnian bride
 Had not so soon preferred
 Thy paranymp, worthless to thee compared,
 Successor in thy bed,⁹
 Nor both so loosely disallied
 Their nuptials,¹ nor this last so treacherously
 Had shorn the fatal harvest of thy head.
 Is it for that² such outward ornament
 Was lavished on their sex, that inward gifts
 Were left for haste unfinished, judgment scant,
 Capacity not raised to apprehend
 Or value what is best
 In choice, but ofttest to affect³ the wrong?
 Or was too much of self-love mixed,
 Of constancy no root infix'd,
 That either they love nothing, or not long?
 Whate'er it be, to wisest men and best,
 Seeming at first all heavenly under virgin veil,
 Soft, modest, meek, demure,
 Once joined, the contrary she proves, a thorn
 Intestine,⁴ far within defensive arms
 A cleaving⁵ mischief, in his way to virtue
 Adverse and turbulent; or by her charms
 Draws him awry, enslaved
 With dotage, and his sense depraved
 To folly and shameful deeds, which ruin ends.
 What pilot so expert but needs must wreck,
 Embarked with such a steers-mate at the helm?
 Favored of Heaven who finds
 One virtuous, rarely found,
 That in domestic good combines:
 Happy that house! his way to peace is smooth:
 But virtue which breaks through all opposition,
 And all temptation can remove,
 Most shines and most is acceptable above.
 Therefore God's universal law
 Gave to the man despotic power
 Over his female in due awe,
 Nor from that right to part an hour,
 Smile she or lour:
 So shall he least confusion draw
 On his whole life, not swayed

8. Samson's riddle is propounded and answered in Judges xiv, verses 14 and 18.
 9. I.e., if any of these ("virtue, . . .," lines 1010-11) sufficed, Samson's first wife (the Timnian bride) would not have preferred to marry his "paranymp" (best man). See Judges xiv.
 1. I.e., nor would both your wives have been so careless about their marriage vows.

 2. Because.
 3. Desire.
 4. An inward thorn, a viper in the bosom.
 5. Clinging; a traditional emblem of marriage was the elm and the vine.

By female usurpation, nor dismayed.

1060

But had we best retire? I see a storm.

SAMSON. Fair days have oft contracted ⁶ wind and rain.

CHORUS. But this another kind of tempest brings.

SAMSON. Be less abstruse; my riddling days are past.

CHORUS. Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear

1065

The bait of honeyed words; a rougher tongue

Draws hitherward, I know him by his stride,

The giant Harapha ⁷ of Gath, his look

Haughty, as is his pile ⁸ high-built and proud.

Comes he in peace? What wind hath blown him hither

1070

I less conjecture than when first I saw

The sumptuous Dalila floating this way: ⁹

His habit carries peace, his brow defiance.

SAMSON. Or peace or not, alike to me he comes.

CHORUS. His fraught ¹ we soon shall know: he now arrives.

1075

HARAPHA. I come not, Samson, to condole thy chance,

As these ² perhaps, yet wish it had not been,

Though for no friendly intent. I am of Gath;

Men call me Harapha, of stock renowned

As Og, or Anak, and the Emims old

1080

That Kiriathaim held: ³ Thou know'st me now,

If thou at all art known: ⁴ Much I have heard

Of thy prodigious might and feats performed,

Incredible to me, in this displeased,

That I was never present on the place

1085

Of those encounters, where we might have tried

Each other's force in camp or listed field; ⁵

And now am come to see of whom such noise

Hath walked about, and each limb to survey,

If thy appearance answer loud report.

1090

SAMSON. The way to know were not to see, but taste: ⁶

HARAPHA. Dost thou already single ⁷ me? I thought

Gyves and the mill had tamed thee. O that fortune

Had brought me to the field where thou art famed

To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw!

1095

I should have forced thee soon wish ⁸ other arms,

6. Drawn after them.

7. Harapha does not appear at all within the story told in the Book of Judges; Milton invented him with the help of some hints from the image of Goliath in I Samuel xvii and some other giants in II Samuel xxi. Rapha means giant in Hebrew.

8. Body; with the suggestion that he is tall as a tower.

9. That the various visitors of Samson are blown hither and yon by the winds of occasion serves to emphasize the deep steadiness of Samson's final resolution.

1. Intent.

2. The chorus of Danites, naturally sympathetic to Samson.

3. Og was a giant King of Bashan in Deuteronomy iii.11; Anak and his sons were giants in Numbers xiii.33; the Emims were giants in Deuteronomy ii. 10-11 and Genesis xiv.5.

4. I.e., you know me now if you know anything; but also "if you are anyone worth knowing." Compare Satan's brag to Zephon and Ithuriel, "Not to know me argues yourselves unknown." Paradise Lost IV.830.

5. "Camp": field of battle (from Latin, campus); "listed field": lists, tourney-ground.

6. Make a trial of.

7. Challenge; "gyves": chains.

8. Eighteenth-century editors changed "wish" to "with", easing the grammar at the expense of the sense.

Or left thy carcass where the ass lay thrown;
 So had the glory of prowess been recovered
 To Palestine, won by a Philistine
 From the unforeskinned race, of whom thou bear'st 1100
 The highest name for valiant acts. That honor,
 Certain to have won by mortal duel from thee,
 I lose, prevented by thy eyes put out.

SAMSON. Boast not of what thou would'st have done, but do
 What then thou would'st; thou seest it in thy hand. 1105

HARAPHA. To combat with a blind man I disdain,
 And thou hast need much washing to be touched.

SAMSON. Such usage as your honorable lords
 Afford me, assassinated⁹ and betrayed;
 Who durst not with their whole united powers 1110
 In fight withstand me single and unarmed,
 Nor in the house with chamber ambushes¹
 Close-banded durst attack me, no, not sleeping,
 Till they had hired a woman with their gold,
 Breaking her marriage-faith, to circumvent me. 1115
 Therefore, without feigned shifts, let be assigned
 Some narrow place enclosed, where sight may give thee,
 Or rather flight, no great advantage on me;
 Then put on all thy gorgeous arms, thy helmet
 And brigandine of brass, thy broad habergeon, 1120
 Vant-brace and greaves and gauntlet;² add thy spear,
 A weaver's beam, and seven-times-folded shield:
 I only with an oaken staff will meet thee,
 And raise such outcries on thy clattered iron,
 Which long shall not withhold me from thy head, 1125
 That in a little time, while breath remains thee,
 Thou oft shalt wish thyself at Gath, to boast
 Again in safety what thou would'st have done
 To Samson, but shalt never see Gath more.

HARAPHA. Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms, 1130
 Which greatest heroes have in battle worn,
 Their ornament and safety, had not spells
 And black enchantments, some magician's art,
 Armed thee or charmed thee strong, which thou from Heaven
 Feign'dst at thy birth was given thee in thy hair, 1135
 Where strength can least abide, though all thy hairs
 Were bristles ranged like those that ridge the back
 Of chafed wild boars or ruffled porcupines.

SAMSON. I know no spells, use no forbidden arts;
 My trust is in the Living God, who gave me, 1140

9. Treacherously assailed.

1. Samson refers to the four occasions on which Philistines hid in his bedroom while Dalila tried unsuccessfully to betray him to them.

2. "Brigandine": a padded chest-protector, covered with iron scales or rings; "habergeon": a coat of mail, a hauberk;

"vant-brace": a steel cuff for the forearm; greaves protect the shins and thighs, and gauntlets the hands. A weaver's beam, emblem of weightiness, is used to keep threads hanging tautly in a loom. All these military details are from the description of Goliath, I Samuel xvii.4-7.

At my nativity, this strength, diffused
 No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
 Than thine, while I preserved these locks unshorn,
 The pledge of my unviolated vow.

For proof hereof, if Dagon be thy god, 1145
 Go to his temple, invoke his aid

With solemnest devotion, spread before him

How highly it concerns his glory now

To frustrate and dissolve these magic spells,

Which I to be the power of Israel's God 1150

Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,

Offering to combat thee, his champion bold,

With th' utmost of his godhead seconded:

Then thou shalt see, or rather to thy sorrow

Soon feel, whose God is strongest, thine or mine. 1155

HARAPHA. Presume not on thy God. Whate'er he be,

Thee he regards not, owns not, hath cut off

Quite from his people, and delivered up

Into thy enemies' hand; permitted them

To put out both thine eyes, and fettered send thee 1160

Into the common prison, there to grind

Among the slaves and asses, thy comrades,

As good for nothing else, no better service

With those thy boisterous locks; no worthy match

For valor to assail, nor by the sword 1165

Of noble warrior, so to stain his honor,

But by the barber's razor best subdued.

SAMSON. All these indignities, for such they are

From thine,³ these evils I deserve and more,

Acknowledge them from God inflicted on me

Justly, yet despair not of his final pardon, 1170

Whose ear is ever open, and his eye

Gracious to re-admit the suppliant;

In confidence whereof I once again

Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight,

By combat to decide whose god is God, 1175

Thine, or whom I with Israel's sons adore.

HARAPHA. Fair honor that thou dost thy God, in trusting

He will accept thee to defend his cause,

A murderer, a revolter, and a robber! 1180

SAMSON. Tongue-doughty giant, how dost thou prove me these?

HARAPHA. Is not thy nation subject to our lords?

Their magistrates confessed it when they took thee

As a league-breaker, and delivered bound

Into our hands; ⁴ for hadst not committed 1185

3. Thy people.

4. Judges xiv.8-20 and xv.9-15 describe the episode. Samson when he came to Timna to be married proposed a riddle and a bet to the marriage guests; they got his intended bride to reveal the riddle, and in revenge he killed thirty of their people and left the lady to the "paranymph," or best man. Old Testament Samson is indeed a rude and savage figure; Milton, with characteristic confidence, undertakes his legal defense in everything.

Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Ascalon, who never did thee harm,
Then, like a robber, stripp'dst them of their robes?
The Philistines, when thou hadst broke the league,
Went up with arméd powers thee only seeking,
To others did no violence nor spoil. 1190

SAMSON. Among the daughters of the Philistines
I chose a wife, which argued me no foe,
And in your city held my nuptial feast;
But your ill-meaning politician lords, 1195
Under pretense of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who, threatening cruel death, constrained the bride
To wring from me, and tell to them, my secret,
That solved the riddle which I had proposed. 1200
When I perceived all set on enmity,
As on my enemies, wherever chanced,
I used hostility, and took their spoil,
To pay my underminers in their coin.
My nation was subjected to your lords! 5 1205
It was the force of conquest; force with force
Is well ejected when the conquered can.
But I, a private person, whom my country
As a league-breaker gave up bound, presumed
Single rebellion, and did hostile acts! 1210
I was no private,⁶ but a person raised,
With strength sufficient, and command from Heaven,
To free my country. If their servile minds
Me, their deliverer sent, would not receive,
But to their masters gave me up for nought, 1215
Th' unworthier they; whence to this day they serve.
I was to do my part from Heaven assigned,
And had performed it if my known offense
Had not disabled me, not all your force.
These shifts refuted, answer thy appellant,⁷ 1220
Though by his blindness maimed for high attempts,
Who now defies thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprise of small enforce.⁸

HARAPHA. With thee, a man condemned, a slave enrolled,
Due by the law to capital punishment? 1225
To fight with thee no man of arms will deign.

SAMSON. Cam'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,
To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict?
Come nearer; part not hence so slight informed;
But take good heed my hand survey not thee. 1230

HARAPHA. O Baal-zebub! ⁹ can my ears unused

5. I.e., you argue that my nation was subjected to your lords.

6. Outlaw.

7. I.e., now that we've disposed of these dodges, answer your challenger. "Apel-lant": literally, caller, one who calls you out.

8. Difficulty.

9. Baal-zebub is Beelzebub, god of the flies.

Hear these dishonors, and not render death?

SAMSON. No man withholds thee; nothing from thy hand

Fear I incurable; bring up thy van;¹

My heels are fettered, but my fist is free.

1235

HARAPHA. This insolence other kind of answer fits.

SAMSON. Go, baffled coward, lest I run upon thee,

Though in these chains, bulk without spirit vast,

And with one buffet lay thy structure low,

Or swing thee in the air, then dash thee down,

1240

To the hazard of thy brains and shattered sides.

HARAPHA. By Astaroth,² ere long thou shalt lament

These braveries,³ in irons loaden on thee.

CHORUS. His giantship is gone somewhat crestfallen,

Stalking with less unconscionable⁴ strides,

1245

And lower looks, but in a sultry chafe.

SAMSON. I dread him not, nor all his giant brood,

Though fame divulge him father of five sons,

All of gigantic size, Goliath chief.⁵

CHORUS. He will directly to the lords, I fear,

1250

And with malicious counsel stir them up

Some way or other yet further to afflict thee.

SAMSON. He must allege some cause, and offered fight

Will not dare mention, lest a question rise

Whether he durst accept the offer or not;

1255

And that he durst not plain enough appeared.

Much more affliction than already felt

They cannot well impose, nor I sustain,

If they intend advantage of my labors,

The work of many hands, which earns my keeping,

1260

With no small profit daily to my owners.

But come what will; my deadliest foe will prove

My speediest friend, by death to rid me hence;

The worst that he can give to me the best.

Yet so it may fall out, because their end

1265

Is hate, not help to me, it may with mine

Draw their own ruin who attempt the deed.

CHORUS. O, how comely it is, and how reviving

To the spirits of just men long oppressed,

When God into the hands of their deliverer

1270

Puts invincible might,

To quell the mighty of the earth, th' oppressor,

The brute and boisterous force of violent men,

Hardy and industrious to support

Tyrannic power, but raging to pursue

1275

The righteous, and all such as honor truth!

1. The vanguard of an army was, naturally, the first group engaged. Samson invites Harapha to start the fight.

2. Moon-goddess of the Philistines, consort of Dagon. See Paradise Lost I.437-46.

3. Boasts.

4. Excessive.

5. II Samuel xxi describes four giants "born to the giant in Gath" and slain by David; Milton makes the identification with Harapha on his own.

He all their ammunition
And feats of war defeats,⁶
With plain heroic magnitude of mind
And celestial vigor armed; 1280
Their armories and magazines contemns,
Renders them useless, while
With wingéd expedition ⁷

Swift as the lightning glance he executes
His errand on the wicked, who, surprised, 1285
Lose their defense, distracted and amazed.

But patience is more oft the exercise
Of saints, the trial of their fortitude,
Making them each his own deliverer,
And victor over all 1290
That tyranny or fortune can inflict.

Either of these is in thy lot,⁸
Samson, with might endued
Above the sons of men; but sight bereaved
May chance to number thee with those 1295
Whom patience finally must crown.⁹

This Idol's day hath been to thee no day of rest,
Laboring thy mind
More than the working day thy hands.
And yet, perhaps, more trouble is behind; 1300
For I descry this way

Some other tending; in his hand
A scepter or quaint ¹ staff he bears,
Comes on amain, speed in his look.
By his habit I discern him now 1305
A public officer, and now at hand.

His message will be short and voluble.²

OFFICER. Ebrews, the prisoner Samson here I seek.

CHORUS. His manacles remark ³ him; there he sits.

OFFICER. Samson, to thee our lords thus bid me say: 1310

This day to Dagon is a solemn feast,
With sacrifices, triumph, pomp, and games;
Thy strength they know surpassing human rate,
And now some public proof thereof require
To honor this great feast, and great assembly. 1315
Rise, therefore, with all speed, and come along,
Where I will see thee heartened and fresh clad,
To appear as fits before th' illustrious lords.

SAMSON. Thou know'st I am an Ebrew; therefore tell them

Our law forbids at their religious rites 1320
My presence; for that cause I cannot come.

6. A touch of the pervasive Miltonic punning.

7. Haste.

8. Fate.

9. The Christian tragedy, like the Christian epic, must center ultimately on an act of passive, not active, fortitude. It is the special achievement of Samson to combine in a single action both qualities.

1. Ornamented.

2. To the point.

3. Distinguish.

OFFICER. This answer, be assured, will not content them.

SAMSON. Have they not sword-players, and every sort

Of gymnastic artists, wrestlers, riders, runners,

Jugglers and dancers, antics, mummers, mimics,⁴

1325

But they must pick me out, with shackles tired,

And over-labored at their public mill,

To make them sport with blind activity?

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,

On my refusal, to distress me more,

1330

Or make a game of my calamities?

Return the way thou cam'st; I will not come.

OFFICER. Regard thyself; this will offend them highly.

SAMSON. Myself? my conscience, and internal peace.

Can they think me so broken, so debased

1335

With corporal servitude, that my mind ever

Will condescend to such absurd commands?

Although their drudge, to be their fool or jester,

And, in my midst of sorrow and heart-grief,

To show them feats, and play before their god,

1340

The worst of all indignities, yet on me

Joined⁵ with supreme contempt! I will not come.

OFFICER. My message was imposed on me with speed,

Brooks no delay: is this thy resolution?

SAMSON. So take it with what speed thy message needs.

1345

OFFICER. I am sorry what this stoutness⁶ will produce.

SAMSON. Perhaps thou shalt have cause to sorrow indeed.

CHORUS. Consider, Samson; matters now are strained

Up to the height, whether to hold or break.

He's gone, and who knows how he may report

1350

Thy words by adding fuel to the flame?

Expect another message, more imperious,

More lordly thundering than thou well wilt bear.

SAMSON. Shall I abuse this consecrated gift

Of strength, again returning with my hair

1355

After my great transgression, so requite

Favor renewed, and add a greater sin

By prostituting holy things to idols,

A Nazarite, in place abominable,

Vaunting my strength in honor to their Dagon?

1360

Besides how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,

What act more execrably unclean,⁷ profane?

CHORUS. Yet with this strength thou serv'st the Philistines,

Idoltrous, uncircumcised, unclean.

SAMSON. Not in their idol-worship, but by labor

1365

Honest and lawful to deserve my food

Of those who have me in their civil power.

CHORUS. Where the heart joins not, outward acts defile not.

4. "Gymnastic artists": gymnasts; "antics": clowns; "mummers": actors.

5. Enjoined, ordered.

6. Defiance.

7. Taboo.

- SAMSON. Where outward force constrains, the sentence holds: ⁸
 But who constrains me to the temple of Dagon, 1370
 Not dragging? The Philistian lords command:
 Commands are no constraints. If I obey them,
 I do it freely, venturing to displease
 God for the fear of man, and man prefer,
 Set God behind; which, in his jealousy, 1375
 Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness.
 Yet that he may dispense with me, or thee,
 Present in temples at idolatrous rites
 For some important cause,⁹ thou need'st not doubt.
- CHORUS. How thou wilt here come off surmounts my reach. 1380
- SAMSON. Be of good courage; I begin to feel
 Some rousing motions in me, which dispose
 To something extraordinary my thoughts.
 I with this messenger will go along—
 Nothing to do, be sure, that may dishonor 1385
 Our Law, or stain my vow of Nazarite.
 If there be aught of presage in the mind,
 This day will be remarkable in my life
 By some great act, or of my days the last.¹
- CHORUS. In time thou hast resolved: the man returns. 1390
- OFFICER. Samson, this second message from our lords
 To thee I am bid say: Art thou our slave;
 Our captive, at the public mill our drudge,
 And dar'st thou, at our sending and command,
 Dispute thy coming? Come without delay; 1395
 Or we shall find such engines to assail
 And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force,
 Though thou wert firmlier fastened than a rock.
- SAMSON. I could be well content to try their art,
 Which to no few of them would prove pernicious; 1400
 Yet, knowing their advantages too many,
 Because ² they shall not trail me through their streets
 Like a wild beast, I am content to go:
 Masters' commands come with a power resistless
 To such as owe them absolute subjection; 1405
 And for a life who will not change his purpose?
 (So mutable are all the ways of men!)
 Yet this be sure, in nothing to comply
 Scandalous or forbidden in our Law.
- OFFICER. I praise thy resolution.³ Doff these links: 1410
 By this compliance thou wilt win the lords
 To favor, and perhaps to set thee free.

8. I.e., where outward force constrains, your motto may be right.

9. God will make a special dispensation for Samson to attend idolatrous ceremonies "for some important cause," which Samson cannot yet define but which he intuits.

1. By a classic device of dramatic irony,

Samson proposes as alternatives two events which will both simultaneously come true. "Presage": premonition, pre-sight

2. So that.

3. Decision. "Doff these links": take off these chains.

- SAMSON. Brethren, farewell. Your company along
 I will not wish, lest it perhaps offend them
 To see me girt with friends; and how the sight 1415
 Of me, as of a common enemy,
 So dreaded once, may now exasperate them
 I know not. Lords are lordliest in their wine;
 And the well-feasted priest then soonest fired
 With zeal, if aught religion seem concerned;⁴ 1420
 No less the people, on their holy-days,
 Impetuous, insolent, unquenchable.
 Happen what may, of me expect to hear
 Nothing dishonorable, impure, unworthy
 Our God, our Law, my nation, or myself; 1425
 The last of me or no I cannot warrant.
- CHORUS. Go, and the Holy One
 Of Israel be thy guide
 To what may serve his glory best, and spread his name
 Great among the heathen round; 1430
 Send thee the angel of thy birth, to stand
 Fast by thy side, who from thy father's field
 Rode up in flames after his message told
 Of thy conception, and be now a shield
 Of fire; that Spirit that first rushed on thee 1435
 In the camp of Dan,
 Be efficacious in thee now at need!⁵
 For never was from Heaven imparted
 Measure of strength so great to mortal seed
 As in thy wondrous actions hath been seen. 1440
 But wherefore comes old Manoa in such haste
 With youthful steps? Much livelier than erewhile
 He seems: supposing here to find his son,
 Or of him bringing to us some glad news?
- MANOA. Peace with you, brethren! My inducement hither 1445
 Was not at present here to find my son,
 By order of the lords new parted hence
 To come and play before them at their feast.
 I heard all as I came; the city rings,
 And numbers thither flock: I had no will, 1450
 Lest I should see him forced to things unseemly.
 But that which moved my coming now was chiefly
 To give ye part with me⁶ what hope I have
 With good success to work his liberty.
- CHORUS. That hope would much rejoice us to partake 1455
 With thee. Say, reverend sire; we thirst to hear.
- MANOA. I have attempted, one by one, the lords,

4. Milton's animus against paid priests, whom he considers particularly likely to contaminate the Word of God with their own private interests and worldly desires, comes out plainly here.

5. Samson's angel, appearing before his birth and at various crises during his life (Judges xiv.6,19; xv.14) is here invoked almost as a tutelary spirit or guardian angel.

6. I.e., to impart to you.

Either at home, or through the high street passing,
With supplication prone and father's tears,
To accept of ransom for my son, their prisoner. 1460

Some much averse I found, and wondrous harsh,
Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite;
That part most revered Dagon and his priests:
Others more moderate seeming, but their aim
Private reward, for which both God and State 1465

They easily would set to sale: a third
More generous far and civil, who confessed
They had enough revenged having reduced
Their foe to misery beneath their fears;
The rest was magnanimity to remit, 1470

If some convenient ransom were proposed.⁷
What noise or shout was that? It tore the sky.

CHORUS. Doubtless the people shouting to behold
Their once great dread, captive and blind before them,
Or at some proof of strength before them shown. 1475

MANOA. His ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass it, shall willingly be paid
And numbered down. Much rather I shall choose
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest
And he in that calamitous prison left. 1480

No, I am fixed not to part hence without him.
For his redemption all my patrimony,
If need be, I am ready to forgo
And quit. Not wanting him, I shall want nothing.

CHORUS. Fathers are wont to lay up for their sons;
Thou for thy son art bent to lay out all: 1485

Sons wont to nurse their parents in old age;
Thou in old age car'st how to nurse thy son,
Made older than thy age through eyesight lost.

MANOA. It shall be my delight to tend his eyes,
And view him sitting in his house, ennobled
With all those high exploits by him achieved;
And on his shoulders waving down those locks
That of a nation armed the strength contained. 1490

And I persuade me God hath not permitted
His strength again to grow up with his hair
Garrisoned round about him like a camp
Of faithful soldiery, were not his purpose
To use him further yet in some great service— 1495

Not to sit idle with so great a gift
Useless, and thence ridiculous, about him.⁸ 1500
And, since his strength with eyesight was not lost,

7. The three parties are in effect bigots, swindlers, and gentlemen—three types common enough in Restoration England, with whom Milton and the defeated Puritans must have had frequently to deal.
8. A good deal of the play deals with the concept of relevance and irrelevance; outward weapons and outward strength are often beside the point ("ridiculous") in the face of inward and spiritual powers.

God will restore him eyesight to ⁹ his strength.

CHORUS. Thy hopes are not ill founded, nor seem vain,
Of his delivery, and thy joy thereon
Conceived, agreeable to a father's love;
In both which we, as next,¹ participate.

1505

MANOA. I know your friendly minds, and—O, what noise!
Mercy of Heaven! what hideous noise was that?
Horribly loud, unlike the former shout.

1510

CHORUS. Noise call you it, or universal groan,
As if the whole inhabitation perished?
Blood, death, and deathful deeds, are in that noise,
Ruin,² destruction at the utmost point.

MANOA. Of ruin indeed methought I heard the noise.

1515

Oh! it continues; they have slain my son.

CHORUS. Thy son is rather slaying them; that outcry
From slaughter of one foe could not ascend.

MANOA. Some dismal accident it needs must be.

What shall we do, stay here, or run and see?

1520

CHORUS. Best keep together here, lest, running thither,
We unawares run into danger's mouth.

This evil on the Philistines is fallen:

From whom could else a general cry be heard?

The sufferers then will scarce molest us here;

From other hands we need not much to fear.

1525

What if, his eyesight (for to Israel's God

Nothing is hard) by miracle restored,

He now be dealing-dole³ among his foes,

And over heaps of slaughtered walk his way?

1530

MANOA. That were a joy presumptuous to be thought.

CHORUS. Yet God hath wrought things as incredible

For his people of old; what hinders now?

MANOA. He can, I know, but doubt to think he will;

Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief.

1535

A little stay will bring some notice hither.

CHORUS. Of good or bad so great, of bad the sooner;

For evil news rides post, while good news baits.⁴

And to our wish I see one hither speeding—

An Ebrew, as I guess, and of our tribe.

1540

MESSENGER.⁵ O, whither shall I run, or which way fly

The sight of this so horrid spectacle,

Which erst⁶ my eyes beheld, and yet behold?

For dire imagination still pursues me.

But providence or instinct of nature seems,

1545

Or reason, though disturbed, and scarce consulted,

To have guided me aright, I know not how,

9. To accompany.

1. "As next": as kinsmen.

2. From Latin ruina, downfall.

3. Wreaking havoc.

4. Pauses to renew (bait) the horses.

5. Greek tragedy forbade the representation on stage of actual bloodshed; a messenger is therefore a frequent figure at the end of the Greek tragedy, arriving posthaste from the scene of the final catastrophe, to deliver in a long set speech a descriptive report.

6. A moment ago.

To thee first, reverend Manoa, and to these
My countrymen, whom here I knew remaining,
As ⁷ at some distance from the place of horror, 1550
So in the sad event too much concerned.

MANOA. The accident was loud, and here before thee
With rueful cry; yet what it was we hear not.

No preface needs; thou seest we long to know.

MESENTER. It would burst forth; but I recover breath, 1555
And sense distract, to know well what I utter.

MANOA. Tell us the sum; the circumstance defer.

MESENTER. Gaza yet stands; but all her sons are fallen,
All in a moment overwhelmed and fallen.

MANOA. Sad, but thou know'st to Israelites not saddest 1560
The desolation of a hostile city.

MESENTER. Feed on that first; there may in grief be surfeit.⁸

MANOA. Relate by whom.

MESENTER. By Samson.

MANOA. That still lessens
The sorrow, and coverts it nigh to joy.

MESENTER. Ah! Manoa, I refrain too suddenly 1565
To utter what will come at last too soon,
Lest evil tidings, with too rude irruption

Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep.

MANOA. Suspense in news is torture; speak them out.

MESENTER. Then take the worst in brief: Samson is dead. 1570

MANOA. The worst indeed! O, all my hopes defeated

To free him hence! but Death, who sets all free,
Hath paid his ransom now and full discharge.

What windy ⁹ joy this day had I conceived, 1575
Hopeful of his delivery, which now proves
Abortive as the first-born bloom of spring

Nipped with the lagging rear of winter's frost!
Yet, ere I give the reins to grief, say first

How died he; death to life is crown or shame. 1580
All by him fell, thou say'st; by whom fell he?

What glorious hand gave Samson his death's wound?

MESENTER. Unwounded of his enemies he fell.

MANOA. Wearied with slaughter, then, or how? explain.

MESENTER. By his own hands.

MANOA. Self-violence! What cause 1585
Brought him so soon at variance with himself
Among his foes?

MESENTER. Inevitable cause
At once both to destroy and be destroyed.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pulled.

MANOA. O lastly over-strong against thyself! 1590
A dreadful way thou took'st to thy revenge.

7. The construction "As . . . So . . ." is to follow.
equivalent to a "Though . . . Yet . . ." 9. Empty and talky.
8. I.e., there may be all too much grief

More than enough we know; but, while things yet
 Are in confusion, give us, if thou canst,
 Eyewitness of what first or last was done,
 Relation more particular and distinct.

1595

MESSANGER. Occasions drew me early to this city;

And, as the gates I entered with sunrise,
 The morning trumpets festival proclaimed
 Through each high street. Little I had dispatched,
 When all abroad was rumored that this day
 Samson should be brought forth, to show the people
 Proof of his mighty strength in feats and games.
 I sorrowed at his captive state, but minded
 Not to be absent at that spectacle.

1600

The building was a spacious theater,
 Half round on two main pillars vaulted high,
 With seats where all the lords, and each degree
 Of sort,¹ might sit in order to behold;

1605

The other side was open, where the throng
 On banks and scaffolds under sky might stand: ²
 I among these aloof obscurely stood.

1610

The feast and noon grew high, and sacrifice
 Had filled their hearts with mirth, high cheer, and wine,
 When to their sports they turned. Immediately
 Was Samson as a public servant brought,

1615

In their state livery clad: before him pipes
 And timbrels; ³ on each side went armed guards;
 Both horse and foot before him and behind,
 Archers and slingers, cataphracts ⁴ and spears.

At sight of him the people with a shout
 Rifted the air, clamoring their god with praise,
 Who had made their dreadful enemy their thrall.

1620

He patient, but undaunted, where they led him,
 Came to the place; and what was set before him,
 Which without help of eye might be assayed,⁵

1625

To heave, pull, draw, or break, he still performed
 All with incredible, stupendous force,
 None daring to appear antagonist.

At length, for intermission sake, they led him
 Between the pillars; he his guide requested
 (For so from such as nearer stood we heard),

1630

As over-tired, to let him lean a while
 With both his arms on those two massy pillars,
 That to the arched roof gave main support.

He unsuspecting led him; which when Samson
 Felt in his arms, with head a while inclined,

1635

1. Of rank.

2. The temple at Gaza comprised a covered pavilion or shell for the gentry, semi-circular in shape and supported at the center of the semi-circle by two pillars; on the open side, under the hot sun, and behind the stage, as it were, sat the common people.

3. Tambourines.

4. Armored horsemen on armored horses.

5. Attempted.

- And eyes fast fixed, he stood, as one who prayed,
 Or some great matter in his mind revolved:
 At last, with head erect, thus cried aloud:
 "Hitherto, Lords, what your commands imposed 1640
 I have performed, as reason was, obeying,
 Not without wonder or delight beheld;
 Now, of my own accord,⁶ such other trial
 I mean to show you of my strength yet greater
 As with amaze shall strike all who behold." 1645
 This uttered, straining all his nerves,⁷ he bowed;
 As with the force of winds and waters pent
 When mountains tremble,⁸ those two massy pillars
 With horrible convulsion to and fro
 He tugged, he shook, till down they came, and drew 1650
 The whole roof after them with burst of thunder
 Upon the heads of all who sat beneath,
 Lords, ladies, captains, counselors, or priests,
 Their choice nobility and flower, not only
 Of this, but each Philistian city round, 1655
 Met from all parts to solemnize this feast.
 Samson, with these immixed, inevitably
 Pulled down the same destruction on himself;
 The vulgar ⁹ only 'scaped, who stood without.
- CHORUS. O dearly bought revenge, yet glorious! 1660
 Living or dying thou hast fulfilled
 The work for which thou wast foretold
 To Israel, and now li'st victorious
 Among thy slain self-killed;
 Not willingly, but tangled in the fold 1665
 Of dire Necessity,¹ whose law in death conjoined
 Thee with thy slaughtered foes, in number more
 Than all thy life had slain before.
- SEMICHORUS. While their hearts were jocund and sublime,²
 Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine 1670
 And fat regorged³ of bulls and goats,
 Chaunting their idol, and preferring
 Before our living Dread, who dwells
 In Silo, his bright sanctuary,⁴
 Among them he a spirit of frenzy sent, 1675
 Who hurt their minds,
 And urged them on with mad desire
 To call in haste for their destroyer.
 They, only set on sport and play,

6. Latin, mea sponte, on spontaneous impulse of conscience.

7. Muscles.

8. Earthquakes in Milton's day were supposed to be the effect of escaping winds and waters imprisoned (pent) beneath the earth.

9. The common people.

1. Samson must not be supposed guilty of suicide. See above, lines 1586-87.

2. Joyous and exalted.

3. Greedily devoured.

4. Shiloh, where the Israelites established their tabernacle (Joshua xviii.1).

Unweetingly ⁵ importuned 1680
 Their own destruction to come speedy upon them.
 So fond are mortal men,
 Fallen into wrath divine,
 As their own ruin on themselves to invite,
 Insensate left, or to sense reprobate, 1685
 And with blindness internal ⁶ struck.

SEMICHORUS. But he, though blind of sight,
 Despised, and thought extinguished quite,
 With inward eyes illuminated,
 His fiery virtue roused 1690
 From under ashes into sudden flame,
 And as an evening dragon ⁷ came,
 Assailant on the perched roosts
 And nests in order ranged
 Of tame villatic ⁸ fowl, but as an eagle 1695
 His cloudless thunder bolted on their heads.
 So Virtue, given for lost, ⁹
 Depressed and overthrown, as seemed,
 Like that self-begotten bird, ¹
 In the Arabian woods embossed, ² 1700
 That no second knows nor third,
 And lay erewhile a holocaust, ³
 From out her ashy womb now teemed,
 Revives, reflowerishes, then vigorous most
 When most unactive deemed; 1705
 And, though her body die, her fame survives,
 A secular ⁴ bird, ages of lives.

MANOA. Come, come; no time for lamentation now,
 Nor much more cause. Samson hath quit ⁵ himself 1710
 Like Samson, and heroically hath finished
 A life heroic, on his enemies
 Fully revenged; hath left them years of mourning
 And lamentation to the sons of Caphtor ⁶
 Through all Philistian bounds; to Israel
 Honor hath left and freedom, let but them 1715
 Find courage to lay hold on this occasion;
 To himself and father's house eternal fame;
 And, which is best and happiest yet, all this
 With God not parted from him, as was feared,
 But favoring and assisting to the end. 1720
 Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail

5. Unwittingly.

6. The play accomplishes itself by showing the internal blindness of the Philistines at the very moment of Samson's spiritual illumination.

7. Serpent (from Latin, draco).

8. Farmyard (from Latin, villaticus); "bolted": cast as a thunderbolt.

9. "Given up for lost."

1. The mythical phoenix begets itself out of its own ashes; it is unique, that is, there is only one phoenix alive at any one time, and it lives in the deserts of Arabia.

2. Enclosed, hidden.

3. A sacrifice burned whole on the altar.

4. Living through the centuries (Latin, saecula).

5. Acquitted.

6. In Amos ix.7 the Philistines are described as immigrants from Caphtor, i.e. Crete.

Or knock the breast; no weakness, no contempt,
 Dispraise, or blame; nothing but well and fair,
 And what may quiet us in a death so noble.
 Let us go find the body where it lies 1725
 Soaked in his enemies' blood, and from the stream
 With lavers ⁷ pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off
 The clotted gore. I, with what speed the while ⁸
 (Gaza is not in plight to say us nay),
 Will send for all my kindred, all my friends, 1730
 To fetch him hence, and solemnly attend,
 With silent obsequy and funeral train,
 Home to his father's house. There will I build him
 A monument, and plant it round with shade
 Of laurel ever green and branching palm, ⁹ 1735
 With all his trophies hung, and acts enrolled
 In copious legend, or sweet lyric song.
 Thither shall all the valiant youth resort,
 And from his memory inflame their breasts
 To matchless valor and adventures high; 1740
 The virgins also shall, on feastful days,
 Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing
 His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
 From whence captivity and loss of eyes.
 CHORUS.¹ All is best, though we oft doubt 1745
 What th' unsearchable dispose ²
 Of Highest Wisdom brings about,
 And ever best found in the close.
 Oft he seems to hide his face,
 But unexpectedly returns, 1750
 And to his faithful champion hath in place ³
 Bore witness gloriously; whence Gaza mourns,
 And all that band them to resist
 His uncontrollable intent.
 His servants he, with new acquist ⁴ 1755
 Of true experience from this great event,
 With peace and consolation hath dismissed,
 And calm of mind, all passion spent. 1671

7. Basins.

8. I.e., with what speed (I may) in the meanwhile.

9. Leaves of laurel were worn by civic conquerors on triumphal occasions; wreaths of palm were given to victors in the Olympic games. Samson, as both an athletic victor in his agon and the favored of Heaven, gets both.

1. The final chorus of the play is cast in the form of a sonnet.

2. Appointment, disposition.

3. On this very spot, at this very instant.

4. Increase, acquisition.

Seventeenth-Century Lyrics

More than most literary periods, the first half of the 17th century was rich in first-rate poets of the second rank (the phrase means simply that they were writers of evident talent with limited range or scope). There were as many as 50 or 60 of them, including some who in a less prolific age might have passed for major figures. Any narrow selection from so large a chorus is bound to appear arbitrary. The titling who follow have been chosen to illustrate the diversity of the century, to make possible several sorts of grouping for comparison or contrast, and because they are attractive poets in their own right.

Across the arc of our chosen era, the lyric voice steadily diminished in force. Verse satire, verse argumentation, and the steadily expanding field of prose gained ground—not necessarily at the expense of lyric poetry, but by striking contrast with the diminution of the lyric. Heroic couplets and non-dramatic blank verse dominated the scene at the end of the century; they had been unknown at the beginning. Farce, travesty, burlesque, and parody rose in importance, while sonnets fell; odes were in and allegories out. Behind this constant rise and fall of forms lay fluctuations in the meaning of an ill-defined, much-used word, “wit.” In the early century “wit” had been an intellectual and spiritual principle of crucial value: it aimed at binding together, at least imaginatively or metaphorically, the fragments of a disintegrating universe. Its proper work was to discover, if not to create, the chords of sympathy binding things together. Its earlier ability to do this, its present failure to cope with the new developments of the age (the new science and the new ethics) formed the theme of Donne’s anxious, agonized Anatomy of the World. Then, during the middle of the century, the word began to diminish, to mean something like smart, antithetical writing. Under the Restoration it tended to mean raillery or repartee, and it often carried the overtone of bawdy double-entendre. It no longer held, and could not pretend to hold, the world together by the bonds of imaginative sympathy, especially when that job was already being done, far more neatly and efficiently, by Newton’s three laws of motion. And so, during the last part of the 17th century, voices began to be heard, suggesting that “wit” be replaced altogether as a literary principle, its place to be taken by something called “sense” or “good sense.” Much interesting literature can be produced under the aegis of good sense; but it is not likely to take the form of intense lyric utterance. Two contrasting poets of the later century cast light on the point.

Abraham Cowley, though Doctor Johnson thought him the major metaphysical poet, was so only in terms of manner. By temperament, by choice of subject, by the texture of his mind, he belongs with the argumentative and scientific poets of the age of Dryden. The “new philosophy,” which so distressed Donne, formed the basis of Cowley's confident assurance; the religion which bulked so large in Donne's life is nowhere in Cowley's. He has been domesticated in the world of material evidence and rational analysis; his wit involves no spiritual dynamic. On the other hand, Thomas Traherne pursued a private vision of an innocent world so ecstatically that tensions with the real world hardly seemed to exist for him. The wit and tension of the metaphysical style, at its high points in Donne, Herbert, Crashaw and Marvell, had involved a double vision, a deep sense of strain and anxiety. Cowley, one might say, retained the metaphysical manner without its animating vision. Traherne so lost himself in the vision that he discarded the manner. In any event, the metaphysical style, like the lyric impulse as a whole, had largely faded well before the end of the 17th century.

FRANCIS BEAUMONT and JOHN FLETCHER
(1584-1616) (1579-1625)

Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher collaborated so intimately, on so many different plays, that they were long thought of as a single consolidated author, "Beaumont-and-Fletcher." Modern scholarship and modern analytical techniques have done much and will surely do more to disentangle the separate contributions of the two fluent, facile young men to the mass of stagecraft that still passes under their joint names. For during the few short years of their collaboration, they wrote—either together, or separately, or with other collaborators—dozens of plays of every different kind—romantic comedies, pastoral tragedies, classical-historical melodramas, broad farces, heroic romances, and a whole inventory of other types. Tradition has it that Beaumont was more the theatrical architect, who laid out the structure of the plays and ordered the action, while Fletcher specialized in dramatic set-speeches and fanciful, extravagant scenes. But in one respect, they were equally matched—as lyric poets, and it is in this capacity that they are represented here.

On the stage, where it passes quickly over the audience and cannot be recalled for second thoughts or further study, poetry must charm at first hearing. It cannot tease the audience into prolonged meditation, or test its power to catch a distant allusion. A musical accompaniment will help enormously to give the poem weight, to make it stand out against the texture of the play proper as something special. But poetry must always be very discreet in the presence of music; if it makes too many demands of its own, it will end up choking and obstructing the mood that the music aims to create. The poetry of Beaumont and Fletcher, with its clear debt to Ben Jonson, is a model of poetic work which reconciles these various demands. Simple of syntax, and undemanding in its assertions, it builds toward the creation of a mood—effortless, liquid, and poised.

Songs from *The Faithful Shepherdess*¹*Sing His Praises That Doth Keep*

Sing his praises that doth keep
 Our flocks from harm,
 Pan,² the father of our sheep;
 And arm in arm
 Tread we softly in a round,
 Whilst the hollow neighboring ground
 Fills the music with her sound.

5

Pan, O great god Pan, to thee
 Thus do we sing:
 Thou that keep'st us chaste and free
 As the young spring,
 Ever be thy honor spoke,
 From that place the morn is broke
 To that place day doth unyoke.

10

Shepherds All and Maidens Fair

Shepherds all and maidens fair,
 Fold³ your flocks up, for the air
 'Gins to thicken, and the sun
 Already his great course hath run.
 See the dewdrops how they kiss
 Every little flower that is,
 Hanging on their velvet heads
 Like a rope of crystal beads.
 See the heavy clouds low falling
 And bright Hesperus⁴ down calling
 The dead night from underground,
 At whose rising mists unsound
 Damps and vapors fly apace,
 Hovering o'er the wanton face
 Of these pastures, where they come
 Striking dead doth bud and bloom.

5

10

15

Therefore from such danger lock
 Everyone his lovéd flock,
 And let your dogs lie loose without,
 Lest the wolf come as a scout
 From the mountain, and ere day
 Bear a lamb or kid away,
 Or the crafty thievish fox
 Break upon your simple flocks.

20

1. By John Fletcher.

2. The Roman god of nature, of fields, flocks, and streams.

3. Gather into the sheepfold.

4. The evening star.

To secure yourself from these 25
 Be not too secure in ease;
 Let one eye his watches keep
 Whilst the t' other eye doth sleep.
 So you shall good shepherds prove
 And for ever hold the love 30
 Of our great god. Sweetest slumbers
 And soft silence fall in numbers⁵
 On your eyelids: so farewell,
 Thus I end my evening's knell.

Do Not Fear to Put Thy Feet

Do not fear to put thy feet
 Naked in the river, sweet;
 Think not leech or newt or toad
 Will bite thy foot when thou hast trod;
 Nor let the water, rising high 5
 As thou wad'st in, make thee cry
 And sob; but ever live with me,
 And not a wave shall trouble thee.

See the Day Begins to Break

See the day begins to break,
 And the light shoots like a streak
 Of subtle fire, the wind blows cold,
 Whilst the morning doth unfold.
 Now the birds begin to rouse, 5
 And the squirrel from the boughs
 Leaps to get him nuts and fruit.
 The early lark, that erst⁶ was mute,
 Carols to the rising day
 Many a note and many a lay. 10

1610

Songs from Valentinian¹

Care-Charming Sleep

Care-charming sleep, thou easer of all woes,
 Brother to death, sweetly thyself dispose
 On this afflicted prince;² fall like a cloud
 In gentle showers; give nothing that is loud
 Or painful to his slumbers; easy, sweet, 5
 And as a purling stream, thou son of Night,
 Pass by his troubled senses; sing his pain
 Like hollow murmuring wind or silver rain.

5. In cadence, metrically.

6. Once, formerly.

1. By John Fletcher.

2. The song is sung over Valentinian
 ("this afflicted prince") in the play.

Into this prince gently, oh gently slide,
And kiss him into slumbers like a bride.

10

Hear, Ye Ladies That Despise

Hear, ye ladies that despise
What the mighty Love has done;
Fear examples, and be wise:
Fair Callisto was a nun;
Leda, sailing on the stream
To deceive the hopes of man,
Love accounting but a dream,
Doted on a silver swan;
Danaë, in a brazen tower
Where no love was, loved a shower.³

5

10

Hear, ye ladies that are coy,
What the mighty Love can do,
Fear the fierceness of the boy:⁴
The chaste Moon he makes to woo;
Vesta, kindling holy fires,
Circled round about with spies,
Never dreaming loose desires,
Doting at the altar dies.⁵
Ilion, in a short hour, higher
He can build, and once more fire.⁶

15

20

ca. 1612

Lovers, Rejoice!⁷

Lovers, rejoice! your pains shall be rewarded,
The god of Love himself grieves at your crying;
No more shall frozen honor be regarded,
Nor the coy faces of a maid denying.
No more shall virgins sigh, and say, "We dare not,
For men are false and what they do they care not."
All shall be well again; then do not grieve,
Men shall be true, and women shall believe.

5

3. All three ladies were victims of Zeus. Callisto was vowed to the service of Diana, who demanded chastity of her followers; Zeus raped her, then, in the shape of a swan, seduced Leda, and in the shape of a shower of gold overcame Danaë, who had been locked up in a brass tower.

4. I.e., Cupid, who made Diana herself, goddess of the moon and of chastity, fall in love with Endymion.

5. Here not the Roman goddess of that name, but a Vestal Virgin, vowed to chastity and faithful to her vows, who fades away as a result of longings unknown even to herself.

6. Set on fire. Troy ("Ilion") is said to have been destroyed by Cupid because he instigated the act of Paris in stealing Helen of Troy from her husband Menelaus, thereby setting off the Trojan War.

7. From Cupid's Revenge by Beaumont or Fletcher or both, with the help of Philip Massinger and perhaps Nathaniel Field.

Lovers, rejoice! what you shall say henceforth
When you have caught your sweethearts in your arms 10
Shall be accounted oracle and worth;
No more fainthearted girls shall dream of harms,
And cry they are too young; the god hath said,
Fifteen shall make a mother of a maid:
Then, wise men, pull your roses yet unblown, 15
Love hates the too-ripe fruit that falls alone.

ca. 1612

Songs from *The Masque of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn*¹

Shake Off Your Heavy Trance

Shake off your heavy trance,
And leap into a dance,
Such as no mortals use² to tread,
Fit only for Apollo³
To play to, for the moon to lead, 5
And all the stars to follow.

Ye Should Stay Longer If We Durst

Ye should stay longer if we durst.
Away! Alas, that he that first
Gave Time wild wings to fly away
Hath now no power to make him stay.
But though these games must needs be played, 5
I would this pair, when they are laid,⁴
And not a creature nigh them,
Could catch his scythe as he doth pass,
And cut his wings and break his glass,⁵
And keep him ever by them. 10

Peace and Silence Be the Guide

Peace and silence be the guide
To the man and to the bride!
If there be a joy yet new
In marriage, let it fall on you,
That all the world may wonder. 5
If we should stay, we should do worse,
And turn our blessing to a curse,
By keeping you asunder.

1613

1. By Francis Beaumont.

2. Are accustomed.

3. God of poetry in Greek mythology.

4. I.e., laid to rest.

5. Time traditionally carries a scythe and an hourglass, and flies on swift wings, because he mows things down, measures their duration, and flees away much too fast.

The Passionate Man's Song¹

Hence all you vain delights,
 As short as are the nights
 Wherein you spend your folly:
 There's naught in this life sweet,
 If man were wise to see't, 5
 But only melancholy,
 Oh sweetest melancholy.
 Welcome, folded arms and fixed eyes,
 A sigh that, piercing, mortifies,
 A look that's fastened to the ground, 10
 A tongue chained up without a sound.

Fountain heads and pathless groves,
 Places which pale passion loves,
 Moonlight walks, when all the fowls
 Are warmly housed, save bats and owls, 15
 A midnight bell, a parting groan,
 These are the sounds we feed upon.
 Then stretch our bones in a still-gloomy valley,
 Nothing's so dainty sweet as lovely melancholy.

ca. 1620

1647

1. From The Nice Valor, by John Fletcher. This song clearly had an influence on both the form and thought of Milton's L'Allegro and Il Penseroso.

THOMAS CAREW

(1595-1640)

Bright, talented, and idle, Thomas Carew (pronounced Carey) carefully avoided serious work of all sorts; everything he did, and writing poetry particularly, seemed to be the diversion of his empty hours. Yet he was the first poet (and remains, with Marvell, one of the two poets) to unite the intellectual toughness of metaphysical verse with the polish and elegant lightness cultivated by the followers of Jonson.

As the son of a distinguished lawyer, Carew was himself destined for the law, but the Middle Temple dismissed him for idleness. He tried the diplomatic corps, but was sent home in disgrace for "levity." He became a hanger-on around the court, and ultimately (his most solemn employment) a gentleman of the bedchamber; his diversions were pretty girls, bowling, and versifying—apparently in that order. Yet when his poems were collected, after his death, they turned out to include some of the wittiest and most elegant verses of the century.

Everything that the Puritans despised in "wit" was epitomized in Carew. He had no high spiritual seriousness at all; he was not, in the solemn sense,

"sincere." Many of his poems were obvious bits of light persiflage, "mere" amusements. He was not only clever, he was by 17th-century standards (and even more by those of the 19th century) obscene. Yet somehow this libidinous trifler managed to say more true things in his Elegy on the Death of Doctor Donne than criticism would be able to enunciate in the next three hundred years. And in A Rapture he expressed, naturally and joyously, a side of life that Puritanism would, to the best of its ability, swathe in black crape and hypocrisy for an equivalent length of time.

An Elegy upon the Death of the Dean of Paul's, Dr. John Donne¹

Can we not force from widowed poetry,
Now thou art dead, great Donne, one elegy
To crown thy hearse? Why yet did we not trust,
Though with unkneced dough-baked prose, thy dust,
Such as the unscissored² lect'rer from the flower 5
Of fading rhetoric, short-lived as his hour,
Dry as the sand that measures it,³ should lay
Upon the ashes on the funeral day?
Have we nor tune, nor voice? Didst thou dispense
Through all our language both words and sense? 10
'Tis sad truth. The pulpit may her plain
And sober Christian precepts still retain;
Doctrines it may, and wholesome uses, frame,
Grave homilies and lectures; but the flame
Of thy brave soul, that shot such heat and light 15
As burnt our earth and made our darkness bright,
Committed holy rapes upon our will,
Did through the eye the melting heart distil,
And the deep knowledge of dark truths so teach
As sense might judge what fancy could not reach,⁴ 20
Must be desired forever. So the fire
That fills with spirit and heat the Delphic choir,⁵
Which, kindled first by thy Promethean⁶ breath,
Glowed here a while, lies quenched now in thy death.
The Muses' garden, with pedantic weeds 25
O'erspread, was purged by thee; the lazy seeds
Of servile imitation thrown away,

1. First appearing in the 1633 edition of Donne's poems, this elegy was described as by "Mr. Tho: Carie." It was reprinted in the 1640 edition of Carew's poems, from which our text is taken.

2. I.e., with uncut hair. Whether from grief, poverty, or in imitation of Apollo is not clear.

3. The hourglass was used by preachers to keep track of time.

4. I.e., so that things too abstract and elevated even to be imagined might be made plain to sense. "Desired": missed.

5. The choir of poets, inspired by Apollo, whose oracle used to be at Delphi.

6. Donne stole fire from heaven, like Prometheus, and used it to fill with spirit and heat the choir of poets.

And fresh invention planted; thou didst pay
 The debts of our penurious bankrupt age—
 Licentious thefts, that make poetic rage 30
 A mimic fury, when our souls must be
 Possessed, or with Anacreon's ecstasy,
 Or Pindar's,⁷ not their own. The subtle cheat
 Of sly exchanges, and the juggling feat
 Of two-edged words,⁸ or whatsoever wrong 35
 By ours was done the Greek or Latin tongue,
 Thou hast redeemed, and opened us a mine
 Of rich and pregnant fancy, drawn a line
 Of masculine expression, which had good
 Old Orpheus⁹ seen, or all the ancient brood 40
 Our superstitious fools admire, and hold
 Their lead more precious than thy burnished gold,
 Thou hadst been their exchequer, and no more
 They in each other's dung had raked for ore.
 Thou shalt yield no precedence, but of time 45
 And the blind fate of language, whose tuned chime
 More charms the outward sense; yet thou mayest claim
 From so great disadvantage greater fame,
 Since to the awe of thy imperious wit
 Our troublesome language bends, made only fit 50
 With her tough thick-ribbed hoops, to gird about
 Thy giant fancy, which had proved too stout
 For their soft melting phrases. As in time
 They had the start, so did they cull the prime Buds of invention many a hundred year, 55
 And left the rifled fields, besides the fear
 To touch their harvest; yet from those bare lands
 Of what is only thine, thy only hands
 (And that their smallest work) have gleaned more
 Than all those times and tongues could reap before. 60
 But thou art gone, and thy strict laws will be Too hard for libertines in poetry.
 They will repeal¹ the goodly exiled train
 Of gods and goddesses, which in thy just reign
 Were banished nobler poems; now with these 65
 The silenced tales in the *Metamorphoses*²
 Shall stuff their lines and swell the windy page,
 Till verse, refined by thee in this last age,

7. Anacreon (6th and 5th centuries B.C.) and Pindar (first half of the 5th century B.C.) were famous Greek lyric poets.

8. "Sly exchanges": Carew seems to refer to the habit, frequent in Jonsonian and Miltonic style, of using English words in their Latin senses, e.g., "horrid (bristling) spears." "Two-edged words" might be puns; but as these were a favorite device of Donne's, this cannot be the sense. Perhaps "two-edged words" are not far from "sly exchanges" in meaning.

9. Ancient Greek poet and prophet, so mythical that he is often used as the type of all poets.

1. Recall, as from banishment.

2. Ovid's tales in the Metamorphoses had been a favorite stockpile of poetical properties for Renaissance poets; Donne forwent them, but soon they will return.

Turn ballad-rhyme, or those old idols be Adored again with new apostasy. 70

O pardon me, that break with untuned verse
The reverend silence that attends thy hearse,
Whose awful³ solemn murmurs were to thee,
More than these faint lines, a loud elegy,
That did proclaim in a dumb eloquence 75
The death of all the arts, whose influence,
Grown feeble, in these panting numbers lies
Gasping short-winded accents, and so dies:
So doth the swiftly turning wheel not stand
In th' instant we withdraw the moving hand, 80
But some small time retain a faint weak course
By virtue of the first impulsive force;
And so whilst I cast on thy funeral pile
Thy crown of bays,⁴ oh, let it crack awhile
And spit disdain, till the devouring flashes 85
Suck all the moisture up; then turn to ashes.

I will not draw the envy to engross
All thy perfections, or weep all the loss;
Those are too numerous for one elegy,
And this too great to be expressed by me. 90
Let others carve the rest; it shall suffice
I on thy grave this epitaph incise:

*Here lies a king, that ruled as he thought fit
The universal monarchy of wit;
Here lie two flamens,⁵ and both those the best: 95
Apollo's⁶ first, at last the true God's priest.*

1633, 1640

Disdain Returned

He that loves a rosy cheek,
Or a coral lip admires,
Or from starlike eyes doth seek
Fuel to maintain his fires; 5
As old Time makes these decay,
So his flames must waste away.

But a smooth and steadfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combined,
Kindle never-dying fires. 10
Where these are not, I despise
Lovely cheeks, or lips, or eyes.

3. I.e., awed.

4. The poet's crown.

5. Priests of the Roman religion.

6. I.e., of the god of poetry.

No tears, Celia, now shall win
 My resolved heart to return;
 I have searched thy soul within,
 And find naught but pride and scorn;
 I have learned thy arts, and now
 Can disdain as much as thou.
 Some power, in my revenge convey
 That love to her I cast away.⁷

15

20
1640

A Song

Ask me no more where Jove bestows,
 When June is past, the fading rose;
 For in your beauties orient deep,¹
 These flowers, as in their causes, sleep.²

5

Ask me no more whither do stray
 The golden atoms of the day;
 For in pure love heaven did prepare
 Those powders to enrich your hair.

Ask me no more whither doth haste
 The nightingale when May is past;
 For in your sweet dividing³ throat
 She winters, and keeps warm her note.

10

Ask me no more where those stars light,
 That downwards fall in dead of night;
 For in your eyes they sit, and there
 Fix'd become, as in their sphere.

15

Ask me no more if east or west
 The phoenix builds her spicy nest;⁴
 For unto you at last she flies,
 And in your fragrant bosom dies.

20
1640

7. I.e., to a previous mistress.

1. The text permits two readings here: "in your beauties which are orient deep" or "in the orient depths of your beauty." In addition to its reference to the Far East, "orient" implies "pearly" or "lustrous."

2. Aristotelian philosophy suggested that objects often lay latent in their causes—e.g., that in the seed creating man there was a little man (homunculus). In Carew's compliment, the lady is a summation of last summer and cause of the next one.

3. Harmonious (from the "division," or musical trill).

4. The phoenix, an Arabian bird, builds her nest from spicy shrubs. She dies every thousand years and a new bird springs from her ashes.

To Ben Jonson

Upon occasion of his Ode of Defiance annexed to his play of *The New Inn*¹

'Tis true, dear Ben, thy just chastising hand
Hath fixed upon the sotted age a brand
To their swoll'n pride and empty scribbling due.
It can nor judge nor write; and yet 'tis true
Thy comic Muse from the exalted line 5
Touched by thy *Alchemist*² doth since decline
From that her zenith, and foretells a red
And blushing evening when she goes to bed—
Yet such as shall outshine the glimmering light
With which all stars shall gild the following night. 10
Nor think it much (since all thy eaglets may Endure the sunny trial)³ if we say,
This hath the stronger wing, or that doth shine
Tricked up in fairer plumes, since all are thine.
Who hath his flock of cackling geese compared 15
With thy tuned choir of swans? or else who dared
To call thy births deformed? But if thou bind
By city-custom, or by gavel-kind,⁴
In equal shares thy love on all thy race,
We may distinguish of their sex and place: 20
Though one hand form them and though one brain strike
Souls into all, they are not all alike.
Why should the follies then of this dull age
Draw from thy pen such an immodest rage
As seems to blast thy else-immortal bays,⁵ 25
When thine own tongue proclaims thy itch of praise?
Such thirst will argue drought. No, let be hurled
Upon thy works by the detracting world
What malice can suggest; let the rout say
The running sands that, ere thou make a play, 30
Count the slow minutes might a Goodwin frame⁶
To swallow when th' hast done thy shipwrecked name.

1. Jonson's late play The New Inn was hissed from the stage in 1629 and published in 1631 with an angry "Ode of Defiance" prefixed. Carew's remonstrance must have been written close upon that event.

2. Jonson's play (1610) about three confidence tricksters.

3. To make sure the young birds in his nest are genuine eaglets, the eagle is reputed to fly with them up toward the sun; any bird that isn't an authentic eagle is blinded by the rays.

4. "City-custom" (i.e., London city custom) and "gavel-kind" (a system of land tenure once common in Kent) were two legal ways of dividing an estate equally among all the heirs—as opposed to the normal English rule of primogeniture (everything to the eldest son).

5. Bays or laurel make up the poet's crown.

6. Goodwin Sands were a sandbar, shifty and treacherous, on which many ships were lost. Jonson's slowness in composition was proverbial.

Let them the dear⁷ expense of oil upbraid,
 Sucked by thy watchful lamp that hath betrayed
 To theft the blood of martyred authors, spilt 35
 Into thy ink, while thou growest pale with guilt.⁸
 Repine not at the taper's thrifty waste,
 That sleeks thy terser poems; nor is haste
 Praise, but excuse; and if thou overcome
 A knotty writer, bring the booty home; 40
 Nor think it theft if the rich spoils so torn
 From conquered authors be as trophies worn.
 Let others glut on the extorted praise
 Of vulgar breath: trust thou to after days.
 Thy labored works shall live when Time devours 45
 Th' abortive offspring of their hasty hours.
 Thou art not of their rank, the quarrel lies
 Within thine own verge⁹—then let this suffice,
 The wiser world doth greater thee confess
 Than all men else, than thy self only less. 50

ca. 1631 1640

A Rapture

I will enjoy thee now, my Celia, come
 And fly with me to love's Elysium.¹
 The giant, Honor, that keeps cowards out,
 Is but a masquer,² and the servile rout 5
 Of baser subjects only bend in vain
 To the vast idol, whilst the nobler train
 Of valiant lovers daily sail between
 The huge Colossus' legs,³ and pass unseen
 Unto the blissful shore. Be bold and wise,
 And we shall enter; the grim Swiss⁴ denies 10
 Only tame fools a passage, that not know
 He is but form and only frights in show
 The duller eyes that look from far; draw near,
 And thou shalt scorn what we were wont to fear.
 We shall see how the stalking pageant⁵ goes 15
 With borrowed legs, a heavy load to those
 That made and bear him—not as we once thought
 The seed of gods, but a weak model wrought

7. Extravagant.

8. The other great charge against Jonson was that he copied or translated too liberally from other authors.

9. I.e., within your own territory, against yourself. Duels cannot properly take place between two men of different rank, and as Jonson is out of everyone else's class, he can only fight himself.

1. In classical mythology, the abode of the blessed spirits.

2. I.e., a play-actor. "Rout": crowd.

3. The ancient Colossus of Rhodes bestrode the entrance to that harbor, so that ships entering or leaving passed between its legs.

4. The Pope's Swiss Guard were so picturesque that the adjective came in time to stand for the noun.

5. Figure in a pageant, make-believe giant.

By greedy men, that seek to enclose the common,
 And within private arms empale free woman.⁶ 20
 Come then, and mounted on the wings of love,
 We'll cut the flitting air and soar above
 The monster's head, and in the noblest seats
 Of those blessed shades, quench and renew our heats.
 There shall the Queen of Love, and Innocence, 25
 Beauty, and Nature banish all offense
 From our close ivy twines, there I'll behold
 Thy baréd snow and thy unbraided gold.
 There my enfranchised hand on every side
 Shall o'er thy naked polished ivory slide. 30
 No curtain there, though of transparent lawn,⁷
 Shall be before thy virgin treasure drawn,
 But the rich mine to the enquiring eye
 Exposed, shall ready still for mintage lie,
 And we will coin young Cupids.⁸ There a bed 35
 Of roses and fresh myrtles shall be spread
 Under the cooler shade of cypress groves;
 Our pillows, of the down of Venus' doves,⁹
 Whereon our panting limbs we'll gently lay
 In the faint respites of our active play, 40
 That so our slumbers may in dreams have leisure
 To tell the nimble fancy our past pleasure,
 And so our souls that cannot be embraced
 Shall the embraces of our bodies taste.
 Meanwhile the bubbling stream shall court the shore, 45
 Th' enamored chirping wood-choir shall adore
 In varied tunes the Deity of Love;
 The gentle blasts of western winds shall move
 The trembling leaves, and through their close boughs breathe
 Still music, while we rest ourselves beneath 50
 Their dancing shade; till a soft murmur, sent
 From souls entranced in amorous languishment
 Rouse us, and shoot into our veins fresh fire
 Till we in their sweet ecstasy expire.
 Then, as the empty bee, that lately bore 55
 Into the common treasure all her store,
 Flies 'bout the painted field with nimble wing,
 Deflowering the fresh virgins of the spring,
 So will I rifle all the sweets that dwell
 In my delicious paradise, and swell 60
 My bag with honey, drawn forth by the power
 Of fervent kisses from each spicy flower.
 I'll seize the rose buds in their perfumed bed,

6. To "empale" is to surround with a fence, but the word has phallic overtones as well.

7. Fine linen.

8. Behind this metaphor of mine-mint-and-coin lies the ancient belief that in the creation of children woman contributes matter, man form (materia and forma).

9. Venus, when she travels, rides in a chariot drawn by a yoke of doves.

The violet knots, like curious mazes spread
 O'er all the garden, taste the ripened cherry, 65
 The warm, firm apple, tipped with coral berry.
 Then will I visit with a wandering kiss
 The vale of lilies and the bower of bliss,
 And where the beauteous region both divide
 Into two milky ways, my lips shall slide 70
 Down those smooth alleys, wearing as I go
 A track for lovers on the printed snow.
 Thence climbing o'er the swelling Apennine,
 Retire into thy grove of eglantine,
 Where I will all those ravished sweets distill 75
 Through love's alembic,¹ and with chemic skill
 From the mixed mass one sovereign balm² derive,
 Then bring that great elixir to thy hive.

Now in more subtle wreaths I will entwine
 My sinewy thighs, my legs and arms with thine; 80
 Thou like a sea of milk shalt lie displayed,
 Whilst I the smooth, calm Océan invade
 With such a tempest as when Jove of old
 Fell down on Danaë in a storm of gold.³
 Yet my tall pine shall in the Cyprian strait 85
 Ride safe at anchor and unlade her freight;
 My rudder with thy bold hand like a tried
 And skillful pilot thou shalt steer, and guide
 My bark⁴ into love's channel, where it shall Dance as the bounding waves do rise or fall. 90
 Then shall thy circling arms embrace and clip
 My willing body, and thy balmy lip
 Bathe me in juice of kisses, whose perfume
 Like a religious incense shall consume
 And send up holy vapors to those powers 95
 That bless our loves and crown our sportful hours,
 That with such halcyon calmness fix our souls
 In steadfast peace, as no affright controls.
 There no rude sounds shake us with sudden starts,
 No jealous ears, when we unrip our hearts, 100
 Suck our discourse in, no observing spies
 This blush, that glance traduce; no envious eyes
 Watch our close meetings, nor are we betrayed
 To rivals by the bribéd chambermaid.
 No wedlock bonds unwreath our twisted loves, 105
 We seek no midnight arbor, no dark groves

1. I.e., retort—a vessel used for distilling.

2. According to alchemical doctrine, skilled distillation could extract from common metals not only the philosopher's stone but a supreme ointment ("sovereign balm"), good to prevent as well as to cure all diseases whatever.

3. In ancient mythology Zeus (or Jove) wooed Danaë in a shower of gold, thereby begetting Perseus. "Pine": mast, and by metonymy, ship; "Cyprian": Cyprus was reputed the birthplace of the goddess of love, sometimes called simply "the Cyprian."

4. Vessel.

To hide our kisses; there the hated name
 Of husband, wife, lust, modest, chaste, or shame
 Are vain and empty words, whose very sound
 Was never heard in the Elysian ground. 110
 All things are lawful there that may delight
 Nature or unrestrained appetite.

Like and enjoy, to will and act is one;
 We only sin when love's rites are not done. 115

The Roman Lucrece there reads the divine 115
 Lectures of love's great master, Aretine,
 And knows as well as Laïs how to move
 Her pliant body in the act of love.⁵

To quench the burning ravisher, she hurls
 Her limbs into a thousand winding curls, 120
 And studies artful postures, such as be Carved on the bark of every neighboring tree

By learned hands, that so adorned the rind
 Of those fair plants, which, as they lay entwined
 Have fanned their glowing fires. The Grecian dame 125
 That in her endless web toiled for a name
 As fruitless as her work doth there display

Herself before the youth of Ithaca,
 And th' amorous sport of gamesome nights prefer
 Before dull dreams of the lost traveler.⁶ 130

Daphne hath broke her bark, and that swift foot
 Which th' angry gods had fastened with a root
 To the fixed earth, doth now unfettered run
 To meet th' embraces of the youthful sun.⁷

She hangs upon him like his Delphic lyre,⁸ 135
 Her kisses blow the old and breath new fire;

Full of her god, she sings inspired lays,
 Sweet odes of love, such as deserve the bays
 Which she herself was.⁹ Next her, Laura lies 140
 In Petrarch's learned arms, drying those eyes

That did in such sweet smooth-paced numbers flow,
 As made the world enamored of his woe.¹

5. In Elysium, Lucrece (chastest of Roman matrons, who committed suicide to atone for the disgrace of her rape by Tarquin) reads Aretino (bawdiest of Italian pornographers), to provoke her attacker to new efforts. Laïs was a famous prostitute of Corinth.

6. Penelope was the faithful wife of Odysseus ("the lost traveler"); during the twenty years he was away (at Troy, and on the way back), she fended off her importunate suitors by weaving an endless web—she unwove by night what she wove by day—which she said she had to finish before she could marry again. But in Elysium, she welcomes "the youth of Ithaca" (the suitors) and enjoys "gamesome nights" with them.

7. Closely pursued by Apollo, god of poetry and the sun, Daphne with the help of Zeus turned into a laurel bush or bay tree to get away from him.

8. The shrine of Apollo was at Delphi; he carries a lyre as an emblem of poetic harmony.

9. The songs she sings deserve the crown of poetry, woven of laurel or bays; but she herself was a laurel or bay tree.

1. Whether Laura was a real lady or a laurel bush (hence an emblem of poetry) is still in dispute; but Petrarch (1304-74) wrote melancholy poems to and about her, and she was a martyr to honor.

These and ten thousand beauties more, that died
 Slave to the tyrant,² now enlarged, deride
 His canceled laws, and for their time misspent
 Pay into love's exchequer double rent. 145

Come then, my Celia, we'll no more forbear
 To taste our joys, struck with a panic fear,
 But will depose from his imperious sway
 This proud usurper and walk free as they, 150
 With necks unyoked; nor is it just that he Should fetter your soft sex with chastity
 Which nature made unapt for abstinence;
 When yet this false impostor can dispense
 With human justice and with sacred right, 155
 And maugre³ both their laws, command me fight
 With rivals or with emulous loves, that dare
 Equal with thine their mistress' eyes or hair.
 If thou complain of wrong, and call my sword
 To carve out thy revenge, upon that word 160
 He⁴ bids me fight and kill, or else he brands
 With marks of infamy my coward hands.
 And yet religion bids from bloodshed fly,
 And damns me for that act. Then tell me why
 This goblin Honor which the world adores 165
 Should make men atheists and not women whores.⁵

1640

2. The tyrant is Honor; the inhabitants of Elysium are "enlarged" (i.e., liberated) from him.

3. In spite of.

4. I.e., Honor.

5. These last two and a half lines of the poem cast some curious reflections on the first 164.

EDMUND WALLER

(1606-1687)

Edmund Waller was born to money, and through his long life got steadily richer; he went to parliament very early, and stayed there (when the distractions of the times permitted) till he was a very old man. In politics he was a moderate Royalist, but without the strength of character or intellect to play a leading role in public affairs.

In poetry too, Waller was a moderating and softening influence. His verses, first published in 1645 while he was in exile, then republished and expanded just before his death, enjoyed an enormous popularity which nowadays we find hard to explain. At first glance they seem mostly remarkable for their negative qualities. A poem like The Story of Phoebus and Daphne Applied is not ingenious or strained in its thinking, but it is not "natural" either—on the contrary, it is highly artificial. Its diction is formal, almost mannered. Its couplets are metrically smooth, frequently end-stopped, and full of balanced antitheses; the caesura is used artfully from time to time to break up the roll of the pentameters, and balance one half-line against another. The poem has "point" in the sense that one word or locution constantly works against another; occasionally it rises to a kind of verbal "counter-point." Waller was one of the first Englishmen to write this way. Though his style drew a little from Donne and a lot from Jonson, though in his lighter lyric moments he sounds a good deal like Carew, he really was a pioneer. And thus the Restoration poets were quite right when they honored old Mr. Waller as one of the chief "improvers of our numbers"—by which they meant that he had brought a new correctness to English metrics and diction. Perhaps Waller had less intellectual energy to be mastered than did earlier poets; but the degree and manner of his mastery were in themselves widely influential.

The Story of Phoebus and Daphne Applied¹

Thyrsis, a youth of the inspiréd train,
 Fair Sacharissa loved, but loved in vain;²
 Like Phoebus sung the no less amorous boy;
 Like Daphne she, as lovely and as coy.
 With numbers³ he the flying nymph pursues, 5
 With numbers such as Phoebus' self might use.
 Such is the chase when love and fancy leads O'er craggy mountains and through flowery meads,⁴
 Invoked to testify the lover's care
 Or form some image of his cruel fair. 10
 Urged with his fury, like a wounded deer,
 O'er these he fled; and now approaching near,
 Had reached the nymph with his harmonious lay,
 Whom all his charms could not incline to stay. 15
 Yet what he sung in his immortal strain,
 Though unsuccessful, was not sung in vain.
 All but the nymph that should redress his wrong
 Attend his passion and approve his song.
 Like Phoebus thus, acquiring unsought praise, 20
 He caught at love, and filled his arms with bays. 20

1645

1. Phoebus (Apollo, god of poetry) fell in love with Daphne, and pursued her till Zeus, to save her, turned her into a laurel tree; the laurel, or bay tree is, accordingly, an emblem of poetic fame, and successful poets are crowned with laurel leaves ("bays").

2. Since Sacharissa is the constant name of Waller's beloved, it is a fair presumption that Thyrsis is himself. "A youth of the inspiréd train" is poetic diction for a poet, as "cruel fair," below, is for a mistress. The boy is "no less amorous" than Phoebus, the girl just as "coy" (unwilling) as Daphne.

3. Poetic diction for verses.

4. Meadows. The craggy mountains represent the lover's griefs, the flowery meadows (by neat antithesis) his mistress's beauty.

Song

Go, lovely rose!
 Tell her that wastes her time and me
 That now she knows,
 When I resemble¹ her to thee,
 How sweet and fair she seems to be.

5

Tell her that's young,
 And shuns to have her graces spied,
 That hadst thou sprung
 In deserts, where no men abide,
 Thou must have uncommended died.

10

Small is the worth
 Of beauty from the light retired;
 Bid her come forth,
 Suffer herself to be desired,
 And not blush so to be admired.

15

Then die! that she
 The common fate of all things rare
 May read in thee;
 How small a part of time they share
 That are so wondrous sweet and fair!

20

1645

On a Girdle

That which her slender waist confined,
 Shall now my joyful temples bind;
 No monarch but would give his crown,
 His arms might do what this has done.

It was my heaven's extremest sphere,²
 The pale³ which held that lovely deer;
 My joy, my grief, my hope, my love
 Did all within this circle move!

5

A narrow compass! and yet there
 Dwelt all that's good, and all that's fair;
 Give me but what this ribbon bound,
 Take all the rest the sun goes round! ⁴

10

1686

1. Compare.

2. The last of the nine concentric crystalline spheres which, according to Ptolemaic astronomy, made up the universe. Hence, the lady's outermost garment.

3. Fence encircling a park. There is, of course, a pun on "deer" in this line.

4. The version of this poem printed in 1645 substituted "Do" for "Did" in line 8, and gave the last couplet as: "Give me but what this ribbon tied, / Take all the sun goes round beside."

Of English Verse¹

Poets may boast, as safely vain,
 Their works shall with the world remain;
 Both bound together live and die,
 The verses and the prophecy.

But who can hope his lines should long
 Last in a daily changing tongue?
 While they are new, envy prevails,
 And as that dies, our language fails.

When architects have done their part,
 The matter may betray their art;
 Time, if we use ill-chosen stone,
 Soon brings a well-built palace down.

Poets that lasting marble seek
 Must carve in Latin or in Greek;
 We write in sand, our language grows,
 And like the tide our work o'erflows.

Chaucer his sense can only boast,
 The glory of his numbers² lost!
 Years have defaced his matchless strain;
 And yet he did not sing in vain.

The beauties which adorned that age,
 The shining subjects of his rage,³
 Hoping they should immortal prove,
 Rewarded with success his love.

This was the generous poet's scope,
 And all an English pen can hope,
 To make the fair approve his flame
 That can so far extend their name.

Verse thus designed has no ill fate
 If it arrive but at the date
 Of fading beauty, if it prove
 But as long-lived as present love.

1686

1. To understand Waller's deprecatory attitude toward English poetry, we must recall that in his day modern English was very new, and was still acquiring new words, forms, and usages at a rapid pace. We write in sand, he says, the tide of language rises, and overflows our work. In those days it was true.

2. Metrics, versification. The belief that Chaucer's versification was hopelessly obsolete led to such ventures as Dryden's "translation" of some of his Canterbury Tales into modern (i.e., 17th-century) English.

3. Poetic fury, inspiration. As it calls attention to its own artifice, the word "rage" is a piece of poetic diction.

Of the Last Verses in the Book

When we for age could neither read nor write,
 The subject made us able to indite;
 The soul, with nobler resolutions decked,
 The body stooping, does herself erect.
 No mortal parts are requisite to raise
 Her that, unbodied, can her Maker praise.

5

The seas are quiet when the winds give o'er;
 So calm are we when passions are no more!
 For then we know how vain it was to boast
 Of fleeting things, so certain to be lost.
 Clouds of affection⁴ from our younger eyes
 Conceal that emptiness which age describes.

10

The soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed,
 Lets in new light through the chinks that time has made;
 Stronger by weakness, wiser men become,
 As they draw near to their eternal home.
 Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view,
 That stand upon the threshold of the new.

metaphor

paradox 15

1686

4. Passion.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING

(1609-1642)

"Natural, easy Suckling," says Millamant rapturously, in Congreve's comedy, The Way of the World; he is her ideal of a poet, one who does not take the whole business very seriously. "Brisk" was the adjective that his contemporaries generally applied to Sir John. He was a small man physically, a wit, a gamester, and a courtier, who when he turned to poetry imitated and exaggerated the informal, colloquial qualities of Donne. Many years before, Baldassare Castiglione in his dialogue The Courtier (1528) had emphasized a certain fine carelessness ("sprezzatura") as the natural quality of a great gentleman. It meant that no matter how hard one had worked on some accomplishment—a poem, a costume, swordsmanship—one should treat it always as if it were a natural, easy, spontaneous action. Sir John Suckling, above all the other "Cavalier" poets who gallantly supported the lost cause of Charles Stuart, cultivated this special quality of instinctive, careless poise. Sometimes, indeed, like a Restoration fop, he seems so careful about being careless that the substance of his discourse goes by the board. But his gay trifles have remained current in the language as some others have not; he is the prototype of the Cavalier playboy.

Song

Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
 Prithee, why so pale?
 Will, when looking well can't move her,
 Looking ill prevail?
 Prithee, why so pale?

5

Why so dull and mute, young sinner?
 Prithee, why so mute?
 Will, when speaking well can't win her,
 Saying nothing do't?
 Prithee, why so mute?

10

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
 This cannot take her.
 If of herself she will not love,
 Nothing can make her:
 The devil take her!

15

1638

Loving and Beloved

There never yet was honest man
 That ever drove the trade of love.
 It is impossible, nor can
 Integrity our ends promote;¹
 For kings and lovers are alike in this,
 That their chief art in reign dissembling is.

5

Here we are loved and there we love,
 Good nature now and passion strive
 Which of the two should be above
 And laws unto the other give.
 So we false fire with art sometimes discover,
 And the true fire with the same art do cover.

10

What rack² can fancy find so high?
 Here we must court and here engage,
 Though in the other place we die.
 O! 'tis torture all and cozenage:
 And which the harder is I cannot tell,
 To hide true love, or make false love look well.

15

Since it is thus, God of desire,
 Give me my honesty again,

20

1. Promote, move forward.

2. Torture. The thought is, what agony can we imagine so extreme as this, to be obliged by the affections of one girl while ourselves loving another?

And take thy brands back and thy fire;
 I'm weary of the state I'm in:
 Since (if the very best should now befall),
 Love's triumph must be Honor's funeral.

1646

Out upon It!

Out upon it! I have loved
 Three whole days together;
 And am like to love three more,
 If it prove fair weather.

Time shall molt away his wings,
 Ere he shall discover
 In the whole wide world again
 Such a constant lover.

5

But the spite on 't is, no praise
 Is due at all to me:
 Love with me had made no stays
 Had it any been but she.

10

Had it any been but she,
 And that very face,
 There had been at least ere this
 A dozen dozen in her place.

15

1659

RICHARD LOVELACE

(1618–1657)

Richard Lovelace and Sir John Suckling are commonly bracketed together as the leaders of the "Cavalier" poets; and though they were quite different, both as men and as writers, there is no injustice in the conjunction. Both men fought and suffered for the king; both wrote gallant verses. Perhaps one feels a little more substance in the work of Lovelace; but perhaps that is simply because he was lucky enough to live a little longer. He is best known for his poems of clarion resolution:

Stone walls do not a prison make,
 Nor iron bars a cage,

but he is also an affectionate observer of, and gentle moralizer upon, the little creatures—snails, ants, grasshoppers.

Lovelace was born of an old and wealthy Kentish family, and educated at Oxford; he was an attractive, handsome, and witty young man, the very model of a courtier. King Charles and Queen Henrietta Maria admired his demeanor so much, when they visited Oxford in 1636, that they had him created M.A. on the spot. But the Civil Wars were hard on him; he fought bravely, was imprisoned, exiled, wounded while serving as a soldier of fortune abroad, imprisoned again in England, and finally released, penniless and unemployed. His death followed shortly. Lovelace published Lucasta in 1649, and a posthumous volume appeared in 1659, with his remaining writings. A special point of interest about Lovelace is that he was one of the few English writers of the 17th century to be seriously concerned with the art of painting and the appreciation of good pictures, to which he thought his countrymen disgracefully blind.

To Althea, from Prison

When Love with unconfined wings
Hovers within my gates,
And my divine Althea brings
To whisper at the grates;
When I lie tangled in her hair
And fettered to her eye,
The gods¹ that wanton in the air
Know no such liberty. 5

When flowing cups run swiftly round,
With no allaying Thames,²
Our careless heads with roses bound,
Our hearts with loyal flames;
When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
When healths and draughts go free,
Fishes, that tattle in the deep,
Know no such liberty. 10 15

When, like committed linnets,³ I
With shriller throat shall sing
The sweetness, mercy, majesty,
And glories of my King;
When I shall voice aloud how good
He is, how great should be,
Enlarged winds, that curl the flood,
Know no such liberty. 20

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage;
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for an hermitage.
If I have freedom in my love,
And in my soul am free,
Angels alone, that soar above,
Enjoy such liberty. 25 30

1649

1. Some versions read "birds" instead of "gods."

2. No mixture of water in the wine.
3. Caged finches.

To Lucasta, Going to the Wars

Tell me not, Sweet, I am unkind
That from the nunnery
Of thy chaste breast and quiet mind,
To war and arms I fly.

True, a new mistress now I chase,
The first foe in the field;
And with a stronger faith embrace
A sword, a horse, a shield.

Yet this inconstancy is such
As you too shall adore;
I could not love thee, Dear, so much,
Loved I not honor more.

1649

The Grasshopper

TO MY NOBLE FRIEND, MR. CHARLES COTTON⁴

Oh, thou that swing'st upon the waving hair
Of some well-filled oaten beard,
Drunk every night with a delicious tear
Dropped thee from heav'n, where now th' art reared,

The joys of earth and air are thine entire,
That with thy feet and wings dost hop and fly;
And when thy poppy⁵ works thou dost retire
To thy carved acorn bed to lie.

Up with the day, the sun thou welcom'st then,
Sport'st in the gilt-plats⁶ of his beams,
And all these merry days mak'st merry men,
Thyself, and melancholy streams.⁷

But ah, the sickle! golden ears are cropped,
Ceres and Bacchus⁸ bid goodnight;
Sharp frosty fingers all your flow'rs have topped,
And what scythes spared, winds shave off quite.

4. Lovelace's friend Mr. Charles Cotton, scholar, man of letters, and father of Montaigne's translator, may have appeared to the poet an industrious and prudent ant, compared with himself, the melodious and improvident grasshopper. (Lovelace lost his entire fortune in the Civil Wars.) The circumstances of the poem are evidently those of the interregnum, when a winter of Puritanism seemed to be settling over all civilized feeling in England. For a copious explication of the poem's backgrounds and overtones, see D. C. Allen's article in Modern Language Quarterly, XVIII (1957), 35-43.

5. Opiate, sleeping potion.

6. Golden meadows.

7. The three objects of "mak'st merry" are "men," "thyself," and "melancholy streams."

8. The grain and the grape.

Poor verdant fool! and now green ice! thy joys
 Large and as lasting as thy perch of grass,
 Bid us lay in 'gainst winter rain, and poise
 Their floods with an o'erflowing glass.

20

Thou best of men and friends! we will create
 A genuine summer in each other's breast;
 And spite of this cold time and frozen fate
 Thaw us a warm seat to our rest.

Our sacred hearths shall burn eternally
 As vestal flames;⁹ the North wind, he Shall strike his frost-stretched wings, dissolve, and fly
 This Etna in epitome.¹

25

Dropping December shall come weeping in,
 Bewail th'usurping of his reign;
 But when in showers of old Greek² we begin,
 Shall cry, he hath his crown again!

30

Night as clear Hesper³ shall our tapers whip
 From the light casements where we play,
 And the dark hag from her black mantle strip,
 And stick there everlasting day.

35

Thus richer than untempted kings are we,
 That asking nothing, nothing need:
 Though lord of all that seas embrace, yet he
 That wants himself is poor indeed.

40

1649

The Snail

Wise emblem of our politic world,
 Sage snail, within thine own self curled,
 Instruct me softly to make haste,
 Whilst these my feet go slowly fast.¹
 Compendious snail! thou seem'st to me
 Large Euclid's strict epitome,²

5

9. The vestal virgins, in Rome, were responsible for tending an eternal flame.

1. Boreas, the North wind, "striking" (i.e., folding up) his wings, flees from the underground warmth of Etna, an emblem of the flame of friendship.

2. Greek wine was especially favored in the classical world; drinkers, in classical times, often wore festive crowns at their carousals; and December "crowns," i.e., terminates the year.

3. The tapers are compared to Hesperus, the morning star, which whips night from the sky. Hecate, the dark hag, was sometimes described as the daughter of Night.

1. "Politic" carries a slight implication of low cleverness: the snail is an emblem of those who "take care of Number One," as Lovelace's biography shows he was conspicuously unable to do. Lines 3 and 4 play with a Latinism: the way to get ahead is to festina lente, to make haste slowly, as Lovelace intends to do on his (poetic) feet.

2. Euclid the Greek mathematician wrote a complete book on geometry, of which the snail, with his convoluted structure, is a tiny abridgement.

And in each diagram dost fling
 Thee from the point unto the ring—
 A figure now triangular,
 An oval now, and now a square,
 And then a serpentine dost crawl,
 Now a straight line, now crooked, now all.

10

Preventing³ rival of the day,
 Th' art up, and openest thy ray
 And ere the morn cradles the moon,
 Th' art broke into a beauteous noon.
 Then when the sun sups in the deep,
 Thy silver horns o'er Cynthia's⁴ peep,
 And thou from thine own liquid bed,
 New Phoebus,⁵ heav'st thy pleasant head.

15

20

Who shall a name for thee create,
 Deep riddle of mysterious state?
 Bold nature that gives common birth
 To all products of sea and earth,
 Of thee, as earthquakes, is afraid,
 Nor will thy dire delivery aid.

25

Thou thine own daughter, then, and sire,
 That son and mother art entire,⁶
 That big still with thy self dost go,
 And liv'st an aged embryo,
 That like the cubs of India,
 Thou from thy self a while dost play,
 But frighted with a dog or gun,
 In thine own belly thou dost run,⁷
 And as thy house was thine own womb,
 So thine own womb concludes thy tomb.

30

35

But now I must (analyzed king)⁸
 Thy economic virtues sing;
 Thou great staid husband,⁹ still within
 Thou, thee, that's thine, dost discipline;
 And when thou art to progress bent,
 Thou movest thyself and tenement;
 As warlike Scythians traveled,¹ you
 Remove your men and city too,

40

3. Forestalling.

4. The moon's.

5. Phoebus is the sun god. As the sun rises every morning from the ocean, so the snail rises from his liquid bed inside his shell.

6. Many snails are in fact hermaphroditic; like gastropods in general, their inner organs are in a state of disarray compared with what we vertebrates consider "normal."

7. Popular natural histories described a creature, living in India and named Su; its young were carried in a pouch from which they emerged to play, and to which they retreated when threatened. 8. The snail is king of his own nation (shell), and Lovelace, having analyzed his sex life, is about to discuss his "economy" (i.e., his management of household affairs).

9. Frugal or provident person.

1. According to Herodotus, the nomadic Scythians pitched their tents on their wagons, and had no other dwellings. "Progress" (line 41) implies a formal royal journey, such as Queen Elizabeth used to enjoy so much, from country house to country house.

Then after a sad dearth and rain, 45
 Thou scatterest thy silver train;
 And when the trees grow naked and old,
 Thou clothest them with cloth of gold
 Which from thy bowels thou dost spin,
 And draw from the rich mines within. 50

Now hast thou changed thee saint, and made
 Thyself a fane² that's cupola'd,
 And in thy wreathéd cloister thou
 Walkest thine own gray friar³ too;
 Strict and locked up, th' art hood all o'er, 55
 And ne'er eliminat'st thy door.
 On salads thou dost feed severe,
 And 'stead of beads⁵ thou drop'st a tear.
 And when to rest each calls the bell,
 Thou sleep'st within thy marble cell, 60
 Where in dark contemplation placed,
 The sweets of nature thou dost taste,
 Who⁶ now with time thy days resolve,
 And in a jelly thee dissolve,
 Like a shot star,⁷ which doth repair 65
 Upward and rarefy the air.

1659

2. Shrine.

3. Franciscan monk.

4. From Latin limen, threshold: i.e., you never go out of doors (though the Franciscans themselves had sometimes been rebuked as wandering or vagabond friars).

5. The rosary is a mnemonic device popular with monks, who use its 150 beads as a way of keeping track of their prayers. The meditative snail drops a bit of slime instead of a bead.

6. Nature.

7. Shooting stars were popularly supposed to dissolve to jelly when they landed on earth. But the pure spirit of the star was then carried aloft, rising to the upper atmosphere, which it purified.

THOMAS TRAHERNE

(1637-1674)

Though the short, obscure life of Thomas Traherne fell squarely in the middle of the 17th century, this retiring clergyman did not become known as an English author till the first years of the 20th century, when a manuscript volume of his poems and prose meditations fell into the hands of a perceptive bookseller, who published it. Another volume followed within a few years, and Traherne took his place among the English poets. Though it is sometimes uneven, there is a freshness and visionary innocence in Traherne's work at its best that might not have proved uncongenial to the mind of William Blake, had Traherne's poetry been discovered a hundred years earlier.

Wonder

How like an angel came I down!
 How bright are all things here!
 When first among his works I did appear,
 O how their glory did me crown!
 The world resembled his eternity, 5
 In which my soul did walk,
 And everything that I did see
 Did with me talk.

The skies in their magnificence,
 The lively, lovely air; 10
 O how divine, how soft, how sweet, how fair!
 The stars did entertain my sense,
 And all the works of God so bright and pure,
 So rich and great did seem,
 As if they ever must endure, 15
 In my esteem.

A native health and innocence
 Within my bones did grow,
 And while my God did all his glories show,
 I felt a vigor in my sense 20
 That was all SPIRIT. I within did flow
 With seas of life like wine;
 I nothing in the world did know
 But 'twas divine.

Harsh ragged objects were concealed, 25
 Oppression's tears and cries,
 Sins, griefs, complaints, dissensions, weeping eyes,
 Were hid; and only things revealed
 Which heavenly spirits and the angels prize.
 The state of innocence 30
 And bliss, not trades and poverties,
 Did fill my sense.

The streets were paved with golden stones,
 The boys and girls were mine,
 O how did all their lovely faces shine! 35
 The sons of men were holy ones.
 In joy and beauty then appeared to me
 And everything which here I found
 While like an angel I did see,
 Adorned the ground. 40

Rich diamond and pearl and gold
 In every place was seen;

Rare splendors, yellow, blue, red, white, and green,
 Mine eyes did everywhere behold.
 Great wonders clothed with glory did appear, 45
 Amazement was my bliss.
 That and my wealth was everywhere:
 No joy to this!¹

Cursed and devised proprieties,²
 With envy, avarice, 50
 And fraud, those fiends that spoil even paradise,
 Fled from the splendor of mine eyes.
 And so did hedges, ditches, limits, bounds,
 I dreamed not aught of those,
 But wandered over all men's grounds, 55
 And found repose.

Proprieties themselves were mine,
 And hedges ornaments;
 Walls, boxes, coffers, and their rich contents
 Did not divide my joys, but all combine. 60
 Clothes, ribbons, jewels, laces, I esteemed
 My joys by others worn;
 For me they all to wear them seemed
 When I was born.

1903

On News

News from a foreign country came;
 As if my treasurer and my wealth lay there,
 So much it did my heart inflame!
 'Twas wont to call my soul into mine ear
 Which thither went to meet 5
 The approaching sweet,
 And on the threshold stood
 To entertain the unknown good.
 It hovered there 10
 As if 'twould leave mine ear,
 And was so eager to embrace
 The joyful tidings as they came,
 'Twould almost leave its dwelling place
 To entertain the same.

As if the tidings were the things, 15
 My very joys themselves, my foreign treasure,

1. Compared to this.

2. Properties. It is not simply private property, but more importantly the individual self from which Traherne in his vision has escaped.

Or else did bear them on their wings,
With so much joy they came, with so much pleasure.

My soul stood at the gate

To recreate³

20

Itself with bliss, and to
Be pleased with speed. A fuller view

It fain would take,

Yet journeys back would make
Unto my heart, as if 'twould fain

25

Go out to meet, yet stay within

To fit a place, to entertain,

And bring the tidings in.

What sacred instinct did inspire
My soul in childhood with a hope so strong?

30

What secret force moved my desire

To expect my joys beyond the seas so young?

Felicity I knew

Was out of view;

And being here alone,

35

I saw that happiness was gone

From me! for this

I thirsted—absent bliss,

And thought that sure beyond the seas

Or else in something near at hand⁴

40

I knew not yet (since naught did please

I knew), my bliss did stand.

But little did the infant dream
That all the treasures of the world were by,

45

And that himself was so the cream

And crown of all which round about did lie.⁵

Yet thus it was. The gem,

The diadem,

The ring enclosing all

That stood upon this earthy ball,

50

The heavenly eye,

Much wider than the sky,

Wherein they all included were,

The glorious soul that was the king

Made to possess them, did appear

55

A small and little thing!

1908

3. Divert.

4. The word "that" is understood at the end of lines 40 and 41.

5. The soul of the little child, though he does not yet know it, is the climax of creation, and its epitome—that is, it contains within itself the forms of all the forms in the world.

On Leaping over the Moon¹

I saw new worlds beneath the water lie,
 New people, yea, another sky
 And sun, which seen by day,
 Might things more clear display.
 Just such another 5
 Of late my brother²
 Did in his travel see, and saw by night,
 A much more strange and wondrous sight;
 Nor could the world exhibit such another
 So great a sight, but in a brother. 10

Adventure strange! no such in story we
 New or old, true or feignéd see.
 On earth he seemed to move,
 Yet Heaven went above;
 Up in the skies 15
 His body flies,
 In open, visible, yet magic sort:
 As he along the way did sport,
 Over the flood he takes his nimble course
 Without the help of feignéd horse.³ 20

As he went tripping o'er the king's highway.
 A little pearly river lay
 O'er which, without a wing
 Or oar, he dared to swim,
 Swim through the air 25
 On body fair;
 He would not use or trust Icarian wings⁴
 Lest they should prove deceitful things;
 For had he fallen, it had been wondrous high,
 Not from, but from above the sky. 30

He might have dropped through that thin element
 Into a fathomless descent
 Unto the nether sky
 That did beneath him lie
 And there might tell 35
 What wonders dwell
 On earth above. Yet doth he briskly run,
 And bold the danger overcome,

1. At one time toward the end of the 17th century, this poem seems to have been intended for the press, but did not appear in print till the 20th century.

2. Traherne's brother Philip.

3. Perhaps Bellerophon's Pegasus or the hippogriff which Astolfo rode to the moon in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

4. I.e., like those of wax, made for Icarus by his father Dedalus. They melted in the sun's heat.

Who, as he leapt, with joy related soon
How happy he o'erleaped the moon.

40

What wondrous things upon the earth are done
Beneath and yet above the sun?

Deeds all appear again
In higher spheres; remain
In clouds as yet:

45

But there they get
Another light, and in another way
Themselves to us above display.

The skies themselves this earthly globe surround;
We're even here within them found.

50

On heavenly ground within the skies we walk,
And in this middle center talk:

Did we but wisely move
On earth in heaven above,
Then soon should we Exalted be

55

Above the sky: from whence whoever falls,
Through a long dismal precipice,
Sinks to the deep abyss where Satan crawls,
Where horrid Death and Despair lies.

60

As much as others thought themselves to lie
Beneath the moon, so much more high

Himself he thought to fly
Above the starry sky,
As that he spied
Below the tide.

65

Thus did he yield me in the shady night
A wondrous and instructive light,
Which taught me that under our feet there is,
As o'er our heads, a place of bliss.

70

1910

ABRAHAM COWLEY

(1618–1667)

Abraham Cowley, a precocious young person, picked up the metaphysical mode in his early teens, and could never really get rid of it—though in fact it suited neither his peaceful temper nor his rational, mechanical philosophy. Metaphysical poetry is the poetry of anxiety; though he often tried to mime anxiety, Cowley was too sensible and too secure in the plain sense of things really to feel it.

Like most of his generation, the poet suffered from the Civil Wars, which uprooted him from his quiet fellowship at Trinity College, Cambridge, forced him into politics, and finally drove him into exile with the royal family, to which he was devoted. But the flow of his pen never ceased. He wrote a learned epic on the life of King David; he wrote a set of love poems to an entirely imaginary mistress; he wrote a stage comedy; he wrote some satires, and a set of "Pindaric" odes, in imitation of the enthusiastic, highly charged, and irregular style of the Greek poet Pindar. He also wrote a number of quiet, attractive informal essays.

Most of these writings found a sympathetic audience, and Cowley was admired, in his day, far above Milton. With the benefit of our hindsight, we find this hard to imagine, but Milton had not published his two epics or Samson Agonistes while Cowley was alive; and the Restoration had a particularly hard time swallowing Milton's connections with Cromwell and the regicides. In any case, and for whatever reasons, almost immediately after Cowley's death, his reputation suffered a catastrophic decline, from which it has never recovered. Still, as our selections indicate, Cowley commanded a good deal of plain, intellectual vigor, which rendered him accessible to his own time and of interest to ours as an early adventurer in the difficult task of giving scientific thought a literary shape.

To Mr. Hobbes¹

Vast bodies of philosophy
 I oft have seen and read,
 But all are bodies dead,
 Or bodies by Art fashionéd;
 I never yet the living soul could see 5
 But in thy books and thee.
 'Tis only God can know
 Whether the fair idea thou dost show
 Agree entirely with his own or no.
 This I dare boldly tell, 10
 'Tis so like truth, 'twill serve our turn as well.
 Just, as in nature, thy proportions be,
 As full of concord their variety,
 As firm the parts upon their center rest,
 And all so solid are, that they, at least 15
 As much as nature, emptiness detest.

1. The poem is addressed to Thomas Hobbes, the Malmesbury philosopher, a friend of Cowley's; in form, it is a loose imitation of the Greek odes written by the Theban poet Pindar. Cowley understood these odes to be irregular and sublime (in which he was right), and that this was the character of his own genius (in which he was hopelessly wrong). His effort here to work up an artificial "sublime" is not very impressive; but his sense that a new world of philosophy is just opening before men is characteristic of his age. Cowley had an amateur's interest in science, and great admiration for the Royal Society; but the problem of accommodating scientific rationalism within a rhetoric of poetic enthusiasm was too hard for him to handle.

Long did the mighty Stagirite² retain
 The universal intellectual reign,
 Saw his own country's short-lived leopard³ slain;
 The stronger Roman eagle did out-fly, 20
 Oftener renewed his age, and saw that die.
 Mecca itself, in spite of Mahomet possessed,
 And chased by a wild deluge from the east,
 His monarchy new planted in the west.⁴
 But as in time each great imperial race 25
 Degenerates, and gives some new one place,
 So did this noble empire waste,
 Sunk by degrees from glories past,
 And in the school-men's⁵ hands, it perished quite at last.
 Then nought but words it grew, 30
 And those all barbarous too.
 It perished and it vanished there,
 The life and soul breathed out, became but empty air.

The fields which answered well the ancients' plow,
 Spent and outworn, return no harvest now; 35
 In barren age wild and inglorious lie,
 And boast of past fertility,
 The poor relief of present poverty.
 Food and fruit we now must want
 Unless new lands we plant. 40
 We break up tombs with sacrilegious hands;
 Old rubbish we remove;
 To walk in ruins, like vain ghosts, we love,
 And with fond divining wands,
 We search among the dead 45
 For treasures buried,
 Whilst still the liberal earth does hold
 So many virgin mines of undiscovered gold.

The Baltic, Euxine, and the Caspian
 And slender-limbed Mediterranean, 50
 Seem narrow creeks to thee,⁶ and only fit
 For the poor wretched fisher-boats of wit.
 Thy nobler vessel the vast ocean tries,
 And nothing sees but seas and skies,
 Till unknown regions it describes, 55

2. Aristotle (who came from the town of Stagira, in Greece).

3. Alexander the Great, Aristotle's pupil. Cowley is here tracing the history of Aristotelian philosophy through the ages.

4. Arabian thinkers like Avicenna and Averroes were largely responsible for transmitting Aristotle's work to the Western world. The "monarchy new planted in the west" is the Moorish regime in Spain.

5. Cowley's contempt for the scholastic philosophers (Scotus, Occam, Aquinas, and the rest) is unbounded.

6. Hobbes himself. Cowley's conviction that the new philosophy of "things" rather than "words" represents a whole new world for exploration and discovery echoes the confident affirmations of Bacon.

Thou great Columbus of the golden lands of new philosophies.
 Thy task was harder much than his,
 For thy learned America is
 Not only found out first by thee,
 And rudely left to future industry, 60
 But thy eloquence and thy wit
 Has planted, peopled, built, and civilized it.

I little thought before,
 (Nor, being my own self so poor,
 Could comprehend so vast a store) 65
 That all the wardrobe of rich eloquence
 Could have afforded half enough
 Of bright, of new and lasting stuff,
 To clothe the mighty limbs of thy gigantic sense.
 Thy solid reason, like the shield from heaven 70
 To the Trojan hero given,⁷
 Too strong to take a mark from any mortal dart,
 Yet shines with gold and gems in every part,
 And wonders on it graved by the learned hand of art,
 A shield that gives delight 75
 Even to the enemy's sight,
 Then when they're sure to lose the combat by 't.

Nor can the snow which now cold age does shed
 Upon thy reverend head⁸
 Quench or allay the noble fires within; 80
 But all which thou hast been,
 And all that youth can be thou 'rt yet,
 So fully still dost thou
 Enjoy the manhood and the bloom of wit,
 And all the natural heat, but not the fever too. 85
 So contraries on Etna's⁹ top conspire,
 Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire.
 A secure peace the faithful neighbors keep,
 Th' emboldened snow next to the flame does sleep. 90
 And if we weigh, like thee,
 Nature and causes, we shall see
 That thus it needs must be;
 To things immortal time can do no wrong,
 And that which never is to die, forever must be young.

1656

7. In Book VIII of the Aeneid, Aeneas gets from his mother, Venus, a splendid shield made by her husband, Vulcan.

8. Hobbes was born in 1588, the year of the Spanish Armada; he was therefore 68 when Cowley's poem first appeared.

9. Mount Etna, a volcano in Sicily, is so high that in winter it is sometimes snow-capped.

To the Royal Society¹

1

Philosophy,² the great and only heir
 Of all that human knowledge which has been Unforfeited by man's rebellious sin,
 Though full of years he do appear
 (Philosophy, I say, and call it He 5
 For whatsoe'er the painter's fancy be,³
 It a male virtue seems to me),
 Has still been kept in nonage⁴ till of late,
 Nor managed or enjoyed his vast estate.
 Three or four thousand years, one would have thought, 10
 To ripeness and perfection might have brought
 A science so well bred and nursed,
 And of such hopeful parts too at the first.
 But, oh, the guardians and the tutors then
 (Some negligent and some ambitious men) 15
 Would ne'er consent to set him free,
 Or his own natural powers to let him see,
 Lest that should put an end to their authority.

2

That his own business he might quite forget,
 They amused him with the sports of wanton wit; 20
 With the desserts of poetry they fed him,
 Instead of solid meats t' increase his force;
 Instead of vigorous exercise, they led him
 Into the pleasant labyrinths of ever-fresh discourse.⁵
 Instead of carrying him to see 25
 The riches which do hoarded for him lie
 In Nature's endless treasury,
 They chose his eye to entertain
 (His curious but not covetous eye),
 With painted scenes and pageants of the brain. 30
 Some few exalted spirits this latter age has shown,
 That labored to assert the liberty
 (From guardians who were now usurpers grown)
 Of this old minor still, captived philosophy;
 But 'twas rebellion called to fight 35
 For such a long-oppressed right.
 Bacon at last, a mighty man, arose

1. John Evelyn the diarist, an enthusiast for the Royal Society, suggested to Cowley that he write this poem, which he did in the last year of his life.

2. Though he does not make the point immediately clear, Cowley means by "Philosophy" natural philosophy, i.e., scientific investigation. The definition comes clear below when he distinguishes Philosophy from Authority, the latter understood to represent primarily Aristotle and his interpreters.

3. Painters and writers commonly represented Philosophy as a woman.

4. The period of legal minority, when one is not of age (non-age).

5. A standard complaint against scholastic philosophy was that it consisted too largely of merely verbal exercises.

Whom a wise king and Nature chose
 Lord Chancellor of both their laws,
 And boldly undertook the injured pupil's cause.⁶ 40

3

Authority,⁷ which did a body boast,
 Though 'twas but air condensed, and stalked about
 Like some old giant's more gigantic ghost
 To terrify the learned rout,⁸
 With the plain magic of true reason's light 45
 He chased out of our sight,
 Nor suffered living men to be misled
 By the vain shadows of the dead.
 To graves, from whence it rose, the conquered phantom⁹ fled;
 He broke the monstrous god which stood 50
 In midst of th' orchard, and the whole did claim,
 Which, with a useless scythe of wood
 And something else not worth a name
 (Both vast for show, yet neither fit
 Or to defend or to beget— 55
 Ridiculous and senseless terrors!) made
 Children and superstitious men afraid.
 The orchard's open now and free,
 Bacon has broke that scarecrow deity;
 Come, enter all that will, 60
 Behold the ripened fruit, come gather now your fill.
 Yet still, methinks, we fain would be
 Catching at the forbidden tree;
 We would be like the deity, 65
 When truth and falsehood, good and evil, we Without the senses' aid within ourselves would see;
 For 'tis God only who can find
 All Nature in his mind.

4

From words, which are but pictures of the thought
 (Though we our thoughts from them perversely drew), 70
 To things, the mind's right object, he it brought.¹
 Like foolish birds, to painted grapes we flew;²
 He sought, and gathered for our use, the true;
 And when in heaps the chosen bunches lay,
 He pressed them wisely the mechanic³ way, 75

6. Francis Bacon (1561–1626) was both Lord Chancellor of England and a leading scientific thinker.

7. Early scientific investigators were constantly running up against the "authority" of the ancients, particularly Aristotle, to whose judgment they were sometimes asked to make their scientific findings conform.

8. Crowd, mob.

9. I.e., Authority. In the following lines it is compared, as an empty threat, to statues of the Roman nature god Pan, which were set in orchards with a wooden scythe and a giant phallus to scare away birds and evil spirits.

1. I.e., he called the mind away from words to things.

2. The Greek painter Zeuxis was said to have painted grapes so realistically that the birds came and pecked at them.

3. Mechanical, materialistic.

Till all their juice did in one vessel join,
Ferment into a nourishment divine,

The thirsty soul's refreshing wine.
Who to the life an exact piece would make Must not from others' work a copy take;

80

No, not from Rubens or Van Dyck:⁴
Much less content himself to make it like
The ideas and the images which lie
In his own fancy or his memory.

85

No, he before his sight must place
The natural and living face;
The real object must command
Each judgment of his eye, and motion of his hand.

5

From these and all long errors of the way
In which our wandering predecessors went,
And like th' old Hebrews many years did stray

90

In deserts but of small extent,
Bacon, like Moses, led us forth at last,
The barren wilderness he passed,
Did on the very border stand
Of the blessed promised land,
And from the mountain's top of his exalted wit
Saw it himself, and showed us it.⁵

95

But life did never to one man allow
Time to discover worlds and conquer too,
Nor can so short a line⁶ sufficient be
To fathom the vast depths of Nature's sea.

100

The work he did we ought t' admire,
And were unjust if we should more require
From his few years, divided 'twixt th' excess
Of low affliction and high happiness.⁷
For who on things remote can fix his sight,
That's always in a triumph or a fight?

105

6

From you, great champions,⁸ we expect to get
These spacious countries but discovered yet;
Countries where yet instead of Nature, we
Her images and idols worshiped see.
These large and wealthy regions to subdue,
Though learning has whole armies at command,
Quartered about in every land,
A better troop she ne'er together drew.

110

115

4. The work of Peter Paul Rubens (1577-1640) and his pupil Antony Van Dyck (1599-1641) was well known and much admired in England.
5. Like Moses, who had a remote view of the promised land from the top of Mount Pisgah, but could never himself get there, Bacon foresaw but never experienced the triumphs of science.

6. I.e., the line of man's life.

7. Bacon knew great success ("happiness") as Lord Chancellor, and great "affliction" when he was impeached for accepting bribes.

8. The members of the Royal Society, to whom the poem is addressed.

Methinks, like Gideon's little band⁹
 God with design has picked out you
 To do these noble wonders by a few.
 When the whole host he saw, "They are," said he, 120
 "Too many to o'ercome for me";
 And now he chooses out his men
 Much in the way that he did then—
 Not those many whom he found
 Idly extended on the ground 125
 To drink with their dejected head
 The stream just so as by their mouths it fled;
 No, but those few who took the waters up,
 And made of their laborious hands the cup.

7
 Thus you prepared; and in the glorious fight, 130
 Their wondrous pattern too you take:
 Their old and empty pitchers first they brake,
 And with their hands then lifted up the light.
 Io!¹ Sound too the trumpets here!
 Already your victorious lights appear; 135
 New scenes of heaven already we espy,
 And crowds of golden worlds on high,
 Which from the spacious plains of earth and sea
 Could never yet discovered be
 By sailor's or Chaldean's watchful eye.² 140
 Nature's great works no distance can obscure,
 No smallness her near objects can secure.
 You've taught the curious sight to press
 Into the privatest recess
 Of her imperceptible littleness; 145
 You've learned to read her smallest hand,
 And well begun her deepest sense to understand.

8 Mischief and true dishonor fall on those
 Who would to laughter or to scorn expose
 So virtuous and so noble a design, 150
 So human for its use, for knowledge so divine.
 The things which these proud men despise, and call
 Impertinent and vain and small,
 Those smallest things of Nature let me know
 Rather than all their greatest actions do. 155
 Whoever would deposéd truth advance
 Into the throne usurped from it
 Must feel at first the blows of ignorance
 And the sharp points of envious wit.

9. For the story of Gideon and his little band, see Judges, especially vi and vii. The story of how Gideon selected his warriors is substantially as told by Cowley in stanzas 6 and 7.

1. Greek and Roman cry of triumph.
 2. Sailors watch the sky to take their bearings; Chaldeans were the famous astronomers of antiquity.

So when, by various turns of the celestial dance
 In many thousand years,
 A star, so long unknown, appears,
 Though heaven itself more beauteous by it grow,
 It troubles and alarms the world below,
 Does to the wise a star, to fools a meteor³ show. 160
 165

9
 With courage and success you the bold work begin;
 Your cradle has not idle been.
 None e'er but Hercules and you could be
 At five years' age worthy a history.⁴
 And ne'er did fortune better yet 170
 Th' historian to the story fit.
 As you from all old errors free
 And purge the body of philosophy,
 So from all modern follies he
 Has vindicated eloquence and wit. 175
 His candid style like a clean stream does slide,
 And his bright fancy all the way
 Does like the sunshine in it play.
 It does like Thames, the best of rivers, glide
 Where the god does not rudely overturn 180
 But gently pour the crystal urn,
 And with judicious hand does the whole current guide.
 It has all the beauties Nature can impart,
 And all the comely dress without the paint of art. 1667

3. Meteors were thought to be omens of ill fortune.

4. I.e., the History of the Royal Society by Thomas Sprat. After Cow-ley's death, Sprat edited a splendid volume of his collected works, and wrote his biography.

Prose of the Seventeenth Century

The history of English prose up to the end of the 16th century is by no means simple, but it can be written and has been written; after a long, slow development and a number of experiments in both ornate and colloquial styles, the tongue produced its first prose masterpiece in Richard Hooker's massive polemic Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (1593). Hooker is so much respected because he is both dignified and colloquial, learned and direct, strong and gentle; in many respects he represents what the genius of the language was or was becoming—clear, sinewy, consecutive, rational. There had been nothing like him before. But after Hooker, English prose went so many different ways, and was applied to so many different tasks, that tracing or describing them all is very hard indeed.

In the early part of the century, two broad classes of prose can be observed. Francis Bacon, whose philosophical bias was against metaphors, rhetorical adornments, and artificial figures of speech, cultivated a plain style, using short, clear sentences and pithy apothegms. The mode was known, to contrast it with the longer and more florid periods of Ciceronian style, as "the Senecan amble." (Cicero the orator used the extended, suspended, decorated sentence; Seneca the philosopher used the short, direct, simple one.) Robert Burton was another exponent of the plain style, though his arrangement of detail is considerably more helter-skelter than Bacon's; and of course plain prose was very much the accepted thing in the writings of practical men like lawyers, travelers, scholars, and popular moralists. On the other hand, a good deal of ecclesiastical prose tended to a rhetorical ornateness reminiscent of Cicero—for example, the sermons of John Donne and Jeremy Taylor. Also ornate, though in somewhat different ways, were the prose styles of the historian Sir Walter Raleigh and the learned controversialist John Milton. But Sir Thomas Browne, who in effect wrote metaphysical poems in prose, can only be placed in a class by himself. And increasingly, as prose was turned to more different ends by more different classes of people—to explain, to persuade, to define, to describe, to explore complex psychological states, to play with ironic nuances, or simply to entertain, the variety of prose styles expanded, until one finds it impossible or at least idle to classify prose styles. For writers have started to have, as we say, "styles of their own."

For all this variety, a general tendency to write less formal, less ornate prose makes itself felt in the later century. Partly this was because the pamphlet and publicity battles that accompanied the Civil Wars taught men the persuasive powers of plain style. Partly also the lessons of scientific clarity and simplicity, taught by Bacon and repeated by many others, from the respectable Royal Society to the less respectable Thomas Hobbes, began to take hold. More important than the positive achievements of science (these tended to be detailed and not immediately impressive) was the gradual disintegration of all those occult correspondences and ingenious analogies which had furnished the material of so many metaphysical conceits and pulpit-parables. The phoenix ceased to be an emblem of the resurrection and became a bird that nobody had ever seen, a mere superstition; the pelican was not a bird to be doubted out of existence, but people ceased to believe that it re-enacted the sacrifice of Christ by drawing blood from its chest to feed its young. All those ingenious games of cross-reference and sympathetic correspondence, dear to the hearts of medieval moralists, went abruptly out of fashion. Prose got deliberately plain and literal as it was applied to more plain and literal tasks. But it did not for that reason cease to have literary value, not even when applied to a task as severe as the description of a scientific experiment. Our concluding report from the laboratory of Isaac Newton suffices to demonstrate that.

FRANCIS BACON

(1561-1626)

1597: First edition of the Essays (augmented and revised editions in 1612 and 1625).

1605: The Advancement of Learning.

1620: Novum Organum.

1621: Bacon's disgrace and retirement.

Francis Bacon, the younger son of a highly placed Elizabethan civil servant, studied law at Cambridge and Gray's Inn, entered the legal bureaucracy of Elizabeth, and rose steadily through it until, under James, he stood at the head of his profession, as Lord Chancellor of England. But after barely three years in this office, he fell from power and reputation, accused of taking bribes in office, and confessing himself guilty of corruption and neglect. The last five years of his life were spent in retirement.

Bacon's only predecessor in the field of the essay was Michel de Montaigne (1533-92), the French country squire who wrote so volubly, intimately, charmingly—and at such immense length—about himself. Concentration on self was not for Montaigne simply a matter of egotistic display; he thought himself a fair specimen of the whole human race, and proposed that we can learn a good deal about mankind in general by stripping a single example morally as well as physically naked. But Bacon when he set out to write essays had no intention of imitating his unbuttoned predecessor. As a man with a judicial position to maintain, he was not out to discover himself or explore unknown thoughts. His training in law and his reading in the Roman moralists had given him the habit of thinking in axioms; and axioms of prudent, practical conduct were what he laid down. Montaigne, in titling his writings Essais, emphasized the tentative and exploratory nature of his thought; he didn't care about developing a consistent, defensible philosophy, only about tracing the quirky track of his changing moods. Bacon laid down the law like a magistrate or a Dutch uncle, and largely concealed his "self"—at least in the way Montaigne defined "self"—under the official robes of worldly wisdom.

Only the bookish side of Montaigne came out in Bacon's Essays; reading them, you would imagine that he was born at the age of thirty-eight, with a volume of moral epistles for one parent and a treatise of English law for the other. Neither do his Essays provide much of a guide to human nature; you would scarcely learn from them, any more than from the writings of Emerson, that the human race is divided into two sexes. What one could pick up are certain prudential, practical rules about the successful conduct of business life. Philadelphia lawyers were once famous for giving this kind of advice, and Bacon phrased it in crisp, compressed phrases, easy for a busy man to remember. Axioms and adages are the kernels of legal wisdom, and Bacon's essays often read like a string of walnut sayings, hard to crack, but meaty and nourishing enough, once one has got inside them.

Bacon's reticence—not to say inhibition—when writing personal essays contrasts strikingly with the sweep and boldness of his directly philosophical work. Here the importance of what he says and implies is almost impossible to overstate. He was not himself much of a practical scientist, and anyone who tries can comb from his works an amazing collection of superstitious and unfounded beliefs. But his vision of intellectual method was wide as well as deep, and its emphasis on verifiable experiment held immense promise for the future. In fact, simple emphasis on "experience" and "experiment" (the former word was sometimes used where we would employ the latter) was not a novel principle when Bacon put it forth. A man like Paracelsus, the Swiss alchemist of the 16th century, had insisted on following his own experience against the authority of the great Galen and other doctors of classical antiquity. That was why Paracelsus and his alchemical followers were called "empirics." But their observations were uncontrolled. They noted the effects of what they called occult sympathies (for example, the peculiar affinity of the sunflower for the sun), and generalized from that single observation by analogy. Bacon recommended controlled and repeated experiments, in which theory worked to direct and focus experience, and in which all experiments were coordinated with one another. And this vision, as most memorably outlined in The New Atlantis, represented the ideal of the future. If anything, the great chancellor did not give enough weight to the concept of the controlling hypothesis; a modern scientist would give more, reducing the role of experiment to simple verification. But in most other respects, Bacon was centuries ahead of his time.

Yet, before anything could be built out of scientific hypothesis and verification, there was a major work of demolition to be accomplished. That was simply the mass of things that men already knew, under the name of "science," which weren't so. Bacon attacked such errors and their causes in the Novum Organum, or "New Instrument of Knowledge," (1620), under the heading of "idols," or false images of the mind.

From ESSAYS Of Truth

"What is truth?" said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer.¹ Certainly there be that delight in giddiness,² and count it a bondage to fix a belief; affecting free-will in thinking, as well as in acting. And though the sects of philosophers of that kind³ be gone, yet there remain certain discoursing wits, which are of the same veins, though there be not so much blood in them as was in those of the ancients. But it is not only the difficulty and labor which men take in finding out of truth; nor again, that when it is found, it imposeth upon⁴ men's thoughts, that doth bring lies in favor; but a natural though corrupt love of the lie itself. One of the later school of the Grecians examineth the matter, and is at a stand to think what should be in it, that men should love lies; where neither they make for pleasure, as with poets; nor for advantage, as with the merchant, but for the lie's sake. But I cannot tell:⁵ this same truth is a naked and open daylight, that doth not show the masks and mummeries and triumphs of the world half so stately and daintily as candle lights. Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that showeth best by day, but it will not rise to the price of a diamond or carbuncle,⁶ that showeth best in varied lights. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Doth any man doubt that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunk things, full of melancholy and indisposition, and unpleasing to themselves? One of the fathers, in great severity, called poesy vinum daemonum,⁷ because it filleth the imagination, and yet it is but with the shadow of a lie. But it is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in, and setteth in it, that doth the hurt, such as we spake of before. But howsoever these things are thus in men's depraved judgments and affections, yet truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the love-making, or wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. The first creature⁸ of God, in the works of the days, was the light of the sense; the last was the light of reason; and His sabbath work ever since is the illumination of His Spirit.

1. See John xviii.38 for Pilate's idle query to Jesus.

2. Changeability, insecurity of ideas. "That": those who.

3. The Greek Skeptics, who taught the uncertainty of all knowledge. "Discoursing wits": discursive minds.

4. Restricts, limits.

5. "I cannot tell," says Bacon, and tells.

6. Ruby.

7. The wine of devils; St. Augustine is probably being cited.

8. Creation.

First, He breathed light upon the face of the matter, or chaos; then He breathed light into the face of man; and still He breatheth and inspireth light into the face of His chosen. The poet that beautified the sect that was otherwise inferior to the rest⁹ saith yet excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and to see ships tossed upon the sea: a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle, and to see a battle, and the adventures thereof below: but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth" (a hill not to be commanded,¹ and where the air is always clear and serene), "and to see the errors, and wanderings, and mists, and tempests, in the vale below": so always that this prospect² be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly, it is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.

To pass from theological and philosophical truth to the truth of civil business; it will be acknowledged even by those that practice it not, that clear and round dealing³ is the honor of man's nature, and that mixture of falsehood is like alloy in coin of gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth⁴ it. For these winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent; which goeth basely upon the belly, and not upon the feet. There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be found false and perfidious; and therefore Montaigne saith prettily, when he inquired the reason why the word of the lie should be such a disgrace, and such an odious charge, saith he, "If it be well weighed, to say that a man lieth is as much as to say that he is brave towards God and a coward towards men."⁵ For a lie faces God, and shrinks from man. Surely the wickedness of falsehood and breach of faith cannot possibly be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon the generations of men, it being foretold that when Christ cometh, he shall not "find faith upon the earth."⁶

1625

Of Marriage and Single Life¹

He that hath wife and children hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief. Certainly the best works, and of greatest merit for the public, have proceeded from the unmarried or childless men, which

9. Lucretius' On the Nature of Things expressed the Epicurean creed, which Bacon thought inferior because it emphasized pleasure. The passage cited comprises the first words of Book I.

1. Dominated.

2. I.e., provided always that this contemplation.

3. The dealing that Bacon calls "round" we should describe as "square."

4. Debases.

5. Essays II.18.

6. Luke xviii.8.

1. The text is that of the 1625 edition.

both in affection and means have married and endowed the public. Yet it were great reason that those that have children should have greatest care of future times, unto which they know they must transmit their dearest pledges. Some there are who, though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinences.² Nay, there are some other that account wife and children but as bills of charges. Nay more, there are some foolish rich covetous men that take a pride in having no children, because they may be thought so much the richer. For perhaps they have heard some talk, "Such an one is a great rich man," and another except to it, "Yea, but he hath a great charge of children"; as if it were an abatement to his riches. But the most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous³ minds, which are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects, for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. A single life doth well with churchmen, for charity will hardly water the ground where it must first fill a pool. It is indifferent for judges and magistrates, for if they be facile⁴ and corrupt, you shall have a servant five times worse than a wife. For soldiers, I find the generals commonly in their hortatives⁵ put men in mind of their wives and children; and I think the despising of marriage amongst the Turks maketh the vulgar soldier more base. Certainly wife and children are a kind of discipline of humanity; and single men, though they be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhaust,⁶ yet, on the other side, they are more cruel and hard-hearted (good to make severe inquisitors), because their tenderness is not so oft called upon. Grave natures, led by custom, and therefore constant, are commonly loving husbands, as was said of Ulysses, Vetulam suam praetulit immortalitati.⁷ Chaste women are often proud and froward, as presuming upon the merit of their chastity. It is one of the best bonds, both of chastity and obedience, in the wife if she think her husband wise, which she will never do if she find him jealous. Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses, so as a man may have a quarrel⁸ to marry when he will. But yet he was reputed one of the wise men that made answer to the question when a man should marry: "A young man not yet, an elder man not at all."⁹ It is often seen that bad husbands have very good

2. Irrelevant concerns.

3. Unbalanced, whimsical.

4. Pliable.

5. Exhortations.

6. Exhausted, drained.

7. "He preferred his old wife to immortality." Ulysses might have had nymph Calypso, but preferred to go back to Penelope.

8. Pretext.

9. Thales (6th century B.C.) was the confirmed bachelor who made this remark. He was one of the Seven Sages of Greece.

wives; whether it be that it raiseth the price of their husbands' kindness when it comes, or that the wives take a pride in their patience. But this never fails, if the bad husbands were of their own choosing, against their friends' consent; for then they will be sure to make good their own folly.

1612, 1625

Of Studies¹

Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight is in privateness² and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business. For expert men³ can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshaling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. To spend too much time in studies is sloth; to use them too much for ornament is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules is the humor⁴ of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience; for natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by study; and studies themselves do give forth directions too much at large, except they be bounded in by experience. Crafty men contemn studies, simple men admire them, and wise men use them, for they teach not their own use; but that is a wisdom without them, and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously;⁵ and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy and extracts made of them by others, but that would be only in the less important arguments and the meaner sort of books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters,⁶ flashy things. Reading maketh a full man, conference⁷ a ready man, and writing an exact man. And therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit;⁸ and if he read little, he had need have more cunning, to seem to know that⁹ he doth not. Histories make men wise; poets, witty;¹ the mathematics, subtle; natural philosophy, deep; moral, grave; logic and rhetoric, able to contend. *Abeunt studia in mores.*² Nay, there is no stond or

1. The text is that of the 1625 edition.

2. Private life.

3. Men of experience, the English adjective being used in its Latin sense, experti.

4. Mannerism, implying absurd error.

5. Not with care.

6. Infusions of herbs, etc., used as home remedies.

7. Conversation, meetings.

8. Lively intelligence.

9. That which.

1. Imaginative, inventive.

2. "Studies culminate in manners" (Ovid. Heroides). "Stond": difficulty.

impediment in the wit but may be wrought out by fit studies, like as diseases of the body may have appropriate exercises. Bowling is good for the stone and reins,³ shooting for the lungs and breast, gentle walking for the stomach, riding for the head, and the like. So if a man's wit be wandering, let him study the mathematics; for in demonstrations, if his wit be called away never so little, he must begin again. If his wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen,⁴ for they are Cymini sectores. If he be not apt to beat over matters⁵ and to call up one thing to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyer's cases. So every defect of the mind may have a special receipt.⁶

1597, 1625

Of Negotiating⁷

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter, and by the mediation of a third than by a man's self. Letters are good when a man would draw an answer by letter back again, or when it may serve for a man's justification afterwards to produce his own letter, or where it may be danger to be interrupted or heard by pieces. To deal in person is good when a man's face breedeth regard, as commonly with inferiors, or in tender¹ cases, where a man's eye upon the countenance of him with whom he speaketh may give him a direction how far to go; and generally, where a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. In choice of instruments, it is better to choose men of a plainer sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report back again faithfully the success, than those that are cunning to contrive out of other men's business somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report for satisfaction sake. Use also such persons as affect² the business wherein they are employed, for that quickeneth much; and such as are fit for the matter, as bold men for expostulation, fair-spoken men for persuasion, crafty men for inquiry and observation, froward and absurd men for business that doth not well bear out itself.³ Use also such as have been lucky, and prevailed before in things wherein you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription.⁴ It is better to sound a person with whom one deals afar off, than to fall upon the point at first, except you mean to sur-

3. Gall bladder and kidneys.

4. Medieval theologians. The Latin means "dividers of cuminseed," i.e., hairsplitters.

5. Discuss a subject thoroughly.

6. Cure, prescription.

7. The text is that of the 1625 edition.

1. Difficult, complex.

2. Like.

3. Bacon suggests that when you have an unjust demand to make, you select a fool to make it.

4. Keep up their reputation.

prise him by some short question. It is better dealing with men in appetite,⁵ than with those that are where they would be. If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start or first performance is all,⁶ which a man cannot reasonably demand, except either the nature of the thing be such which must go before, or else a man can persuade the other party that he shall still need him in some other thing, or else that he be counted the honestest man. All practice is to discover or to work.⁷ Men discover themselves in trust, in passion, at unawares, and of necessity, when they would have somewhat done and cannot find an apt pretext. If you would work any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weakness and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. In dealing with cunning persons, we must ever consider their ends, to interpret their speeches; and it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. In all negotiations of difficulty, a man may not look to sow and reap at once; but must prepare business, and so ripen it by degrees.

1612, 1625

Of Masques and Triumphs¹

These things are but toys to come amongst such serious observations. But yet, since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegancy than daubed with cost. Dancing to song is a thing of great state and pleasure. I understand it that the song be in choir,² placed aloft, and accompanied with some broken music; and the ditty fitted to the device.³ Acting in song, especially in dialogues, hath an extreme good grace; I say acting, not dancing (for that is a mean and vulgar thing); and the voices of the dialogue would be strong and manly (a bass and a tenor; no treble), and the ditty high and tragical, not nice or dainty. Several choirs placed one over against another and taking the voice by catches, anthem-wise,⁴ give great pleasure. Turning dances into figure is a childish curiosity.⁵ And generally let it be noted that those things which I here set down are such as do naturally take the sense and not respect petty wonderments. It is true the alterations of scenes,

5. Hungry men.

6. If you're arguing over details, they will have to be settled by reference to the basic agreement, or to some other power relationship.

7. All sharp bargaining aims to find out what men are up to or to make use of them. "Discover": reveal.

1. Two varieties of amateur theatricals performed at court—ceremonial celebrations.

2. The singers should be placed as a choir in a gallery; the instrumental accompaniment is to be "broken," i.e., intermittent.

3. I.e., the song should be suited to the action.

4. I.e., the choirs should sing responsively.

5. Making the pattern of the dance an emblem of some sort is, according to Bacon, an idle oddity.

so it be quietly and without noise, are things of great beauty and pleasure, for they feed and relieve the eye before it be full of the same object. Let the scenes abound with light, specially colored and varied, and let the masquers or any other that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene itself before their coming down; for it draws the eye strangely and makes it with great pleasure to desire to see that⁶ it cannot perfectly discern. Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or pulings.⁷ Let the music likewise be sharp and loud and well placed. The colors that show best by candle light are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and oes or spangs,⁸ as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. As for rich embroidery, it is lost and not discerned. Let the suits of the masquers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizards⁹ are off, not after examples of known attires—Turks, soldiers, mariners, and the like. Let antimasques¹ not be long; they have been commonly of fools, satyrs, baboons, wild men, antics, beasts, sprites, witches, Ethiops, pygmies, turquets,² nymphs, rustics, Cupids, statua's moving, and the like. As for angels, it is not comical enough to put them in antimasques; and anything that is hideous, as devils, giants, is on the other side as unfit. But chiefly let the music of them be recreative and with some strange changes. Some sweet odors suddenly coming forth, without any drops falling, are, in such a company as there is steam and heat, things of great pleasure and refreshment. Double masques, one of men, another of ladies, addeth state and variety. But all is nothing except the room be kept clear and neat.

For jousts and tourneys and barriers,³ the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entry, especially if they be drawn with strange beasts, as lions, bears, camels, and the like; or in the devices of their entrance, or in the bravery of their liveries,⁴ or in the goodly furniture of their horses and armor. But enough of these toys.

1625

6. What.

7. I.e., not squeaky or wailing.

8. Sequins or spangles.

9. Masks.

1. Grotesque dances of odd or macabre characters, who served in masques to contrast with the noble and beautiful masquers.

2. Actors disguised in Turkish costumes.

3. These are all varieties of mock combats or tournaments.

4. Attire.

From *Novum Organum*¹

[The Idols]

50

But by far the greatest hindrance and aberration of the human understanding proceeds from the dullness, incompetency, and deceptions of the senses; in that things which strike the sense outweigh things which do not immediately strike it, though they² be more important. Hence it is that speculation commonly ceases where sight ceases; insomuch that of things invisible there is little or no observation. Hence all the working of the spirits enclosed in tangible bodies lies hid and unobserved of men.³ So also all the more subtle changes of form in the parts of coarser substances (which they commonly call alteration, though it is in truth local motion through exceedingly small spaces) is in like manner unobserved. And yet unless these two things just mentioned be searched out and brought to light, nothing great can be achieved in nature, as far as the production of works is concerned. So again the essential nature of our common air, and of all bodies less dense than air (which are very many), is almost unknown. For the sense by itself is a thing infirm and erring; neither can instruments for enlarging or sharpening the senses do much; but all the truer kind of interpretation of nature is effected by instances and experiments fit and apposite; wherein the sense decides touching the experiment only, and the experiment touching the point in nature and the thing itself.

51

The human understanding is of its own nature prone to abstractions and gives a substance and reality to things which are fleeting. But to resolve nature into abstractions is less to our purpose than to dissect her into parts; as did the school of Democritus,⁴ which

1. Novum Organum, or "The New Instrument of Learning," does not properly represent a work of English literature, since it was written in Latin, for an international scholarly audience. (Bacon rather mistrusted the modern languages, thinking they would "wear away" in time; but Latin was safe.) Still, no history of English ideas can afford to ignore this book; for it was the keystone of Bacon's vast project to renovate the structure of human learning from the ground up. The translation is that of Spedding, Ellis, and Heath, from their edition of the Works (1860-64).

Observation was the essential process of Bacon's new method; he felt that only observation, long continued and carefully directed, was capable of producing certainty about the operations of nature. As against the true intellectual mean produced by careful observation and controlled experiment, he set the frivolity of the skeptics and the unwarranted confidence of the dogmatists. This argument rises to its height about halfway through the first (destructive) part of the book, in an extended account of the various Idols, or delusive ideas, which mislead and bewilder the human understanding.

2. The latter.

3. Though his views on scientific method were amazingly modern, Bacon's ideas about physical phenomena were those of his age; he believed in subtle spiritual principles which might lie concealed in physical objects, unobserved by men.

4. The school of Democritus, the "laughing philosopher" of ancient Greece (5th century B.C.), held that the world was composed of atoms. Democritus developed the atomic theory, of which Leucippus was the originator; Lucretius (four centuries later) became the great literary exponent of this school.

went further into nature than the rest. Matter rather than forms should be the object of our attention, its configurations and changes of configuration, and simple action, and law of action or motion; for forms are figments of the human mind, unless you will call those laws of action forms.

52

Such then are the idols which I call Idols of the Tribe,⁵ and which take their rise either from the homogeneity of the substance of the human spirit, or from its preoccupation, or from its narrowness, or from its restless motion, or from an infusion of the affections, or from the incompetency of the senses, or from the mode of impression.

53

The Idols of the Cave take their rise in the peculiar constitution, mental or bodily, of each individual; and also in education, habit, and accident. Of this kind there is a great number and variety; but I will instance those the pointing out of which contains the most important caution, and which have most effect in disturbing the clearness of the understanding.

54

Men become attached to certain particular sciences⁶ and speculations, either because they fancy themselves the authors and inventors thereof, or because they have bestowed the greatest pains upon them and become most habituated to them. But men of this kind, if they betake themselves to philosophy and contemplations of a general character, distort and color them in obedience to their former fancies; a thing especially to be noticed in Aristotle, who made his natural philosophy a mere bondservant to his logic, thereby rendering it contentious and well nigh useless. The race of chemists⁷ again out of a few experiments of the furnace have built up a fantastic philosophy, framed with reference to a few things; and Gilbert also, after he had employed himself most laboriously in the study and observation of the loadstone, proceeded at once to construct an entire system in accordance with his favorite subject.⁸

55

There is one principal and, as it were, radical distinction between different minds, in respect of philosophy and the sciences, which is this: that some minds are stronger and apter to mark the differences of things, others to mark their resemblances. The steady and acute mind can fix its contemplations and dwell and fasten on the subtlest

5. By "Idols" Bacon means delusive images of truth, leading men away from the exact knowledge of science. By "Idols of the Tribe" he denotes particularly generalizations based on inadequate facts—a fault to which all men are prone.

6. Ideas, bits of information.

7. Alchemists.

8. William Gilbert, author of a famous treatise on the magnet (1600), serves Bacon (rather unfairly) as an example of dogmatism founded on a few limited experiments.

distinctions: the lofty and discursive mind recognizes and puts together the finest and most general resemblances. Both kinds however easily err in excess, by catching the one at gradations, the other at shadows.

56

There are found some minds given to an extreme admiration of antiquity, others to an extreme love and appetite for novelty; but few so duly tempered that they can hold the mean, neither carping at what has been well laid down by the ancients, nor despising what is well introduced by the moderns. This however turns to the great injury of the sciences and philosophy; since these affectations of antiquity and novelty are the humors of partisans rather than judgments; and truth is to be sought for not in the felicity of any age, which is an unstable thing, but in the light of nature and experience, which is eternal. These factions therefore must be abjured, and care must be taken that the intellect be not hurried by them into assent.

57

Contemplations of nature and of bodies in their simple form break up and distract the understanding, while contemplations of nature and bodies in their composition and configuration overpower and dissolve the understanding:⁹ a distinction well seen in the school of Leucippus and Democritus as compared with the other philosophies. For that school is so busied with the particles that it hardly attends to the structure; while the others are so lost in admiration of the structure that they do not penetrate to the simplicity of nature. These kinds of contemplation should therefore be alternated and taken by turns; that so the understanding may be rendered at once penetrating and comprehensive, and the inconveniences above mentioned, with the idols which proceed from them, may be avoided.

58

Let such then be our provision and contemplative prudence for keeping off and dislodging the Idols of the Cave, which grow for the most part either out of the predominance of a favorite subject, or out of an excessive tendency to compare or to distinguish, or out of partiality for particular ages, or out of the largeness or minuteness of the objects contemplated. And generally let every student of nature take this as a rule—that whatever his mind seizes and dwells upon with peculiar satisfaction is to be held in suspicion, and that so much the more care is to be taken in dealing with such questions to keep the understanding even and clear.

59

But the Idols of the Market-place are the most troublesome of all: idols which have crept into the understanding through the alliances

9. I.e., reducing nature to first principles is, intellectually, as dangerous as trying to observe all its particulars.

of words and names. For men believe that their reason governs words; but it is also true that words react on the understanding; and this it is that has rendered philosophy and the sciences sophistical and inactive. Now words, being commonly framed and applied according to the capacity of the vulgar, follow those lines of division which are most obvious to the vulgar understanding. And whenever an understanding of greater acuteness or a more diligent observation would alter those lines to suit the true divisions of nature, words stand in the way and resist the change. Whence it comes to pass that the high and formal discussions of learned men end oftentimes in disputes about words and names; with which (according to the use¹ and wisdom of the mathematicians) it would be more prudent to begin, and so by means of definitions reduce them to order. Yet even definitions cannot cure this evil in dealing with natural and material things; since the definitions themselves consist of words, and those words beget others: so that it is necessary to recur to individual instances, and those in due series and order; as I shall say presently when I come to the method and scheme for the formation of notions and axioms.²

60

The idols imposed by words on the understanding are of two kinds. They are either names of things which do not exist (for as there are things left unnamed through lack of observation, so likewise are there names which result from fantastic suppositions and to which nothing in reality responds), or they are names of things which exist, but yet confused and ill-defined, and hastily and irregularly derived from realities. Of the former kind are Fortune, the Prime Mover, Planetary Orbits, Element of Fire, and like fictions which owe their origin to false and idle theories.³ And this class of idols is more easily expelled, because to get rid of them it is only necessary that all theories should be steadily rejected and dismissed as obsolete.⁴

But the other class, which springs out of a faulty and unskillful abstraction, is intricate and deeply rooted. Let us take for example such a word as humid; and see how far the several things which

1. Custom.

2. Bacon's mistrust of words, evident here, led the Royal Society to cultivate a plain, stripped prose style for purposes of scientific communication.

3. The "Prime Mover" was a transparent sphere on the outside of the universe, supposed to move all the other spheres; the "Element of Fire" was an area of pure, invisible fire, supposed to exist above the atmosphere. In the nature of things, these concepts could be based on no observation. "Planetary Orbits," on the other hand, are very real; Bacon may be referring to the old notion of crystalline spheres in which the planets were supposed to be set.

4. Bacon does not really mean "theories" in the inclusive modern sense, but "abstractions loosely invoked to explain particular facts." He is actually restating William of Occam's famous 14th-century principle, known as "Occam's razor," to the effect that "essences must not be multiplied beyond necessity."

the word is used to signify agree with each other; and we shall find the word humid to be nothing else than a mark loosely and confusedly applied to denote a variety of actions which will not bear to be reduced to any constant meaning. For it both signifies that which easily spreads itself round any other body; and that which in itself is indeterminate and cannot solidize; and that which readily yields in every direction; and that which easily divides and scatters itself; and that which easily unites and collects itself; and that which readily flows and is put in motion; and that which readily clings to another body and wets it; and that which is easily reduced to a liquid, or being solid easily melts. Accordingly when you come to apply the word—if you take it in one sense, flame is humid; if in another, air is not humid; if in another, fine dust is humid; if in another, glass is humid. So that it is easy to see that the notion is taken by abstraction only from water and common and ordinary liquids, without any due verification.

There are however in words certain degrees of distortion and error. One of the least faulty kinds is that of names of substances, especially of lowest species and well-deduced (for the notion of chalk and of mud is good, of earth bad); a more faulty kind is that of actions, as to generate, to corrupt, to alter; the most faulty is of qualities (except such as are the immediate objects of the sense), as heavy, light, rare, dense, and the like. Yet in all these cases some notions are of necessity a little better than others, in proportion to the greater variety of subjects that fall within the range of the human sense.

61

But the *Idols of the Theater*⁵ are not innate, nor do they steal into the understanding secretly, but are plainly impressed and received into the mind from the play-books of philosophical systems and the perverted rules of demonstration. To attempt refutations in this case would be merely inconsistent with what I have already said: for since we agree neither upon principles nor upon demonstrations, there is no place for argument. And this is so far well, inasmuch as it leaves the honor of the ancients untouched. For they are no wise disparaged—the question between them and me being only as to the way. For as the saying is, the lame man who keeps the right road outstrips the runner who takes a wrong one. Nay, it is obvious that when a man runs the wrong way, the more active and swift he is the further he will go astray.

But the course I propose for the discovery of sciences is such as leaves but little to the acuteness and strength of wits, but places all

5. I.e., those derived from previous philosophical systems, which misrepresent life by overdramatizing it and mislead men by pretending to show them reality itself.

wits and understandings nearly on a level. For as in the drawing of a straight line or a perfect circle, much depends on the steadiness and practice of the hand, if it be done by aim of hand only, but if with the aid of rule or compass, little or nothing; so is it exactly with my plan. But though particular confutations would be of no avail, yet touching the sects and general divisions of such systems I must say something; something also touching the external signs which show that they are unsound; and finally something touching the causes of such great infelicity and of such lasting and general agreement in error; that so the access to truth may be made less difficult, and the human understanding may the more willingly submit to its purgation and dismiss its idols.

62

Idols of the Theater, or of systems, are many, and there can be and perhaps will be yet many more. For were it not that now for many ages men's minds have been busied with religion and theology; and were it not that civil governments, especially monarchies, have been averse to such novelties, even in matters speculative; so that men labor therein to the peril and harming of their fortunes—not only unrewarded, but exposed also to contempt and envy; doubtless there would have arisen many other philosophical sects like to those which in great variety flourished once among the Greeks. For as on the phenomena of the heavens many hypotheses may be constructed, so likewise (and more also) many various dogmas may be set up and established on the phenomena of philosophy. And in the plays of this philosophical theater you may observe the same thing which is found in the theater of the poets, that stories invented for the stage are more compact and elegant, and more as one would wish them to be, than true stories out of history.

In general, however, there is taken for the material of philosophy either a great deal out of a few things, or a very little out of many things; so that on both sides philosophy is based on too narrow a foundation of experiment and natural history, and decides on the authority of too few cases. For the rational school of philosophers snatches from experience a variety of common instances, neither duly ascertained nor diligently examined and weighed, and leaves all the rest to meditation and agitation of wit.⁶

There is also another class of philosophers, who having bestowed much diligent and careful labor on a few experiments, have thence made bold to educe and construct systems; wresting all other facts in a strange fashion to conformity therewith.

6. Bacon's thought contained a concealed element of anti-intellectualism: his enthusiasm for experiment led him to denigrate the value of reason, as very few modern scientists would feel it necessary to do. What he is opposing here is an excessive concern with the forms of logic, as exemplified, he would say, in "the schoolmen."

And there is yet a third class, consisting of those who out of faith and veneration mix their philosophy with theology and traditions; among whom the vanity of some has gone so far aside as to seek the origin of sciences among spirits and genii. So that this parent stock of errors—this false philosophy—is of three kinds; the sophistical, the empirical, and the superstitious. * * *

68

So much concerning the several classes of idols, and their equipage: all of which must be renounced and put away with a fixed and solemn determination, and the understanding thoroughly freed and cleansed; the entrance into the kingdom of man, founded on the sciences, being not much other than the entrance into the kingdom of heaven, whereinto none may enter except as a little child.

1620

From The New Atlantis¹

[Solomon's House]

We came at our day and hour, and I was chosen by my fellows for the private access.² We found him in a fair chamber, richly hanged, and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state.³ He was set upon a low throne richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue satin embroidered. He was alone, save that he had two pages of honor, on either hand one, finely attired in white. His undergarments were the like that we saw him wear in the chariot; but instead of his gown, he had on him a mantle with a cape of the same fine black, fastened about him. When we came in, as we were taught, we bowed low at our first entrance, and when we were come near his chair, he stood up, holding forth his hand ungloved and in posture of blessing; and we every one of us stooped down, and kissed the hem of his tippet.⁴ That done, the rest departed, and I remained. Then he warned the pages forth of

1. Sir Thomas More's Utopia (1516) set a fashion for imaginary communities with ideal forms of government which was suddenly taken up in the early 17th century. The German Johann Andreae published in 1619 his Christianopolis; Thomas Campanella, languishing in a Neapolitan jail, wrote his City of the Sun in 1623. Bacon's contribution to the discussion, perhaps because he never completed it, is really tangential to the concept of an ideal commonwealth. His New Atlantis is in effect a research establishment which could exist in any society that would tolerate it. Perhaps for that reason, it had an immediate influence beyond that of most full-fledged Utopias; and was largely realized, within thirty years of its publication, in the shape of the Philosophical Society which in 1662 became the Royal Society. Bacon begins by describing an imaginary voyage to the island of Bensalem, supposed to lie in the vicinity of the Bering Straits. Here, after learning about the miraculous diffusion of Christianity to the island, he is invited to visit their most interesting institution, Solomon's House.

2. Audience.

3. I.e., without stairs leading up to the dais.

4. Scarf.

the room, and caused me to sit down beside him, and spake to me thus in the Spanish tongue:

"God bless thee, my son; I will give thee the greatest jewel I have. For I will impart unto thee, for the love of God and men, a relation of the true state of Solomon's House. Son, to make you know the true state of Solomon's House, I will keep this order. First, I will set forth unto you the end of our foundation. Secondly, the preparations and instruments we have for our works. Thirdly, the several employments and functions whereto our fellows are assigned. And fourthly, the ordinances and rites which we observe.

"The end of our foundation is the knowledge of causes, and secret motions of things; and the enlarging of the bounds of human empire, to the effecting of all things possible.

"The preparations and instruments are these. We have large and deep caves of several depths: the deepest are sunk six hundred fathoms; and some of them are digged and made under great hills and mountains; so that if you reckon together the depth of the hill, and the depth of the cave, they are, some of them, above three miles deep. For we find that the depth of a hill, and the depth of a cave from the flat, is the same thing; both remote alike from the sun and heaven's beams, and from the open air. These caves we call the lower region, and we use them for all coagulations, indurations,⁵ refrigerations, and conservations of bodies. We use them likewise for the imitation of natural mines, and the producing also of new artificial metals, by compositions and materials which we use, and lay there for many years. We use them also sometimes (which may seem strange) for curing of some diseases, and for prolongation of life in some hermits that choose to live there, well accommodated of⁶ all things necessary, and indeed live very long; by whom also we learn many things.

"We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements,⁷ as the Chinese do their porcelain. But we have them in greater variety, and some of them more fine. We also have great variety of composts⁸ and soils, for the making of the earth fruitful.

"We have high towers, the highest about half a mile in height, and some of them likewise set upon high mountains, so that the vantage of the hill, with the tower, is in the highest of them three miles at least. And these places we call the upper region, accounting the air between the high places and the low as a middle region. We use these towers, according to their several heights and situations, for insolation,⁹ refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors—as winds, rain, snow, hail;¹ and some of the fiery me-

5. Hardenings.

6. Provided with.

7. Clays and pottery mixtures.

8. Manures.

9. Exposure to the sun.

1. Anything that fell from the sky was, in Renaissance terminology, a meteor.

teors also. And upon them, in some places, are dwellings of hermits, whom we visit sometimes, and instruct what to observe.

"We have great lakes, both salt and fresh, whereof we have use for the fish and fowl. We use them also for burials of some natural bodies, for we find a difference in things buried in earth, or in air below the earth, and things buried in water. We have also pools, of which some do strain fresh water out of salt, and others by art do turn fresh water into salt. We have also some rocks in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore, for some works wherein is required the air and vapor of the sea. We have likewise violent streams and cataracts, which serve us for many motions; and likewise engines for multiplying and enforcing² of winds to set also on going divers motions.

"We have also a number of artificial wells and fountains, made in imitation of the natural sources and baths, as tinted upon³ vitriol, sulphur, steel, brass, lead, nitre, and other minerals; and again, we have little wells for infusions of many things, where the waters take the virtue⁴ quicker and better than in vessels or basins. And amongst them we have a water, which we call Water of Paradise, being by that we do to it, made very sovereign⁵ for health and prolongation of life.

"We have also great and spacious houses, where we imitate and demonstrate meteors—as snow, hail, rain, some artificial rains of bodies, and not of water, thunders, lightnings; also generations of bodies in air—as frogs, flies, and divers others.

"We have also certain chambers, which we call chambers of health, where we qualify⁶ the air as we think good and proper for the cure of divers diseases, and preservation of health.

"We have also fair and large baths, of several mixtures, for the cure of diseases, and the restoring of a man's body from arefaction;⁷ and others for the confirming of it in strength of sinews, vital parts, and the very juice and substance of the body.

"We have also large and various orchards and gardens, wherein we do not so much respect beauty as variety of ground and soil, proper for divers trees and herbs, and some very spacious, where trees and berries are set, whereof we make divers kinds of drinks, besides the vineyards. In these we practice likewise all conclusions⁸ of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild-trees as fruit-trees, which produceth many effects. And we make (by art) in the same orchards and gardens trees and flowers to come earlier or later than their seasons, and to come up and bear more speedily than by their natural course they do. We make them also by art greater much than their

2. Re-enforcing, strengthening.

3. Tinctured with.

4. Property (of the substances put into water).

5. Efficacious.

6. Modify.

7. Drying up.

8. Theories.

nature; and their fruit greater and sweeter, and of differing taste, smell, color, and figure, from their nature. And many of them we so order as they become of medicinal use.

"We have also means to make divers plants rise by mixtures of earths without seeds, and likewise to make divers new plants, differing from the vulgar,⁹ and to make one tree or plant turn into another.

"We have also parks, and enclosures of all sorts, of beasts and birds; which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials,¹ that thereby we may take light what may be wrought upon the body of man. Wherein we find many strange effects: as continuing life in them, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth; resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance, and the like. We try also all poisons, and other medicines upon them, as well of chirurgery² as physic. By art likewise, we make them greater or taller than their kind is, and contrariwise dwarf them and stay their growth; we make them more fruitful and bearing than their kind is, and contrariwise barren and not generative. Also we make them differ in color, shape, activity, many ways. We find means to make commixtures and copulations of divers kind, which have produced many new kinds,³ and them not barren, as the general opinion is. We make a number of kinds of serpents, worms, fishes, flies, of putrefaction, whereof some are advanced (in effect) to be perfect creatures, like beasts or birds, and have sexes, and do propagate. Neither do we this by chance, but we know beforehand of what matter and commixture what kind of those creatures will arise.

"We have also particular pools where we make trials upon fishes, as we have said before of beasts and birds.

"We have also places for breed and generation of those kinds of worms and flies which are of special use; such as are with you your silkworms and bees.

"I will not hold you long with recounting of our brew-houses, bake-houses, and kitchens, where are made divers drinks, breads, and meats, rare and of special effects. Wines we have of grapes, and drinks of other juice of fruits, of grains, and of roots, and of mixtures with honey, sugar, manna, and fruits dried and decocted;⁴ also of the tears or woundings of trees, and of the pulp of canes. And these drinks are of several ages, some to the age or last⁵ of forty years. We have drinks also brewed with several herbs, and roots and spices; yea, with several fleshs and whitemeats;⁶ whereof some of the drinks are such as they are in effect meat and drink both, so that

9. Ordinary.

1. Experiments.

2. Surgery.

3. Species.

4. Dissolved in water, by boiling.

5. Duration.

6. Breast of chicken, fish, sometimes cheese.

divers, especially in age, do desire to live with them, with little or no meat or bread. And above all, we strive to have drinks of extreme thin parts, to insinuate into the body, and yet without all biting, sharpness, or fretting; insomuch as some of them, put upon the back of your hand, will with a little stay⁷ pass through to the palm, and yet taste mild to the mouth. We have also waters, which we ripen in that fashion, as they become nourishing, so that they are indeed excellent drink, and many will use no other. Bread we have of several grains, roots, and kernels; yea, and some of flesh, and fish, dried; with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites; some do nourish so, as divers do live of them, without any other meat, who live very long. So for meats, we have some of them so beaten, and made tender, and mortified,⁸ yet without all corrupting, as a weak heat of the stomach will turn them into good chylus,⁹ as well as a strong heat would meat otherwise prepared. We have some meats also, and breads, and drinks, which taken by men, enable them to fast long after; and some other, that used¹ make the very flesh of men's bodies sensibly more hard and tough, and their strength far greater than otherwise it would be.

"We have dispensatories, or shops of medicines; wherein you may easily think, if we have such variety of plants and living creatures more than you have in Europe (for we know what you have), the simples,² drugs, and ingredients of medicines, must likewise be in so much the greater variety. We have them likewise of divers ages, and long fermentations. And for their preparations, we have not only all manner of exquisite distillations and separations, and especially by gentle heats, and percolations through divers strainers, yea, and substances; but also exact forms of composition,³ whereby they incorporate almost as they were natural simples.

"We have also divers mechanical arts, which you have not; and stuffs made by them, as papers, linen, silks, tissues, dainty works of feathers of wonderful luster, excellent dyes, and many others. and shops likewise, as well for such as are not brought into vulgar use amongst us, as for those that are. For you must know, that of the things before recited, many of them are grown into use throughout the kingdom, but yet, if they did flow from our invention, we have of them also for patterns and principals.⁴

"We have also furnaces of great diversities, and that keep great diversity of heats: fierce and quick, strong and constant, soft and

7. Delay.

8. Softened.

9. Chyle, food in its emulsified and digestible form. Bacon thinks of the stomach as a furnace, which softens food by heat.

1. The word "when" is understood here.

2. Herbs.

3. Ways of putting the ingredients of medicines together, making compounds.

4. Models.

mild; blown, quiet; dry, moist; and the like. But above all we have heats, in imitations of the sun's and heavenly bodies' heats, that pass divers inequalities, and (as it were) orbs, progresses, and returns,⁵ whereby we produce admirable effects. Besides, we have heats of dungs, and of bellies and maws of living creatures and of their bloods and bodies, and of hays and herbs laid up moist, of lime unquenched, and such like. Instruments also which generate heat only by motion. And farther, places for strong insulations; and again, places under the earth, which by nature or art yield heat. These divers heats we use as the nature of the operation which we intend requireth.

"We have also perspective houses,⁶ where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colors; and out of things uncolored and transparent we can represent unto you all several colors, not in rainbows (as it is in gems and prisms), but of themselves single. We represent also all multiplications of light, which we carry to great distance, and make so sharp, as to discern small points and lines. Also all colorations of light; all delusions and deceits of the sight, in figures, magnitudes, motions, colors; all demonstrations of shadows. We find also divers means, yet unknown to you, of producing of light originally from divers bodies. We procure means of seeing objects afar off, as in the heaven and remote places; and represent things near as afar off, and things afar off as near, making feigned distances. We have also helps for the sight, far above spectacles and glasses in use. We have also glasses and means to see small and minute bodies, perfectly and distinctly; as the shapes and colors of small flies and worms, grains and flaws in gems which cannot otherwise be seen, observations in urine and blood not otherwise to be seen. We make artificial rainbows, halos, and circles about light. We represent also all manner of reflections, refractions, and multiplications of visual beams of objects.

"We have also precious stones of all kinds, many of them of great beauty and to you unknown; crystals likewise; and glasses of divers kinds; and amongst them some of metals vitrified,⁷ and other materials besides those of which you make glass. Also a number of fossils and imperfect minerals, which you have not. Likewise loadstones of prodigious virtue:⁸ and other rare stones, both natural and artificial.

"We have also sound-houses, where we practice and demonstrate all sounds and their generation. We have harmonies which you have not, of quarter sounds and lesser slides of sounds. Divers instruments of music likewise to you unknown, some sweeter than any you have;

5. I.e., the furnaces produce various heats at will.

6. For optical experiments.

7. Turned to glass.

8. Strength.

together with bells and rings that are dainty and sweet. We represent small sounds as great and deep; likewise great sounds, extenuate⁹ and sharp; we make divers tremblings and warblings of sounds, which in their original are entire.¹ We represent and imitate all articulate sounds and letters, and the voices and notes of beasts and birds. We have certain helps, which set to the ear do further the hearing greatly. We have also divers strange and artificial echoes, reflecting the voice many times, and as it were tossing it; and some that give back the voice louder than it came, some shriller and some deeper; yea, some rendering² the voice, differing in the letters or articulate sound from that they receive. We have also means to convey sounds in trunks³ and pipes, in strange lines and distances.

"We have also perfume-houses, wherewith we join also practices of taste. We multiply smells, which may seem strange; we imitate smells, making all smells to breathe out of other mixtures than those that give them. We make divers imitations of taste likewise, so that they will deceive any man's taste. And in this house we contain also a confiture-house, where we make all sweetmeats, dry and moist, and divers pleasant wines, milks, broths, and salads, far in greater variety than you have.

"We have also engine-houses, where are prepared engines and instruments for all sorts of motions. There we imitate and practice to make swifter motions than any you have, either out of your muskets or any engine that you have; and to make them and multiply them more easily and with small force, by wheels and other means, and to make them stronger and more violent than yours are, exceeding your greatest cannons and basilisks.⁴ We represent also ordnance and instruments of war and engines of all kinds; and likewise new mixtures and compositions of gunpowder, wildfires burning in water and unquenchable; also fireworks of all variety, both for pleasure and use. We imitate also flights of birds; we have some degrees of flying⁵ in the air. We have ships and boats for going under water and brooking⁶ of seas, also swimming girdles and supporters. We have divers curious clocks, and other like motions of return, and some perpetual motions. We imitate also motions of living creatures by images of men, beasts, birds, fishes, and serpents; we have also a great number of other various motions, strange for equality,⁷ fineness, and subtlety.

"We have also a mathematical-house, where are represented all instruments, as well of geometry as astronomy, exquisitely made.

"We have also houses of deceits of the senses, where we represent

9. Drawn out thin.

1. I.e., we can vary notes which in nature are single.

2. Transforming.

3. Tubes.

4. Cannon, named after the fabulous beast that killed by a beam from its eye.

5. I.e., rudimentary forms of flying.

6. Withstanding.

7. Unusual for their evenness.

all manners of feats of juggling, false apparitions, impostures and illusions, and their fallacies. And surely you will easily believe that we, that have so many things truly natural which induce admiration, could in a world of particulars deceive the senses if we would disguise those things, and labor to make them seem more miraculous. But we do hate all impostures and lies, insomuch as we have severely forbidden it to all our fellows, under pain of ignominy and fines, that they do not show any natural work or thing adorned or swelling, but only pure as it is, and without all affectation of strangeness.

"These are, my son, the riches of Solomon's House.

"For the several employments and offices of our fellows, we have twelve that sail into foreign countries under the names of other nations (for our own we conceal), who bring us the books and abstracts and patterns of experiments of all other parts. These we call Merchants of Light.

"We have three that collect the experiments which are in all books. These we call Depredators.

"We have three that collect the experiments of all mechanical arts, and also of liberal sciences, and also of practices which are not brought into arts. These we call Mystery-men.

"We have three that try new experiments, such as themselves think good. These we call Pioneers or Miners.

"We have three that draw the experiments of the former four into titles and tables; to give the better light for the drawing of observations and axioms out of them. These we call Compilers.

"We have three that bend themselves, looking into the experiments of their fellows, and cast about how to draw out of them things of use and practice for man's life and knowledge, as well for works as for plain demonstration of causes, means of natural divinations, and the easy and clear discovery of the virtues and parts of bodies. These we call Dowry-men or Benefactors.

"Then after divers meetings and consults of our whole number, to consider of the former labors and collections, we have three that take care out of them to direct new experiments, of a higher light, more penetrating into Nature than the former. These we call Lamps.

"We have three others that do execute the experiments so directed, and report them. These we call Inoculators.

"Lastly, we have three that raise the former discoveries by experiments into greater observations, axioms, and aphorisms. These we call Interpreters of Nature.⁸

"We have also, as you must think, novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail; besides a

8. The total staff of Solomon's House is 36; a generous allowance, by Bacon's estimate, for the project of understanding the natural cosmos. Modern researchers would want a little more staff.

great number of servants and attendants, men and women. And this we do also: we have consultations, which of the inventions and experiences which we have discovered shall be published, and which not; and take all an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret; though some of those we do reveal sometimes to the State, and some not.⁹

"For our ordinances and rites, we have two very long and fair galleries: in one of these we place patterns and samples of all manner of the more rare and excellent inventions; in the other we place the statues of all principal inventors. There we have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies; also the inventor of ships; your monk that was the inventor of ordnance and of gunpowder;¹ the inventor of music; the inventor of letters; the inventor of printing; the inventor of observations of astronomy; the inventor of works in metal; the inventor of glass; the inventor of silk of the worm; the inventor of wine; the inventor of corn and bread; the inventor of sugars; and all these by more certain tradition than you have. Then we have divers inventors of our own, of excellent works, which since you have not seen, it were too long to make descriptions of them; and besides, in the right understanding of those descriptions you might easily err. For upon every invention of value we erect a statue to the inventor, and give him a liberal and honorable reward. These statues are some of brass, some of marble and touchstone,² some of cedar and other special woods gilt and adorned; some of iron, some of silver, some of gold.

"We have certain hymns and services, which we say daily of laud and thanks to God for His marvelous works. And forms of prayer, imploring His aid and blessing for the illumination of our labors, and the turning of them into good and holy uses.

"Lastly, we have circuits or visits, of divers principal cities of the kingdom; where, as it cometh to pass, we do publish such new profitable inventions as we think good. And we do also declare natural divinations of diseases, plagues, swarms of hurtful creatures, scarcity, tempests, earthquakes, great inundations, comets, temperature of the year, and divers other things; and we give counsel thereupon, what the people shall do for the prevention and remedy of them."

And when he had said this he stood up; and I, as I had been taught, kneeled down; and he laid his right hand upon my head, and said, "God bless thee, my son, and God bless this relation which I have made. I give thee leave to publish it, for the good of other nations; for we here are in God's bosom, a land unknown." And

9. Observe Bacon's suspicion of the body politic, and the freedom which he allows to Solomon's House from political pressure.

1. Tradition credits Roger Bacon, a

13th-century monk, with the discovery of gunpowder. Bacon tactfully avoids his name.

2. A hard basaltic-type rock.

so he left me; having assigned a value of about two thousand ducats for a bounty to me and my fellows. For they give great largesses, where they come, upon all occasions.

The rest was not perfected.

1627

ROBERT BURTON

(1577-1640)

Robert Burton was a scholar at Christ Church, Oxford, where he matriculated in 1593 and stayed for the rest of his life. He never traveled, never married, never sought "success" or attained it; he existed exclusively among books—old, crabbed books by preference. All this absorption in books was supposed (according to the lore of traditional medicine and the theory of "humors" dating back to the Greeks) to throw his constitution out of balance and produce a "melancholy" temperament in which black bile predominated. And in Burton's case, sure enough, that was what happened. His cure for the desperate condition afflicting him was to write a book about his disease; this project occupied the rest of his life.

It wasn't altogether an eccentric project. There had been many books on melancholy before; because of their sedentary life, it was the favorite disease of scholars, and so got a lot of attention. And the age was interested in taking man apart, in finding out what makes him tick. Sir John Davies wrote a long poem on normal psychology, in 1599; it was called Nosce Teipsum, or "Know Thyself." Somewhat later, Phineas Fletcher expanded on some Spenserian hints, particularly the "House of Alma" passage in the Faerie Queene (Book II, Canto ix), to create an allegorical anatomy of man, called The Purple Island. (Man's body is an island, rather like England, floating in the purple sea of his own blood: James Joyce was fascinated with the poem, and used it in the composition of Ulysses.) Thus Burton was in good company when he began his Anatomy. But nobody ever put so much energy into the subject, or handled it in such an epic way. The first edition came out in 1621; later editions, each augmented over the previous one, appeared in 1624, 1628, 1632, and 1638. When he died, in 1640, Burton left behind materials for still another, and bigger edition: the book continued to grow, even after the author's death, as if it had acquired a queer, unnatural vitality of its own.

These cumulative additions do not generally deepen the thought of the book or advance its argument into new territory; they are verbal tags from Burton's immense reading, stuck into the text of the book, after Montaigne's fashion, wherever they seemed more or less appropriate. For though he was perfectly serious in trying to understand the disease of melancholy, Burton wrote like a man afflicted with logorrhea. He poured forth words, his own and other people's, as if he were using them to relieve an inner pressure, rather than to express something. He never used one word where fifty would do, never refrained from an erudite citation just because he had said the same thing three times already. He was a humorist and a bit of a buffoon; the role he assumes in his Anatomy is that of a mad scholar choked on his own erudition and in danger of exploding from its inner pressures. When he thinks of all things that can make a man melancholy (or, as we would say, "neurotic"), Burton envisages "a stupend, vast, infinite Ocean of incredible madness and folly: a Sea full of shelves and rocks, sands, gulfs, Euripuses [currents] and contrary tides, full of fearful monsters, uncouth shapes, roaring waves, tempests, and Siren calms, Halcyonian Seas, unspeakable misery, such absurd and ridiculous, feral and lamentable fits, that I know not whether they are more to be pitied or derided, or may be believed, but that we daily see the same practiced in our days, fresh examples, new news, fresh objects of misery and madness in this kind, that are still represented to us, abroad, at home, in the midst of us, in our bosoms."

All that seething turmoil in the bosom of a retiring Oxford scholar! To relieve the pressure of it, Burton prescribed (among many, many other things) exercise and study, more and more study, more and more books, difficult but not necessarily useful projects, in a word, distractions—projects like the very book we are reading. Hysteria is diverted by giving it a toy to play with, a trifle to agitate: the mechanism is that described later by Swift in A Tale of a Tub. Burton describes the remedy at such vociferous length that it's clear he is practicing what he preaches in the very act of preaching it. But at the end of our selection, the whole exercise is stood on its head when the recommended cure turns out to be nothing less than the disease itself. It is a joke worthy of Burton's great predecessor in the field of medical clowning, François Rabelais.

From The Anatomy of Melancholy

From Exercise Rectified¹

But amongst those exercises or recreations of the mind within doors, there is none so general, so aptly to be applied to all sorts of men, so fit and proper to expel idleness and melancholy, as that of study: "Study is the delight of old age, the support of youth, the ornament of prosperity, the solace and refuge of adversity, the delight of the household," etc., find the rest in Tully, Pro Archia Poeta.² What so full of content as to read, walk, and see maps, pictures, statues, jewels, marbles, which some so much magnify, as those that Phidias made of old so exquisite and pleasing to be beheld, that, as Chrysostom thinketh, "if any man be sickly, troubled in mind, or that cannot sleep for grief, and shall but stand over against one of Phidias's images, he will forget all care, or what-

1. Part II, Sect. 2, Mem. 4. Burton's book is elaborately subdivided into Parts, Sections, and Members; these are more formal than real, since he clearly writes whatever occurs to him next.

2. Tully is Cicero, the oration that in behalf of Archias the poet. In general, the footnotes for this selection will make no effort to follow Burton through the incredible mazes of the Bodleian library and his own memory.

soever else may molest him, in an instant?"³ There be those as much taken with Michael Angelo's, Raphael de Urbino's, Francesco Francia's pieces, and many of those Italian and Dutch painters, which were excellent in their ages; and esteem of it as a most pleasing sight to view those neat architectures, devices, escutcheons, coats of arms, read such books, to peruse old coins of several sorts in a fair gallery; artificial works, perspective glasses, old relics, Roman antiquities, variety of colors. A good picture is *falsa veritas et muta poesis*⁴ and though (as Vives saith)⁵ artificia delectant, sed mox fastidimus, artificial toys please but for a time; yet who is he that will not be moved with them for the present?

* * * To most kind of men it is an extraordinary delight to study. For what a world of books offers itself, in all subjects, arts, and sciences, to the sweet content and capacity of the reader? In arithmetic, geometry, perspective, optics, astronomy, architecture, sculpture, painting, of which so many and such elaborate treatises are of late written; in mechanics and their mysteries, military matters, navigation, riding of horses, fencing, swimming, gardening, planting, great tomes of husbandry, cookery, falconry, hunting, fishing, fowling, &c., with exquisite pictures of all sports, games, and what not? In music, metaphysics, natural and moral philosophy, philology, in policy, heraldry, genealogy, chronology, &c., they afford great tomes, or those studies of antiquity, &c., *et quid subtilius Arithmeticis inventionibus, quid jucundius Musicis rationibus, quid divinius Astronomicis, quid rectius Geometricis demonstrationibus?*⁶ What so sure, what so pleasant? He that shall but see that geometrical tower of Garzenda at Bologna in Italy, the steeple and clock at Strasburg, will admire the effects of art, or that engine of Archimedes, to remove the earth itself, if he had but a place to fasten his instrument; Archimedis Cochlea,⁷ and the rare devices to corrivate waters, musical instruments, and trisyllable echoes again, again, and again repeated, with myriads of such. What vast tomes are extant in law, physic, and divinity for profit, pleasure, practice, speculation, in verse or prose, &c.! their names alone are the subject of great volumes, we have thousands of authors of all sorts, many great libraries full well furnished, like so many dishes of meat, served out for several palates; and he is a very block that is affected with none of them. Some take an infinite delight to study the very

3. St. John Chrysostom, an early Christian saint famous for his eloquence; Burton cites from his 12th oration.

4. "False truth and silent poetry."

5. Juan Luis Vives, 16th-century Spanish humanist: Burton cites from his commentary on De Anima.

6. "And what is subtler than arithmetical discoveries, what more pleasant than musical harmonies, what more divine than astronomical or more certain than geometrical demonstrations?" From Girolamo Cardano, 16th-century Italian physician-philosopher. The tower at Bologna and the steeple at Strasburg are about as real to Burton as the imaginary lever with which Archimedes said he could move the earth.

7. Archimedes' water screw.

languages wherein these books are written, Hebrew, Greek, Syriac, Chaldee, Arabic, &c. Methinks it would please any man to look upon a geographical map, suavi animum delectatione allicere, ob incredibilem rerum varietatem et jucunditatem, et ad pleniorẽ sui cognitionem excitare,⁸ chorographical, topographical delineations, to behold, as it were, all the remote provinces, towns, cities of the world, and never to go forth to the limits of his study, to measure by the scale and compass their extent, distance, examine their site. Charles the Great, as Platina writes, had three fair silver tables, in one of which superficies was a large map of Constantinople, in the second, Rome neatly engraved, in the third an exquisite description of the whole world, and much delight he took in them. What greater pleasure can there now be, than to view those elaborate maps of Ortelius, Mercator, Hondius, &c.? To peruse those books of cities, put out by Braunus and Hogenbergius? To read those exquisite descriptions of Maginus, Munster, Herrera, Laet, Merula, Boterus, Leander, Albertus, Camden, Leo Afer, Adricomius, Nic. Gerbelius, &c.! Those famous expeditions of Christoph. Columbus, Americus Vespucius, Marcus Polus the Venetian, Lod. Vertomanus, Aloysius Cadamustus, &c.? Those accurate diaries of Portuguese, Hollanders, of Bartison, Oliver à Nort, &c., Hakluyt's Voyages, Pet. Martyr's Decades, Benzo, Lerijs, Linschoten's relations, those Hodaeporicons of Jod. a Meggen, Brocard the monk, Bredembachius, Jo. Dublinius, Sands, &c., to Jerusalem, Egypt, and other remote places of the world? Those pleasant itineraries of Paulus Hentzerus, Jodocus Sincerus, Dux Polonus, &c., to read Bellonius's observations, P. Gillius his surveys; those parts of America set out and curiously cut in pictures by Fratres a Bry. To see a well-cut herbal, herbs, trees, flowers, plants, all vegetables expressed in their proper colors to the life, as that of Matthiolus upon Dioscorides, Delacampius, Lobel, Bauhinus, and that last voluminous and mighty herbal of Beslar of Nuremberg, wherein almost every plant is to his own bigness. To see birds, beasts, and fishes of the sea, spiders, gnats, serpents, flies, &c., all creatures set out by the same art, and truly expressed in lively colors, with an exact description of their natures, qualities, &c., as hath been accurately performed by Aelian, Gesner, Ulysses Aldrovandus, Bellonius, Rondoletius, Hippolytus Salavianus, &c. * * *

King James, 1605, when he came to see our University of Oxford, and amongst other edifices now went to view that famous library renewed by Sir Thomas Bodley, in imitation of Alexander at his departure brake out into that noble speech, If I were not a king, I would be a university man; "and if it were so that I must be a pris-

8. "It allures the mind with profound pleasure, on account of the incredible variety and beauty of the subjects, and excites it to further knowledge." From the preface to Mercator's Geography.

oner, if I might have my wish, I would desire to have no other prison than that library, and to be chained together with so many good authors et mortuis magistris (and dead teachers).” So sweet is the delight of study, the more learning they have (as he that hath a dropsy. The more he drinks the thirstier he is), the more they covet to learn, and the last day is prioris discipulus (the student of the day before); harsh at first learning is, radices amararum (bitter roots), but fructus dulces (sweet fruits), according to that of Isocrates, pleasant at last; the longer they live, the more they are enamored with the Muses. Heinsius, the keeper of the library at Leyden in Holland, was mewed up in it all the year long; and that which to thy thinking should have bred a loathing caused in him a greater liking. “I no sooner (saith he) come into the library, but I bolt the door to me, excluding lust, ambition, avarice, and all such vices, whose nurse is idleness, the mother of ignorance, and melancholy herself, and in the very lap of eternity, amongst so many divine souls, I take my seat, with so lofty a spirit and sweet content, that I pity all our great ones, and rich men that know not this happiness.”⁹ * * *

Whosoever he is therefore that is overrun with solitariness, or carried away with pleasing melancholy and vain conceits, and for want of employment knows not how to spend his time, or crucified with worldly care, I can prescribe him no better remedy than this of study, to compose himself to the learning of some art or science. Provided always that this malady proceed not from overmuch study; for in such case he adds fuel to the fire, and nothing can be more pernicious; let him take heed he do not overstretch his wits, and make a skeleton of himself; or such inamoratos as read nothing but playbooks, idle poems, jests, Amadis de Gaul, the Knight of the Sun, the Seven Champions, Palmerin de Oliva, Huon of Bordeaux, &c. Such many times prove in the end as mad as Don Quixote. Study is only prescribed to those that are otherwise idle, troubled in mind, or carried headlong with vain thoughts and imaginations, to distract their cogitations (although variety of study, or some serious subject, would do the former no harm), and divert their continual meditations another way. Nothing in this case better than study.
* * *

9. From the letters of Daniel Heinsius. Burton in his last paragraph gets thoroughly entangled, for the people who can't be cured by study include not only those who've already studied too much, but those who haven't studied at all, who have read nothing but “playbooks, idle poems, jests.” In short, study is a good cure for anyone who's cured by study, but not for anyone who isn't.

THOMAS HOBBES

(1588–1679)

Thomas Hobbes, the second great philosopher of the 17th century, was the acknowledged pupil of the first, Francis Bacon, and the unacknowledged instructor of the third, John Locke. Born in 1588 (Armada year), he had attended Oxford and then served as tutor and secretary to various noblemen, including several members of the Cavendish family, and Bacon. When the civil wars broke out in 1641 he took the Royalist side, though not very actively, and when the king's party was defeated, he went off to Paris with the royal court-in-exile. His plan as a philosopher was to publish one book on physical bodies, one on human nature, and one on the state; and in fact he wrote books under these three titles, both in English and Latin. But in reality his career is less symmetrical and orderly than that fact implies, because the English texts are often quite different from the Latin, and the book for which he is best known, Leviathan, does not fit into the scheme at all. Leviathan appeared in Paris in 1651, scandalizing Puritans by its frankly secular tone, and disturbing Royalists because it seemed to make no real distinction between a legal king and an established usurper. When Hobbes left Paris shortly after the book's publication, returned to England, and made his peace with Cromwell, the worst fears of the Royalists were realized. But their fury hit a peak after the Restoration, when Hobbes not only went unpunished for his "treason," but was pensioned by his old friend and former pupil, Charles II. Throughout the Restoration, his outspoken materialism made him a cause of scandal around the court; but his caustic tongue made him feared, and the indolent, cynical king was fond of him. Toward the end of his life he began gathering disciples, some of whom he would just as gladly have done without; for lewd, swearing, sceptical fellows sometimes took delight in being known as "Hobbiists," not because they had studied or understood his philosophy, but because it was a name of scandal. He had a deeper influence on his enemies. A whole generation of theologians and moralists trained themselves by thundering against Hobbes. And in the meanwhile, the quiet, capacious mind of Locke absorbed what it wanted from the thought of Hobbes and, without getting involved in the Hobbiist controversies, built a structure of incomparable solidity using many of the older philosopher's materials.

From LeviathanPart I, Chapter 13. Of the Natural Condition of Mankind as Concerning Their Felicity and Misery

Nature hath made men so equal in the faculties of body and mind as that, though there be found one man sometimes manifestly stronger in body or of quicker mind than another, yet when all is reckoned together, the difference between man and man is not so considerable as that one man can thereupon claim to himself any benefit, to which another may not pretend as well as he. For as to the strength of body, the weakest has strength enough to kill the strongest, either by secret machination, or by confederacy with others that are in the same danger with himself.

And as to the faculties of the mind—setting aside the arts grounded upon words, and especially that skill of proceeding upon general and infallible rules, called science; which very few have, and but in few things; as being not a native faculty, born with us; nor attained, as prudence, while we look after somewhat else—I find yet a greater equality amongst men than that of strength. For prudence is but experience, which equal time equally bestows on all men, in those things they equally apply themselves unto. That which may perhaps make such equality incredible is but a vain conceit of one's own wisdom, which almost all men think they have in a greater degree than the vulgar—that is, than all men but themselves and a few others, whom by fame, or for concurring with themselves, they approve. For such is the nature of men, that howsoever they may acknowledge many others to be more witty, or more eloquent, or more learned, yet they will hardly believe there be many so wise as themselves; for they see their own wit at hand, and other men's at a distance. But this proveth rather that men are in that point equal, than unequal. For there is not ordinarily a greater sign of the equal distribution of anything than that every man is contented with his share.

From this equality of ability ariseth equality of hope in the attaining of our ends. And therefore if any two men desire the same thing, which nevertheless they cannot both enjoy, they become enemies; and in the way to their end (which is principally their own conservation, and sometimes their delectation only) endeavor to destroy or subdue one another. And from hence it comes to pass that where an invader hath no more to fear than another man's single power; if one plant, sow, build, or possess a convenient seat, others may probably be expected to come prepared with forces united, to dispossess and deprive him, not only of the fruit of his labor, but also of his life or liberty. And the invader again is in the like danger of another.

And from this diffidence¹ of one another, there is no way for any man to secure himself so reasonable as anticipation; that is, by force or wiles to master the persons of all men he can, so long, till he see no other power great enough to endanger him, and this is no more than his own conservation requireth, and is generally allowed. Also because there be some, that taking pleasure in contemplating their own power in the acts of conquest, which they pursue farther than their security requires; if others that otherwise would be glad to be at ease within modest bounds, should not by invasion increase their power, they would not be able long time, by standing only on their defense, to subsist. And by consequence, such augmentation of dominion over men being necessary to a man's conservation, it ought to be allowed him.

1. Lack of faith, mistrust.

Again, men have no pleasure, but on the contrary a great deal of grief, in keeping company, where there is no power able to overawe them all. For every man looketh that his companion should value him at the same rate he sets upon himself; and upon all signs of contempt, or undervaluing, naturally endeavors, as far as he dares (which amongst them that have no common power to keep them in quiet, is far enough to make them destroy each other), to extort a greater value from his contemners by damage, and from others by the example.

So that in the nature of man, we find three principal causes of quarrel. First, competition; second, diffidence; thirdly, glory.

